also to act according to the dictates and command of the law governing the Court's jurisdiction. There can be no estoppel against law or a statute. The rule of estoppel is applied specially on the ground that the party on the faith of the representation has changed his position and suffered thereby. But there can possibly be no prejudice in a case where the plaintiff says that he filed the suit in the wrong Court. It is true that the defendant had to defend himself but then he succeeded in having the suit dismissed on the merits prejudice, therefore, if any, so far as the defendant is concerned is not the change in position by reason of the representation of the plaintiff but at best prejudice in the shape of having to defend the case and that prejudice can always be compensated by payment of costs: (1964-65) 69 Cal.W.N. 545: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 59.

Where the Commissioner of Land Revenue had appellate power over the impugned order of the Forest Settlement Officer and revisional power over the impugned order of the Tehsildar under the A.P. (Telangana Area) Ijara and Kowli Land Cancellation of Irregular Pattas and Abolition of Concessional Assessment Act, 1961 and with the consent of the parties thereto he heard both of them together and disposed them by a common judgment, held, the parties were estopped from challenging the Commissioner's jurisdiction; it was not a case of inherent lack of jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 103 (Andh. Pra.).

15. Acquiescence — Illustrative cases.— Where pursuant to the order of remit the appellant took a chance by participation in the proceedings before the Rent Controller, taking up the matter in appeal and thereafter the appellant challenged the remit order, held, having acquiesced in the proceedings, the appellant could not challenge the first remit order: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1616: (1993) 4 S.C.C. 499: (1993) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 273.

Reference to civil Court ordered by Collector in appeal in mutation proceedings— Order of Collector not appealed from—Parties not estopped from raising objections to the reference, in civil Court: 1963 Raj.L.W. 186.

Where the Industrial Tribunal ordered for analogous hearing of two proceedings to which petitioners were parties and the petitioners participated in the proceedings, held, when they did not object to the procedure proposed but instead certainly participated in the proceeding, acquiescing silently they cannot be allowed to turn round and challenge the proceedings, as they had by their conduct totally consented to the procedure adopted: 1981 Lab.I.C. 496.

Where a party, having the right to prefer an appeal against the impugned order, chose to prefer an appeal under S. 13(2) of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969, an alternative and perhaps a more effective remedy, held, it could not amount to acquiescence in making of the impugned order and estopping the party from challenging it; no acquiescence or estoppel could be spelt out from such conduct: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 798.

Where it was established that even after his being exonerated by the criminal Court, the petitioner was not given his substantive post, but another post temporarily, and he had no other option but to work under the new conditions imposed on him as he could not afford to lose his Government service, the mere fact that the petitioner had to work in the new post for about seven days will not be in any way, sufficient to create any estoppel against him nor will the doctrine of acquiescence or waiver operate against him: A.I.R 1956 Manipur 34.

Prior proceedings void—Decision therein cannot operate as estoppel: 1962 B.L.J.R. 960: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 247.

Where the petitioners filed revision application against an order setting aside an ex parte decree passed in their favour but during the pendency of said revision application, the suit was heard on merits in which both the parties participated and the suit was dismissed, held, the revision application of the petitioner was not maintainable in view of principle of waiver or acquiescence. The petitioners were aware that if they succeeded in the case then their ex parte decree would be maintained and there would be no necessity for any further hearing of the suit. They had, therefore, a right to maintain the ex parte decree and once the petitioners went to trial for the sake of obtaining a contested decree then they must be deemed to have relinquished their right of maintaining the ex parte decree. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 933; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1286; A.I.R. 1983 Pat. 257 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 32: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 57: (1984) 34 B.L.J.R. 50: 1984 B.L.J. 19.

Where respondent-company manufactured and marketed home appliances under the same trade mark as that of the applicants' with the actual aid, help and financial assistance by the applicants and their family members for a period of more than $7^1/_2$ years, but later on applicant accused respondent of infringement of trade mark, held, the doctrine of acquiescence and the honest and concurrent user would be attracted: A.I.R. 1993 Mad. 120.

Where the plaintiff on coming to know of the infringement of its trade mark in 1986 immediately filed a criminal complaint and in 1987 it filed a civil suit, held, the plaintiff could not be held guilty of acquiescence, delay and laches. [A.I.R. 1985 Del. 210, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1989 Del. 157.

Where the respondent refused to enroll the petitioner as an Associate Member but the petitioner sought relief against said decision after more than $10^1/_2$ years, held, as the petitioner failed to seek remedy within a short time he acquiesced in the decision, thus he had waived his right to get the relief: A.I.R. 1992 Guj. 140.

Where a candidate is compelled to subject himself to the elections notwithstanding the infringement of the rules, his right to challenge the same cannot be questioned on the ground of acquiescence: 25 Cut.L.T. 42: I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 189.

Election to office—One of contestants elected and accepting office—No writ can be issued against him, he having accepted office and opposite party having acquiesced in the election proceedings and further successful party not being party to the proceedings under Art. 226: A.I.R. 1963 All. 447.

Where a house left by a Hindu father is mortgaged by his son and the widow of the deceased has signed the mortgage deed after hearing its contents and as token of consent, the widow has acquiesced in transaction to the extent of surrendering her rights of residence and maintenance, and is estopped from claiming those rights against the mortgagee: A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 17.

Acquiescence—Partition of joint family property—Joint Hindu family governed by Benaras School—Unregistered deed effecting partition amongst sons to the exclusion of widow—Acquiescence on part of widow not pleaded—Validity of the deed cannot be upheld on ground of acquiescence: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1299.

Where in a case of partition of separate propety of karta, one share was given to his wife also and the other sharers were also parties to the partition deed, held, on death of karta's wife said sharers could not contend that property under partition being ancestral property would devolve on them and not on the daughters of the deceased: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 131 (Ker.).

Widow making gift of her deceased husband's property to her daughter and daughter's husband jointly—Daughter acquiescing for less than 12 years in the position that her husband was co-owner of that property does not constitute estoppel so as to deprive her reversionary right: 119 I.C. 152: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 467.

Defendant acquiescing in order of restoration—Revision—Estoppel. See A.I.R 1954 Madh. Bh. 12: I.L.R. (1953) Madh. Bh. 383. Quo warranto—Acquiescence. See (1954) 1 M.L.J. 102: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 563.

A person who, though not a party to the litigation that effected a division of holding, has nevertheless profited from it and has all along abided by it, cannot later on seek to question the division of holding on the ground that he was not a party to that litigation: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 924: 1941 R.D. 813.

Where the wife acquiesced in her husband's acts and allowed him to deal with the property as his own and derived benefit therefrom, held, that she could not be permitted to turn round and impugn the transaction: 7 Mys.L.J. 112.

Person who pleads acquiescence must be under mistaken belief of his right and person against whom it is pleaded must be aware of the mistaken belief—Auction-purchaser in execution sale building in property purchased by him—Facts indicating that knowledge of trust nature of property would have known to auction-purchaser with little inquiry—He cannot plead acquiescence against trustee: 1953 All.W.R. (H.C.) 77: A.I.R. 1953 All. 449.

Where a private operator was allowed to operate on impugned route illegally which had a common overlapping with the nationalised route for nearly 29 years but subsequently authorities refused to renew the permit and respondent-operator pleaded estoppel, held, the conduct of the appellant in acquiescing in the renewal of the permits over a long period could not create or constitute an estoppel from enforcing its rights under the Scheme and from objecting against the renewal of the permit in view of the subsistence of a valid scheme: A.I.R. 1995 Karn. 103 (D.B.).

Merely because the plaintiff had claimed storage charges at the rate of Rs. 4 per ton per month and there was silence on the part of the defendant, it cannot be said that there was acquiescence on the part of the defendant and that there was an implied undertaking on his part to pay godown rent at that rate: (1965) 2 S.C.W.R. 289: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 275.

Plaintiff's suit resting on partnership and breach of terms thereof by second defendant, i.e., by breaking one of the terms of the partnership, second defendant got the rent bill in his name and became direct tenant under the first defendant, the landlord—Defendant pleading a letter from plaintiff's Solicitor to first defendant that plaintiff had no objection to second defendant, sub-tenant, becoming direct tenant under the first defendant—Solicitor examined as witness by defendant—Held, lack of authority on the part of the Solicitor was so patent upon his evidence that question of onus, be it of proving a negative in the first instance, became an academic interest—To put it in another way landlord defendant had discharged plaintiff's onus though unwillingly by examining Solicitor as his witness—Plaintiff thrown overboard by questionable means in 1956 by defendant—Plaintiffs suit filed in 1958—No full knowledge on part of plaintiff—Held, acquiescence of plaintiff was not acquiescence in the context of facts—Plaintiff could not be held to have rectified action of the Solicitor: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786.

Assessee making payment of sales tax on demand notice under S. 8 of the U.P. Sales Tax Act—Subsequent challenge to liability under S. 8-A (4)—Doctrine of acquiescence has no application: (1964) 15 S.T.C. 335 (All.).

Where certain licensees of liquor in Pondicherry, applied for transit permit for sending liquor to Mahe, a Pondicherry town land locked in State of Kerala, though under the Rules no such permit was necessary, and the Authorities refused such permit, but subsequently, the licencees realising their mistake challenged said action as unconstitutional, held, principle of estoppel was inapplicable and the State Government could not plead that the petitioners had in the past acquiesced in such action: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 61: (1989) 2 Ker.L.T. 924 (D.B.).

Acquiescence—Transfer by ostensible owner—Consent—Necessity—Effect of consent—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 537.

Fixation of salaries—General principle is to appoint at minimum of scale—Rule subject to contrary intention—Fixation of pay by authority—Acceptance of, by employee—He is estopped from claiming higher salary—Appointment authority has no power to review fixation of salary made by him and accepted by employee: I.L.R. (1962) 2 All. 392: A.I.R. 1963 All. 570.

Assam Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (XXV of 1948), S. 7(2)—Compensation—Meaning —Interest on amount not included—Right to claim interest—Basis of—Acceptance of award by petitioner—Petitioner not estopped from claiming interest thereon: I.L.R. (1961) 13 Assam 382: A.I.R. 1962 Assam 20.

16. Rule of standing by.—Per Division Bench:—To found a plea of estoppel on the doctrine of standing by, it must be affirmatively established that the parties against whom that estoppel is sought to be pleaded were aware of what was being done and consciously stood by: (1959) 2 An.W.R. 79.

Merely by standing by or by not raising any objection, a woman does not lose her right to get a share and such a conduct does not amount to acquiescence or relinquishment. Thus, where though the wife of the deceased was entitled to one-sixth share in the joint family property, no share was allotted to her when the partition took place by a deed of surrender and she did not sue for partition even though nearly 17 years had passed after the partition, held, no inference of acquiescence, relinquishment or cesser of right could be raised against the wife more so when specific pleas to that effect were not taken during the course of assessment: 1982 Hindu L.R. 282 (Madh. Pra.).

The limitations of the rule regarding standing by are that first, the stranger building on the land belonging to another must do so supposing it to be his own, and secondly, that the owner of the land, perceiving his mistake, abstains from setting him right and leaves him to persevere in his error. But if a stranger builds on another's land knowing it to be his, there is no principle of equity which would prevent the owner of land claiming the land with the benefit of all the expenditure made on it: 1951 Nag.L.J. 544: A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 347: I.L.R. (1951) Nag. 909.

The doctrine of equitable estoppel applies to a case where a person is given an unequivocal assurance and on the faith thereto, he acted detrimental to his interest and he suffered an irretrievable injury in that pursuit. In such an event, having made such a promise the maker thereof is precluded to resile therefrom and pass an order detrimental to the interest of the person who believed the promise and placing reliance thereon acted on that basis and he cannot adequately be compensated: A.I.R. 1989 Andh. Pra. 159: (1989) 2 An.L.T. 491.

Merely because on the basis of the existing rate an agreement is entered into and between the date of agreement and the date of importation the rate of duty is changed, there is no ground for applicability of the principle of equitable estoppel. In the case of revenue no such principle can be applied on such basis: (1989) 40 E.L.T. 47 (Cal.).

In respect of an action, which is in conformity with law, held, doctrine of equitable estoppel does not apply: I.L.R. (1986) Karn. 2794 (D.B.).

Equitable principle of estoppel—Applicability—Cannot override provisions of statute: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 487.

The doctrine of promissory or equitable estoppel can never be invoked in the abstract; the Courts are bound to consider all aspects including the result sought to be achieved and the public good; the Courts have to do equity and its basic principles must ever be present in the Court's mind; and the doctrine must yield when the equity so requires, that is when it is shown that the enforcement of estoppel would result in inequity: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 371 (D.B.).

The doctrine of promissory or equitable estoppel evolved through successive Supreme Court decisions is now well established in the country's administrative law. Its fundamental basis is that where any party has by his word or conduct made to the other party an unequivocal promise or representation, which is intended to create legal relations or effect legal relationship to arise in the future knowing fully as well as intending that the representation, assurance or the promise would be acted upon by the other party to whom it has been made and has in fact been acted upon by the other party, the promise, assurance or representation should be binding on the party making it and that the said party should not be permitted to go back upon it, if it would be inequitable to do so, having regard to the dealings which have taken place or are intended to take place between the parties. Since the doctrine has its roots in equity, its invocation, as per judicial consensus, requires clear, sound and positive foundations in the petition and specific proof thereof; general assertions and claims that the doctrine is attracted because the party invoking it had acted on the representation and suffered detriment would not do: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 371 (D.B.).

As pointed out by the Supreme Court in A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1912, the object of estoppel is to prevent fraud and secure justice between the parties by promotion of honesty and good faith, and consequently, where one person makes a misrepresentation to the other about a fact, he would not be shut out by the rule of estoppel, if that other person, knew the true state of facts and must consequently not have been misled by the misrepresentation: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 37 .

Void lease—Tenant putting up structures bona fide—Right to value thereof: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 473: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 612. See also 1937 All.L.J. 793: A.I.R. 1937 All. 512; I.L.R. 13 Luck. 192: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 263. No plea of equitable estoppel can be maintained against a statute: 1935 All.L.J. 51: A.I.R. 1935 All. 127. As to part-performance, see I.L.R. 39 Mad. 509 (P.C.); I.L.R. 42 Cal. 801; I.L.R. 40 Mad. 1134: 33 M.L.J. 252.

The villagers V on whose behalf A purchased some properties, subsequently sold it to B and B in his turn sold a portion to C and the rest to others. The suit by the villagers for a declaration of title and possession with past profits was decreed in appeal. In second appeal, it was contended that the plaintiffs were estopped by their conduct, that payment should be made to him for improvements and liability for mesne profits was also objected to. Held, for the principle of equitable estoppel to apply all the following conditions must apply: (i) C must be mistaken as to his legal rights; if he is aware he is infringing the right of another he takes the risk of the other asserting his rights; (ii) C must expend money or do some act on the mistaken belief; otherwise he does not suffer by V's subsequent assertion of their rights; (iii) V must know of their own rights; for acquiescence is founded on conduct with knowledge of one's own legal rights; (iv) V must know C's mistaken belief. If they know that C is mistaken, it is not equitable for them to allow C to continue in his mistake; but if V have no such knowledge there is nothing which calls upon them to assert their rights; (v) V must encourage C in his expenditure of money or doing any other act by abstaining from asserting their rights. V, the villagers, the owners of the property might have been under the impression that B or C were only in management of the property. Nothing was shown that they encouraged B or C. The plaintiffs were not estopped from claiming the rights in suit. For S. 51 of the T.P. Act to apply and a claim to compensation for improvements to arise the improvements must have been made by C under the mistaken belief that he was absolutely entitled to the properties. In the case he might have been negligent but it is not inconsistent with bona fides. He had converted the dry lands into wet lands. The real value of the improvement is the enhanced marketable value of the property. In view of the fact that there was no notice by V claiming the property past profits were not allowed in the peculiar circumstances and on equitable consideration: A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 117: I.L.R. (1952) Mys. 384.

Where a lessee of a shop, by his conduct, allows an advertisement erected by another person on the wall of an adjacent building and projecting into the air space above his shop to remain in position, he is not estopped thereafter from ever objecting to the sign remaining there. The fact that the lessee, by his conduct, must have conveyed to the person erecting the sign that he would not object in future does not constitute an estoppel. Nor would there arise any equitable estoppel if the person erecting the sign was in no way induced to act to his prejudice to such an extent as would entitle him to a continuance of the exhibition of that sign for ever, or, at any rate during the length of the lease: (1957) 2 All E.R. 343.

Equitable estoppel—Lease—Lessee intentionally failing to deliver possession contrary to agreement—No equity in his favour—He cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong: 1969 Cur. L.J. 723: 1969 Ren. L.R. 485: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 1095.

After an oral agreement was made between the plaintiff and the defendant for the grant to the defendant by the plaintiff of a permanent lease of land on certain terms, the plaintiff urged the defendant to erect permanent structures on the land and took an active part in obtaining sanction for them and assured the defendant that he would never evict him. The defendant completed the structures within two years of the agreement (i.e.,) when a considerable part of the time within which the agreement could be enforced had yet to run. The defendant, however, neglected to enforce the agreement and obtain a registered lease within the time limited by law. After the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit to enforce the agreement, the plaintiff sued to eject the defendant. Held, (1) that the defendant could not avail himself of the doctrine of part performance under S. 53-A of the T.P. Act, as the agreement was not in writing; (2) that the plaintiff was not estopped from evicting the defendant as on the facts of the case there was no room for applying the doctrine of equitable estoppel; the statement of the plaintiff that he would not evict the defendant could not serve as a basis for an estoppel, as there was a valid agreement for a permanent lease to which it was referable. Further, it was only a promise and thus a representation not of an existing fact but of an intention for the future; (3) that the defendant was not entitled to any compensation for the structures erected by him but could remove them from the land, having regard to S. 108 (h) of the T.P. Act: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 851: A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 353.

Mere execution of a release deed in favour of a tarwad member even if the karnavan, asserting his right to a share would not amount to a division in status; it is too wide a proposition that assertion of a right in tarwad properties on transfer of individual shares therein tantamounts to the exercise of the right to partition; it would not result in division of status prior to alienation, which could render the transfer as of a divided interest. Thus, it could not be construed as relinquishment of his joint interest; since both the alienor and alienee knew the position in law of tarwad properties, there could be no representation by the alienor to induce the alienee; the doctrine of equitable estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1984 Ker. 51 (D.B.).

Principle of equitable estoppel should be applied to prevent manifest injustice to one who has acted on basis of representation of facts made by the other—University after efflux of long period of time allowing passing of final degree examinations cannot deny degree certificate on ground that petitioner had failed in one of the subject—Held, principle of equitable estoppel should come to rescue of the petitioner to prevent manifest injustice—University would be prevented from taking a stand on a question of fact, contrary to what it held out as existing, for all these years, on which basis both University and the petitioner had acted: I.L.R. (1985) Karn. 2763.

For admission to Medical Colleges the Government issued the following rule on 26th June 1961. "Candidates applying for admission to P.P.C. in Medicine and to the first year of M.B.B.S. course, must have passed the qualifying examination in one attempt". A few days thereafter, i.e., on 3rd July, 1961, this rule was amended by omitting the clause which disabled candidates who did not pass the qualifying examination in one attempt from applying for admission to the Professional Course. Held, that there was no scope for invoking the doctrine of equitable estoppel. This rule did not create any obstacle in the way of her seeking admission in other Colleges. Government was invested with authority to amend the rules from time to time. Therefore, there was no restraint on the power of the Government to amend these rules: I.L.R. (1962) Andh. Pra. 917: (1962) 1 An.L.T. 27: (1962) 1 An.W.R. 60: A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 212.

Having made an implied representation that if a candidate satisfied the standard set up for selection of candidates (for admission into the Medical College), it is not open to the authorities concerned to retract from it. The petitioner was led into the belief that she would be selected if she secured a high percentage of marks and fared well at the interview; in other words, if she has come out successful in the competition amongst the various candidates. It is not denied that she obtained 59 per cent of the marks in her optional subjects in the Intermediate Examination and that she satisfied the other conditions which would have enabled her to gain admittance into the College. But for the assurance contained in the notification making the reservation, viz., that the Government of Andhra Pradesh reserved 10 per cent of the seats available on 1st November, 1956, in Osmania and Gandhi Medical Colleges for students coming from the Marathawada area pursuant to the Government of India's Notification No. 21-1-57 S.R. (R.) II , dated 9th June, 1957, she would have applied to the other College and in all probability might have secured admission. It is true that she was permitted to apply for a seat in the Medical College at Aurangabad and that time was extended but this was merely illusory, having regard to the press-note issued by the Bombay Government and also taking into account the subsequent events. It appears that the Bombay Government gave preference only to students of pre-professional course with the result the application of the petitioner was not even considered. In these circumstances, the principle of legal or equitable estoppel would apply to this case. It would have been a different matter, if a note was added when the applications were invited for the academic year that the reservation was only provisional and was subject to the final orders to be passed: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 493: (1959) 1 An.W.R. 116.

It was contended that the University was estopped from refusing the petitioner permission to sit for the B.T. degree examination in view of her completing her course and in view of being given a hall ticket for sitting for the examination in April, 1957, causing immense injury to her by wasting her time, money, and energy. Held, that there cannot be any legal or equitable estoppel in such cases: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 214: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 494.

Application "Provisionally accepted for admission to written test"—Acceptance not final or irrevocable—Can validly be recalled subsequently—There was no question of reviewing final decision—No principle of equitable estoppel comes into the picture: 1981 All.W.C. 700: 1982 Lab.I.C. 179 (D.B.).

In Muhammadan, as in Roman and English law, nemo est heres viventis —a living person has no heir; an heir apparent or presumptive has no reversionary interest so as to question any sale or gift made by the owner in possession. And the converse is also true; renunciation by an expectant heir in the life time of his ancestor does not bind him when inheritance opens on the ancestor's death. But where the expectant heir receives consideration for the renunciation and conducts himself so as to mislead an owner into not making dispositions of his property inter vivos, the expectant heir could be debarred from setting up his right when it does unquestionably vest in him. The principle of equitable estoppel is not opposed to Muslim law but completely in consonance with it. [A.I.R. 1936 All. 573; A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 217, Approved; A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 131; A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 200, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 554: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 1.

Where the Collector provisionally appointed fair-price shop dealers for sale of levy sugar requiring them to furnish deposits, execute agreements and complete other necessary formalities with the stipulation that the appointment was subject to Government approval and liable to cancellation for furnishing incorrect information and the Government did not accord approval on the grounds of public interest, held, the doctrine of equitable estoppel was not attracted; the Collector, besides not being the final authority, had made no clear and unambiguous representation; the dealers had suffered no detriment as a natural consequence thereof: (1973) 2 An.W.R. 157 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners-builders of high-rise buildings completed the construction of buildings in question in accordance with the plans sanctioned by the Commissioner under the provisions of Karnataka Municipal Corporation Act, 1976 and having obtained either the occupancy certificate or a conditional occupancy certificate, parted with their rights in the impugned premises by selling the same to the various third parties but 3-4 years after grant of occupancy certificate, the Corporation directed them to demolish flats in upper floors, held, the delay on the part of the Corporation in taking action against the petitioners either during the course of construction of impugned buildings or after its construction would attract the rule of equitable estoppel: A.I.R. 1990 Karn. 56: I.L.R. (1989) Karn. 1430.

18. Issue estoppel.—In order to invoke the rule of issue estoppel not only the parties in the two trials must be the same but also the fact-in-issue proved or not in the earlier trial must be identical with what is sought to be re-agitated in the subsequent trial. Thus, where in the separate trial of the co-accused, though he was acquitted, the approver was not held to be unreliable in that case, held, when in the trial of the main accused that approver's evidence was found to be amply corroborated in material particulars against him, there was no inconsistency between the finding that the approver's statement in the other case was not materially corroborated by other evidence against the co-accused and the contrary finding in the affirmative in the case of main accused: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 856: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 742: 1975 Cr.L.J. 765. See also 1981 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 225 (Del.). Where the High Court in criminal revision petition had directed that the sentences imposed on the accused for different offences shall run consecutively but subsequently, the accused, without making reference to the said decision, moved a criminal miscellaneous complaint praying that the sentences passed against him should be directed to run concurrently, and a single Judge of the High Court, so directed, held, merely because the prosecution, at the time of hearing of criminal miscellaneous complaint, did not place the earlier judgment of the High Court before the single Judge and sought to have the complaint dismissed, the prosecution cannot be deemed to have waived its right based on the principles of res judicata. [A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 856, Rel. on] : (1994) 2 Ker.L.J. 277 (D.B.).

Principle of issue estoppel—Applicability: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1281; 1969 Cr.L.J. 1435.

Where the previous order was passed on the ground of jurisdiction, it operates as issue estoppel to a subsequent petition: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1784 (Cal.).

General Clauses Act (1897) permitting double punishment—Void being repugnant to Art. 20(2) of the Constitution—Principle of issue estoppel is different from that of double jeopardy: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1542 (Cal.).

"Issue estoppel" or "res judicata" applies to issues of fact and also of law which have been raised and settled once and for all between the parties even if the judgment is pronounced in criminal proceedings. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 87, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 Andh. Pra. 219 (F.B.).

Where in a criminal trial an issue of fact was tried by a competent Court on an earlier occasion, held, a finding given by that Court would constitute an estoppel or res judicata: (1985) 1 Crimes 253 (All.).

Estoppel by record in criminal trials—Fact in issue same in subsequent trial—Finding recorded in first trial is binding: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 169: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Pra. 11.

Finding in earlier trial constitute estoppel nor as bar to trial and conviction of accused for a different or distinct offence but as precluding reception of evidence contrary to the finding of fact arrived at in the earlier trial: 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 31: 1982 Ker.L.T. 372.

There is an issue estoppel, if it appears by record itself or as an explained by proper evidence, that the point was determined in favour of a prisoner in a previous criminal trial which is brought in issue on a second criminal trial of the same prisoner. There must be a prior proceeding determined against the State necessarily involving an issue which again arises in a subsequent proceeding by the State against the same prisoner. Issue estoppel does not prevent the trial of an offence as does autrefois acquit but only precludes evidence being led to prove a fact in issue as regards which evidence has already been led and a specific finding recorded at an earlier criminal trial before a Court of competent jurisdiction: 1975 Cr.L.J. 765 (P.&H.); (1976) 2 A.P.L.J. (H.C.) 346.

The basic principle underlying the rule of issue estoppel is that the same issue of fact and law must have been determined in the previous litigation. Finding recorded in the acquittal of a person charged with defalcation that he was not in charge of cash will not operate as issue estoppel in a subsequent charge of defalcation in his capacity as cashier for a subsequent period: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 458: 1971 Cr.L.J. 420.

The rule of issue of estoppel is that when an issue of fact has been tried by a competent Court on a former occasion and finding has been reached in favour of an accused, such a finding would constitute an estoppel or res judicata against the prosecution not as a bar to the trial and conviction of the accused for a different or distinct offence, but as precluding the reception of evidence to disturb that finding of fact when the accused is tried subsequently even for a different offence, which might be permitted by the terms of S. 203(2) of the Cr.P.Code. The rule of issue estoppel is not the same as the rule against double jeopardy. The rule, however, does not prevent the trial of any offence, but only precludes evidence being led to prove a fact in issue as regards which evidence has already been led and a specific finding recorded at an earlier criminal trial before a Court of competent jurisdiction: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 31: 1969 All.Cr. R. 30.

The only estoppel that could be pleaded in criminal trial is issue estoppel. It is really a well known doctrine which prohibits fresh litigation on issues of fact or law which were already decided between parties in a previous litigation. Such settlement of issues need not necessarily be on the same set of facts. Even in a trial on different act of facts between the same parties, a decision on an issue of fact or law in a previous litigation could operate as estoppel if the matter is concluded on that point by the previous litigation. That principle is based on public policy. But parties must have joined issue on that particular point or points in a trial and the issue or issues must have been decided on evidence in a trial. What is decided in a preliminary inquiry and the consequent dismissal of the complaint under S. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot operate as issue estoppel for the simple reason that there was no trial, there was no joining of issue between a complainant and an accused and no decision on evidence by the Court: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 251 (Ker.).

Where an issue of fact has been tried by a competent Court on a former occasion and a finding has been reached in favour of an accused, such a finding would constitute an estoppel or res judicata against the prosecution not as a bar to the trial and conviction of the accused for a different and a distinct offence but as precluding the reception of evidence to disturb that finding of fact when the accused is tried subsequently even for a different offence which might be permitted by law. The principle of issue estoppel is applicable when both the proceedings, i.e., the earlier and the subsequent one are criminal proceedings. Thus, where the petitioner who had earlier been prosecuted under the Foreigners Act, 1946 and was acquitted contended that the question whether he was or not a foreigner could not be raised in subsequent proceeding under Foreigners (Internment) Order, 1962, held, the earlier decision did not operate as issue estoppel for the reason that subsequent action against petitioner, i.e., proceedings under the Foreigners (Internment) Order, were not criminal proceedings. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 415; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 87; A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 961, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 28: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 469.

Where one of the accused in a murder trial was simultaneously but separately tried under the Arms Act, 1959 for possession of gun, and was acquitted and no appeal was filed by the State against that order of acquittal, which in consequence became final, and the accused contended that on the principle of issue estoppel, the Court trying murder case was precluded from convicting him and holding that he was in possession of that gun, held, as the murder case was decided first, and that under the Arms Act was decided subsequently the doctrine of issue estoppel was not applicable. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 415, Dist.]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1256: 1974 Cr.L.J. 929: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 754.

Where the accused, tried and acquitted in petty cases by a competent Court on issue of facts, held, they cannot be tried on those very facts afterwards in a murder case; the previous decision on the same allegations clearly operate as a bar of res judicata and estoppel if the accused are tried on the same facts in a subsequent murder case. [(1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 120 (S.C.); 1969 Cr.L.J. 1435 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1134 (Cal.).

Where the accused convicted for murder of the deceased by use of firearms, were also tried for illegal possession of firearms under the Arms Act, 1959 but acquitted for want of sanction by the District Magistrate, held, the State was not estopped from prosecuting them for murder; the two offences are different despite there being common set of facts; neither the principle of res judicata nor of double jeopardy is attracted. [Case law discussed]: (1989-2) 37 B.L.J.R. 458 (D.B.).

Appeal against order under S. 446, of the Cr.P.Code—Dismissed—Matter remanded for show-cause notice to owner and surities against penalty—Point as to leniency not taken in the appeal—Point cannot be raised on principle of issue estoppel: 1981 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 181 (Andh. Pra.).

Case of rioting—Both parties acquitted on the basis of complaint lodged by one party—Fresh trial based on the complaint of other party involving the same incident is barred by principle of issue estoppel: 48 Cut.L.T. 28: 1979 Cut.L.R. (Cr.) 152: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Cut 669: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 213.

Where an earlier application under S. 337 of the Cr.P.Code, was rejected by the High Court on the ground of limitation, a subsequent application of the identical type purporting to be under S. 337(1), Cr.P.Code, is ruled out by the principles of issue estoppel: 1973 Cr.L.J. 968.

Where on the tenant's objection based on certain High Court decisions to the maintainability of a civil suit for his eviction, the landlord withdrew the suit and instituted eviction proceedings under the Rent Control Act during the pendency whereof the Supreme Court over-ruled the High Court view, held, the tenant's objection to the jurisdiction of the Rent Controller could not be brushed aside on the ground of res judicata or estoppel; they do not operate in matters of jurisdiction: (1971) 2 M.L.J. 22.

Small cause suit transferred to original side—Question of title being raised—Issue of title deleted but suit tried on original side without objection by plaintiff—Plaintiff not raising that objection in grounds of his appeal to High Court—He will not be allowed to do so at later stage: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 525. See A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 717: 10 Pat.L.T. 669.

19. No estoppel when truth is known.—It is well settled that when the truth is known to a party, he cannot plead estoppel against his opponent: 1953 All.L.J. 355: A.I.R. 1953 All. 485, followed in A.I.R. 1957 Tripura 13; A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 179 [Party acting as principal to the knowledge of other party]; 28 Pat.L.T. 213: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 317.

Where both the parties to a suit are all along fully aware of the true nature of the transaction of sale between them and their respective stand in regard to the land, the subject of sale, then in such a case the principle of estoppel by acquiescence does not apply: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 133.

S. 115 does not apply to a case where the statement relied upon is made to a person who knows the real facts and is not misled by the untrue statement and there can be no estoppel where the truth of the matter is known to both the parties: (1972) 1 M.L.J. 141: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 857; (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 916 (D.B.), affirming (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 66.

In order to operate as an estoppel, it ought to be established that the person had by his declaration, act or mission intentionally caused or permitted another to believe a thing to be true. Further, it is also necessary for the plaintiff to show that he was not aware of the true state of things, for if he had means of knowledge of the real state of affairs there could be no estoppel: I.L.R. (1955) Hyd. 256: A.I.R. 1955 Hyd. 61; (1959-60) 64 Cal.W.N. 60.

Under S. 115, the knowledge of the person who acts on the representation of the real truth has a bearing on the question of estoppel. If he knew the truth, he cannot be said to have been led "to believe a thing to be true" within the meaning of S. 115 and, therefore, the doctrine of estoppel as embodied in this section is not available to such a person. The same is the English law: A.I.R. 1956 All. 225: 1956 All.L.J. 1 (F.B.).

Any act done under misapprehension of legal right does not create estoppel, nor does the knowledge of the parties about their correct positions: 37 Comp. Cas. 773: (1968) 1 Comp. L.J. 31: A.I.R. 1967 All. 405.

Where the truth of the matter is known to both parties, there can be no estoppel, and the principles of S. 115 do not apply to such a case: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 30.

The section does not apply to a case where the statement relied upon, is made to a person, who knows the real facts, and is not misled by the untrue statement. There can be no estoppel where the truth of the matter is known to both the parties. Therefore, there can be no estoppel where the truth of the matter appears, on the face of the proceedings. A certain plot of .79 acres in area was included in the property mortgaged to the plaintiff. In a suit on the mortgage, the plaintiff obtained a decree and in execution proceedings the plot was sold and purchased by the plaintiff. By mistake, in execution petition, sale proclamation, sale certificate and the writ of delivery of possession the area of the said plot was mentioned as .39 acres only, instead of .79 acres although in all these four documents, the boundaries mentioned were the boundaries of the entire plot and not portion of it only. The plaintiff, thereafter on the strength of the delivery of possession, got himself recorded in the landlord's sherista in respect of .39 acres only. When the above mistake was discovered, the plaintiff brought a suit to correct the area of plot from .39 acres to .79 acres on the ground that the area was wrongly written by the scribe. It was contended that the plaintiff accepted and acquiesced in the position and as such he was estopped by the principle of acquiescence from claiming a greater area. Held, that the plaintiff acquired title to the entire area of plot by his purchase at the auction sale. For some mistake or other he got delivery of possession of .39 acres only, and got himself mutated in the landlord's sherista in respect of .39 acres only, but the plaintiff made no representation to the judgment-debtors which led them to act in a particular way on the face of those representations. The judgment-debtors knew very well—that the boundary related to the plot in its entirety and there was an obvious mistake in the description of area of the plot. It was not, therefore, a question of estoppel, but of fact and the defendants were not deceived as to any fact or prevented by any mis-statement of the plaintiff, from asserting any rights they may have conceived themselves to possess. These facts did not at all attract the doctrine of estoppel or acquiescence: 1956 B.L.J.R. 745: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 174.

If both sides have laboured under a mistake however bona fide or genuine it may be, the plea of estoppel may not be available. Where, however, the mistake was within the knowledge of only one of the parties and the other on the basis of the representation acted and shifted his position to his prejudice, estoppel is certainly available. Thus, where the University Authorities represented to the petitioner as also to the Principal of the College that petitioner had secured pass marks in the written papers of chemistry, held, the University could not be permitted to plead by disclosing facts within its special knowledge that the mark-sheet was erroneous and petitioner as a fact had secured only 44 marks and not 56 as disclosed contemporaneously by the University. [A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 276; (1892) 19 Ind. App. 203 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812; A.I.R. 1973 All. 442, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Ori. 65: (1977) 2 Cut.W.R. 658: I.L.R. (1978) Cut. 78 (D.B.).

Where a regulation of the University provided "if a candidate for the Bachelor's Degree fails in such examination obtaining pass marks in any subject or group of subjects for which separate pass marks are required and passes in the aggregate, he shall be exempted from appearing again in that subject or group of subjects for the next two occasions" and the petitioner claiming the exemption appeared compartmentally in third examination and passed it also but his result was withheld by University as it was in contravention of said regulation, held, the bar contained in the said regulation was statutory; in the absence of a positive representation that the University would waive the bar contained therein for the petitioner, there was no basis for the plea of estoppel. Furthermore, estoppel could not be pleaded by the petitioner to perpetuate his own fraud and to flout the Statute. [(1860) 3 H.L.C. 820; (1875) 10 C.P. 307; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 814, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376; A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 276; A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 62 (Ori.); A.I.R. 1978 Ori. 65; A.I.R. 1973 Ori. 186; A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 403, Dist.]: A.I.R. 1978 Ori. 68: (1978) 45 Cut.L.T. 24: I.L.R. (1977) 2 Cut. 487 (D.B.).

Where on the marks secured, the petitioner could not be declared passed but as against the column meant for being notified as pass or fail on account of clerical mistake, the mark-sheet mentioned that he had passed the examination and on basis of said mark-sheet he got himself admitted in Intermediate Course and on losing original mark-sheet when the petitioner applied for duplicate mark-sheet it showed that the petitioner had failed in the High School Examination and the petitioner pleaded estoppel on the ground that the Board of High School and Inter-mediate Education having declared that the petitioner had passed the High School Examination, could not be permitted to resile from the representation made to the petitioner, held, the petitioner could not be declared successful in the examination even if he was allotted grace marks, the declaration, thus, made in the first mark-sheet, issued to the petitioner, was obviously wrong and the petitioner knew that he had not passed. Therefore, he could not plead estoppel. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376; A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 109, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1980 All. 32 (D.B.).

Estoppel presupposes equity in the representee. The further requirement is that he who raises an equitable estoppel must do equity himself. Further, he who wants to rely on the principle of estoppel on the basis that he acted upon the representation of the other side must come to the Court of law with clean hands. Thus, where though the petitioners were declared as failed in Part I examination but they appeared in Part II examination on the strength of fresh mark-sheets purportedly issued on revaluation which were obtained by them from Principal of their College on the basis of a forged letter of the University and to which the petitioners were a party and subsequently when the fraud was detected by the University, the petitioners were not allowed to appear in subsequent examination and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, the University had not issued the new mark-sheets declaring the petitioners as having passed in the Part I examination. Thus, there was no representation on behalf of the University or any assurance given on which promissory estoppel could be founded. Further, as the petitioners themselves were responsible for the fraud played upon the University, they were not entitled to any right having accrued to them on the basis of mark-sheets issued subsequently. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1725, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 All. 377.

Where a candidate, whose result was withheld for use of unfair means, obtained admission in the Law College on the basis of a provisional certificate granted to him after enquiry by the Disciplinary Committee announcing his result by having passed the examination, but thereafter the University cancelled his result by a notification on detecting its mistake, held, the mistake was not mutual; the University, a statutory body, functioning under a set of rules to which the presumption of correctness attaches, can resile from its own action if it establishes that its action had resulted from a mistake; merely calling it an unfortunate mistake is of no avail; the candidate got admission and paid fees for the Law Degree and did not study for re-appearing in the Degree Examination on the assurance embodied in his result and the provisional certificate; he had undoubtedly changed his position to his detriment; the University was estopped from cancelling his result: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 134 (D.B.).

Where the University supplied the petitioner's mark-sheet to the College which in its turn supplied it to the petitioner in which he was by mistake shown to have passed in the B.A. Examination on the basis of which the College also gave him College leaving certificate showing him passed and on the basis of said documents he got himself appointed as a Teacher in a School and continued so for five years and also pursued two more years in B.Ed Course, whereafter he was informed that he had in fact failed in the B.A. Examination, held, as the petitioner had no likelihood of coming to know the actual position, the rule of estoppel would apply and the University was estopped from taking the plea that the petitioner had, in fact, failed: A.I.R. 1990 Ori. 10: (1989) 67 Cut.L.T. 199 (D.B.).

The question whether the principle of estoppel applies to a particular case depends on the facts of that case. It may be that on similar facts in two cases, in one, in the absence of any material to show that the petitioner claiming the benefit of estoppel had knowledge or means of knowledge to know the real state of affairs, the principle will apply, whereas in the other case, where materials to this effect are present, the doctrine of estoppel will not apply. Thus, where the petitioner securing less than minimum passing marks in practical examination was declared as successful by mistake by the University in contravention of Regulations of the University, but the University Authorities cancelled his result subsequently and the petitioner pleaded, estoppel, held, the declaration that the petitioner passed in the examination was clearly erroneous as it was in contravention of Regulations of University. Further, the petitioner could not have been misled by the representation of the University Authorities since the mark-sheet sent to the College admittedly showed that he failed to secure minimum marks in particular examination. Therefore, the petitioner could not invoke doctrine of promissory estoppel against the University. [A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 121; A.I.R. 1978 Ori. 68; A.I.R. 1980 All. 32, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1985 Ori. 37, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1987 Ori. 38 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner had ample opportunity of knowing the real position from the mark-sheet issued to him, i.e., he had failed to secure qualifying marks in theory papers to secure honours, even though the mark-sheet and the provisional certificate erroneously stated that he had passed B.A. Examination with second class honours in statistics, held, the University was not estopped from revising the petitioner's result subsequently since it could not be said that the petitioner was misled by the erroneous statement in the mark-sheet and the provisional certificate that he had passed B.A. Examination, moreover it is well settled that there can be no estoppel against law which in the present case is the University Regulations: A.I.R. 1992 Ori. 83 (D.B.).

Father purchasing and recording property in son's name, is not estopped from pleading that it is not the son's, if the party pleading estoppel knew or would on inquiries, have known that it was acquired with the father's money: I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 65: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 185.

A sold certain item of property to B and later on executed a mortgage of property which included that item also. A then sold the mortgaged property to C. In a suit for redemption C raised plea of estoppel by mistake on the part of B in allowing the item to be included in the mortgage. C, however, had admitted that he knew that B was in possession of the property but that he thought that B was in possession as a possessory mortgage. He made no further enquiries and did not have a search made in the office of the Sub-Registrar to ascertain if there was any other encumbrance regarding that item, or any other transaction evidenced by a registered document. Held, that C's omission in not having made such enquiries must be held to be wilful, or as grossly negligent, and in that view, could not claim any right to redeem the item: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 188.

Where colonisation licence was granted to the petitioner society after it fulfilled certain conditions but after two years, said licence was cancelled on the ground that the petitioner had suppressed the fact that the exemption was granted under the Urban Ceiling Act of the disputed land as an agricultural land but it was evident that the Collector was aware while granting the licence that exemption from the Urban Ceiling Act was granted for the disputed land as agricultural land and not for colonisation, held, as the Collector knowing full facts had given the colonisation licence and permitted establishment of the colony, it was not open to him to say after two years that there was suppression of material facts by the petitioner. The society having got the licence and permission having been granted for establishment of a colony and having incurred huge expenses, the principle of promissory estoppel would apply and the Collector was estopped from issuing the show cause notice for cancellation of the coloniser's licence and suspending the same pending enquiry: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 271: 1987 M.P.L.J. 456: 1987 Jab.L.J. 638 (D.B.).

Where a landlord let out his premises, built on a lease hold plot allotted to him for raising a residential building by the Improvement Trust, to a tenant for commercial purposes, both of them knowing it to be not a permitted use, held, the landlord is not estopped from seeking the tenant's eviction under S. 14(1)(k) of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958. [1972 Ren.C.R. 362, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 921: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 572.

Failure to mention encumbrances in sale proclamation—Effect—Auction purchaser had full knowledge of mortgage bond—He cannot invoke principles of estoppel: (1979) 2 Cal.L.J. 504.

Where a person purports to sell his property to another but without intending that his title in the property should pass to the other which continues to vest in the transferor, held, S. 115 is not attracted; the transferee knows that the representation embodied in the transaction of transfer is not true and there is no question of his acting upon it; it is well settled where truth is known to both parties, there can be no estoppel: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 80: 1984·B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 66.

During management of Talukdar's estate under Tripura Indebted Landlords Estates Administration Act (1 of 1332, T.E.)—A obtaining settlement and investing money knowing all facts and without being induced by Talukdar to invest money—After satisfaction of debts estate revesting in Talukdar—He is not estopped from denying A's ryoti rights.

When the truth is known to a party, he cannot plead estoppel against his opponent: A.I.R. 1957 Tripura 13.

Estoppel by conduct—Person concerned knowing true position relating to title in property in his possession—He cannot plead that he was induced to hold erroneous belief by reason of conduct of real owner of that property: (1965) 2 S.C.W.R. 644: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812.

Permission to fell trees granted by Government to petitioner upon petitioner's affidavit that he was the owner of the plots—Petitioner felling trees—Petitioner found not to be owner—Government is not estopped from demanding price of felled trees—Even if the Government is held to have made a representation of fact there would be no estoppel as the petitioner was also saying that he was the owner of the aforesaid plots—There is no estoppel when both parties are equally acquainted with the facts: A.I.R. 1964 Him. Pra. 19.

20. No estoppel when both parties are labouring under a mistake.—No question of estoppel can ever arise where both the parties are labouring under a mistake of law and one party is not more to blame than the other. Estoppel arises only when the plaintiff by his act or conduct makes a representation to the defendant of a certain state of facts which is acted upon by the defendant to his detriment; it is only then that the plaintiff is estopped from setting up a different state of facts. Even if this position can be availed of where the representation is in regard to a position in law, no such occasion arises when the mistake of law is common to both the parties. The other circumstances would be such as would entitle a Court of equity to refuse the relief claimed by the plaintiff because on the facts and circumstances of the case it would be inequitable for the Court to award the relief to the plaintiff. These are, however, equitable considerations and could scarcely be imported when there is a clear and unambiguous provision of law which entitles the plaintiff to the relief claimed by him: (1959) 1 M.L.J. 35: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 35.

Both parties acting under common misapprehension—Until position was cleared up there could be no estoppel against a party:

A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 198. Where the petitioners who were working as work Assistants, though called Technical Assistants as per re-designation in 1971, were fitted in pay scale to which they were eligible but on 23-12-1981 under a misapprehension of law they were fitted in the pay scale of Technical Assistants with retrospective effect and when the mistake was discovered, the Authorities ordered recovery of the excess amount and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, both the Authority and the petitioners suffered under a misapprehension and misconception of the correct legal position. What the petitioners were not eligible in law, they got it under a mutual mistake and misapprehension. Thus, no question of estoppel arose: (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 144.

There can be no estoppel where a man misconceived the legal effect of an order which was of no legal force: 27 M.L.J. 465.

No estoppel arises where a statement is due to a mistake, e.g., a policy began by stating that A had paid the company a certain sum by way of premium. Held, that the existence of these words in the policy does not prevent the company from asserting that the premium was not in fact paid: A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 343. See also 1938 All.W.R. 16: 1938 R.D. 4.

Doctrine of estoppel is not attracted in case of violation of statutory provisions: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1685 (Bom.) (D.B.).

There can be no estoppel against law—No amount of admission contrary to law could create such estoppel: (1968)-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 928: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 565; A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 217: 1960 M.P.L.J. 180.

The plea of waiver or acquiescence cannot stand before the mandate of the statute: A.I.R. 1982 P.&H. 402: 1982 Punj.L.J. 415.

Ignorance of law, plea of: 1963 Ker.L.T. 1022.

Every body is supposed to know the law or at least to have as much opportunity of knowing the law as another so that a wrong belief on a point of law cannot strictly be said to be caused by a misrepresentation on the part of another: 1938 O.W.N. 355: A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 110. See also 1943 R.D. 359; A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 22: (1942) 2 M.L.J. 97.

It is well settled that there is no estoppel against law or Governments and Municipal Corporations (and other bodies akin thereto) exercising their Governmental powers or discharging duties to the public; if the rule of estoppel is allowed to control their future conduct a violation of law once made would become the law qua the promises; that would be highly prejudicial to the public interest: 1982 Lab.I.C. 401 (Karn.).

S. 115 of the Evidence Act which embodies the doctrine of estoppel cannot override S. 17 of the Registration Act. There can be no estoppel against statutes. This plea which is only a rule of evidence is unavailable as against statutory requirements: 1956 An. W.R. 547. A promise not to eject against the express provisions of law cannot operate as an estoppel: 1940 R.D. 239: 1940 All.W.R. (B.R.) 144.

Two main pillars of the rule of estoppel, either under the Evidence Act or under the general law, are (1) the representation must be a representation of fact and (2) the other must have a belief in the truth of it and act on the representation. Where on his own showing a person had parted with his interests and was not a proprietor during the relevant period nor was there any evidence that he had belief in the truth of the representation, it must be held that he was not misled into thinking that the State still regarded him as a proprietor. Further, when he was fully aware of the real state of affairs he cannot plead estoppel. Secondly, according to the plaintiff, notwithstanding the fact that the State had acquired indefeasible title to his estates and tenures, the State represented that he was still a proprietor. What the State is alleged to have represented was a representation of law as to the effect of the notification issued under S. 3 or S. 3-A of the Act and not of fact. It is an estoppel against the statute itself. Accordingly, the plaintiff could not set up an estoppel to prevent its operation. There is no estoppel against a statute and accordingly the State is not estopped from denying the plaintiff's title: 1961 Pat.L.R. 89: (1961) 11 B.L.J.R. 446.

An ultra vires statute cannot be validated by acquiescence but an acquiescing party may be estopped from questioning it: A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 44: 1939 Nag.L.J. 439: I.L.R. (1939) Nag. 143.

In a dispute between a citizen and a public authority, elements of public interest intervene. A public authority is not just some other party; it is the custodian of public interests or public good also. It is often said that estoppel cannot operate against a statute, all that it means is that where a law imposes a duty, a plea of estoppel cannot prevent the performance of that duty. It is trite law that statutory obligations prevail over contractual or similar obligations. The concept of public law estoppel is a developing one, and its contours are still ill-defined. Broadly stated, it may be applied in cases where the public authority is acting purely in exercise of executive or administrative discretion. Where the discretion is granted by a statute, or even by subordinate legislation, other considerations will arise. Even in the matter of executive discretion pure and simple, similar considerations may not be altogether alien. It will certainly be no easy task for any Court to decide whether the power exercised in a given case involves a duty to act for the public good, because public good itself is an elusive concept. To strike a balance between public benefit and fairness to the individual, will be still more difficult. [(1977) 2 All E.R. 182; 1983 Ker.L.T. 1083, Rel. on]: 1984 Ker. L:T. 793.

There can be no estoppel against a statute but if a statute confers any benefit on a party, it is open to a party to give up that benefit unless the giving up of that benefit is contrary to public policy: A.I.R. 1972 P.&H. 333: 1971 Punj.L.J. 746: 1972 All.L.R. 72 (D.B.).

The principle that there cannot be an estoppel against the statute does not apply where a particular provision of law is for the benefit of the State and it is clear from its conduct that it has chosen not to insist on performance of such provision: 1972 All.W.R. 265.

Where a statute imposes a duty by a positive action, estoppel cannot prevent it. Estoppel is only a rule of evidence which can be invoked under special circumstances but is not available to release a party from the obligation to obey the statute. The duty of each party is to obey law. Where the suit was based upon a supplementary agreement which modified the original agreement to pay enhanced rate for electricity consumed, the plaintiff cannot base his claim upon estoppel, when the suit is found barred by limitation: 1964 Jab.L.J. 57:1964 M.P.L.J. 579: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 101.

S. 3 of the Limitation Act, 1963 enjoins upon the Court a duty to dismiss time-barred proceedings even if no plea of limitation is set up in defence; a defendant not raising such defence is not estopped from pleading limitation; there is no estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 120-B: 1976 B.B.C.J. 649: 1977 Pat.L.J.R. 371 (D.B.).

No person can be precluded from pleading that certain orders are illegal or invalid, because the question as to whether orders are illegal or invalid is a pure question of law, and there can be no estoppel against law: (1951) 53 Bom.L.R. 229: A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 72.

It is impossible in law for a person to allege any kind of principle which precludes him from alleging the invalidity of that which the statute has on grounds of general public policy, enacted shall be invalid. [A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 114, Foll.]: 1957 B.L.J.R. 319: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 456.

Where in the previous suit the plaintiff admitted that the suit was bad for partial partition and therefore he withdrew the same but in the subsequent suit he contended that said suit was not bad for partial partition and the defendant pleaded estoppel, held, whether a particular suit is bad for partial partition or not is a question of law and there cannot be any question of estoppel against law. So the plaintiff was not estopped from asserting that the suit was not bad for partial partition: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 241.

There could be no estoppel against a statute. It is settled law that the doctrine of estoppel could not be applied against an act of Legislature. The principle of estoppel could not be invoked to evade the plain provisions of a statute; nor could the Court enforce an alleged right based on the doctrine of estoppel opposed to the provisions of a statute. Moreover, estoppel under S. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, which merely is a rule of evidence based on equitable principles, would come into play only when it has been shown that by the declaration or representation of one person the other was induced to act to his prejudice. The principle on which the law of estoppel rests is that it would be most inequitable and unjust to allow a person to repudiate the fact of his former admission to cause loss and injury to the person who acted on it. It is for the plaintiff to establish that there had been a change in her position and she had suffered or would suffer damage or injury if a plea of estoppel is not unheld. [I.L.R. 34 All. 398; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 777; (1963) 76 Mad.L.W. 952, Disting.]: 1983 Ker.L.T. 160.

The Government policy statement of procuring 70 percent of the sugar produced by sugar factories and leaving the balance 30 per cent for free market sale is only a declaration of its intention; it cannot be enforceable in a Court; it is enforced by the instrumentality of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955; no person can found a right on any statement of policy; there can be no estoppel against any such statement made in exercise of sovereign or executive functions of the State: A.I.R. 1979 Mad. 207 (D.B.).

Where a private company and the State Government entered into an agreement whereby the Company set up a rayon weaving mill and the Government bound itself to supply the raw materials and later on in consideration of the Company having purchased, with permission, 30,000 acres of private forest for growing bamboos with pro tanto reduction of the Government's liability for supply of raw materials, the Government undertook to keep the forests purchased by the Company immune subject to conditions from acquisition for 60 years under the then proposed legislation for acquisition of private forests (the Court could not but raise its eye brows on what it termed to be a surrender of legislative power), held, that the latter agreement could not be of any avail to the Company; it does not create any estoppel against acquisition of the forests under statute; the plea of estoppel must fail: A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 36: 1972 Ker.L.T. 628: 1972 Ker.L.J. 628 (F.B.).

Where the licence of a wholesale dealer of grains and sugar was suspended and sought to be revoked by the Special Officer Incharge Rationing under S. 7 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 and the dealer impugned his competence on the ground that he was not the licensing authority under law in respect of wholesale trade when, as discovered later on, the dealer's wholesale licence had been granted by that very Officer, held, the dealer was not estopped from challenging that Officer's jurisdiction; there can be no estoppel against statute: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 225 (F.B.).

It is well settled that there is no estoppel against a statute. Where the petitioner, a licensed dealer of food grains purchased the stock of wheat at a higher rate than the scheduled price on the express understanding that it would be utilised for preparing wheat products but subsequently the State Government issued U.P. Wheat (Levy) Order, 1974 which required every licensed dealer to part with 50 percent of stock in his possession in favour of the Food Corporation of India, held, the Government might have induced the petitioner to purchase wheat in the open market for utilisation in the preparation of wheat products but when subsequently law enacted that every licensed dealer in food grains had to part with 50 per cent of the stock of wheat in favour of the Government, the dealer concerned could not plead estoppel. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1976 All. 397: 1976 All.W.C. 232.

Where a Government memo fixing the price payable to the millers for the subsequent year's crop sales is in violation of statutory requirements of S. 3(3-B) of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, held, the Government cannot be bound by it; there can be no estoppel against the Government and its agencies; if the Courts were to compel the Government to abide by the memo, they would in effect be granting legal sanctity to what is a patently illegal and ultra vires act of the executive Government: (1981) 2 An.W.R. 228 (D.B.).

Admission of a party does not affect construction of statute: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 62.

Where the plaintiff filed a suit for partition and on the allegation that during the pendency of the suit the disputed land came within the consolidation area, he filed an application for abatement of the suit under S. 4(4) of the Orissa Consolidation of Holdings and Prevention of Fragmentation of Land Act, 1972 and though publication of a notification in Official Gazette bringing the disputed land within consolidation area was a must, no such notification was issued, held, non-traverse by the plaintiff would not lead to the irresistible conclusion that there was no notification and even the admission by the plaintiff would not act as an estoppel if in fact there was no notification as required under law: A.I.R. 1987 Ori. 122: (1987) 63 Cut.L.T. 31.

The doctrine of estoppel cannot be invoked to render valid a transaction which the Legislature has on grounds of general public policy, enacted shall be invalid, or to give the Court a jurisdiction which is denied to it by statute, or to oust the statutory jurisdiction of the Court under an enactment which precludes the parties contracting out of its provisions. Where a statute, enacted for the benefit of a section of public, imposes a duty of a positive kind, the person charged with the performance of such duty cannot, by estoppel, be prevented from exercising his statutory powers: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 297.

No question of estoppel can arise against the express provision of Statutory Rules. In case of a statute enacted for the benefit of a section of the public, where the statute imposes a duty of a positive kind not avoidable by the performance of any formality, it is not open to the opposite party to set-up an estoppel to prevent it. An estoppel is only a rule of evidence which, under certain special circumstances, can be invoked by a party to an action; but, it cannot be availed of to release a party from an obligation or to escape from a statutory obligation. The duty of each party is to obey the law: (1975) 25 B.L.J.R. 30.

Where Government is given powers to frame rules, they are generally framed by some officers of the Government and if they go beyond the authority conferred upon the Government for the purposes of framing rules, those rules cannot bind the Government. In such cases there can be no estoppel, because the rules framed are against the statutory powers conferred upon the rule making body and there can never be estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1977 Pat. 32: 1977 Pat.L.J.R. 97 (D.B.).

Merely because in an earlier writ petition by another employee, the Court had wrongly assumed that G.O. Ms. No. 2155, dated 16-10-1964, was a statutory rule, held, the State is not precluded from contending in another writ petition that it was not a statutory force and could not attract the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution of India; the State's failure to appeal against the decision in the earlier writ petition cannot have the effect of providing to an administrative rule a constitutional source of power which it plainly did not possess: (1985) 2 M.L.J. 70: A.I.R. 1986 Mad. 188: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. 17 (F.B.).

Where a deed of agreement executed by the Secretary, Urban Improvement Trust permitted allottee to improve disputed land and after dividing it into plots, to sell the plots in market and as the State Government refused to honour said commitment the allottee pleaded estoppel, held, what the Secretary, Urban Improvement, Jaipur did by signing the deed of agreement was something which he was prohibited by law from doing as only the Chairman of the Trust had the power to sign the deed. Therefore, the Government could not be compelled by invoking the doctrine of promissory estoppel to do something which the law prohibited it from doing. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285, Foll.; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 157 (Raj.).

Where the rights granted under a sanad were liable to revocation on breach of its terms but were taken away under regulations framed by the Governor, held, there could be no estoppel against legislation; it is only if the regulations are beyond the Governor's legislative competence that the cancellation of the sanad could be challenged: A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 236: (1973) 2 An.W.R. 266: (1972) 2 A.P.L.J. 281 (D.B.).

It is quite true that there can be no estoppel against a statute but this well-recognised rule does not imply that there can be no estoppel even against plea of a fact which has to be established before the application of the statute can be invoked. A man may not estop himself by any conduct of his from pleading that an alienation made by him is in contravention of a provision of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. He may, however, estop himself by such conduct from pleading that he is a member of a tribe to which protection is afforded by the Act: (1945) 47 Punj.L.R. 385: A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 73.

Where Para 21 of the Schedule IV of Part III of the Land Acquisition Manual, provided for interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum in cases of acquisition of land for the purposes of Central Government though for the land acquired for purposes of State Government this rate was 4 percent but subsequently, the Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act, 1953 reduced the said rate of 6 percent to 4 percent, held, in view of subsequent amendment the Government cannot be estopped from pleading that only 4 percent interest will have to be awarded: A.I.R. 1981 Andh. Pra. 232.

Where though the members of the Deshi Tripura (Laskar) community were treated as to have been included within the Tripura tribe and, thus, Scheduled tribes certificates were issued and other benefits were conferred on them, but that would not estop the Government of Tripura from taking the correct constitutional stand if the Laskar community did not belong to Scheduled Tribes, inasmuch as there could be no estoppel against a statute much less against constitutional provisions. [A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1829, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1987 Gau. 24: (1985) 2 Gau.L.R. 117 (D.B.).

Waiver of constitutional rights—No presumption from silent record: A.I.R. 1970 U.S.S.C. 10.

Where certain payments by way of bazaar dues are made by the defendants in ignorance of their legal position, they are not estopped from questioning the right to recover such dues. Further, there can be no estoppel against a statutory provision: 1940 O.W.N. 782: A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 409.

Payment of pay and allowances of notice period not made simultaneously with the order of retirement but paid subsequently—It does not affect the right of the petitioners as there can be no estoppel against a statute: (1983) 1 Serv.L.J. 45.

In the absence of a provision for appeal against the stoppage of increments with cumulative effect, the aggrieved employee cannot contend that since an enquiry was held against him under the Punjab Civil Services (Punishment and Appeal) Rules, 1970, he is entitled to impugn the punishment by way of appeal under those Rules; the employer is entitled to challenge the competency or maintainability of the appeal despite having held the enquiry; there is no estoppel against statute, statutory rules or bye-laws: (1983) 2 Serv.L.J. 355.

No Government can bind a law-making authority by its representation. It is a basic principle of constitutional law that no contract or grant can curtail the legislative power granted by the Constitution. Hence, even assuming that there had been some representation on the part of the State Government, both the State Government and the officials concerned are bound by the impugned amendment reducing the age of retirement which is the result of a legislative action. [A.I.R. 1943 F.C. 29 and A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 127 and A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 540, Rel. on].

Further, as a general rule, the doctrine of estoppel will not be applied against the State in its Governmental, public or sovereign capacity. But an exception arises where it is necessary to prevent fraud or manifest injustice. [1973 Lab.I.C. 1593 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1975 Lab.I.C. 799: (1974) 2 Karn.L.J. 275: I.L.R. (1974) Karn. 852.

Where in a writ petition impugning his premature compulsory retirement, an employee of the High Court had impleaded, amongst others, the Chief Justice as well as the High Court through its Registrar after serving the Chief Justice and the Government Pleader under R. 5 of the A.P. High Court (Original Side) Rules and at its preliminary hearing the Government Pleader contended on behalf of the respondents without instructions from the Chief Justice or the High Court that the petition was not maintainable in view of Art. 371-D of the Constitution of India, the employees' remedy being only to move the A.P. Administrative Tribunal which, when moved, gave a finding in favour of the employees and the Chief Justice impugned the Tribunal's jurisdiction in a writ petition, held, the point involved interpretation of Art. 371-D and there being no estoppel against statute, much less the Constitution, the earlier judgment in limine did not bind him; at any rate, the

Where Air Hostesses were under regulations permitted to marry after four years of service but they were made liable to be retired from service on getting pregnant which latter provision in Regn. 46(i)(c) of the Air India Employees Service Regulation was struck down as violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution, held, no party could be estopped to challenge an award or agreement based on the unconstitutional provision; there is no estoppel against statute, much less against a constitutional provision: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1829: (1981) 4 S.C.C. 335.

Where petitioners failed to remit the provident fund contributions deducted from the wages of the employees alongwith matching contributions but subsequent to the launching of prosecution, they entered into an arrangement with the Provident Fund Commissioner and pursuant to the arrangement, entire amount of contributions and other dues were remitted, held, payment could not have absolved them of their original guilt but it would have snapped the recurrence. [(1980) 56 F.J.R. 456 (Cal.), Dissent.; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1725, Foll.]: 1992 Cr.L.J. 303 (Mad.).

There cannot be any estoppel on a question of law or against a statute. Whether a particular payment is embraced within the term "wages" as denied by S. 2(22) of the Employees' State Insurance Act or not, is a matter of statutory interpretation. There may be cases, where it is not free from ambiguity, to infer the exact nature of the payment. In such cases the principle of contemporanea exposito est optima et fortissima in lege may be attracted. Therein the admissions and conduct of the parties will be relevant for determining such ambiguous matters. But where the matters are clear from the record and the question is as to whether or not a particular statutory provision is applicable to them, no amount of admission of any party can act as an estoppel, so as to preclude him from asking that in law he cannot be fastened with a liability unwarranted by law. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593, Foll.]: 1976 Lab.I.C. 12 (Pat.) (D.B.).

There cannot be any estoppel against a statute, particularly when the non-compliance with the statute goes to root of the thing. Where the workmen have received the sums paid by the employer on acknowledgement of receipt in final settlement, they are not prevented from demanding any further payment or from urging that S. 25-F(b) of the Industrial Disputes Act has not been duly complied with. The rule of estoppel or waiver cannot be applied against retrenched workmen who have no freedom to refuse payment in view of their financial position caused by retrenchment: (1965) 2 Lab. L.J. 324: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 166.

There can be no estoppel against statute; thus where voting through machines was permitted by the Election Commission there was no provision therefor either in the Conduct or Election Rules, 1961 nor in the Representation of the People Act, 1951, held, the State was not estopped from challenging the Election Commission's decision: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 921: (1984) 2 S.C.C. 656: 1984 U.J. (S.C.) 558.

Recruitment of some Officers for training as Tahsildars under Tahsildar and B.D.O. (Recruitment) Rules—Completion of probation and appointment of Tahsildars in due course—Seniority of such Officers—Appointment being under special rules, rules as to probation and seniority held not applicable to them—Seniority list upheld—Estopped against statute: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 47.

Even if assurance not to resume an estate had been given, it would certainly not have been binding on the Government because its powers of resumption are regulated by the statute, and must be exercised in accordance with its provisions.

The Act VI of 1952 confers no authority on the Government to grant exemption from resumption and an undertaking not to resume will be invalid, and there can be no estoppel against a statue: (1955) 2 S.C.R. 303: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 504.

The principle of estoppel cannot be invoked by a party to an agreement which in law falls within the mischief of S. 6(a), T.P. Act: A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 488.

There can be no estoppel against a statute, nor can the principle of res judicata be invoked when there is a change of law: I.L.R. (1962) 1 Punj. 524: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 225.

A compromise in contravention of provisions of law cannot operate as estoppel: 1936 R.D. 565. But where in a deed, the term which is in contravention of the statute is separable, the deed is void in respect of that part only, and the rest being severable, estoppel may arise in respect of the parts which are good: 63 Cal.L.J. 52: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 774.

If an agreement is found to be in contravention of a statute or against public policy a party cannot be held estopped from pleading or proving facts which would render the agreement void ab initio. The fact that a party may thereby be enabled to take advantage of his own wrong cannot be allowed to militate against the mischief which would otherwise follow. There can be no estoppel against pleading or relying upon a statute: A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 268 (F.B.); I.L.R. 22 Pat. 554; I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 227: A.I.R. 1943 Sind 177.

Company assessed to company's tax by Municipality—Letter by company's agent to Municipal Council assuming validity of the assessment—Suit questioning the legality of the assessment—Maintainable—No estoppel: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 146 at 152: 108 I.C. 216.

Where a contract is not drawn up and executed in the manner provided by S. 47, Punjab Municipal Act, there can be no question of the Municipality being estopped by its admissions. There can be no estoppel against a statute. If the position of the occupier and the payment of rent by him do not give him the status of a tenant, the Municipal Committee in accepting rent does not estop itself from denying the status of occupier: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 181.

When a mortgage is void under the law, there is no rule of estoppel which prevents the mortgagor from pleading and proving the fact of the mortgage being void: I.L.R. 10 Luck. 261: A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 121; I.L.R. 13 Luck. 178: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 431; I.L.R. (1938) All. 714: A.I.R. 1938 All. 418 (F.B.).

Where a sale deed is void ab initio there would be no question of estoppel as against the transferor: I.L.R. (1953) Cut. 508: A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 333.

Son joining in sale deed by father in ignorance of legal rights whether estopped. See 25 All.L.J. 878: A.I.R. 1927 All. 838.

Estoppel is not available against provision of a statute. The mere recital of the factum of exchange in a power-of-attorney cannot in effect operate as an exchange when the requisites required for a valid exchange like registration of document is absent. In such a case, attestation with knowledge of contents of document and consenting to transaction, will not amount to estoppel. Such a document though it contained more specific and detailed recitals will not prevail over subsequent power-of-attorney with a general statement of authorisation: (1979) 1 Cal.L.J. 423.

The plaintiffs conveyed the suit lands to the defendants by a registered deed of sale and put them in possession. A few days before the expiry of the period of limitation, the plaintiffs brought the suit for possession of the lands after establishment of their title thereto. Their case was that the disputed lands formed part of their lakhiraj raiyati holding of 23 bighas and odd and that the sale contravened the provisions of S. 27 of the Santhal Parganas Settlement Regulation which forbade transfer of raiyati lands and was, therefore, void ab initio and conferred no title on the defendants. They contended that the defendants were mere trespassers and they were entitled to recover possession of the disputed land. Held (i) An estoppel can arise only when what was put forward is different from actuality. In the instant case, the plaintiffs stated what was a fact and what was evidenced by the record. They did not present either by word or deed that the lands constituted their tenure and were transferable. Under S. 115, a person shall not be allowed to say one thing at one time and the opposite of it at another time to the detriment of another. Putting the defendant's case at the highest, the expressions used in the sale deed were susceptible of two interpretations because "lakhiraj jote" was consistent with both tenure and raiyati holding. That being so, no estoppel was created against the plaintiffs. Further, the statements of the plaintiffs were not absolutely unqualified. They purported to be qualified by the record-of-rights. Hence, there was no estoppel against the plaintiffs. (ii) In normal circumstances a vendor is bound by his deed and is estopped from contending that the land which he has stated as transferable is in fact not transferable. This principle, however, does not apply to the present case, because the statute says that the lands are inalienable. S. 27 of the Regulation prohibits altogether transfer by a raiyati of his right in his holding or any portion thereof by sale, gift, mortgage, lease or any other contract or agreement. It declares that all such transfers shall be void unless the right to transfer has been recorded in the record-of-rights. In the instant case, the raiyati holding is not described in the record-of-rights as transferable. There cannot be estoppel against statute. Hence, it must be held on the facts of this case that no estoppel is created against the plaintiffs: 1957 Pat.L.R. 288.

Where a property sold and confirmed under S. 40 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 was sold again under the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954 and the vendees under the confirmed sale impugned the second sale by way of revision under S. 24, thereof, held, it could not be said that by resorting to S. 24 of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act the vendees had disentitled themselves from denying that the property was not a pool property under that Act; since resort to civil Courts was barred under S. 36 thereof, the only remedy left to them was that of revision under the Act; the doctrine of estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1980 All. 231 (D.B.).

Statute imposing positive duty upon public officer in the general interest of public—Exemption from duty cannot be claimed by pleading estoppel: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 348.

There can be no estoppel against a statute. If the law requires that a certain tax be collected, it cannot be given up, and any assurance that it would not be collected would not bind the State Government, whenever it chose to collect it: (1962) 1 (Supp.) S.C.R. 913: (1962) 13 S.T.C. 180: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 745.

Clarifications/Circulars issued by the Central Government and or State Government regarding taxability of certain items to tax do not prevent the State from recovering the tax which is leviable according to law. There can be no estoppel against the statute: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2414.

Where a Municipality owing to some mistake failed to recover a particular tax, it cannot be pleaded that they are estopped from recovering it, when they later on make attempts to collect it. The plea cannot enable a defendant to escape from a statutory obligation: 1939 Nag.L.J. 265: A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 195.

Where in answer to a letter from an owner of certain premises, the Calcutta Corporation informed him that a certain amount was due on account of the arrears of the municipal consolidated rates, and the amount mentioned by it was by a mistake less than the amount that was actually due. Held, (i) that the Corporation was not estopped from recovering the sum actually due. It is an elementary principle that there is no estoppel against the law, under the provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act there is a statutory obligation imposed respectively on the corporation and the rate payer to collect and pay the rates—these rates being secured by a first charge on the premises and there being no power to remit the taxes unless they appear to be irrecoverable; (ii) that a purchaser of the premises from the owner was in no better position than his vendor and could not, therefore, defeat his statutory liabilities by a plea of estoppel: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 263: 81 Cal.L.J. 155: A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 273.

There can be no estoppel in the matter of a statutory levy. Hence, the conduct of the Government in accepting the tax for September, 1950, and for the subsequent periods does not estop them from demanding a tax in respect of August, 1950: 1955 Ker.L.T. 946: A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 85: I.L.R. (1955) Trav.-Co. 889.

Even if it be assumed that the petitioner had the necessary knowledge of the proposals for the imposition of water tax, this does not take away his constitutional right of challenging the validity of the new taxation measure—there is no such thing as estoppel applying to a matter like this: 1958 All.L.J. 857: 1959 All. W.R. (H.C.) 99: A.I.R. 1959 All. 192.

It is true that a person cannot approbate and reprobate the same transaction and when he accepts a benefit under an agreement he must conform to all the provisions of the agreement and renounce all rights that are inconsistent with it. But when the compromise between the assessee and the Income-tax Department was to the effect that the assessee would file a voluntary return and the Department would drop the proceedings against the firm under S. 34 of the 1922 Act, and there was nothing to indicate that the return that was being filed would be a valid return under S. 139 of the Income-tax Act, 1961, then in spite of the compromise it would be open to the assessee to take up the position that the return filed by her was barred by time. It would be equally open to her to urge before the High Court that the assessment order was also barred by time: (1970) 75 I.T.R. 625 (All.). (See also Note 49, supra).

Application under S. 25(2)(b), Bihar Sales Tax Act made by State of Bihar admitted by High Court ex parte without notice to assessee—Assessee is not estopped from raising objection that application under S. 25(2)(b) is incompetent even at the stage when High Court is hearing reference under S. 25(5). See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 182 (D.B.).

The liability to pay tax arises under the charging section of the statue and it does not require any prior notice about such a liability having been incurred. The fact that the assessee has not for one reason or the other, collected the tax from purchasers is of no consequence at all. The doctrine of promissory estoppel cannot be applied in the teeth of an obligation or liability imposed by law, and neither the Government nor a private party can be compelled under this doctrine to do an act prohibited by law. (Case under Sales Tax Act): (1981) 29 B.L.J.R. 688.

Where the High Court in another case had rightly concluded that weights and measures were not covered by the notification, dated 31-7-1967, under S. 3-A of the U.P. Sales Tax Act, 1948 and therefore not eligible for single point sales tax which was followed by the Sales Tax Appellate Authority which was impugned by the aggrieved assessee on the basis of several letters and clarificatory orders, some of them even quoting the State Government's authority as their basis, held, such representations could not create estoppel being against the statute. [A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 746; A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 806, Rel. on; 1972 Tax.L.R. 1889 (All.) (F.B.), Approved]: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1576: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 705.

Since there is no estoppel against statute, the fact that the manufacturer himself had fixed the wholesale price at which he sells to wholesale dealers, would not prevent him from contending what the wholesale price is as under Central Excise Act: (1976) 1 Kam.L.J. 320.

Where the Haryana Tourism Corporation challenged the demand of the authorities to pay cess under the Water (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Cess Act, 1977, held, when it is found that the Corporation was not liable to pay cess under the said Act, merely because on some earlier occasion it had submitted to the jurisdiction of the authorities under that Act and complied with certain demands, it was not estopped from challenging their jurisdiction subsequently: 1993 Punj. L.J. 243 (D.B.).

A notification under S. 25(1) of the Customs Act, 1962 is legislative in nature; no estoppel can be pleaded against such notification as there can be no estoppel against statute: 1984 Tax. L.R. (N.O.C.) 26 (Del.): (1983) 3 Comp.L.J. 129: 1983 E.L.T. 1688: I.L.R. (1983) 2 Del. 327.

There is no estoppel in law against a party in a taxation matter. Thus, where in order to clear the goods for the customs, the Importer's Agents gave the classification of the impugned goods in accordance with the wishes of the Customs Authorities or under some misapprehension, held, they were not estopped from claiming refund when law allowed them such right and which they actually applied for: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 597: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 241: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 98.

The Sea Customs Act is concerned with one of the principal sources of the public revenues of the country and it directs the Customs officials to determine the value of imported goods in a certain manner and to levy duty on such value. Neither the Government of India nor any subordinate Department of it has any right to modify the provisions of the statute and to recover less on the basis of such modification to the detriment of the public treasury. If it does introduce such modification, even acts on it in a given case and then cancels the modification and demands the statutory amount of duty, it cannot be met by a plea of estoppel: (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 20: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 151.

There cannot be an estoppel in the exercise of the sovereign power and/or against the statute or valid notification. Therefore, the contention that at the time of importation of the goods, a Customs Officer had given "Nil" certificate to the petitioner and, therefore, the Customs Authorities were estopped from contending otherwise and the principle of estoppel and the laws analogous should be applied debarring the Authorities from imposing the duty, held, cannot be accepted: (1989) 43 E.L.T. 44.

Where a contract of life insurance with enemy company frustrated and became unlawful and void by reason of the outbreak of war, and by virtue of R. 113-A, Defence of India Rules the contract cannot be revived or continued by the insured writing to the firm, which has taken over the management of the enemy company for a loan from the company or by asking it to reduce the insurance by making part of the policy as paid up, specially when the letters are written "without prejudice to the rights of the parties due to the outbreak of war" There is no estoppel against law. Moreover under the notification issued under R. 113-A, giving the management of the enemy company to another firm the latter were forbidden to enter into any new contract. Hence, this new firm could not enter into a new contract with the insured. So the suit by the insured for the return of the premium paid so far on the policy on the ground that the contract has become unlawful and unenforceable, is not barred by waiver, acquiescence or estoppel: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 596.

Where the Central Government by virtue of its powers conferred by S. 23 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, brought in an amendment to item A-14 of Appendix-B of the Rules framed under the Act and extended the prohibition to the addition of flavouring matter to tea, held, there being no prohibition for export to foreign market but the prohibition was only with regard to indigenous market, it was the resultant of a function under the delegated legislation and thus, there could not be any estoppel against the Government in exercise of its sovereign, legislative or executive function: 1990 Cr.L.J. 155 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

A plaintiff's failure to rely specifically on S. 96, Motor Vehicles Act, cannot enable the insurers to invoke the principle of estoppel. It is well established that there can be no estoppel against a statute. A plea not open to the defendants under a statute cannot become available to them under the principles of estoppel. Obviously, no estoppel can be pleaded against the prohibitions enacted by the statute: I.L.R. (1959) Punj. 714: (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 683: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 297.

Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, S. 57 (3)—Provisions are mandatory—Non-publication of application for permit—Authorities cannot proceed with application—Petitioner conceding claim of respondent bona fide believing publication of his application—Application in fact not published—Concession not binding—No estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1963 All. 38.

Where the States of Haryana and Himachal Pradesh agreed to grant inter-State permits to public carriers on the condition that they would neither pick up nor set down any goods between two points in the same State which is clearly against S. 56 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 and ultra vires, held, the permit holders are not estopped from assailing the condition merely because they had obtained the permits on that condition: A.I.R. 1977 Him. Pra. 46: 1976 Sim.L.C. 18 (D.B.).

Since it is well settled (vide A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 319) that a private operator having a permit to ply a stage carriage over a route a part whereof overlaps a nationalised route cannot ply over the overlapping common portion, even with corridor restrictions, held, renewals of such permit of the private operator by the Authorities even for a long period of 29 years will not constitute an estoppel against the Authorities; they could validly decline to renew the permit: A.I.R. 1995 Karn. 103 (D.B.).

There can be no estoppel against a statute. Therefore, a party who has gone to arbitration under the contract which was void under some Act, in this case, Raw Jute (Central Jute Board and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (VI of 1951), cannot plead that his opponent having taken part in arbitration proceedings could not later on repudiate the award as void: A.I.R 1953 Cal. 458: (1947-48) 52 Cal.W.N. 541 (S.B.).

Filing of award—Award can be filed only in Court in which suit would lie with regard to subject-matter of reference—An agreement between parties to file it in a different Court is against the statute and cannot be given effect to—Fact that there is such an agreement and that the parties had also acted upon it can be of no avail since there can be no estoppel against statutes: A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 134.

Contract with arbitration clause between companies A and B—Reference made by companies C as proprietor of B—A challenging award of arbitrator on ground that B was not a legal entity and therefore contract was void—Held, that A had a legal right to challenge the contract or its validity—There could not be any estoppel against statute: (1966) 36 Comp. Cas. 53: (1966) 1 Comp. L.J. 6: (1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 110.

Where in a probate proceeding a dispute as to genuineness of the Will was referred to arbitration and no objection as to the award was taken but in appeal the points as to illegality of the reference to arbitration was raised, held, that the point could be raised and the doctrine of estoppel was not applicable: 1930 All.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1930 All. 840. In case of a statute enacted for the benefit of section of the public, that is, on grounds of public policy, where the statute imposes a duty of a positive kind, not avoidable by the performance of any formality for the doing of the very act which the party suing seeks to do it, is not open to the opposite party to set up an estoppel to prevent it. This conclusion must follow from the circumstance that an estoppel is only a rule of evidence by a party to an action; it cannot, therefore, avail in such a case to release the party suing from an obligation to obey such a statute nor can it enable the opposite party to escape from a statutory obligation of such kind on his part. It is immaterial whether the obligation is onerous or otherwise to the party suing. The duty of each party is to obey law: 1937 Mad.W.N. 633: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 114 (P.C.).

There can be no waiver unless the person who is said to have waived is fully informed as to his right and with full knowledge of such right, he intentionally abandons it. In this case, there was nothing to show that the petitioners were aware at the time of the auction that the procedure adopted by the Commissioner in conducting the auction was contrary to the Rules and with the knowledge of such illegality, they waived their rights. Further, it is well-settled that there cannot be any acquiescence or estoppel against a statute. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2177 and A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, Rel. on]: 1982 Tax.L.R. 2831: (1981) 1 An.W.R. 364 (D.B.).

Where the parties in case of an agreed award had consented to attachment of the judgment-debtor's salary in excess of what is permitted under S. 60 of the Code of Civil Procedure, held, the judgment-debtor is not barred from challenging the attachment of the extra amount; there can be neither an estoppel nor an agreement against the statute itself: A.I.R. 1982 All. 489: 1982 All.W.C. 390: (1982) 8 All.L.R. 391.

The rule of estoppel cannot be invoked in a case where the claim is founded upon a document which is not enforceable under the statute: A.I.R. 1957 Assam 10. Where a lease was executed by the Nawab in contravention of the Murshidabad Act, held, that he was not estopped from denying the validity of the lease: I.L.R. 56 Cal. 252: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 433. Lease contrary to B.T. Act—Lessor's plea of invalidity—Maintainability: 105 I.C. 290; A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 156.

Where the Headmasters' Association, having its representatives in the Syllabus Committee had participated therein without demur, subsequently joined other petitioner's in impugning the revised syllabus as being in breach of the fundamental rights guaranteed under Art. 19(1)(a) of the Constitution and in violation of the West Bengal Secondary Education Act, 1963, held, they were not estopped from doing so merely because of the Association's participation in the revision of the syllabus; it is well settled that there can be no estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 467: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 908: (1982) 2 Cal.L.J. 148 (D.B.).

Where an Army Officer on having taken premature retirement was offered appointment in CRPF on temporary basis as a Commandant and even though to such category of officers benefit of absorption was not applicable under R. 107(2) of the CRPF Rules, 1955, still the Officer was asked by the Department to opt for absorption and when he opted for the same his representation was rejected and the Officer pleaded estoppel, held, even though the Departmental Authorities called for the option of the Army Officer for absorption but as such a step was contrary to the statutory rules, it would not operate as an estoppel nor confer any right to claim absorption: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1172: 1987 Lab.I.C. 896: (1987) 2 S.C.C. 211: (1987) 1 Lab.L.J. 507: (1987) 1 Lab.L.N. 774: (1987) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 13.

S. 5(2) of the A.P. (Andhra Area) Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948, on a fair reading, places no time limit and the Director may exercise the power thereunder at any time; it cannot, thus, be contended that not having earlier exercised the power, he was estopped from doing so; he is not a "party" contemplated under S. 115; there can be no estoppel against statute; the doctrine of estoppel is not available against the State's activities based on its judicial or quasi-judicial powers: (1978) 2 An.W.R. 11.

Person opting to be governed by certain Service Rules, is not barred by principle of approbate and reprobate from urging invalidity of the Rules. There can be no estoppel against a statutory requirement: (1970) 2 Mys.L.J. 197.

The doctrine of "approbate and reprobate" is only a species of estoppel, it applies to the conduct of parties. As in the case of estoppel, it cannot operate against the provisions of a statute. Thus, where in an eviction proceedings initiated under S. 13 of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act, 1949 in the Court of Rent Controller, the tenant denied the landlord's title and in the light of said stand the landlord believing that the tenant had forfeited whatever right of tenancy the tenant might be having, withdrew said proceedings and then filed a civil suit asserting that the tenant having forfeited his right of tenancy on account of said plea was a trespasser and was, thus liable to be evicted, to which the tenant replied that the plea of disclaimer or denial of relationship of landlord and tenant was due to stress and confusion as the landlord failed to disclose the details of the transaction between the landlord and his predecessor-in-interest, held, even if the tenant was bound by his admissions, still he could not be deprived of the protection of S. 13 of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act, 1949 or disentitled to plead that the provisions of the Act protect his possession. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1216, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 229: (1984) 86 Punj.L.R. 350.

Landlord letting out premises—There is implied representation that he has subsisting interest in premises let out—Landlord is estopped subsequently from contending that he was not legally competent to let out the premises—No legal bar to invoking doctrine of estoppel for limited purpose of assessing weight of argument against lawful tenancy—No question of estoppel against statute or on a point of jurisdiction arises in such case—Delhi Rent Control Act (LIX of 1958). S. 26—Landlord and tenant: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 12.

Where landlord issued a telegraphic quit notice to the tenant which could not be said to be valid as it did not contain his signature and was, thus, not in conformity with S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, held, the fact that tenant received it and even sent a reply would not estop him from challenging the validity of said notice subsequently as there can be no estoppel against the statute. [(1976) 1 M.L.J. 358; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1868; A.I.R. 1976 Andh. Pra. 205, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1990 Andh. Pra. 169: (1989) 2 A.P.L.J. (H.C.) 327: (1989) 3 An.L.T. 625.

Where after passing of an eviction decree in a civil suit, the town where the property was situate was constituted as a Municipality and the T.N. Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960 was automatically extended there and the judgment-debtor sought a declaration under that Act that the eviction decree was inexecutable, held, since S. 10(1) of that Act unambiguously applied to the case, the rule of estoppel could not be invoked against the judgment-debtor; he was entitled to the declaration that so long as that Act was in force, the eviction decree would remain inexecutable; there is no estoppel against law: (1980) 93 Mad.L.W. 378.

There is no statutory bar against the two individuals owning lease-hold rights treating the lease-hold rights to be the assets of the partnership firm, of which they are themselves the partners. No question of estoppel against statute arises in such a case: A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 143.

Where a sub-lessee with a view to avoid losing land entered into an agreement purchase it at a rate higher than the rate payable by him under law, held, the sub-lessee was not estopped from contending that the Trust be directed to refund the excess: A.I.R. 1972 P.&H. 296.

Merely because the petitioners, who were permitted to export the cattle by way of road prior to the passing of the Gujarat Milch and Draught Cattle (Control of Government) Order, 1983, had purchased the trucks for that purpose, held, the State Government cannot be estopped from enacting and/or implementing the impugned provisions against the petitioners as there cannot be

Where the tenant-at will sold his rights together with a brick built and tiled house with residential and tenure rights and all appurtenances of the house, and the landlord perused the transfer deeds and recognised the transfer, and he mutated the names of the transferees in his sherista, and when the transferee built a double-storeyed pucca house on the land, the landlord did not object to the construction, held, that the landlord was estopped from ascertaining any title to the land on which the transferee expended money on the supposition that he had a tenure right, i.e., a permanent tenancy, in the land. Held, also that it was not a case of an estoppel being pleaded against a statute, namely, T.P Act, S. 107 which requires a registered deed for the creation of a permanent tenancy. The plaintiff landlord was merely estopped from proving that the defendant was a mere tenant-at will. The statute came into operation only when the defendant was proved to be tenant-at will. Before that stage arrived, the estoppel operated: 1960 Pat.L.R. 65: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 289.

Exceptions to the bar of statute—Fixation of fair rent by consent of parties—Second application for the same relief, is, barred—Previous order operates as estoppel by conduct—Plea that estoppel could not lie against a statute, held, would not apply: A.I.R. 1970 J.&K. 26 (F.B.).

Estoppel under S. 115 consists not in putting forward a particular view of the law, but in making a particular representation on a point of fact. In a suit for arrears of rent in a revenue Court, the defendants pleaded that, on the allegations in the plaint, the plaintiff had not established that the property formed part of an estate, and, therefore, no suit lay in the revenue Court. This plea was upheld by the Court which returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff then filed the suit in the civil Court and the defendants now contended that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not made out that the land on which the rent was due was a portion of an estate. Held, that there was no question of estoppel in the case at all and the defendants were not estopped from contending that the civil Court has no jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 22: (1942) 22 M.L.J. 97.

Will in contravention of statute—Devise acting upon it—Dispute between co-devisees—Invalidity of will—Bar in pleading. See 1938 Nag.L.J. 181. See also (1939) 41 Bom.L.R. 170: A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 114.

Cement Control Order, 1961 fixing different ex-factory prices—Cement Control Order, 1967 also having different prices—Non-challenge of previous order does not estop person challenging subsequent order: A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 281.

If the terms of a statute are absolute and do not admit of any relaxation or exemption, then anything done contrary to the terms of such a statute will be ultra vires and will be void and no person can be estopped from putting forward the contention that what he did was illegal or void. On the other hand, if a statute having prescribed certain conditions or qualifications for the doing of a certain thing itself provides for exemption therefrom under certain circumstances or authorises somebody to exercise the power of exemption than anything done not in terms of those conditions or qualifications will not be ultra vires and will be said to be merely irregular and to such an Act, the proposition that there can be no estoppel against a statute will have no application. A student was admitted in violation or breach of Cl. 1 of Ordinance I issued by the University, Ordinance I prescribed as to who were eligible for admission to the University but Ordinance X-A in widest terms also enabled the Academic Council to grant exemption from the operation of any of the Ordinances governing the admission of the students. Held, existence of Ordinance X-A made the admission of students contrary to Ordinance I, not a ultra vires act, but only an irregular act, and therefore, the doctrine that there could be estoppel against a statute had no application to the case: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 131.

No question of estoppel arises where in a form prescribed for admission to a College it was expressly stated that the applicant should acquaint himself with all matters pertaining to the students of the faculty and that no plea will be entertained that the student was ignorant of Ordinances, Regulations, Rules or other provisions: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 79: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 150.

Candidate taking his examination on faith of certain regulations in force at the time of examination—University has no power to alter or substitute regulations with retrospective effect to candidates disadvantage—Writ—Candidate entitled to benefit under old regulation—Fact that he took supplementary examination under new regulation cannot disentitle him to such benefit—No estoppel against statute: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 463; A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 161 (F.B.).

Provisions of Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1855) expressly prohibiting protected tenant from transferring land without Collector's permission—Receipt of consideration and delivery of possession by him—Does not amount to estoppel against him in setting aside transfer—It is well settled that there is no estoppel against statute: 1968 B.L.J.R. 342: 1968 Pat.L.J.R. 52.

Order under S. 12 of M.P. Public Security Act—Petition for setting aside order taking aid of S. 12 (5) of the Act—It is not open to him to challenge the validity of S. 12—M.P. Public Security Act, 1959, S. 12: 1963 M.P.L.J. 489: 1963 Jab.L.J. 499: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 301.

Right to apply under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 85. There can be no estoppel against an act of the Legislature. When, therefore, the Legislature has declared that no adoption would be valid without a registered adoption deed the plaintiff is not estopped by her conduct from disputing the validity of defendant's adoption for want of a registered deed: 1939 M.L.R. 60 (Civ.). See also A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 234.

There can be no estoppel against law. Therefore, when an adoption is not legally valid no conduct can estop an interested person from challenging the validity of the adoption. Moreover, mere participation in the ceremonies of adoption in the absence of evidence showing consent to such adoption, or acts subsequent to such adoption not leading to the adoption, cannot estop a person from challenging the validity of the adoption: I.L.R. (1963) 2 All. 102: A.I.R. 1963 All. 509.

Employee of statutory corporation—Wrong reference to Art. 311 of the Constitution in order of dismissal—Corporation not debarred from pleading non-applicability of article subsequently: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 1040.

Binding and final decision of Board under S. 84 (2) of Madras Act (II of 1927) that institution is outside purview of Act is binding on Board—Application by trustee asking Board to interfere with management of institution on ground that it is Math—Estoppel on part of trustee does not confer power on Board which it did not possess under the Act—Moreover institution is estopped by the act or conduct of trustee: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1570.

It is true that if an act of Legislature alter or abridges the rights of the parties that must prevail and there can be no estoppel against a statute. But the Madras Act (XXVI of 1948) authorising the Government to take over estates does not authorise the Government to repudiate a lease created by them, and does not free them from estoppels to which they are subject as lessors: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 478: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 161.

There cannot be an estoppel against statute. A bidder at an auction of liquor shop held under the Punjab Excise Act is not estopped from challenging the legality of the conditions of sale announced at the time of the auction, if they are at variance with the conditions laid down by the statutory rules: (1951) 53 Punj.L.R. 424: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 274.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 13—Decree-holder filing execution petition for recovery of amount in terms of compromise decree—Judgment-debtor contending that he, being an agriculturist, was entitled to scaling down of debt under S. 13—Held, as compromise was not fresh contract but only revival of old debts under new garb, debt was liable to be scaled down—Contention that judgment-debtor having derived benefit under compromise was estopped from putting claim for scaling down of debt was untenable as there could be no estoppel against statute: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 329.

Where a Judicial Member of the Board of Revenue on retirement enrolled himself as an Advocate and started practising as such in the Board itself in violation of R. 7, Ch. III, Part 6 of the Rules framed by the Bar Council of India and, on disciplinary action being initiated against him, contended that at the time of his enrolment there was no such bar in the Rule which was subsequently amended and the Bar Council was estopped from enforcing the amended rule, held, R. 7, being a statutory rule, there could be no estoppel against it; besides, the rule was framed by the Bar Council of India and not by the Bar Council of Uttar Pradesh: A.I.R. 1986 All. 56 (D.B.).

Rr. 28 (1-A) and 57 (2) of the Mineral Concession Rules, 1949 being statutory rules, requirement of these rules cannot be waived by State Governments: (1970) 2 S.C.C. 13: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1354.

An excess of statutory power cannot be validated by acquiescence in or by the operation of an estoppel. The Court declines to interfere for the assistance of persons who seek its aid to relieve them against express statutory provision. Thus, where the Municipal Council, by a resolution, sanctioned plan for conversion of building into a cinema in violation of the Town Planning Scheme, but the High Court refused to quash said resolution on the ground that money was spent by the licensee, held, as said resolution had no legal foundation, principle of estoppel could not be invoked by licensee for giving effect to said resolution: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2177: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 506.

Under S. 4(c) read with S. 24 of the Special Marriage Act, under-age of a party renders the marriage null and void; no amount of estoppel for the party's false representation as to its age could make it valid: A.I.R. 1989 Cal. 120: (1988-89) 93 Cal.W.N. 102: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 228 (D.B.).

Where while granting permission under S. 5(1) (a), Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, to sell shares held by a foreign company, Reserve Bank of India imposed a condition that applications for purchase of shares from larger industrial houses and persons connected therewith would not be considered and the respondent was allotted shares as he had claimed in writing that he was not connected with a large industrial house but subsequently respondent challenged the validity of said condition, held, respondent was not estopped from challenging the condition as Reserve Bank of India had no authority under the provisions of the Act to impose said condition and there is no estoppel against illegality or legal unenforceability. [A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 72, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Cal. 65: (1977) 2 Cal.L.J. 483: (1977-78) 82 Cal.W.N. 61 (D.B.).

Since statutory rules are framed for the purpose, Councillors who attended a meeting which was not legally convened are not debarred from challenging the election held at the meeting on the ground of acquiescence: (1970) 2 Mys.L.J. 415.

Where Municipal Council resolved to nominate the petitioner as its representative to the Planning Authority for a period of one year and the petitioner filed a writ petition for quashing that portion of the resolution restricting his term to one year and the Municipal Council contended that as the petitioner was a party to the resolution and as he had taken advantage of that resolution he was estopped from saying that the said resolution was bad, held, the portion of the said resolution was illegal being contrary to S. 4-D (2) of the Karnataka Town and Country Planning Act, 1961 and as there could not be any estoppel against law, the petitioner was not estopped from challenging the Resolution to which he was a party and from which he had been benefited: A.I.R. 1988 Karn. 168: (1987) 1 Karn.L.J. 356.

Application for appointment by existing employee of Wakf Board pursuant to Committee's notification—Does not estop him from challenging Committee's decision: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 291.

There is no estoppel on a statement of law: (1938-39) 43 Cal.W.N. 1037: A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 201 (P.C.). See also A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 409; 1941 Rang.L.R. 309: A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 234; 1940 All.W.R. (B.R.) 144: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 140; 1978 B.B.C.J. 70.

A party is not bound by his lawyer's admission on a point of law: (1906-7) 11 Cal.W.N. 341; I.L.R. 24 Bom. 363; A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 376; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 368; A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 303.

The concession made by a Counsel on a pure question of law, will not estop him or his client from withdrawing from such concession at a later stage of the same proceedings or in an appeal or revision therefrom: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 35: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 379: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 253.

Admission of erroneous opinion on question of law by party's Counsel in lower Court—Not binding on that party while seeking relief in appeal: I.L.R. (1968) 1 All. 877: 1968 All.L.J. 402: A.I.R 1969 All. 14.

When the facts are fully set out and admitted, a party's opinion about the legal effect of those facts is of no consequence in construing it; no estoppel arises by reason of admission of the party as to such effect; a Counsel's admission of a point of law cannot be binding upon a Court; and Court is not precluded from deciding the rights of the parties on a true view of the law: A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 202.

It is well settled that there cannot be estoppel against statute or law and any concession made by a Counsel of a party will not estop the latter from withdrawing from such concession at a latter stage or in a latter proceeding when the concession is on pure question of law.

When, there is total lack of jurisdiction in the authorities under an Act, no amount of concession by parties' Counsel can confer any jurisdiction on them and if any such concession has been made under an erroneous impression of law, it is open to the party on whose behalf such concession or admission was made to show that such concession or admission was wrong: (1972) 2 Cut.W.R. 1252 (D.B.).

Though an admission on a question of fact made by a party or its Counsel binds them but a concession by a Counsel on behalf of his party on a question of law will not estop him or his party from withdrawing the concession: A.I.R. 1976 Karn. 13: (1975) 2 Karn.L.J. 241; 1981 Hindu L.R. 445 (J.&K.).

Concession by Counsel in the nature of opinion not binding on Court—Only opinion of Court counts—Concession by Counsel on point of law not binding on client: 1970 Ren. C.R. 332: 1970 Raj.L.W. 79.

There cannot be any estoppel on a point of law going to the jurisdiction of the Court: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 802.

The question of the proper construction to be placed on a deed is one of law and there can be no estoppel by a pleading of law: 77 I.C. 310: A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 123.

Where the Advocate-General in an earlier proceeding had conceded, under the State Government's instructions, that a certain Government order stood superseded by a subsequent rule and the proceeding was accordingly decided and was acted upon and followed by the State, held, it was not a concession purely on a point of law; the State Government could not be allowed to resile and contend that the previous Government order still prevailed: A.I.R. 1993 Andh. Pra. 338: (1993) 3 An.L.T. 294 (F.B.).

Counsel waiving objection as to limitation does not estop his client from raising the same: 178 I.C. 288: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 368.

There is no estoppel on a point of law. Admission on matter of law, or any ignorance of legal right does not constitute any basis for estoppel. Where on a writ petition the High Court directed the Government to pass an order under fundamental rule 54 in favour of the petitioner and the Government accordingly passed an order under that rule is no estoppel against the petitioner from denying the applicability of the rule to his case and the order of the High Court in the writ petition will not operate as a bar to the High Court going into the validity of the order: A.I.R. 1965 Assam 109.

Where a party through Counsel admitted before the authorities appointed under the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 that he staked no claim of adverse possession against a particular property which he admitted to be an evacuee property, held, he was estopped from contending in the writ Court that his representation arose out of his mistake; certiorari is meant to correct errors of law apparent on the record and the parties' mistakes: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 262 (D.B.).

No estoppel on a question of law—Held, State was not estopped from urging before District Judge that reference under S. 18(1), Rajasthan Land Acquisition Act, XXIV of 1953, was made on time-barred application:

Registration of dealer—Validity—It is question of law—Principle of estoppel not applicable: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 575: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 44.

Where a person who has not been appointed executor of a Will either expressly or by implication, describes himself as an executor under a mistake about his legal position, this would not make him an executor or raise an estoppel against him: I.L.R. 12 Rang. 78: A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 238 (P.C.).

23. Estoppel when benefit of legislation has been taken.—Plaintiff taking advantage of an Act cannot challenge it: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 59.

Though a person who wants to take benefit of the legislation cannot, at the same time, challenge it, but it is equally true that there cannot be estoppel against the statutes and, if the provisions of law are ultra vires, a citizen can, by challenging a particular provision, insist for striking down that part of it, which infringes his legal rights and retaining other part of it which gives benefit to him: A.I.R. 1983 Raj. 39: 1982 Raj.L.W. 575.

A person who has derived the advantage under a statute cannot be permitted to assert its invalidity when it has been decided against him. A person accepting the benefit under a statute by submitting to the jurisdiction of an authority cannot be permitted to contend that the authority had no jurisdiction. Thus, where a reciprocal agreement in regard to various inter-State routes was arrived at between the representatives of two States and appellant made an application to State Transport Authority for grant of one non-temporary stage carriage permit on a notified route and on grant of same he sought counter-signatures on his permit of State Transport Authority of other State but the existing operators including the respondent who had themselves obtained renewal of their permit in respect of their routes after the coming into force of the reciprocal agreement contended that the State Transport Authority had no jurisdiction to grant counter-signature, held, the respondent could not approbate the jurisdiction of the State Transport Authority when it suited him for taking renewal and take objection to its jurisdiction when it was to the advantage of the appellant. [A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 322; A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 186; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1450; A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 227, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Raj 104: 1973 W.L.N. 813 (D.B.).

When a party submitted himself to the rules and conditions set out in the notifications and took a chance of purchasing and getting a license under the said terms and conditions, he cannot later on turn and say that the rules are ultra vires: (1968) 16 L.R. 285 (Mys.).

A person claiming benefit under the Punjab State Co-Operative Agricultural Development Bank Bye-laws, held, could not be permitted to say that the Bye-laws had no statutory force: 1994 Punj.L.J. 162 (D.B.).

Where petitioners accepted the compensation under the Rajasthan Cash Jagirs Abolition Act, 1958 for a full period of twelve years and thereafter challenged the constitutional validity of said Act, held, the petitioners cannot be allowed to blow hot and cold in the same breath. The petitioners were estopped from challenging the validity of the impugned Act after enjoying full benefit under the Act. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1053, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1058.

Accepting benefit under transaction—Person voluntarily contracting liability to pay rental by bidding for privilege to vend liquor—Further agreeing to the recovery of amount of rental outstanding under Revenue Recovery Act—He cannot challenge validity of provisions of Act under which he got privilege—Nor can he contend that recovery of amount under Revenue Recovery Act is discriminatory. [Case-law discussed]: 1969 Ker.L.J. 289: I.L.R. (1969) 2 Ker. 71.

24. Approbate and reprobate.—See A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 198; A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 289; (1991) 2 Cal.L.J. 188: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 234. The doctrine of estoppel takes in its compass also cases where people are not allowed to behave inconsistently: 1957 Ker.L.T. 944: 1957 Ker.L.J. 757.

The rule that a party to a litigation cannot both approbate and reprobate is a rule essentially of logic rather than of law, based on the principle that, where a party to a litigation has deliberately taken a particular position (without being induced so to take it by the opposite party), he must act consistently with it. The rule is different from estoppel. In the case of an estoppel, the representee should have altered his position to his detriment; for the rule of approbate and reprobate to apply, the representor must have obtained an advantage by the representation made or the stand taken by him. The principle variously known as approbate and reprobate, is an application of the doctrine of election. A mere erroneous statement at one stage of a litigation cannot be held to prejudice a statutory or other right of a party. The two essential elements of an election are (1) that the person who is electing should have a choice between the two alternative course and (2) he should derive an advantage of such choice. A defendant adopting the valuation made by the plaintiff for the purpose of filing an appeal cannot be said to have a choice in the matter as he is generally bound to adopt the valuation made by the opposite party: I.L.R. (1961) Mad. 1143: (1962) 1 M.L.J. 65: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 511 (F.B.).

Attractive as they are the maxims, "blowing hot and cold", "playing fast and loose", sometimes tend to induce somewhat loose conceptions which may affect even judicial decisions. That mischief has to be carefully guarded against. Strictly speaking no formal legal concept is inherent or necessarily implied or involved in the maxims quoted or in the familiar cognate phrases "to approbate and reprobate", to "affirm and dis-affirm". At the most they may broadly be described in legal parlance as picturesque synonymous of certain aspects of the law of waiver, estoppel or acquiescence and of the allied legal doctrine of res judicata or election. That however, is, the limit and their application should not be extended beyond it. To preclude a party from "blowing hot and cold" or "playing fast and loose" or, to use a more common expression, from "approbating and reprobating" one must establish a case of estoppel, waiver or acquiescence or invoke the well-known principles, underlying res judicata or election. In the application of these maxims it is unsafe to go beyond the limits, set by the above principles of law. It is not in every case that a man is precluded by law from "blowing hot and cold" or "playing fast and loose" but to prevent him from so doing the bar of the legal principles, referred to above, must be established. Generally speaking also, in the true application of those maxims in the field of law some change of positions is contemplated and some sort of estoppel in the broader sense of that term eventually interferes: I.L.R. (1956) 1 Cal. 150.

Party litigant cannot be permitted to assume inconsistent positions in Court approbate and reprobate to detriment of his opponent—Doctrine applies to successive stages of same suit and also to another suit than one wherein position was taken up provided that second suit grows out of judgment in first: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 500.

It is true that party litigant cannot be permitted to assume inconsistent positions in Court, to blow hot and cold, to approbate, and reprobate to the detriment of his opponent; and that this wholesome doctrine applies not only to the successive stages of the same suit but also to another suit other than the one on which the position was taken up, provided the second suit grows out of the judgment in the first. But to substantiate the stand of estoppel by taking inconsistent positions it is necessary to file and prove the copies of the plaint and written statement of the previous suit to ascertain what was alleged by the plaintiff and what position was taken by the defendant in that suit and what position has now been taken in the instant suit: 1962 Jab.L.J. 931: 1962 M.P.L.J. 203.

It is an elementary rule that a party litigant cannot be permitted to assume inconsistent positions in Court to approbate and reprobate to the detriment of his opponent and this doctrine applies to the successive stages of the same suit. Thus, when both parties to a litigation agree to take out a second commission for obvious reasons, the evidentiary value of the first report is automatically detached and one of the contesting parties, who had agreed to the appointment of the second Commissioner, cannot subsequently, contend at a later stage of the proceedings that the second report was without jurisdiction since the first report was not set aside: A.I.R. 1993 Ker. 218: (1993) 1 Ker.L.J. 44.

Parties choosing to describe their relationship in a particular manner—It is not open to say that their intention was different: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 960.

A party cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate. Where a person with full knowledge of the facts in unmistakable terms admitted the waqf nature of a house he cannot subsequently be allowed to resile from the position: 183 I.C. 645: (1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 242: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 63.

Where the delivery of possession was admitted by a party in earlier proceedings and concluded by the Court's decision, held, that party is estopped in subsequent proceedings from contending to the contrary: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 134 (Gau.).

If a party adopts an order of a Court and takes a benefit thereunder he cannot be allowed to challenge the correctness of that order. Where the order passed was a conditional order that on deposit of certain amounts into Court the review petition will be allowed and the appeal restored to file, and the amount is deposited and withdrawn by the plaintiff, it must be held that the plaintiff adopted the order and received the benefit thereunder and, having elected to treat the order as valid, he cannot be allowed to challenge the order in appeal: I.L.R. (1956) 1 Cal. 77: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 19 (D.B.).

Applicant taking benefit under order cannot complain against it. See A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 90: 6 Sau. L.R. 534.

A party taking the benefit under a decree, cannot turn round and prevent the other party from taking the corresponding benefit accruing to him under the decree. Thus, a party to a compromise decree who enjoyed a benefit thereunder, cannot, when the other party seeks to put it in execution, plead that the decree is a nullity: 1966 Cur.L.J. 110: (1966) 68 Punj.L.R. 288.

As between the same litigants one party cannot defeat the claim of the other by a plea negativing a contention advanced by him successfully in a former suit. A party who has obtained an order of the Court and has succeeded under it cannot after he has enjoyed a benefit under that order say that it was valid for one purpose and invalid for another: 144 I.C. 50: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 119. See also 14 L.R. 281 (Rev.): 17 R.D. 404.

Where the decree-holder himself takes a stand in the lower Courts that the judgment-debtor, a person belonging to Bothra Community, is a member of the Scheduled Tribes, he is estopped from raising the plea in appeal to the contrary. It cannot be said that if in fact judgment-debtor is not a member of the Scheduled Tribe any wrong admission made by the decree-holders does not amount to estoppel against them in view of the constitutional provision.

Whether a Bhothra comes within any of the sub-groups of Scheduled Tribes enumerated in Part IX is a pure question of fact in view of paragraph II of the Order. If any objection had been raised that he was not a member of the Scheduled Tribe the other party could have pleaded and proved that they belonged to one of the sub-groups of the Scheduled Tribes. Therefore, on a bare comparison of the various classes of Scheduled Tribes in Part IX of the Order, it is not possible for the Court to come to a conclusion that judgment-debtor was not a member of the Scheduled Tribe: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 139.

The doctrine of approbate and reprobate is not attracted where on the dismissal of his suit for specific performance of his contract to purchase immovable property, the trial Court granted him refund of purchase money and during the pendency of his appeal, he sought to execute the decree for realising the refund: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1238: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 35.

Where a plaintiff abandons her case at any stage and practically accepts her opponent's case and practically claims the relief based on the facts pleaded and proved by her opponent, held, she cannot approbate and reprobate; she cannot allege one set of facts and on finding them unsustainable, to stage a volte face and seek for relief on the basis of inconsistent set of facts: A.I.R. 1978 Mad. 361: (1977) 2 M.L.J. 179 (D.B.).

One suit combining several causes of action against several defendants—Suit tho-ugh wrong at its inception was tried as a one suit and evidence recorded—Plaintiff cannot later on object to admissibility of evidence or its user—He cannot take advantage of his own irregularity in filing a single suit: 34 Cut.L.T. 1131: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 673.

Where a judgment-debtor claiming to be a non-agriculturist debtor had obtained relief under the T.N. Debt Relief Act, 1972, held, he was estopped from claiming relief under the T.N. Indebted Agriculturists Act, 1975 by professing to be an agriculturist: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 651.

Person not included in the cause-title but claiming to be party, taking steps for securing some relief to himself. He is estopped from contending that he was not made a party: 1928 Mad.W.N. 634: A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 690.

Departmental proceedings against petitioners by Road Transport Department of Government—Writ petitions by petitioner to the High Court—During pendency of writ petition proceedings, petitioners filing petitions to bring on record Road Transport Corporation—Such petitions duly ordered by High Court—However, by some inadvertence this fact not brought to the notice of the High Court when the writ petitions were allowed and High Court observed that Government could proceed with the departmental enquiry against the petitioners afresh according to law—Held, that it was not open to the petitioners on the basis of the eventual order passed by the High Court to contend that it was the Government that was empowered to initiate fresh departmental proceedings and not the Corporation because it was they who had sought the substitution of the Corporation in the place of the Government—The acceptance of the salaries and subsistence allowances by the petitioners from the Corporation would debar them from turning round and claiming that all along they were employees of the Government and that the Corporation had no jurisdiction to take disciplinary action against them: I.L.R. (1963) Andh. Pra. 778: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 407.

A person filing appeal or revision against order of Court and losing, held, cannot at the time of execution of the order contend that as he was not party at the original stage the order is not binding on him; having taken a chance of a favourable decision he cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate when defeated: 1979 M.P.L.J. 244.

Pleading in the first suit to the effect that properties were wakf properties—Contrary plea barred in subsequent suit between the person and the wakf—Principle of res judicata or principle of estoppel attracted—Public Authorities may, however, record the properties in the name of beneficiaries and not in wakf's nama: 1969 All.L.J. 923: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 602.

Person taking possession of property as muttawalli—Wakf discovered to be void—Person estopped from saying property was his: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 130. See also A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 63.

Approbation and reprobation—Party finding decision adverse, claiming status of third party in execution proceedings—Admissibility—Restoration of order of lower Court—Effect: 1967 M.P.L.J. 165.

Having accepted the validity of a gift-deed, and a subsequent deed of assignment, it is not open to a person to say that either the one or the other of the documents is invalid: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 514: (1956) 1 M.L.J. 195.

Where gift of properties to his 3 sons by the donor was sought to be sustained on the ground that it was governed by the customary Hindu law as prevailing in Pondicherry in 1876 but assailed the recital pertaining to the sons' consent to the disposal of other properties by the father on the ground that it violated French Civil Code which was claimed to be inapplicable, held, it amounted to blowing hot and cold; the sons relying upon the deed were estopped from impugning the deed: (1993-2) 112 Mad.L.W. 387 (D.B.).

A Hindu, governed by the Benaras School of Hindu Law, has no right elsewhere than in Bombay and Madras to alienate his undivided interest in the coparcenery property except with the consent of his other coparcener but where the father executed a tamleeknama in favour of his son, his only coparcener whose consent was therefore implied, by representing himself to be the property's sole owner, held, he was precluded from resiling from the deed on the ground that he had no right to execute it: A.I.R. 1977 All. 509.

Where defendant representing himself to be owner of impugned property executed an agreement to sell said property in favour of plaintiff but subsequently in a suit for specific performance and possession by plaintiff he contended that said property belonged to HUF of which he was only a karta though no evidence was adduced by defendant supporting that contention, held, he was estopped from showing that representation of title made in the agreement was mistaken and in truth property belonged to HUF: A.I.R. 1987 Del. 194.

A party who acquiesces in the procedure of the trial Court and takes part in the proceedings without any protest cannot afterwards be permitted to turn round and attack it in the event of the decision having gone against him: 1960 All.L.J. 314: A.I.R. 1960 All. 573.

Accused pleading in previous trial that it was invalid for want of proper sanction—Plea accepted and accused acquitted—Prosecution on fresh sanction—Accused estopped from pleading double jeopardy on ground that previous trial was valid—Approbate and reprobate: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1390: A.I.R. 1959 All. 783.

A person, who adopts a sale with full knowledge that nothing was purchased by him at the sale by reason of the judgment-debtor having ceased to have any interest therein and derive some benefit thereby, is precluded from subsequently contending that the sale was void and that he should get a refund of the purchase-money. To such a person, the doctrine that a person cannot approbate and reprobate is applicable: (1952) 2 M.L.J. 827: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 671.

Properties of Shebait—Trustees can be appointed—Person acting as trustee cannot challenge trust—Estoppel: I.L.R. (1963) 1 Punj. 320: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 187.

Merely because a person makes a wrong statement before some Authority that does not mean that the person is estopped from saying that the statement was an erroneous one. Thus, where the plaintiff-trust having not title to the suit land filed an application to the Tenancy Authorities for grant of an exemption certificate under S. 88-B of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 and in those proceedings tenant made a statement that he had no objection to grant of said certificate whereafter certificate was issued, held, as the Collector had no jurisdiction to issue exemption certificate as trust had no title to suit land, the tenant was not estopped from challenging the validity of grant of exemption certificate even though he had earlier not objected to its grant: A.I.R. 1981 Bom. 33: 1981 Mah.L.J. 338.

Decree obtained on basis of tenancy—Estoppel against decree-holder pleading that judgment-debtor was not a tenant in execution proceedings. See A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 581. Agreement disowned by party—Plea under agreement is not open to that party: A.I.R. 1955 (N.U.C.) Cal. 2912 (D.B.).

Where a judgment-debtor whose tenancy right has been lost by a rent sale does not object to the claim put forward as subordinate tenant by an applicant for setting aside the sale under S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, and get the fullest advantage of the result of the proceedings initiated by him, he is estopped from disputing the subordinate tenancy in a subsequent suit. The judgment-debtor has by his conduct induced the applicant under S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, to proceed on the basis of a particular position deliberately taken up in that proceeding and he cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate. This conduct on his part may be taken to be a species of estoppel which may be described to be an intermediate one between estoppel by record and estoppel in pais. This doctrine applies not only to successive stages of the same suit but also to suits other than the one in which the position had been taken up. A party must not be heard to allege things contradictory to each other. The doctrine of approbate and reprobate is not applicable in a case where there are clear provisions of a statute but applies only to the conduct of parties: 85 Cal.L.J. 149: A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 351.

Application under S. 14(4), West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (XVII of 1950)—Tenant contesting on footing that he was tenant—Order under S. 14(4), passed—Tenant submitting to it by making payment of rent month by month—Tenant committing default in payment—Tenant cannot turn round and avoid result of his default by setting up plea that S. 14(4) does not apply to his case as he was not tenant: A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 409.

Where in a suit for eviction and arrears of rent the tenant challenged the validity of the notice terminating the tenancy w.e.f. 8-11-1975 on the ground that in accordance with the rent deed dated 8-10-1974 the tenancy should be determined by the end of the 7th day and that the vacant possession of the building was to be given on the next date (8-11-1975) which was accepted by the Court and it was held that there was no valid notice terminating the tenancy but in the subsequent eviction suit, the tenant contended that termination should be on the 8th and that he could be asked to vacate only on 9-11-1975, held, the tenant having obtained an advantage in the earlier suit on the basis of his representation could not turn round and take up an inconsistent position that he could be asked to vacate only on 9-11-1975. [A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 167, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Ker. 164: 1983 Ker.L.T. 504.

Where the landholders were granted possession against the tenant in proceedings under S. 38 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958 which was not challenged in appeal or in revision and subsequently they moved an application under S. 8(3) of that Act disputing the tenant's entry in the list of tenants made thereunder, held, having themselves secured an order under S. 38 of that Act on the hypothesis that the other party was a tenant, the landholders could not subsequently contend to the contrary; the previous order in their favour would constitute a sort of estoppel against them: A.I.R. 1978 Bom. 290: 1978 Mah.L.J. 85.

Suit filed for declaration of ownership of land by adverse possession—Defendants pleading that plaintiffs were tenants and hence there was no question of ownership by adverse possession—No issue framed in such suit whether plaintiffs were tenants of defendants—Suit dismissed—Subsequently, such defendants filing suit for possession on the ground that those plaintiffs were trespassers—Admission by such defendants in earlier suit that those plaintiffs were tenants held to be erroneous—Such admission also fully explained in the subsequent suit and successfully withdrawn—Effect—Before the doctrine of approbate and reprobate will apply, there has to be estoppel in one form or the other—In the earlier suit, nothing that was done by such defendants made those plaintiffs alter their position in any manner and both in the earlier and subsequent suits, those plaintiffs claimed ownership of the land—Therefore, it is incorrect to say that such defendants derived any benefit by the previous litigation—As such, the doctrine does not apply—Such admission, having been held erroneous and also successfully withdrawn, is not binding on such defendants—Those plaintiffs having claimed ownership by adverse possession in the earlier suit cannot now plead that they are the tenants of such defendants on the basis of such admission and if at all, the rule of estoppel will surely apply to those plaintiffs: (1966) 68 Punj.L.R. 866: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 328.

Where tenant was inducted into the premises by virtue of lease-deeds executed by landlady's father as general attorney on her behalf and thereafter tenant challenged the eviction petitions signed by landlady's father on the ground that he had no authority to sign the eviction petitions and institute the same, held, as the tenant accepting the landlady's father as her attorney, took the advantage of having the premises on lease, he was estopped from pleading that landlady's father was not her duly constituted attorney: A.I.R. 1989 Del. 144: (1988) 2 Ren.C.J. 698: (1989) 1 Ren.L.R. 39: (1989) 37 Del.L.T. 88.

Where an application for eviction under S. 7 of the Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1946, was rejected on the tenant's plea that as the premises did not fall within the definition of a building he was not a tenant within the meaning of the Act, it is not open to the tenant to turn round and contend in the subsequent civil suit for eviction that the lease relates to a building within the meaning of the Act and that the civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It is well settled that "estoppels" in the sense in which the term is used in English legal phraseology are matters of infinite variety, and are by no means confined to the subjects which are dealt with in Chapter VIII of the Evidence Act. It is wrong to say that the requirements of S. 115, Evidence Act, have to be complied with before founding an estoppel: (1958) 2 An.W.R. 447: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 9: I.L.R. (1958) Andh. Pra. 509.

The respondent had earlier objected to the jurisdiction of the civil Court and pleaded that the House Rent Controller had such jurisdiction. The appellant had accepted that position. Held, that it did not lie in the mouth of the respondent in appeal to turn round and say that the House Rent Controller had no such jurisdiction and that the appellant should have again sought relief in the civil Court: I.L.R. (1952) Mys. 368: A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 62.

A party litigant cannot be permitted to assume inconsistent positions in Court to the detriment of his opponent. However, upon a given set of facts, a plaintiff may rely upon several different rights in the alternative even though they may be inconsistent. Similarly, a defendant may raise as many distinct and separate and, therefore, inconsistent defences as he may think, proper.

Where the fact that the cinema building equipped with fixtures and furnitures was leased out, is not in controversy, there is no alteration of position to the detriment of any party as a consequence of representation as to a state of facts, merely because the lessor, who has taken the plea under S. 12(1)(f) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, that he requires the accommodation bona fide, subsequently takes the plea that the demised premises do not fall within the definition of "accommodation" under S. 2 of the Act. No question of estoppel can arise merely because one or both the parties were labouring under mistake of law in regard to the true nature of the transaction: 1969 Jab.L.J. 639: 1969 M.P.L.J. 622: 1969 M.P.W.R. 946.

Unregistered lease deed—Lessee could not blow hot and cold—Lessee as per term of contract not entitled to compensation for trees or if it was inadmissible in evidence , he could not claim compensation for improvement effected: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 257.

Approbate and reprobate—Mortgagor obtaining possession of property by denying execution of mortgage—Suit for money by mortgage—Mortgagor estopped from raising plea on basis of usufructuary mortgage: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 477.

A applied under S. 38, Bengal Money-Lenders Act for statutorily taking of accounts of a mortgage executed by him on the ground that the alleged sale and the agreement of re-sale was in fact a mortgage; the Court held that they were two independent transactions of sale in favour of B and an agreement of re-sale and the application was dismissed. B collusively sold the property to C. In a suit by A for specific performance of agreement to re-sale, held, that B had contended that the transaction was sale and agreement to re-sale in S. 38 proceedings. That contention was upheld. C could not, because of his collusive transaction have any say in the matter. B could not now plead that the transaction was mortgage, since he was bound by his election, founded on the law of estoppel. The suit was based upon the decision in the earlier Money-Lenders Act proceeding and indeed, it grew out of the judgment of the same. There, in that earlier proceeding B succeeded on this above representation and it was certainly not open to him/her to change front, and take up an entirely inconsistent plea to defeat A's present action. Held, further, that against A, however, there would be no estoppel and no legal bar of any kind whatsoever. He no doubt alleged in the proceeding under S. 38 of the Bengal Money-Lenders Act that the sale and the agreement of re-sale of 1940 were parts of a single mortgage transaction. But that allegation was not accepted and his application was dismissed. The principle of election or estoppel could therefore, have no application as against A: I.L.R. (1956) 1 Cal. 150.

(Per Majority: Sarkar J., contra).—A vendee who has filed an appeal by special leave to the Supreme Court against a pre-emption decree passed against him is not precluded from proceeding with appeal merely because he has withdrawn the pre-emption price deposited by the pre-emptor in the Court below after the grant of special leave to appeal. In the absence of some statutory provision or of a well-recognised principle of equity, no one can be deprived of his legal rights including a statutory right of appeal. A statutory right of appeal cannot be presumed to have come to an end because the appellant has in the meantime abided by or taken advantage of something done by the opponent under the decree. When an order shows plainly that it is intended to take effect in its entirety and that several parts of it depend upon each other, a person cannot adopt one part and repudiate another. Upon this principle a person who takes benefit under an order de hors the claim on merits cannot repudiate that part of the order which is detrimental to him because the order is to take effect in its entirety. This principle, however, can have no application to the present case where the appellant by withdrawing the pre-emption price has not taken a benefit de hors the merits: (1962) 1 S.C.R. 358: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1327.

The defendant who possessed a saw-machine entered into a partnership with the plaintiffs and executed a partnership deed to carry on the business of sawing of wood on the plot of the plaintiffs. When the defendant started the business on this plot, the Managing Officer issued a notice to the plaintiffs as to why the allotment of the plot in their favour be not cancelled and the defendant be not dispossessed on the ground that the plaintiffs had sub-let it to the defendant. In these proceedings, the defendant had sworn an affidavit and made a statement before the Managing Officer that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the plaintiffs and that they were partners. In a suit by the plaintiffs for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts, the defendant pleaded that the relationship between the parties was that of landlord and tenant and the partnership deed had been executed merely to avoid the cancellation of the allotment of the plot made in favour of the plaintiffs. Held, that by the statement made before the Managing Officer the defendant had definitely accepted the partnership deed to be correct and admitted, that it represented the true state of affairs. By taking up this position, he had secured an advantage, because otherwise he would have been dispossessed from the plot in dispute. After doing so he could not be allowed to take up a different position and urge that the real relationship between the parties was that of landlord and tenant. The principle of estoppel did not apply. The rule of approbation and reprobation would apply to such a case: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Punj. 5.

Person registered in his personal name as Employer under Calcutta Dock Workers (Regulation of Employment) Scheme—Transfer by such person of his trade and also the registration for being used by the transferee as an authority to carry on trade—Transferor cannot contend that the transferee who has become the owner of the business cannot utilise the registration as it stood in his personal name and not in his trade name: (1963) 6 Fac.L.R. 449: (1963) 2 Lab.L.J. 179 (Cal.).

Approbate and reprobate—Party seeking amendment of Election petition and obtaining order in his favour from Tribunal—Right to turn round and say that amendment must be ignored—Estoppel: I.L.R (1960) Bom. 994: A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 29.

The doctrine of approbate and reprobate is only one application of the doctrine of election and its operation must be confined to reliefs claimed in respect of the same transaction and to the persons who are parties thereto: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 333: 1958 Jab.L.J. 427: I.L.R. (1957) Madh. Pra. 396.

Where the Pramukh of a Panchayat Samiti had convened a meeting wherein a no confidence motion was passed against him and the Up-Pramukh and thereafter they participated in the subsequent election for the said offices but were defeated, held, they were estopped from disputing the validity of the meeting and the business carried therein: A.I.R. 1983 Pat. 186: (1983) 32 B.L.J.R. 361.

Where the petitioner, a Village Pramukh, himself convened a special meeting on a holiday for considering a no-confidence motion against him and he was also present in the meeting, held, the petitioner was estopped from contending that as the meeting was held on a holiday in violation of R. 3 of Bihar Panchayat Samitis and Zilla Parishads (Conduct of Business) Rules, 1963, the entire proceedings must be deemed to be null and void. [A.I.R. 1983 Pat. 186, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 264, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 26: 1983 Pat.L.J.R. 656. (See also Note 69, infra).

By reason of the representation made on the 24th of November, 1946, that it was liable to excess profits tax in the United Kingdom, the company succeeded in inducing the Department to attract to its case the proviso to S. 10, sub-S. (1) of the Finance Act of 1942. When the question arose under S. 11(11) of the Finance Act, 1946 as to how the refund should be brought to tax, the assessee company completely changed its front and took up the attitude that its profits were not liable to excess profits tax in the United Kingdom and therefore, the case did not fall under the proviso to S. 11(11). Held that the assessee could not be permitted to deny the truth of the representation made by it on the 24th of November, 1946: (1957) 31 I.T.R. 959: (1957) 59 Bom.L.R. 518: A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 23.

Persons taking active part in matter of framing scheme—They cannot question validity of scheme. See A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 307.

Having taken advantage of the excise duty relief under the scheme by a party, it is precluded from challenging it. A party cannot approbate and reprobate: 1979 Tax.L.R. (N.O.C.) 134 (Del.).

Party taking benefit under contract—Whether can plead that consent was given under mistake: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 169.

Transaction dividing family property entered into between father and son to settle family disputes—Mode of succession altered incidentally—Validity—Subsequent plea by party to arrangement questioning legality thereof—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 420.

Person submitting to jurisdiction of authority—Estopped from challenging it: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 458.

Litigant in earlier proceeding putting particular position on basis of which Tribunal to his advantage disclaiming jurisdiction cannot in subsequent proceeding take contrary stand: 1976 Mah.L.J. 425.

The principle of estoppel would apply when a party seeks to take up inconsistent positions as to jurisdiction of civil Court.

Thus, where a lessee succeeds on the question of jurisdiction before the Tahsildar under the Andhra Tenancy Act and obtains an adjudication that no petition for fixation of fair rent lies against him on the footing that he is not a person governed by that Act, he cannot be allowed to question the jurisdiction of civil Court to entertain a suit for recovery of possession and profits filed by lessor only in view of the findings given by the Tahsildar in the previous proceedings under the Andhra Tenancy Act. [A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 9, Foll.]: (1970) 1 An.L.T. 154: A.I.R. 1970 Andh. Pra. 394.

A party cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate. This principle is based on the maximum "allegans contraria non est audiendus". It means he shall not be heard who says things contradictory to each other. The maxim applies to proceedings in Court. It creates a sort of estoppel. Where, therefore, the defendant in a case successfully contested the competency of execution proceedings started on the basis of a decree on the award on the ground that the decree contemplated enforcement of the claim by means of a separate suit, he cannot be allowed to say, when the plaintiff filed such a suit that the suit was not for appropriate remedy and it was barred under S. 47, C.P.Code. The suit is competent: 1963 M.P.L.J. 79: 1963 Jab.L.J. 181: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 124.

Decree-holder creditors applying for rateable distribution of assets held by executing Court in respect of another decree passed by High Court cannot challenge the decree under which the assets were held, as invalid, on the ground that High Court had no territorial jurisdiction under Cl. 12 of Letters Patent to pass decree for sale of properties outside its local limits of its ordinary original jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1147.

Where S. 125 of the Kerala Land Reforms Act, 1964 excluded the jurisdiction of civil Courts in proceedings not pending at the commencement of the Kerala Land Reforms (Amendment) Act, 1969 and mandated that new proceedings covered under the Act would be determined by the Authorities under the Act and it was not clear, in view of the state of law then prevailing, whether an execution initiated after the commencement of the Amending Act was continuation of the suit decreed prior to the commencement or a new proceeding,. held, a mere non-raising of the objection of the civil Court's jurisdiction in execution would not amount to waiver: A.I.R. 1979 Ker. 1 (F.B.).

Petition to revenue Court for obtaining order with respect to redemption of mortgage under Hyderabad Land Alienation Act—Objection by opposite party that revenue Court had no jurisdiction to go into the matter and civil Court alone had the jurisdiction—Revenue Court accepting the objection—Held, opposite party was estopped from raising the plea in civil suit that civil Court had no jurisdiction: I.L.R. (1964) Andh. Pra. 740: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 245.

Estoppel by taking inconsistent positions—Suit for recovery of ijara money filed in revenue Court—Defendant's objection to jurisdiction of revenue Court to try it allowed and plaint returned—Plaint instituted in civil Court—Defendant is estopped from taking plea that civil Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit: 1963 Raj.L.W. 100: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 468.

A party cannot take up inconsistent positions, or approbate and reprobate, to the detriment of his opponent: (1910-11) 15 Cal.W.N. 725; (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 736; A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 79; A.I.R. 1930 All. 15. See also A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 351: 85 Cal.L.J. 149. Suit filed in Small Cause Court—Defendant's contention as to jurisdiction—Suit represented on original side—Defendant estopped from pleading that suit is small cause: A.I.R. 1926 All. 664; A.I.R. 1930 All. 15 (Case of appeal). Defendant successfully contending that the revenue Court had no jurisdiction, cannot be allowed to challenge the jurisdiction of the civil Court on the ground that the plaintiff had his remedy in the revenue Court: 1960 M.P.L.J. 405: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 138. A party who successfully took a plea and got a judgment in his favour cannot be allowed to take an inconsistent position in any action arising out of the said judgment. This principle has been applied even to cases where a question of jurisdiction is involved. Held, on the facts of the case, that the petitioner-lessee who had successfully taken the plea in the eviction proceedings against his sub-lessee before the Rent Controller that he had jurisdiction in the matter, could not be allowed to deny the truth of the said plea in the subsequent proceeding for fixing reasonable and fair rent of the cinema house which the sub-lessee was obliged to resort to on account of the decision of the Rent Controller: 1957 An.L.T. 445: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 196.

A person submitting to exercise of power by the Revenue Officer cannot be permitted to turn round after having lost the cause and challenge the territorial jurisdiction of Revenue Officer: 1980 Punj.L.J. 219: 1980 Rev. L.R. 375.

Where a party sued for eviction in a revenue Court successfully challenges the suit on the ground that the plaintiff, not being a bhumidar, could not maintain the suit in that Court is not entitled to turn round and resist the suit for his eviction on the ground that the plaintiff, being a bhumidar, could not maintain the suit in the civil Court; he cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 1 (D.B.).

Suit filed in T Court on last day of limitation—On defendant's objection to jurisdiction, plaintiff requesting for return of plaint for representation to N Court, and obtaining it—Representation to N Court after some days—Both Courts having jurisdiction—Limitation—Held, plaintiff was not debarred from contending that trial Court had jurisdiction: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 195: (1969) 1 M.L.J. 415.

Where Union filed a complaint against the company under the Maharashtra Recognition of Trade Unions and Prevention of Unfair Labour Practices Act, 1971, to which an objection under S. 59 of said Act was raised by the company that it was not maintainable since the conciliation proceeding under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 was pending, whereupon said complaint was withdrawn to which the company did not object, but subsequently in the reference proceedings the company contended that the proceedings under the Industrial Disputes Act were barred by S. 59 of the Maharashtra Recognition of Trade Unions and Prevention of Unfair Labour Practices Act, 1971, held, the company was estopped by its own conduct from raising such a contention: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 484 (D.B.).

The insurer made an application under S. 21(2) of Insurance Act in the Court of Madras. When the Controller of Insurance contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, the insurer filed a similar application before the District Court of Ambala. The Controller took the attitude in that Court that the Madras Court would alone be the Court of competent jurisdiction. The Court at Ambala ultimately dismissed the proceeding. A question of jurisdiction having been mooted in the Madras Court: Held, that the Controller of Insurance could not both approbate and reprobate. One of the two Courts would have the necessary jurisdiction, as a matter of logic, and the Controller could not be heard to contend in one Court that the other Court alone had the requisite jurisdiction and to contend precisely to the opposite effect in the other Court. In other words, there was a clear estoppel against this kind of pleading and the Controller was barred from raising the issue of jurisdiction. Territorial jurisdiction was not to proceed to the root of jurisdiction, and the C.P.Code recognises that a party could acquiesce in it. Held further, that the Madras Court had jurisdiction on the interpretation of the words the principal place of business of the insurer: (1966) 1 M.L.J. 196: (1966) 1 Comp.L.J. 85: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 437.

Where the stand taken by the respondent in the proceedings under O. 21, R. 97 throughout was that he was not the judgment-debtor or a representative of the original judgment-debtors and that therefore, the executing Court could not proceed against him under R. 98, it was not open to him to contend later on that as he was in fact a representative of the judgment-debtors, and as such the only remedy open to the appellants lay in execution: (1958) 60 Bom.L.R. 829: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 256: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 269.

Inconsistent pleas—Execution proceeding—Nature of property—Prior statement of judgment-debtor—Binding effect: 150 I.C. 141: A.I.R. 1934 All. 430.

Where a Commission of Inquiry was appointed by the Central Government to look into the improprieties and undue benefits allegedly obtained by the Birla Group of Companies in collusion with Authorities and the jurisdiction of the Commission was challenged after four years when the inquiry became oppressive and the Commission also suggested that the point be got clarified from the High Court, held, it is well-settled that by acquiescence no jurisdiction could be conferred where the Authority suffers from inherent lack of jurisdiction; the circumstances do not bear out that the petitioner was approbating and reprobating: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 114.

Income-tax Act, 1922, Ss. 66-A(2) and 66 — Question of fact — Statements of case agreed statement—Findings of Appellate Tribunal not challenged before High Court but appearing conceded—At stage of appeal before Supreme Court, appellant cannot be permitted to go behind statements of case and to challenge findings contained therein—Evidence Act, 1972, S. 115: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 417.

Grievance that Regional Transport Authority which heard application was not properly constituted—Objection not raised before Tribunal as to its constitution—One is precluded by one's own conduct from putting forward contention that Tribunal was not properly constituted: (1967) 12 Law Rep. 549 (Mys.).

Stage Carriage permit granted by imposing certain condition—Applicant accepting condition and claiming to have fulfilled it by producing clearance certificate—Validity of condition challenged in appeal or revision—Applicant could not be allowed to challenge validity of condition in writ petition challenging order in revision: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 248.

Where petitioner applied for grant of a stage carriage permit and the respondent-transport authority asked the petitioner to complete all the formalities pursuant to which petitioner deposited the fees, renovated the bus but respondent without giving him an opportunity of being heard rejected his application, held, as respondent had made the petitioner to change its position after asking him to complete all the formalities, it could not deprive the petitioner of a reasonable opportunity of being heard while passing the order rejecting his application, said order was, thus, unsustainable in law: A.I.R. 1995 J.&K. 77.

Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, S. 60—Secretary of R.T.A. issuing notices to show cause why permits granted to it should not be cancelled—P appearing before R.T.A. through Counsel and participating in proceedings—Writ petition to quash proceeding—Held, since P had participated in proceedings it was precluded from contending that proceedings were commenced without issuing proper notices and, therefore, were ab initio void: (1968) 16 Law Rep. 492.

Where the States of Haryana and Himachal Pradesh agreed to grant inter-State permits to public carriers on the condition that they would neither pick up nor set down any goods between two points in the same State which is clearly against S. 56 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 and ultra vires, held, merely because the permit holders desired to retain the permits but assail the condition they could not be said to approbate and reprobate at the same time: A.I.R. 1977 Him. Pra. 46: 1976 Sim.L.C. 18 (D.B.).

Where petitioner accepting conditions put forth by respondent-Doordarshan agreed to produce a serial based on certain novel in 13 episodes but subsequently he contended that the direction that the entire serial should be produced in 13 episodes was unjust and he be permitted to produce the serial in 26 episodes, held, the petitioner was estopped from putting forth said contention: A.I.R. 1995 Andh. Pra. 199.

The plaintiff who had migrated from Pakistan was allotted certain land by the Rehabilitation Authorities in lieu of land owned by him in Pakistan. On cancellation of allotment, the plaintiff took impugned land on lease from the Rehabilitation Authorities. The property was later auctioned but the auction was cancelled when plaintiff stated that he was ready to pay higher price. The plaintiff competed in re-auction but when he did not succeed in out-bidding the defendants he filed a suit challenging the order of cancellation of his allotment. Held, the plaintiff's participation in the auction and payment of lease money to the Rehabilitation Authorities went a long way to show that the defendants believed that no dispute had been left between the plaintiff and the Rehabilitation Authorities. If the plaintiff was considering the transaction void, he should not have either paid the lease money or taken part in the bid. That conduct of the plaintiff was such that a purchaser at the time of auction could take it that the plaintiff did not claim the property. Thus, the plaintiff was estopped from challenging the validity of order of cancellation of allotment in his favour. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 827; A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 259; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2325, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 51: 1983 Rev.L.R. 487.

Mother acting as guardian ad litem of minor in previous partition suit—Mother later on representing minor as guardian in sale of minor's property—No estoppel from raising objection to her incompetency to act, during sale: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 318.

Where mother of deceased who was last male holder claimed succession to his estate in preference to his minor daughters though she had stated in the Court of Guardian Judge that in case she was appointed the guardian of the person and property of the minor daughters, she would not claim any right adverse to the minor daughters in the suit property, held, the mother of the deceased was estopped from filing a suit for possession on the basis of title of the suit property: A.I.R. 1987 P.&H. 138: 1987 Rev.L.R. 35: (1987) 91 Punj.L.R. 247: I.L.R. (1987) 2 P.&H. 322.

English case—Action by plaintiff for damages against defendant for injury suffered while working for defendant—Defendant is not estopped from contending that plaintiff was self-employed and not servant of defendant by reason of fact that defendant had given before Tribunal in claim for industrial injury by plaintiff, evidence showing that plaintiff was servant: 1968 Lab.I.C. 423 (Q.B.D.).

W.B. College Teachers (Security of Service) Rules (1977), R. 7—Petitioner, Principal of a Government sponsored College—Suspension of petitioner pending completion of disciplinary proceeding against him—Suspension is in accordance with S. 11 — Petitioner receiving subsistence allowance under the suspension order—He cannot challenge the same—Suspension order is not punishment under S. 9(1)(iv)—He cannot approbate or reprobate: (1982-83) 87 Cal.W.N. 340: (1982) 2 Cal.L.J. 46: (1982) 2 Lab.L.J. 427: 1983 Lab.I.C. 806; 1980 Lab.I.C. 466: (1979-80) 84 Cal.W.N. 545 (D.B.).

Where the appellant, a clerk in the Police Department, was selected for the post of Excise Sub-Inspector in the Excise Department and served on that post for some years but later when he was repatriated to his parent Department, he challenged the same and the Court allowed him to continue without interruption in the Excise Department itself but when subsequently the Excise Commissioner made an order compulsorily retiring him from service under R. 3(1)(a) and (b) of the Punjab Civil Services (Premature Retirement) Rules, 1975 he challenged it on the ground that Excise Commissioner was not competent to make that order since he belonged to Police Department, held, as the civil Court had already ruled that the appellant had a right to continue in his substantive appointment as Excise Sub-Inspector, after obtaining that decree from a Court of competent jurisdiction, he could not turn round and say that he still retained lien against his post in the parent Department. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 367, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1985: 1989 Lab.I.C. 2021.

Where the petitioner, the Head Master of a School, sought an order restraining the respondents from functioning as members of the Managing Committee of the said school contending that their term automatically came to an end on the expiry of the period of three years so limited by R. 17-A of the Bihar High Schools (Constitution, Powers and Functions of Managing Committee) Rules, 1964, held, mere participation of the petitioner in the meetings held after expiry of said period in which the respondents also happened to be present, could not create any estoppel in the way of the petitioner to ask for a writ restraining respondents from functioning as members of the Managing Committee, especially when the petitioner had not taken any undue advantage on account of the participation of respondents. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 856; A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 329; 1970 Pat.L.J. R. 169, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 116: 1975 B.L.J.R. 638.

Where some of the books of the petitioner, a publisher, were selected by Selection Committee constituted for selection of books for School and College libraries but subsequently the petitioner raised objection about the constitution of the Committee by the State on the ground of bias on the part of some members of the Committee, held, merely by submitting books for selection of which some might have been selected, petitioner could not be said to have waived the objection which he might have to the constitution of the Committee which selected the books. [A.I.R. 1984 Ori. 16, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1572.

Plea that though the sale made by the Naib-Tehsildar is valid, but he has no jurisdiction to set aside the sale, held, cannot be taken: 1975 Punj.L.J. 254.

Where the benefit of commutation of periodic payments under Regn. 76-B of the Employees' State Insurance Regulations was not de hors his entitlement and could not cause any loss or disadvantage to the Insurance Corporation, held, the Corporation could not contend that the employee having got the claim there under was estopped from prosecuting his appeal; he could not be said to be approbating and reprobating because what he was claiming in appeal was not alternative to his claim for commutation; one did not negative the other: (1983) 24 Guj.L.R. 1260.

In a previous writ petition under Art. 32 before the Supreme Court, the case of the petitioner was that he had purchased at auction the whole village R for cultivation under a sale deed which clearly stated that a small area of land had already been sold to another. The Supreme Court held that the village R fell within the inclusive part of the definition of "an estate" under Art. 31-A(2) (a) (iii) of the Constitution and therefore, the validity of the Daman Regulation of 1962 was protected from challenge under Arts. 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. In a subsequent writ petition before the High Court, between the same parties the petitioner's contention was that he was not the holder of the whole village R and as such was not a proprietor as defined in S. 2 (h) of the Regulation. Held, (i) that the doctrine of approbate and reprobate which is a species of estoppel applied to the conduct of the petitioner and he should not be permitted to depart from the unequivocal stand taken by him in the Supreme Court and contend that he is not the proprietor of the whole village; (ii) that apart from the doctrine of approbate and reprobate the principle of constructive res judicata would also apply. The petitioner might and ought to have raised the plea before the Supreme Court but having failed to do so he could not be permitted to raise the plea again: A.I.R. 1970 Goa 59.

Where the plaintiff had made a specific averment in the plaint that the impugned document was nothing but a Will, held, he could not, subsequently, plead that the said document was not a Will but a family arrangement: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 136: 1975 M.P.L.J. 156.

Person taking under a Will and administering it—Cannot dispute authority of testator to make the Will—Administrator cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate the Will: A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 520.

Where respondent claiming to be sole owner of impugned premises by virtue of a Will executed by his deceased father and a relinquishment deed executed in his favour by his brother sought eviction of petitioner-tenant and an eviction order was passed and tenant thereafter disputed validity of Will, held, as the tenant after being supplied with necessary documents regarding title of respondent-landlord in suit premises started paying rent to the respondent, he was estopped from challenging the validity of the Will executed by respondents father. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1599, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1985 Del. 338.

Where an Indian Company in collaboration with a Foreign Corporation entered into an agreement permitting it to sell seeds under the specified trade mark of the Corporation but the Company having obtained all the benefits under the agreement committed its breach by selling sub-standard seeds, held, the Corporation could sue the Company for permanent injunction; it was on facts entitled to interim injunction; having obtained benefits under the agreement, the Company was estopped from impugning its validity: A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 120: (1988) 34 Del.L.T. 136.

Where permission to sell the allotted house, granted in routine, was allowed by the Chandigarh Administration on the condition of paying one-third unearned profit to the Administration prior to the formulation of the prospective R. 8-C of the Chandigarh (Sale of Sites and Buildings) Rules, 1960 and "No Objection Certificate" was issued under that apparent threat, held, merely because the owner had made that illegal payment, it could not be said that he was approbating and reprobating; S. 115 was not attracted: 1989 Punj.L.J. 562.

Where parties to a deed had described the land as Jenmom land, the redemption and recovery of possession whereof is barred under the Travancore Jenmi and Kudivan Act, 1071 M.E. and was dealt with by the parties on that basis, held, it is certainly not open to a party thereto to turn round and contend that it was not Jenmom land: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 471: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 505: (1973) 1 M.L.J. 448.

Where in an earlier proceeding the plaintiff in the present case supported the title to the suit property to be adjudicated in favour of one 'G', but subsequently, contended that the sale in favour of 'G' was sham and nominal, held, the plaintiff was estopped from laying any claim by her own conduct in view of her failure to raise defence in the earlier case. After having stood by the title of 'G' it was not open to her now to say that G's purchase of property was sham and nominal. [A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 815 and (1973) 2 S.C.J. 538, Disting.]: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 359.

25. Promissory estoppel — Scope and applicability.—A "promissory estoppel" which is a recent development of an equitable estoppel operates to preclude perpetration of fraud or causing of injury, in a case, where the representation or promise has been made to induce an action on the part of the party setting up the estoppel. A promise in future has been held to create an estoppel both in England and in America, the principle being that if a promise is made in the expectation that it would be acted upon and it was in fact acted upon, the party making the promise will not be allowed to back out of it and the Courts should insist that the promise so made must be honoured. [(1956) 1 All E.R. 247, Rel. on]: I.L.R. (1961) 2 Punj. 391: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 302: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 314.

The doctrine of promissory estoppel was first enunciated by Denning in 1947 K.B. 130 as flowing in equity when he found that the strict rule of estoppel could not be applied; the doctrine lays down, as explained in (1951) 2 K.B. 215, that when a promise which (1) is intended to create legal relations (2) to be acted upon by the promise and (3) is in fact so acted upon, the promisor cannot bring an action against the promisee which involves repudiation of, or is inconsistent with, his promise: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 626 (D.B.).

Though "promissory estoppel" is of old origin, it is only in 1947 that it was rediscovered by Lord Denning; variously called equitable estoppel, quasi estoppel and new estoppel, it is evolved by equity to avoid injustice but it does not fall within the realm of contract or equity; its basis is the interposition of equity, which true to its form, stepped in to mitigate the rigours of strict law; it was then not spoken to as estoppel but "raising an equity" but it made only sporadic appearance in stray cases till 1947 and only facts represented but no promises made for future could estop; Lord Denning enunciated a promise intended to be binding, intended to be, and in fact, acted upon is binding so far as its terms properly apply. And there need not be any kind of legal relationship between the parties for invocation of the doctrine; the promise, however, creates such a relationship for future. And unlike in England or the United States, the doctrine of promissory estoppel has been adopted in fullness; it is not merely a defence, it may as well constitute a cause of action: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621.

Though the doctrine of promissory estoppel has been considerably watered down in England, the country of its origin and it is no longer available as a "sword" of attack but is only a "shield" of defence there, held, the doctrine in India continues to be in full force, as embodied in A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718: A.I.R. 1979 Del. 122 (D.B.).

While the doctrine of estoppel at common law is founded on the representation as to an existing fact, the doctrine of promissory estoppel is founded on the representation or assurance as to future conduct; the promissory estoppel, thus, subsumes within its ambit both statements of fact as well as promises. The doctrine of promissory estoppel is susceptible of generating enforceable promises and binding contractual obligations even in the absence of consideration which would at common law support the promises and obligations. However, the representation sought to be enforced must be clear, unequivocal, unambiguous and sufficient to found the doctrine of promissory estoppel. Thus, where the State Government promised allotment of chemical fertilisers, an essential commodity, allotted to it by the Central Government if any balance was left after their distribution to District, held, as State Government's promise or representation was neither clear nor unequivocal, the rule of promissory estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1975 Andh. Pra. 126: (1974) 2 An.W.R. 228: (1974) 1 An.L.T. 289 (D.B.); (1992-2) 33 Guj.L.R. 1232; (1988) 1 Cal.L.J. 493: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 999.

Estoppel is a rule of equity; it has gained a new dimension in recent years; a new class, that of promissory estoppel, has come to be recognised both in England and in India, though its full implication is yet to be spelt out; it has assumed importance in recent years though it was dimly noticed in earlier years. [Case law discussed]. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 1311: (1974) 87 Mad.L.W. 32.

The common law doctrine of estoppel contained in S. 115 is but a shadow of its modern self which is a recent advance in public law. Orthodox concepts have been discarded. Consideration is no longer necessary; an independent cause of action may now be founded upon promissory estoppel; it is not only a shield but may also be wielded as a sword; detriment no longer needs to be proved; alteration of position on the faith of the representation is quite enough; the desire to do justice through equitable possibilities is so strong that the old traditional concepts of private law are crumbling; a new estoppel and a "new equity" are emerging: A.I.R. 1983 Del. 445 (F.B.).

The doctrine of promissory estoppel is now very firmly established. It requires only the existence of a possibility of the promises suffering a detriment in case the promisor, whether a private individual or a Government or a governmental agency goes back on his or its promise: (1992) 1 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 58: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 873: (1991) 2 Cal.L.J. 255.

The "promissory estoppel" though providing cause of action in equity has to bend before law. "Equity follows the law" is one of the well known maxims of equity. And since "Equity imputes an intention to fulfil an obligation" is another well known maxim of equity, the plea of "promissory estoppel" can only be met by pleading a higher equity to over-shadow the equity arising from the "promissory estoppel": (1981) 83 Punj.L.R. 225.

The doctrine of promissory estoppel being an equitable doctrine, it must yield when the equity so requires, if it can be shown by the Government or public authority that having regard to the facts as they have transpired, it would be inequitable to hold the Government or public authority to the promise or representation made by it, the Court would not raise an equity in favour of the person to whom the promise or representation is made and enforce the promise or representation against the Government or public authority. The doctrine of promissory estoppel would be displaced in such a case, because on the facts, equity would not require that the Government or public authority should be held bound by the promise or representation made by it: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 806: (1985) 4 S.C.C. 369. See also (1983) 2 Bom.C.R. 390 (D.B.).

In order to found a plea of estoppel the representation or promise must be specific and unqualified. Secondly, the representation or promise must be made with the intention that it should be acted upon. In this respect promissory estoppel resembles estoppel proper. While the intention to affect legal relationship must be established, such an intention may be deduced objectively, namely, it may be shown that the promisor in his own mind intended to affect legal relationship or that he voluntarily so conducted himself that he cannot be heard to say that he did not intend this to be the result. The representation or the conduct of the representer must have been one reasonably capable of inducing the alteration of the position which the promisee says was its actual consequence and not merely a precursor in point of time. It must have been of such a nature and in that sense calculated or of which the tendency or the natural or probable result is to induce the promisee, in the circumstances of the case, to alter his position in the manner alleged. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718; 1947 K.B. 130; (1956) 1 All E.R. 247; (1964) 3 All E.R. 556; (1891) 3 Ch.D. 82 at 106, Foll.]: 1971 Ker.L.T. 318 (D.B.).

The promissory estoppel being an equitable doctrine, the Government or public bodies are not immune from its operation; it applies only in the absence of a concluded contract; like where a promise is made by one party to the other with the intention of creating a legal relationship to arise in future and the other party has acted upon the promise and changed its position to its detriment; the main question, thus, to be seen is whether the promise was made in exercise of executive functions or otherwise and whether the promisee had acting upon the promise incurred some prejudice or not: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 88.

In case of a concluded commercial contract between the private party on the one hand and the State on the other hand, the principles of promissory estoppel which are in the domain of legitimate expectation have no application: A.I.R. 1995 Pat. 50.

Doctrine of promissory estoppel ought to be applied against the Government or the Governmental agency where the interest of justice, morality and common fairness clearly dictate such a course. It is, however, also true that the word of caution ought not to be lost sight of that the doctrine of promissory estoppel is an equitable doctrine and it must yield when the equity so requires. But if it is fond by the Court that it would be inequitable to hold the Government to the promise made by it, the Court would not raise an equity in favour of the promisee and enforce a promise against the Government. Similarly, if the Government is able to show that the public interest would be prejudiced, the law Courts would have to balance the public interest and to determine which way the equity lies and to pronounce its verdict accordingly. But while claiming exemption from liability to carry out the promise it must be on some definite and disclosed ground of necessity or expedience: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 1: (1986) 1 Cal.L.J. 107: (1985-86) 90 Cal.W.N. 449: (1986) 1 Cal.H.N. 210; (1982) 2 Cal.H.N. 90.

Before the doctrine of promissory estoppel can be clamped on an authority or a public body, it must be clearly shown that there was an unambiguous promise. It should not be a matter for inference. The alleged representation must be clear and categorical. A mere hope or possibility is not enough: A.I.R. 1994 P.&H. 175.

When a governmental agency has made a representation to an ordinary individual of a particular set of facts or circumstances, by reason wherefor the individual concerned was wilfully induced to act upon that representation, the governmental agency is estopped as against that individual from contending otherwise. The Government like any other individual is bound by its promises knowing the intent that it would be acted upon by the promisee and if the promisee acts thereon and thereby alters his position and in that event the inescapable conclusion would be that the Government is to be bound by its promises and there cannot be any exception in regard thereto. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285 and A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 1, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1992 Cal. 86: (1991) 1 Cal.L.J. 491. See also I.L.R. (1979) 2 Del. 686 (D.B.); 1992 Punj.L.J. 125: (1992) 1 Rev.L.R. 461 (D.B.) [The Government cannot claim immunity from acting as per its promise merely because it would fetter its future executive action.] The Government or the governmental agency has a duty to the public in general to act fairly and reasonably and, therefore, fair play and justice ought to be the basis on which a governmental agency should act: (1988) 1 Cal.L.J. 493: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 999.

If the Government or any authority on behalf of the Government has made a representation and acting on that representation a party has altered its situation, then it is not open to the Government to resile from that position and at the instance of the party who has altered its situation to its disadvantage, the Court is entitled to direct the Government or the authority to carry out its promises or its scheme. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 768, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 107 (D.B.).

The doctrine of promissory estoppel is guided by the principles of justice, fair play and good conscience. It was evolved by equity. Its aim is to prevent injustice and it neither falls in the realm of contract nor in the realm of estoppel proper. It debars one, who has made a clear promise intending to create legal relations knowing or intending that it would be acted upon, from receding or resiling from such promise, if the party to whom the promise was made had, in fact, acted on it, for such receding or resiling would be inequitable and unjust. Promissory estoppel is not also confined to the private relations of the citizens only. It applies as well to the Government actions, and the Government cannot claim to be exempted from the liability to carry out its promise: 1988 Mah.L.J. 807: (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 68 (D.B.).

The doctrine of promissory estoppel, evolved from equity to avoid injustice, does not fall in the realms of contract or of estoppel; its object is, shorn of its form, to interpose equity so as to mitigate the rigour of strict law. It is also well settled that the promissory estoppel does not operate against the Government or public authority so as to compel it to act upon a representation or promise prohibited by law or outside the authority or power of the Government or public authority. Besides, being an equitable doctrine, estoppel must perforce yield to equity, where the larger public interest so requires or where on facts it would be inequitable to hold the Government or public authority to its promise or representation. Equally promissory estoppel should not be extended, even if founded on an express or implied promise, if it amounted to playing fraud on the Constitution and its enforcement would defeat or tend to defeat the constitutional goals: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 14: (1991) 1 (Supp.) S.C.C. 68: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 761.

To invoke the doctrine of promissory estoppel the claimant must have relied and acted upon the representation made; that is, the party had changed or altered its position by relying on the assurance or representation; the alteration of position is, thus, the only indispensable requirement of the doctrine and no proof of damage, detriment or prejudice to it need be adduced by the party. The Court, however, would compel the other party to adhere to or abstain from acting upon the representation. It is, however, quite fundamental that the promissory estoppel cannot be used to compel the Government or public bodies to carry out the representation or promise if it is contrary to law or outside their authority or power, and since it stems out from equity, the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity is also attracted and the promissory estoppel cannot be invoked if it results in inequity and injustice: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2414.

The rule of promissory estoppel stipulates that if a party, by words or conduct, has given a promise or assurance to another for creating or effecting a legal relationship and the other party has acted thereupon, the promising party cannot afterwards be allowed to back out from the promise or assurance; the rule is based on the principle that if the promising party was allowed to back out, it would promote to injustice: 1988 Punj.L.J. 123 (D.B.).

There is no need in public law as against private law to insist upon the contractual or other jural relationship before invoking the doctrine of promissory estoppel: the most obvious limitation on the doctrine of estoppel in public law is that it cannot be invoked to compel performance of an ultra vires act; it is also equally inapplicable where the discretion of the public authority is sought to be fettered for all time to come; it is, thus, desirable to develop in public law an independent doctrine, based on equity but without importing the full fledged doctrine of promissory estoppel; the growth of an independent concept of estoppel akin to the doctrines of natural justice or colourable exercise of power, or abuse of power, based on the general requirement of exercising constitutional or statutory powers by the authorities, is in the interest of administrative law; instead of resting it on the doctrine of promissory estoppel as in private law it must be tested on the independent administrative concepts of equity between State and citizen and be called administrative estoppel, to enforce the States' promises or to allow it to withdraw them on the touchstone of public interest: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 312 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Before the doctrine of promissory estoppel can be invoked it must be proved: (1) that there was a representation or promise in regard to something to be done in the future; (2) that that representation or promise was, intended to affect the legal relations of the parties and to be acted upon according by; and (3) that it is one on which the other side has, in fact, acted to its prejudice. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Bom. 288: 1969 Mah.L.J. 914: (1969) 71 Bom.L.R. 707.

The fundamental requirement of estoppel by conduct is that it must concern an existing state of facts; there is no common law estoppel founded on a statement of future intention. The doctrine of promissory estoppel applies where a promiser is estopped from acting inconsistently with his promise to enforce an existing legal obligation; it differs from the estoppel properly so called in that the representation: (i) need not be of an existing fact; (ii) should be unambiguous; and (iii) should not be prohibited by law: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2065.

On scrutiny of various Supreme Court decisions the accepted principles regarding applicability of doctrine of promissory estoppel that emerge are: (a) Where one party has, by his words or conduct, made to the other a clear and unequivocal promise which is intended to create legal relations or effect a legal relationship to arise in the future, knowing or intending that it would be acted upon by the other party to whom the promise is made and it is, in fact, so acted upon by the other party, the promise would be binding on the party making it, and he would not be entitled to go back upon it if it would be inequitable to allow him to do so having regard to the dealings which have taken place between the parties and this would be so irrespective of whether there is any pre-existing relationship between the parties; (b) the doctrine of promissory estoppel need not be inhibited by the same limitation as estoppel in the strict sense of the term. It is an equitable principle evolved by the Courts for doing justice and there is no reason why it should be given only a limited application by way of defence; (c) the promiser should have altered his position in reliance on the promise; (d) the doctrine of promissory estoppel is also applicable against Government and the defence based on executive necessity has been categorically negatived; (e) if Government does not want its freedom of executive action to be hampered or restricted, it need not make a promise knowing or intending that it would be acted on by the promisee and the promise would alter his position relying upon it. But if Government makes such a promise and the promisee acts in reliance upon it and alters his position there is no reason why Government should not be compelled to make good such promise like any other private individual; (f) since the doctrine of promissory estoppel is an equitable doctrine, it must yield when equity so requires. If it can be shown by the Government that having regard to the facts as they have subsequently transpired, it would be inequitable to hold Government liable for the promise made by it, the Court would not raise an equity in favour of the promisee and enforce the promise against Government. But in such a case Government would have to place material before the Court that in the changed facts and circumstances or facts which have transpired since the making of the promise, public interest would be jeopardised if Government were required to carry out the promise. On the material to this effect, it would be for the Court to decide which way equity lies; (g) mere claim of change of policy would not be sufficient to exonerate Government from the liability; (h) "Promissory estoppel" has no application while exercising legislative power and cannot be invoked to compel Government to do an act prohibited by law; (i) Government cannot be compelled to abide by a promise made by an Officer or other authority not competent to make such promise: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 163: (1986) 61 Cut.L.T. 369 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1983 Del. 445 (F.B.).

The well-recognised exceptions to the doctrine of estoppel are: (1) There is no promissory estoppel against the Legislature performing its legislative functions; (2) the Government or public authority cannot be estopped from enforcing a statutory prohibition; (3) the doctrine of promissory estoppel cannot bind the Government or a public authority to abide by a representation or promise contrary to law; (4) promissory estoppel is not attracted where the promise or representation is made by the Government Officer or the public authority outside its authority or power; (5) the doctrine of promissory estoppel, being an equitable doctrine, must yield when equity so requires. If the Government shows that having regard to the facts subsequently transpired holding the Government to its promise would result in equity, the Court would raise no equity in favour of the promisee and would not compel the Government to fulfil its promise: A.I.R. 1991 Raj. 45: (1989) 2 Raj.L.W. 386: (1989) 2 Raj.L.R. 662. The officer would be justified in changing the terms of the agreement to the prejudice of the other party on special considerations such as difficult foreign exchange position or other matters which have a bearing on general interest of the State: (1982) 1 S.L.J. 339 (P.&H.) (F.B.). Apart from these exceptions, the Law is now well-settled, the doctrine of promissory estoppel applies against the Government in exercise of its Governmental, public or executive functions: A.I.R. 1991 Raj. 45: (1989) 2 Raj.L.W. 386: (1989) 2 Raj. L.R. 662; A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 187: 1981 Raj.L.W. 652: 1981 W.L.N. 397; 1984 M.P.L.J. 251 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 371 (D.B.).

The basic principles for invoking promissory estoppel are: (1) A Legislature cannot be estopped from exercising its power to legislate; (2) they can be invoked against the Government but (i) not to restrain it from discharging its duties or obligations imposed by law; (ii) no Government or public authority can be held to its promise or representation, an equitable relief, if on established facts and circumstances and in the larger public interest it is found to be inequitable; (iii) the doctrine is not attracted if the promise or representation made by the Government or the public officer is ultra vires their authority; and (iv) doctrine cannot be invoked if the promise or the representation is procured by fraud: A.I.R. 1993 Andh. Pra. 278: (1993) 1 An.L.T. 490: (1993) 1 An.W.R. 288 (F.B.).

The principles of estoppel qua their application to Government are: (1) estoppel can be made a basis of action against the Government to which the defence of executive necessity is of no avail; (2) though administrative instructions have no force of law but the Government cannot depart therefrom on its own sweet will without rational justification or valid reason for that would violate Arts. 14 and 16 of the Constitution of India; (3) the executive authority must scrupulously conform to the standards laid down in its administrative instructions (in this, prospectus of a Government Medical College) on the pain of invalidation of its action taken in violation of those actions: A.I.R. 1981 Goa 21.

There are some exceptions to the rule of promissory estoppel in its application to the Government: (1) Where from subsequently known facts it appears that binding the Government to its promise would occasion great injustice the rule will not be attracted; being an equitable doctrine, it should yield if equity so desires; (2) where an order sought to be performed on the doctrine of estoppel is ultra vires; (3) where it would lend to compel the party to do an act prohibited by law; (4) where it would involve interference with legislative functions. However, though in certain circumstances interest of justice may prevail even over the notions of ultra vires as pointed out by de Smith, it is difficult to define those circumstances with precision: 1988 Punj.L.J. 123 (D.B.); (1978) 4 All.L.R. 49: 1978 All.L.J. 32 [There is no estoppel against executive act of the Government.] On invocation of promissory estoppel, the Court ought to ask whether the communication from the Government is legislative or executive in character; if it is legislative, the doctrine of promissory estoppel would not apply. A public authority created to exercise statutory powers in the public interest under the legislative authority is precluded from acting inconsistently or incompatibly with the purposes of the grant of statutory powers; estoppel, if attracted, would create contractual fetters in the exercise of statutory powers; it seems logical that the doctrine of estoppel should be excluded whenever its operation would fetter the powers of a public body: A.I.R. 1983 Del. 445 (F.B.).

Broadly speaking the principle that the administration is not estopped from denying the correctness of its prior advice, representation or assurance would apply: (1) When it would override the clear words of a statute, that is, equity should not be allowed to override law; (2) in criminal proceedings; (3) where it would lend de facto validity to ultra vires administrative acts; (4) to validate an act prohibited by statutory authority; (5) to enable a person to do a thing he is legally disabled from doing; (6) to fetter or barter statutory powers; (7) by the administrative agency's inertia or acquiescence: and (8) the ostensible authority of a Government servant having only limited statutory power: A.I.R. 1974 Andh. Pra. 55: (1973) 2 An.W.R. 157 (D.B.).

When no representation by the State Government has been made to the petitioner pursuant to which the petitioner changed his stance to is detriment, the question of promissory estoppel does not come in: (1985) 2 Cal.L.J. 60.

There is a clear distinction between an act done by an officer of Government and by Government. An officer of Government does not represent Government unless he is authorised to do so. Orders in mutation proceedings in which Government was not a party is not binding upon the Government and cannot form basis of a plea of estoppel against Government: A.I.R. 1964 Him. Pra. 19.

There being a clear distinction between an act or omission on the part of the Government and its officer, an officer having no authority to represent the Government, actual or ostensible, cannot bind the Government; no act or omission on his part can operate as estoppel against the Government: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 223: 1973 W.L.N. 132: 1973 Raj.L.W. 339. See also 1980 B.B.C.J. 81; I.L.R. 46 Pat. 767.

The Government would not be bound by the act of its officers and agents who act beyond the scope of their authority and a person dealing with the agent or the Government must be held to have notice of the limitations of his authority. Thus, where Minister of State for health assured the residents of petitioners village that on a land being donated, a permanent primary health centre would be located there but he failed to fulfil his promise and the petitioner, a representative of residents of his village pleaded estoppel, held, even if Minister had given any assurance, the State being the final authority was not bound by such an assurance. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1985 Madh. Pra. 70: 1984 M.P.L.J. 251 (D.B.).

Where the contractor knew that the Executive Engineer and the Assistant Engineer were the Government's agents deputed to look after the contract works and had no authority to give him assurance of payment at enhanced rates, held, no estoppel could arise against the Government on their assurances if at all given: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 223: 1973 W.L.N. 132: 1973 Raj.L.W. 339.

Officer entering into an agreement within scope of his authority and making representation—Person acting on that representation putting himself in disadvantageous position—Government is estopped from going back on its commitments: I.L.R. (1980) 2 Del. 1450.

The true principle of promissory estoppel seems to be that whether one party has by his words or conduct made to the other a clear and unequivocal promise which is intended to create legal relations or effect a legal relationship to arise in the future, knowing or intending that it would be acted upon by the other party to whom the promise is made and it is in fact so acted upon by the other party, the promise would be binding on the party making it and he would not be entitled to go back upon it: (1991) 1 Cal.L.J. 194.

It is not necessary, in order to attract the applicability of the doctrine of promissory estoppel, that the promisee, acting in reliance on the promise, should suffer any detriment. What is necessary is only that the promisee should have altered his position in reliance on the promise. The detriment in such case is not some prejudice suffered by the promisee by acting on promise, but the prejudice which would be caused to the promisee, if the promisor were allowed to go back on the promise: (1990) 2 Bom.C.R. 108 (D.B.).

In order to succeed on the plea of estoppel, the burden lies on the claimant to place adequate and cogent material before the Court; it is not necessary indeed to consider the State's defence to the plea because the gist of the doctrine as universally recognised and adopted in India is the actual reliance of the party on the State's representation. Thus, where actual reliance on the Government's representation was not proved and it was found as a fact that the claimed representation was not made, held, the State could not be bound down to its "representation" or promise: 1992 M.P.L.J. 677 (D.B.).

For applying the principle of promissory estoppel, it is not necessary that the party claiming protection should suffer detriment or loss. It is sufficient that the aggrieved party has brought about a change in the original position acting upon the representations made by the other party. There must be a casual link between representations and the change in the position of the aggrieved party. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621; A.I.R. 1979 Del. 122 and A.I.R. 1980 Del. 83, Rel. on]: I.L.R. (1981) 1 Del. 514.

The doctrine of promissory estoppel being an equitable doctrine, it must yield place to the equity if the larger public interest so requires: 1992 All.L.J. 1258: 1992 Lab.I.C. 2446.

The doctrine of promissory estoppel would apply for affording relief in cases of subordinate legislation, at least when such subordinate legislation is, so to speak, of the executive type, that is, where such legislation comes in almost from day to day, or where the same is concerned with levy or duty or imposition of the tax on commercial house or tradesman who are continuing with a wide variety and scope of business activity. Promissory estoppel will be applicable even against subordinate legislative function in the above areas, even though such subordinate legislation, in strict theory, is an exercise of sovereign legislative power through a delegated body: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 1052.

When acting upon the promise or assurance held out by one, the other party alters his position, the principle of promissory estoppel stands in. The aggrieved party may enforce compliance with the assurance or promise. But no one has any right to enforce the compliance when he is guilty of clandestine dealing: (1985) 2 Cal.L.J. 81.

The respondents by their conduct made a clear and unequivocal promise to the petitioner-firm intending to create legal relationship whereby the petitioner-firm had been authorised to hold the exhibition in one of the hotels of respondents and acting on such promise the petitioner-firm incurred considerable expenditure for bringing machinery and other necessary equipment for making proper arrangements for holding the said exhibition, held, in view of the fact that the petitioner-firm had acted on the promise given by the respondents, it would be inequitable to allow the respondents to retrace their steps to the disadvantage of the petitioner-firm thereby frustrating its promise to hold the exhibition on the basis of such promise on the proposed dates. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1995 P.&H. 134 (D.B.).

The principle of promissory estoppel cannot be pleaded against a wrong doer and a person who had violated the provision of law: (1992) 62 E.L.T. 501 (Cal.).

The plea of promissory estoppel is a mixed question of fact and law. For obtaining relief under such a plea, foundation is required to be laid down in the pleadings: A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 133: 1980 Raj.L.W. 611 (D.B.).

In view of (1987) 65 S.T.C. (Note) 430, the doctrine of promissory estoppel can be regarded as good law: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1247.

A contract with the Union or State Government made without complying with the formalities of S. 175 (3) of the Government of India Act, 1935, or Art. 299(1) of the Constitution of India is a void contract and not merely unenforceable. Such a void contract cannot be ratified at a subsequent stage by the Government. There is no question of estoppel also with regard to contract of this description : A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 555; I.L.R. 41 Pat. 292 : A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 336 (F.B.).

Where allegations in the plaint and the evidence adduced by the plaintiff itself showed that the forest contract was neither made in the name of the Governor nor was it executed by an officer authorised to do so on the Governor's behalf, and was clearly in violation of the mandatory requirements of Art. 299 (1) of the Constitution of India which being in the public interest could not be waived, held, the State could not be precluded from impugning the validity of the contract itself and repudiating its liability for the breach of contract; rule of estoppel could not operate against the State: A.I.R. 1972 Madh. Pra. 43: 1971 M.P.L.J. 898 (D.B.).

Execution of contracts by Government Officers — Strict compliance with law — Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 203.

Where the relationship between the State and the building contractors is founded on non-statutory contracts, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel or legitimate expectations de hors the terms of the contract is not available against the State's change of policy in public interest which resulted in the contract's termination; building contracts, besides, are not specifically enforceable: A.I.R. 1994 Karn. 77.

The principle of promissory estoppel applies with full force even to administrative actions of the State which strictly speaking do not give rise to contractual obligations between the parties and if a citizen has acted upon an administrative assurance to his disadvantage, the State can be pinned down to its promise: A.I.R. 1989 Ori. 120 (D.B,).

A plea of estoppel can be raised against Government by persons adversely affected. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Foll.]: 1971 All.L.J. 796 (D.B.).

The doctrine of promissory estoppel is applicable against the Government in the exercise of its Governmental, public or executive functions and the doctrine of executive necessity or freedom of future executive action cannot be invoked to defeat the applicability of the doctrine of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 179: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 66.

It is well settled that a plea of estoppel must necessarily be based either on a promise or assurance intended to be, and is in fact, acted upon; and the promise or assurance must also pertain to an existing fact. Thus, where no particular Officer of the Bank or the Government was named as having extended the promise or assurance, no estoppel would arise against the Bank or the Government: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 59 (D.B.).

The Government owes a duty to the public to act differently, promissory estoppel cannot be invoked to prevent the Government from doing so. The doctrine of promissory estoppel cannot be invoked for preventing the Government from acting in discharge of its duty under the law. The doctrine of promissory estoppel cannot be applied in teeth of an obligation or liability imposed by law, promissory estoppel cannot be invoked to compel the Government or even a private party to do an act prohibited by law. There can also be no promissory estoppel against the exercise of legislative powers. The Legislature can never be precluded from exercising its legislative functions by resort to the doctrine of promissory estoppel. Thus, where State Government extended the limits of a Municipality under Rajasthan Municipalities Act which was earlier exempted under an agreement and thereafter levied and recovered octroi duty from appellant company, held, it could not be said that the State Government was estopped from extending the limits of Municipality: A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 133: 1980 Raj.L.W. 611 (D.B.).

Acceptance of rent by Patel and Patwari as agents of Government under mistake of fact—No estoppel against Government in suit for declaration of occupancy right—Title of occupancy tenant is not created: 1963 Jab.L.J. 461 : 1963 M.P.L.J. 389.

Where the Government was sought to be evicted on the ground of being a tenant in a private building where no agreement of tenancy was executed in writing in terms of Art. 299 of the Constitution of India and what was relied upon as payment of rent was found to be only compensation for use and occupation and oral representation of tenancy relied upon was made by an Officer who had no authority to bind the Government, held, the rule of estoppel is not attracted; the Government is not bound by the Officer's promise or representation: A.I.R. 1972 Him. Pra. 1: (1971) 1 Sim.L.J. 40 (D.B.).

Though, it will be necessary for a person, who seeks to rely on the doctrine of promissory estoppel, to show that certain promises or representations were made to him, it is not necessary that these promises or representations must be made expressly only in a communication addressed to that particular individual. Thus, where the State Government offered incentives in a scheme contained in a resolution having general applicability, held, it would be no answer to a plea of promissory estoppel that no promise had been made to any particular individual person. [1983 Mah.L.R. (Bom.) 305, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1984 Bom. 161 (F.B.).

Functionaries of a State or the State itself cannot be allowed to say that a concession granted by the State itself was beyond the powers of the State: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1247.

Merely because the State Government in exercise of executive powers transferred land to the petitioner at one point of time, it does not mean that forever land has a protective umbrella from any subsequent legislation. The State having passed Ceiling law in exercise of its legislative functions, had duty and mandate to carry it out in exercise of its executive functions. Therefore, the Prescribed Authority, who is a statutory authority under the Ceiling law, has the power to examine and compute the holding of the petitioner and see if there is any surplus area with it: 1985 Punj.L.J. 423: 1985 Rev.L.R. 505: (1985-2) 88 Punj.L.R. 598.

In cases where the materials on record do not indicate that a case of promissory estoppel or infraction of any statutory provisions is made out, a writ may not be available so as to compel the authorities to remedy a breach of a non-statutory concluded contract, except in the rarest of rare cases: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 243: A.I.R. 1992 N.O.C. 29.

An independent action can be found on the principle of promissory estoppel and it is no longer a principle available only as a shield. It can be used as weapon of offence. Gradually the modern doctrine of promissory estoppel has developed to an extent that it is no longer necessary that the party seeking to enforce the said principle must have suffered a detriment. It is enough if the promisee has altered his position on the faith of the representation. But where no specific promise was being held out and the application forms made it clear that the whole scheme was tentative and without any legal commitment; and it was also on record that the petitioners were themselves clear about this, held, that the doctrine of promissory estoppel is not at all attracted. The doctrine is an equitable doctrine and the Court cannot be asked to apply the same to compel something which is inequitable. One who seeks equity must do equity: A.I.R. 1992 Del. 28.

Doctrine of promissory estoppel applies when there is a clear and unequivocal promise to do something on the part of the promisor. If the promisor retains the power of discretion of not being bound by the promise, the whole basis for invoking the doctrine of promissory estoppel goes. Where the scheme itself suggested that it was on an experimental basis and the experiment could be abandoned even at the earliest stage, held, this alone is sufficient to establish that there was no firm commitment from the Government: A.I.R. 1992 Del. 53.

Power of Central Government to grant exemption under S. 25(1), Customs Act—Withdrawal of exemption in public interest—Estoppel cannot be invoked against such withdrawal: 1983 E.L.T. 1688: I.L.R. (1983) 2 Del. 327. See also A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 874.

Promissory estoppel does not apply to a contract as to the range of quantum of remuneration—It cannot be said that, by the offer of the remuneration (bonus) by the employer, the employee concerned changed their position to their detriment as the offer is made in context which the employees are presumed to know: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Del. 525. In case of a concluded commercial contract between the private party on the one hand and the State on the other hand, the principles of promissory estoppel which are in the legitimate expectation have no application: A.I.R. 1995 Pat. 50.

(a). In case of export and import.—The doctrine of promissory or equitable estoppel has no application to the State when the State is acting in its public, Governmental or sovereign capacity except when it is necessary to apply the doctrine to prevent fraud or manifest injustice. Thus, where the Central Government formulated a scheme for providing incentives to registered exporters in walnut, kernel as well as in shell, with a view to increase export and to augment the foreign exchange earnings for the country, but it withdrew said scheme before the expiry of the period of operation of said scheme which was challenged by the petitioners on the ground of estoppel, held, the motive for promulgating the scheme appeared to be to promote the export of walnuts to earn foreign exchange, badly needed, and the desire to offset the loss which the exporters were likely to incur. No exporter could be expected to export walnuts only to incur losses and so it was deemed necessary to offset their losses so that they could export and earn the foreign exchange required for the benefit of the State generally. The scheme was not promulgated to be a source of extra profit for the exporters. At the time when the scheme was withdrawn by the Government there was no scope of any loss to be suffered by the exporters of walnut. Therefore, the Government could not be held bound by a representation made by it, when the need for continuance of the representation was no longer there. [1975 Punj.L.R. 557, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1976 J.&K. 41.

Any changes in the Export Control Policy or the guidelines framed thereunder for the pre-ban period are made from time to time; the policy does not constitute an enforceable contract between the Government and the exporters; it is the Government's birth right to change the policy from time to time according to the needs of the developing economy; it is unfortunate that some exporters thereby suffer but estoppel cannot be allowed to hinder the formation of Government policy wherein so many matters like the position of foreign exchange, protection of domestic industries and the State's general interest are involved; that is certainly for the public good. A public body has a right, nay a duty, to exercise its discretion in the way it feels best for promoting the public interest: A.I.R. 1983 Del. 445 (F.B.).

Where a manufacturer was granted a licence to import capital goods on the condition, inter alia, that it would export 15 per cent of its product for which the manufacturer gave a written undertaking to the Government, and it was thereafter that the Government promised cash assistance to the manufacturer for such exports which promise was subsequently withdrawn, held, the Government was not estopped from withdrawing the cash assistance; the manufacturer could not be said to have effected exports on the promise of cash assistance: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 459: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N. 573 (D.B.).

Where Central Government announced Export Assistant Scheme relying on which the petitioners entered into various contracts with foreign buyers at a price much lesser than the usual market price bearing in mind the cash assistance assured by the Government of India under the said Export Promotion Scheme but subsequently, the Government cancelled said scheme retrospectively, held, the Government was estopped from rescinding the said cash assistance scheme: A.I.R. 1991 Kam. 52; A.I.R. 1993 Del. 321: (1993) 51 Del.L.T. 19; (1994-2) 107 Punj.L.R. 8 (Del.): (1994) 54 Del.L.T. 71 (D.B.).

Where Government of India announced International price reimbursement scheme under which Exporter/Manufacturer of engineering goods made of indigenous steel was entitled to reimbursement of difference in domestic price and international price and the petitioner-company which had used indigenous steel on being advised by working committee for construction of steel bridges in Malaysia claimed reimbursement but Government refused to accede to said claim of the petitioner company, held, working group being an instrumentality of State, the Government was bound by its representation relying on which the petitioner-company used indigenous steel despite its higher price and incurred more expenditure than what they would have incurred by the use of imported steel for such purpose: A.I.R. 1994 Mad. 83.

Where an exporter acting pursuant to the export policy proclaimed for 3 years set up a plant for manufacture of musical instruments parts from red-sanders wood, acquired requisite skill and raised loans from financial institutions to his detriment and the new export policy barred their export, held, the rule of promissory estoppel would undoubtedly apply against the new policy; the uniform view of all Courts including the Supreme Court is that the doctrine is available against the Government if the impugned action is in exercise of statutory power; it is also available against subordinate and delegated legislations which are not at par with enactments of the Legislature. [A.I.R. 1994 Mad. 112, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1993 Mad. 336: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 569 (D.B.).

Where under the policy in force during 1989-90 export and trading houses were entitled to import licences on the basis of their admissible exports during that year and a new policy was announced on 30 March, 1990, it was not explicitly stated that no imports would be permitted in public interest against those exports, held, the authorities were estopped from declining to grant import licences against the exports; the doctrine of promissory estoppel was clearly attracted: A.I.R. 1993 Andh. Pra. 62: (1991) 2 An.L.T. 255.

At the relevant time, there was free trade in the groundnut seeds and oil in the State of Andhra Pradesh. But in view of steep rising in their prices in that State subsequently, the Government instructed its authorities not to allow export of said articles unless the oil millers and traders give an undertaking that a minimum quantity of groundnut oil would be made available by them at a specified price whenever asked to do so and they accordingly gave such undertaking and it was only then that they were given permits for export. However, subsequently, they challenged the validity of the directions issued by the State Government to deliver groundnut oil in accordance with the undertaking obtained earlier as not within the competence of the State Government. The State Government's contention was that as the scheme devised by it had express acquiescence of the industry, in the form of undertaking, they could have no grievance against the same. Held, the agreements, undertakings and other documents executed by the millers and traders were not voluntary and were executed to otherwise avoid catastrophic results to the millers and dealers and had to be necessarily regarded as opposed to public policy, and, thus, unenforceable. So those agreements and undertakings could not raise a plea of estoppel against the millers and traders: A.I.R. 1988 Andh. Pra. 317 (D.B.), affirmed in A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 989.

Where in response to a public notice issued by the Government mentioning therein the articles which could be imported under the scheme for import of spare parts of essential machinery and equipment from U.S.A., the petitioner applied for and granted a licence to import condensing units by the Deputy Chief Controller of Imports and Exports but when the shipment arrived at the Port, its clearance was refused by the Customs Authorities on the ground that the goods imported were not covered by the import licence issued to the petitioner, held, as the petitioner had not made any misrepresentation whatsoever and the import licence was granted to it with open eyes and after due consideration by the authority concerned and the petitioner acting upon the import licence had imported the items at a huge cost, the Union of India was under an obligation to permit the petitioner to import the condensing units as described in its application and it was bound to carry out that obligation. It could not avoid it merely because another officer or authority took a different view and considered that such an obligation should not have been undertaken. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 All. 170.

In pursuance of an order of the Central Government permitting import of certain goods into India, the petitioners entered into a contract for the import of Crude drugs and an irrevocable and transferable letter of credit was opened and established on 6-10-86. On the same day a public notice reflecting change of policy was issued whereby a ban was imposed for the import of said commodities. Thereafter, the department prevented the petitioners from importing said drugs under the licence, which was already granted, by reason of change in policy. Held, as the petitioners acted on the representation made by the department and the rights and obligation were created between the parties on account of that action, it was impermissible for the department to withdraw and go back from that assurance. Further, mere claim by the Government that change in policy was in public interest was not enough. The Government must disclose to the Court all the necessary material on account of which the exemption from invoking doctrine of promissory estoppel was sought for. The Court would not act on the mere ipse dixit of the Government. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621; (1987) 32 E.L.T. 40 (Bom.), Foll.]: A.I.R. 1990 Bom. 376: (1990) 2 Bom.C.R. 671.

Where the import policy was retrospectively amended by public notice and the exception was made only in respect of goods actually in transit, held, the bar validly covered the goods in respect whereof an irrevocable letter of credit had been opened in favour of foreign suppliers prior to the public notice; the amendment, based on reasonable classification as it is, does not attract the doctrine of estoppel. [(1987) 2 S.C.R. 989, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 370.

Where a letter written by the Government of India mentioned that the holders of additional licence issued for 1978-79 would be entitled to import only those goods which were included in an Appendix 6, Part II of AM 85-88 of Import policy but a letter written earlier by the Additional Secretary to the Government of India was not in consonance with the subsequent direction, held, the earlier letter would not in any way affect the position or create any estoppel: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 179: (1986) 4 S.C.C. 246.

Where on the Food Minister's statement that the Government had abolished levy on imported rice, the petitioners imported rice from other States but they were required to pay levy on imported rice under the Bihar Rice and Paddy Procurement (Second) Order, 1981 and they pleaded estoppel, held, the Minister's statement did not tantamount to the Government's statement binding on it; there was no clear announcement that the levy-paid rice brought from outside would be exempt from procurement; it was not a clear and unequivocal promise—but only an oral statement; the Government's refusal to abide by it could not be said to be inequitable. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 395, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 158: 1982 B.L.J.R. 321: 1982 Pat.L.J.R. 307 (D.B.).

Where on the basis of import policies pertaining to palm oil for manufacture of refined palm oil modified from time to time and imports were effected, future commitments were made, finances in foreign exchange were arranged for and huge investments made on the basis of freely available import licences, held, the State was estopped from unilaterally changing the import policy which may have adverse effect on the contracts already made and their execution. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Del. 122 (D.B.).

Where a licence to import heat resistant steel (HRS) was granted for manufacture of auto parts on the basis of consumption when there was no explicit provision therefor in the Import Trade Control Policy, held, it cannot be taken to be a representation to the importer that such import would be allowed in the succeeding years as well; the importer could not invoke estoppel against the import authorities on their refusal to allow import of such steel when a technically competent authority had opined against its necessity for manufacture of auto parts. [A.I.R. 1977 P.&H. 268, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Andh. Pra. 280 (D.B.).

Where petitioner relying upon a notification issued by Central Government under the Custom Act, 1962 which depicted exemption of certain goods from duty, imported goods but before the expiry of period of said notification another notification was issued which enhanced the additional rate of duty and the additional duty on basis of impugned second notification was levied on the petitioner's goods, held, a notification issued to grant, modify or withdraw an exemption from duty under the Customs Act being in the nature of piece of subordinate legislation, the doctrine of promissory estoppel could have no application to such notification since there could be no promissory estoppel against the exercise of legislative power. Therefore, the petitioner was required to pay duty on the basis of impugned subsequent notification only: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 228; 1984 E.L.T. 281: 1984 Tax. L.R. 2606 (Bom.).

Importer indenting for stainless steel circles before amendment—Cannot claim that Government was estopped from recovering higher rate of duty in view of representation as to same being liable for lessor rate of duty: 1983 Tax.L.R. (N.O.C.) 28: 1982 E.L.T. 877: I.L.R. (1982) 2 Del. 1008.

The doctrine of promissory or equitable estoppel does not apply to representations and assurances made by the Government or Officers acting on its behalf. Thus, where the Joint Chief Controller of Imports issued a release order for a certain quantity of steel sheets but later on refused to re-issue it in the final form on the ground that the release order was issued in the first instance without ascertaining whether or not there was compliance of the conditions prescribed in the Red Book and the Hand Book embodying the policy and codified procedure for such allotment, held, in the absence of the plea, much less of the proof of the claimant having acted upon the "promise" in the first release order, no ground for invocation of the promissory estoppel was made out; besides, it is extremely doubtful whether the first release order could be regarded as a promise properly so-called. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2325, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1976 Mad. 376: (1976) 89 Mad.L.W. 608.

(b). In case of incentive schemes for setting up industries.—If the Government wants to resile from a promise or an assurance given by it on the ground that undue advantage was being taken or misuse was being made of the concessions granted, the Court may permit the Government to do so but before allowing the Government to resile from the promise or go back on the assurance the Court would have to be satisfied that allegations by the Government about misuse being made or undue advantage being taken of the concessions given by it were reasonably well established. Where Government announced certain incentives and concessions to the entrepreneurs for starting new industries and based on said representation, the respondent established a unit but by a subsequent order, the incentives announced earlier were withdrawn on the ground of their alleged misuse but the Government failed to show that any such misuse was being made or undue advantage was taken of the said concessions, held, the Government could not be allowed to go back from its promise: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1247.

Where the petitioners were invited by the State to set up industries by assuring them supply of the raw material and they changed their position on the basis of that representation but when the factories were ready and were in a position to utilise the raw material, the State Government enacted J.&K. Extraction of Resin Act, 1986 which obliterated the rights of the petitioners and enabled the State to get out of the commitments, held, though there is no estoppel against the Legislature but the circumstances of the present case gave rise to a fact situation of estoppel. Thus, the State Government was estopped from backing out from its commitments (obiter): A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1629: (1989) 3 S.C.C. 115.

Where Government by a notification promised to remit electricity duties for industrial advancement of State, and this induced petitioners to establish industry in Rajasthan but the said concession was withdrawn subsequently, by another notification, held, the plea of financial distress and draught conditions could not be used by the Government to avoid the liability of doctrine of promissory estoppel, which was created by Government by issuing the previous notification, since no proper and adequate material had been placed by the Government which might show that overriding public interest required that the Government should not be held bound by the promise but should be free to act unfettered by it: A.I.R. 1992 Raj. 51.

Where the State Government with a view to help set up industries in the under-developed forest regions by resolution promised long term supply of timber for 20 years and revision of prices every three years but later on the State Government prescribed rules providing for annual revision of rates, held, no substantial prejudice was caused to the industries as the basic factor for determining the price, namely, the prevailing market price, remained unchanged; even assuming that it amounted to a promise, its change was made in public interest; besides, the change was made under law; no estoppel could arise against the Government: A.I.R. 1994 Bom. 155: 1994 Mah.L.J. 415 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner spent a huge amount in setting up of the cotton delinting plant relying on notifications issued by the Government which provided various benefits like exemption from sales tax and interest free sales tax loans for a period of five years from 1-11-1977 to certain specified industries but the State Government (during the period of operation of earlier notifications) issued another notification by which benefits provided earlier were withdrawn, held, the Government was estopped for a period of five years from 1-11-1977 from denying the benefit of the scheme for interest free sales tax loan to the petitioners. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 768, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 107: (1982-1) 23 Guj.L.R. 20 (D.B.).

Where an incentive scheme envisaging sales tax benefits was announced by the Government for "large-scale industrial units going to a completely new location in a backward area" and such a unit was so set up for production of industrial alcohol, held, the Government was estopped from denying the benefit of the scheme to the new unit merely because its owner had a small scale khandsari unit in the same area which at any rate had closed down earlier in 1978; the new unit clearly satisfied the conditions set down in the scheme: (1990-1) 10 Guj.L.H. 65 (D.B.).

Where State Government in an Industrial Policy Resolution which was applicable for the period from 1979 to 1983 promised to grant exemption from levy of octroi and sales tax to new industrial units and the petitioners being lured by the concessions set up a new rolling flour mills and it went into production when the Industrial Policy Resolution for 1979-83 was still in vogue but a subsequent revision of policy was done and exemption to flour mills was withdrawn and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, the Government was bound to enforce its promise in respect of all units that were established and went into commercial production during the period said Industrial Policy Resolution was in force and the subsequent revision of the policy denying the exemption to the flour mills was hit by promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 163: (1986) 61 Cut.L.T. 369 (D.B.).

Where in pursuance of a scheme announced by the State for providing cash subsidy for setting up and expansion of industries in backward areas, the petitioner-society invested huge money and applied for the same and after its application was duly processed, cash subsidy was sanctioned and a part payment was also made but subsequently, the State failed to pay remaining amount, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel could certainly be invoked by the petitioner and the respondent-authorities could not refuse to release cash subsidy which had been sanctioned earlier: A.I.R. 1992 Guj. 89: (1991-2) 32 Guj.L.R. 852: (1991-2) 11 Guj.L.H. 339; A.I.R. 1991 Cal. 397: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 124: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 833.

The petitioner applied for grant of Central Subsidy under the Central Investment Subsidy Scheme while the scheme was in force. The State level Committee accorded the sanction when the scheme ceased to be in force. The petitioner acting on the promise of the Committee entered into various contracts but as the subsidy was withheld he pleaded estoppel. Held, the Committee automatically stood terminated on termination of scheme and, therefore, the "promise" or "sanction" was an assurance by a non-existent body. Further, even if the existence of State level Committee was assumed, the sanction being without authority of scheme was ultra vires of the authority of the Committee and, thus, no estoppel arose out of such a promise. [(1949) 1 K.B. 227, Not a good law]: A.I.R. 1994 Ker. 6.

Where the petitioners acting on the representations made in certain scheme of incentives for setting up industries incurred expenditure, set up a manufacturing unit in the hope that the State Government would abide by its words and act according to its representations, but later on the Government refused to grant eligibility certificate to the petitioners, held, as the State Government was acting in its executive capacity and not under any legislative powers, it could be compelled to abide by the representations made by it. [1983 Mah.L.R. (Bom.) 305, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1984 Bom. 161: 1984 Mah.L.J. 321: (1984) 1 Bom.C.R. 485 (F.B.).

Where an eligibility certificate was erroneously granted to a party not eligible thereto and on its basis incentives and investment subsidy was also sanctioned and disbursed to it and it was only discovery of the error that the Director of Industries cancelled the incentives and recalled the amounts disbursed, held, since the grant of certificate and the sanction and grant of subsidy were all without authority, the doctrine of promissory estoppel could not be invoked: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 10.

Where petitioners set up their industry in the State in response to an order issued by Government under which certain concessions were granted to new units with a view to boost industrialisation but exemption was curtailed by a subsequent order issued by Government, and the petitioners which were denied benefits under first order pleaded estoppel, held, as the petitioners had set up their industries before passing of subsequent order by Government they were entitled to all the concessions mentioned in the first order: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 590: (1987) 27 E.L.T. 594: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 249.

Government issued a notification granting exemptions to sugar industries which was applicable for setting up new industry and expansion of the existing industry. The new liberalised scheme envisaged that the undertaking should merely register itself with the Government without requirement of a licence. The Government issued a press note that the Directorate General of Technical Development would take the applications on record expeditiously. Petitioner applied for registration during the continuance of the scheme. Subsequently, the Government withdrew the exemption regarding requirement of a licence. Even after withdrawal of scheme the petitioner was informed that its application for registration was under consideration. After completing expansion the petitioner applied for incentives which were refused on the ground that policy was rescinded. Held, the petitioners had applied for registration before the scheme was rescinded. Respondents were requiring the petitioners to furnish information and assuring that the matter was under consideration. Moreover even when the liberalised licensing policy was withdrawn, the respondents were still assuring the petitioners that the application was under consideration. The delay in granting the registration was totally unjustified. It was contrary to the assurances made to the Industry. To permit the respondents, after such an inordinate and unexplained delay, to withdraw registration on the ground that policy was rescinded would be contrary to equity and law. Further, the investment and the planning and labour that had gone in the expansion programme could not be ignored: A.I.R. 1985 Del. 344 (D.B.).

Where the Government introduced an incentive scheme in respect of sugar production for 5 years extending benefits to all sugar factories which completed their licensed expansion within those 5 years, held, the Government was estopped from denying the benefits to a sugar factory on the ground that it had started the expansion programme before the scheme was announced; the doctrine could be invoked on the ground of equity; the doctrine of executive necessity or freedom of future executive action could not defeat the promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 35 (Del.) (D.B.).

Where petitioners set up an industry in the backward area because of the representation of the Union and the State Governments that 25% subsidy would be available to the units but the subsidy was denied on the ground that before it could be sanctioned by the State level Committee, the scheme was withdrawn by the Government, held, principles of promissory estoppel were applicable as there was a definite promise held out by the respondents by declaring the Scheme that the entrepreneurs who fulfilled the eligibility qualifications under the scheme would be given subsidy. The promise did not come into being on sanction of subsidy by the State level Committee. Thus, the respondents had to consider the case of the petitioner on merits and could not have rejected the claim on the short ground that it was not sanctioned before the expiry of the scheme: A.I.R. 1993 Madh. Pra. 202 (D.B.).

Where the State Government announced its policy by means of a resolution for granting financial assistance and incentives for setting up film studios in the State which included guaranteeing bank advances upto Rs. 25 lac, exempting entertainment tax, giving price preference concession and relying on that policy, the petitioner invested Rs. 31 lacs, held, the Government could not be permitted to resile from its policy and curtail the concession; the doctrine of promissory estoppel would very much apply. [A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 198 which was affirmed in A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 848, Foll.]: (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. 60: (1986-1) 27 Guj.L.R. 263.

Merely because an industry is allowed to be set up in the State by grant of an industrial licence or other concessions it does not follow that it becomes entitled to a captive mine to cater to its needs. [Obiter]: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 818.

Where no application for grant of licence for exhibition of cinematograph films in the cinema house of the petitioners could be made up to 31st March, 1990, which was sine qua non for availability of the benefit of the grant-in-aid as promised by Government, held, petitioners were not eligible for benefit of grant-in-aid promised by Government and, thus, they could not invoke doctrine of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1993 All. 30: 1992 All.L.J. 1241 (D.B.).

(c). In case of allotment of plots/flats, etc.—Where the petitioner was allotted a plot by the Rajasthan Improvement Trust but possession thereof could not be handed over as the same plot had been allotted to another person also, and thereafter the Improvement Trust promised to allot an alternate plot to petitioner, held, the Trust was estopped to wriggle out from the promise by taking recourse to S. 20 of the Contract Act: A.I.R. 1992 Raj. 153: (1991) 1 Raj.L.W. 443 (D.B.).

Where the Authorities with a view to shift printing presses scattered all over Chandigarh to the industrial area earmarked for the purpose invited applications for allotment of plots therein which scheme was subsequently revised so as to reduce the size of plots and enhance their number to accommodate more printing presses before any allotment under the pre-revision scheme had been made and some of the applicants sought to enforce their claim to allotment of larger plots on the ground of promissory estoppel, held, the Authorities in fact made no representation or promise to allot larger plots; even if it was made, it was against statutory rules; the rule of promissory estoppel was not attracted. [A.I.R. 1981 P.&H. 30, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 354: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 440: (1988) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 365.

Where the petitioner's request for change of category of flat allotment was accepted by the Government Authorities and enhanced amount demanded by the Authorities was also paid by her but still she had not been handed over the flat in question even though formal letter of allotment had also been issued to her, held, the principles of promissory estoppel would be clearly applicable: (1991-2) 100 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 24: (1991) 43 Del.L.T. 111 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner, alongwith the application for allotment of plot, sent certain amount of money and he was informed that a plot had been earmarked and allotment letter would be issued after receipt of balance price due from him and though the petitioner paid balance amount no allotment letter was sent to him and he was informed that allotment letter could not be issued in view of revision of policy by the State Government, held, as the petitioner had paid the full price of the plot and there was a clear promise that on payment of balance amount allotment letter would be issued, he was entitled to allotment of plot and the handing over of the possession thereof. His rights could not be prejudiced or affected by any subsequent revision of policy: A.I.R. 1994 P.&H. 157.

Where in pursuance of an offer by the State Government, the petitioner deposited certain amount as demanded by the authorities towards full payment for allotting a plot to him but subsequently, he was informed that under the new policy, the price of plot had enhanced and, thus, he should deposit the balance amount and that the plot originally earmarked for petitioner had not been acquired by the Authorities and, therefore, he must pay the enhanced price for getting allotment, held, the Government was entitled to enhance the price provided there was some justification for doing so and that justification has to be made out giving facts and figures to the Court. The Authorities' stand that the price was tentative as the land had not yet been acquired was also without any force. Once the Department decided to allot a plot at a particular price which they claimed to be full price then irrespective of the fact whether the land had been acquired or not would disentitle them to enhance the price later. Thus, the Authorities were directed to allot the plot to the petitioner at the price already deposited by him: (1992) 2 Rev.L.R. 311: (1992-1) 102 Punj.L.R. 632: 1992 Punj.L.J. 296; (1989) 2 Rev.L.R. 423 (D.B.).

A Court can enforce compliance by a public authority of the obligation laid on it unless it is established that there are special considerations in public interest. Thus, where the Government announced a scheme for allotment of land to non-resident Indians living abroad to build residential houses in Delhi and the petitioners applied under the scheme and deposited earnest money but the Government subsequently dropped the scheme in public interest, held, as the scheme was dropped in the interests of the general public it would be inequitable to enforce the withdrawn promise against the Government. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1496, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1984 Del. 413.

Where the State Housing Development Authority invited applications for allotment of houses under various schemes and it was clearly mentioned in the brochure that the cost of the houses mentioned in the brochure was merely an approximate and was liable to variations and houses were allotted to the petitioners and they took possession thereof, held, subsequently, the petitioners could not challenge the increase in cost by the authority: A.I.R. 1988 All. 268 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners applied for allotment of flats and the registration booklet regarding allotment of flats indicated that the authority could change and modify the conditions and its decision would be binding, held, the petitioners were estopped from contending that authority could not change the terms and conditions represented to them at the time of registration of flats: A.I.R. 1986 All. 362: (1986) 12 All.L.R. 350 (D.B.).

Where respondent-Development Authority proposed to construct commercial and residential flats in 1977 and the petitioners and others got their applications registered as prospective hire-purchaser and made the prescribed deposits for the purpose but said Authority intimated to the petitioners the revised estimated cost of flats twice in 1979 and 1980 to which the petitioners conceded but when the Authority again intimated to the petitioners a further hike in cost of flats in 1984, the aggrieved petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, the petitioners and others, who got themselves registered as far back as 1977 to 1979 were continuing their registration but because of repeated and unexplained increase of the cost of flats intimated by the Development Authority they were placed disadvantageously in a peculiar condition of helplessness. If they were now asked to withdraw their registration and take back their respective deposits as suggested by the Development Authority, the petitioners stood to suffer seriously because now they could not be put back in the position in which they were in 1977 when they could have exercised an option to acquire flats elsewhere at reasonable cost. Thus, the increase in prices of flats could be struck down on the principle of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 88: 1985 M.P.L.J. 616 (D.B.).

Where the policy did not indicate the price on which the industrial sheds would be sold on hire-purchase and purported to be "provisional" and subject to change in the light of further discussion with the bankers and other authorities, held, such an inchoate policy can neither attract the doctrine of promissory estoppel nor confer any rights or impose any duties on the parties: A.I.R. 1993 Del. 211: (1993) 49 Del.L.T. 56.

Where under its Housing Scheme of 1982 which admittedly provided for allotment of 50 per cent. houses on cash down and the balance on hire purchase basis, the Delhi Development Authority subsequently invited retired and retiring Government servants for out of turn allotment on the same basis, held, the Authority could not unilaterally insist that such Government servants who got themselves registered and acted to their detriment must pay for the houses on cash down basis; the Authority directed to adhere to its original allotment Scheme: A.I.R. 1995 Del. 212 (F.B.).

Where petitioners applied for allotment of the shops under Scheduled Castes quota in response to advertisement and in terms of the advertisement they were required to deposit 25% of the reserve price as indicated in the allotment letter, and the petitioners acting on such representation deposited the requisite amount and after taking possession of shops from the respondent, Delhi Development Authority, also started business, but thereafter D.D.A. issued revised demand notices in respect of the shops allotted to the petitioners whereby the price of shops, as originally fixed was revised, held, had the petitioners known at that time of deposit of the 25% of the reserve price, as they were required to pay originally, that revised demand of balance of 25% of reserve price would be raised by the D.D.A., they would have perhaps not purchased such shops. Therefore, the D.D.A. was estopped from raising further demand of balance of 25% of the reserve price vide their impugned letters under the doctrine of promissory estoppel: (1994-2) 107 Punj.L.R. 5: (1994) 54 Del.L.T. 68.

Where a plot which was originally earmarked for service industries in the lay out plan was allotted to the petitioner by the Housing Board of the State Government on the payment of one-third cost but subsequently, such allotment was cancelled on the ground that the allotment made was irregular, held, when the Housing Board had not used the said plot for the original purpose for which it was earmarked, and when the actual order of allotment had been issued by the Government after receiving a portion of consideration and it had also executed a lease-cum-sale agreement, in such a situation the doctrine of promissory estoppel clearly attracted and, thus, the State Government was not justified in cancelling the allotment: (1992) 1 M.L.J. 578.

Where land was acquired on payment of full compensation under the Land Acquisition Act and a promise was made to allot them plots in the scheme, held, since the position of the claimants was not changed to their detriment on such promise, the rule of estoppel was not attracted; the promise was a mere concession and conferred no right on the claimants: 1989 Punj.L.J. 318. Where though an oustee of land applied for allotment of plot in 1974 at the reserved price, his case could not be finalised till new policy decision was taken by the Government in 1981, held, he could not justifiably claim the consideration of his application under 1974 policy decision; equitable doctrine of promissory estoppel could not be invoked merely on account of having applied for allotment of residential plot at the reserve price: 1983 Rev.L.R. 411.

The petitioner was allotted an alternative plot in lieu of land acquired by the Delhi Administration, the petitioner made the requisite deposits of earnest money and balance of the premium due. Thereafter, the petitioner constructed a building on the said plot after obtaining sanction of the building plans from competent authority. The allotment was cancelled later on. Held, because of the action of the respondent the petitioner had been placed in a position from where the withdrawal would cause financial loss to the petitioner. Thus, the cancellation of order of allotment by the respondent was barred by estoppel: A.I.R. 1985 Del. 466.

Where the petitioner was allotted a residential plot by the respondent-Housing Board and he was also granted a no objection certificate to put up residential building in the said plot and a planning permit was also issued permitting the petitioner to construct the building according to the plan and the petitioner put up a building in the plot in accordance with the approved plan but thereafter the respondent-Housing Board cancelled the allotment and ordered resumption of possession of the plot, held, the petitioner having acted upon the promise of the respondent had constructed a residential building and it was not open to the respondent to rescind from the promise and refuse to execute the sale deed at such a late stage. [A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 806, Foll.]: (1991) 1 M.L.J. 339.

Where the requisite 15 percent payment for allotment of a flat was accepted belatedly by the Housing Board as well as also other payments thereafter, held, it was not open to the Board to turn round and contend that because of belated payment the allotment is deemed to have been cancelled under Cl. 3 of the agreement when Cl. 4 thereof provided for extension of time; the Board could not refuse to allot the plot: 1989 Punj.L.J. 767 (D.B.).

Where a Company was allotted a plot on conditions, inter alia, of payment of its cost and completion of construction within specified period but the belated payment was nevertheless accepted but on its failure to complete the construction within time, the allotment was cancelled and the Company was required to deliver back the plot and on its inspection the Company was found to have started fencing of the plot which was considered to be a trespass and the Company was asked to remove the fence and other materials kept there, held, mere acceptance of belated payment was no declaration or act or omission on the part of the authorities which could create such an impression amounting to a promise or inducing a belief or expectation in the Company's mind that the allotment order still subsisted or the cancellation order had been revoked; the Company could not invoke to its aid the doctrine of promissory estoppel and the theory of legitimate expectation: A.I.R. 1994 Mad. 14.

Where lands were allotted by Delhi Development Authority to petitioners—educational societies for construction of school buildings at the rate calculated on the basis of no profit no loss and according to the allotment letters, the societies were to pay the difference of the cost of land as might be decided by D.D.A. which meant increased cost of acquisition and other development charges and the societies proceeded with the construction of building but subsequently the D.D.A. demanded the cost on the basis of market value of the land, held, as the allotment letters were issued within the authority given under the law and the societies changed their respective position after making payment and taking possession of their respective lands, principle of promissory estoppel was applicable. [A.I.R. 1990 Del. 75, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1991 Del. 96: (1990) 42 Del.L.T. 651: 1990 Rajdhani L.R. 522 (D.B.).

The petitioner, a housing society, submitted a requisition to the Government for the acquisition of lands for a housing scheme. The Government acquired 8.72 acres of land and directed the petitioner to deposit certain amount but the petitioner deposited much less amount and, thus, the Government released only 5.45 acres to the petitioner. The society repeatedly demanded release of balance land saying that the amount already deposited by it was sufficient as the cost of total land and failed to deposit remaining amount inspite of the Government's requests. Subsequently, the Housing Board decided to allot said remaining lands to another Samiti, to which the petitioner objected raising plea of estoppel. Held, the transaction between the petitioner and the Government was purely that of sale and purchase and no agreement or concluded contract had been entered into between the parties. On the contrary, any offer for settlement of the land was on the condition of the payment of the price, which the petitioner failed to pay. Therefore, the principle of promissory estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 133: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 1: 1984 B.L.J.R. 256 (D.B.).

A Housing Society was negotiating with holder of a certain land for construction of a housing colony for its members but as his land was included in a scheme of the Improvement Trust, the Society requested the trust to release said land and for permission to develop it into a colony. When subsequently, the society was informed by the trust that it had passed a resolution and also obtained State Government's sanction for releasing said land, the Society, acting on the said promise, got sale deed of the impugned land executed in its favour from the owner of the land and proceeded ahead with the survey of the land and preparations of plans for development. But, subsequently, the trust intimated that the permission and sanction accorded to it was cancelled. Held, the trust was in law capable to perform the promise held out by it and acting on said promise the society had changed its position, thus, the trust could not be permitted to go back from its promise. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 93: 1974 M.P.L.J. 887 (D.B.).

Where on the assurance of an Improvement Trust of favourable consideration and exemption from the improvement scheme certain persons set up a society and deposited money with the Trust but the scheme framed by the Trust was scrapped by the Court due to more than 3 years' delay on its part and on farming fresh schemes thereafter the Trust declined to honour its assurance on the ground that they were new schemes, held, the Trust's contention gives a complete go by to the well known maxim; "equity feeds the grant of estoppel". The Trust was estopped from refusing to allot plots to the society: A.I.R. 1979 P.&H. 196 (D.B.).

Where State Government allotted certain lands to the respondents which had been escheated to the State and were under mortgage and the respondent-allottees deposited mortgage amount and, consequently, Collector issued order of allotment and warrants of possession, held, by reason of said orders in favour of the respondent-allottees, they had acquired a right under the doctrine of promissory estoppel to call upon the Government to regularise the allotment of land to them if for any reason order of allotment made by Collector was defective. Thus, even if no registered deed of conveyance or agreement of sale was executed by Government, the respondent-allottees were entitled to claim title to the land. [(1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 195, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1426.

Where the Managing Officer acting within ambit of its authority made a representation to allot the disputed land in favour of the petitioner-society and acting on that representation the petitioner-society deposited certain amount towards payment of price and as a result of the allotment of land made in favour of the members of the petitioners-society, said members did not get themselves registered for allotment of any plot of land with any other society, but later on Government refused to grant disputed land to the society, held, as the society and its members had put themselves in a disadvantageous position on the basis of the representation made to them by the concerned officer, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was applicable and the Government was estopped from going back on the commitments made by its Officer. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285, Foll.]: I.L.R. (1980) 2 Del. 1450: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 149.

Where the petitioner purchased plots from Municipal Committee in an open auction and deposited the entire amount and even sale deed had been executed in her favour but the Committee refused to sanction the plans for construction of flats on said plots, held, having auctioned the property, it was incumbent on the Municipal Committee to carry out their part of the duty. They were obliged to accept the instalments, consider and approve the plans in accordance with law and to permit the petitioner the possession and enjoyment of the properties sold to her. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021, Foll.]: 1992 Punj.L.J. 417.

Where certain land was acquired by the Government for a development scheme and it stood vested in the Development Authority but by the impugned resolution the development authority reconveyed the land to the petitioner land owner, held, as said resolution was void as the Development Authority had no jurisdiction to reconvey the land, the petitioner land owner could not invoke the doctrine of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 100: I.L.R. (1989) Karn. 75.

Where the terms of the lease did not provide for charging of any fee for granting consent by the Delhi Development Authority to lessee for sale or transfer of the leased property, the order of recovery of such fee would not be valid in view of S. 3 of the Government's Grant Act, 1895. Thus, where D.D.A. granted sale permission to the plaintiff-lessee subject to payment of transfer fee and the plaintiff made the payment under protest eventhough under the lease deed, the D.D.A. was not empowered to impose such condition, subsequently the plaintiff sought to recover that amount, held, as payment was made by the plaintiff under pain of refusal of permission, principle of promissory estoppel could not operate against him. Further, there could not be estoppel against statute and as the D.D.A. had charged the amount which it was prohibited from charging under S. 3 of the Government Grants Act. 1895, it could not call in aid the doctrine of estoppel: A.I.R.

Where the State Government acting in its administrative capacity handed over impugned premises to the petitioner society and the latter collected money from people for purposes of setting a museum and library but subsequently the State Government demanded back the possession of the impugned premises, held, Government was estopped from going back from its promise. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285 and A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 107, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 16: (1983-2) 24 Guj.L.R. 1329: (1983) 3 Guj.L.H. 1084.

Where City Municipality, predecessor of respondent Corporation, planned to construct a new central fish market in place of erstwhile market and accordingly it directed all stall holders, fish vendors, etc., to shift their business to alternate temporary sheds and subsequently the petitioner Society of stall holders in erstwhile market invoked doctrine of promissory estoppel against respondent Corporation on its failure to comply with the promise held out by it to the stall holders that they would be given adequate alternate accommodation in the new market, held, in the absence of positive evidence that such a promise was held out by Corporation, the plea taken in the petition by petitioner society remained a plea only. Therefore, the question of enforcing S. 115 of the Evidence Act as against the State or the respondent Corporation which was an instrumentality of the State under Art. 12 of the Constitution, not arise: A.I.R. 1993 Karn. 220: (1993) 1 Karn.L.J. 84.

Where with a view to rehabilitate the squatters at road side the Municipal Committee formulated a scheme and with a view to ascertain the true situation and decide about the entitlement of the squatters for allotment of alternative site/shop, surveys were conducted and the petitioners, some of those squatters, contended that their names appeared in the said survey and, therefore, they were entitled for allotment of shops, held, as no policy was framed nor was any promise made for allotment of alternative site/shop, the plea of promissory estoppel could not be raised by them: A.I.R. 1988 Del. 57: (1987) 32 Del.L.T. 297 (D.B.).

Where a Municipal Scheme for building tenements on the plots of slum dwellers did not provide for immediate delivery of possession of tenements to the slum dwellers which was provided for by a separate agreement with each slum dweller and slum dwellers, who were mere purchasers of plot from the original allottees, had not entered into any such agreement with the Corporation, held, the doctrine of estoppel was not attracted merely because immediate possession had been given pursuant to the agreement with other original allottees; besides, the purchasers could not contend that they had purchased the plots on the Corporation's representation that immediate possession of the tenements constructed on the plots would be granted to them: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 59.

A party obtaining sanction for a lay out plan from the Hyderabad Municipal Corporation by representation that it would earmark and set apart certain areas as open space for a park, playground and community hall, held, it was precluded from varying or altering the lay out plan contrary to its representation except by the Corporation's prior permission. [A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 407, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 814, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 259: (1977) 2 An.W.R. 219.

Where petitioners were granted lease of plots purchased by them under a housing accommodation scheme prepared by the respondent-Trust and subsequently the petitioners challenged the action of the respondent-Trust of leasing out disputed site for construction of Dharamshala eventhough said site was reserved for the purpose of garden only in the map shown to the petitioners at the time when plots were offered, held, when the plots in the said scheme were offered to the public on the basis of the map, there was an implied promise given to the intending purchaser that the open land would be kept as an open land and, therefore, on the principles of promissory estoppel the respondent-Trust could not lease out any portion of the open land for constructing a Dharamshala: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 134: 1986 Jab.L.J. 537 (D.B.).

Where petitioner purchased flats from Housing Board and the original layout plan sanctioned by the State Government provided for an area reserved for community facilities but later on Board started constructing multistoried buildings on site meant for community facilities which was challenged by the petitioners on the ground of promissory estoppel, held, the petitioners were entitled for the developed area to be provided by the Board for community facilities particularly in view of the fact that they had charged the cost of the whole land proportionately from the allottees and also recovered the expenses on the development thereof in the same ratio and, thus, it could not be said that no such promise was held out by the Board or that the petitioners had no legitimate expectation, short of ownership, of such facilities being provided by the Board: A.I.R. 1994 Him. Pra. 60 (D.B.).

Where the defendants were induced to purchase or take on lease the plots on the basis of the plan of a residential colony prepared by the plaintiff, owner of the plots, and the said plan described the suit land as earmarked for a park, held, the plaintiff was barred by estoppel from having a declaration from the Court that the disputed land was her private land and she could do whatever she liked in respect of the suit land and prevent other people from entering into the said land: A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 407: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 556.

Where the petitioners, holders of residential plots, had consented to the allotment of plots keeping in view the amenities to be provided to them as per numbering plan which included a School and a Community Centre but the competent authority under the Punjab Urban Estates (Development and Regulation) Act, 1964 in a meeting decided to change the proposed use of spaces in question and instead allotted the sites for the purpose of a Convent School and a Satsang Bhawan and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, it was in accord with the public policy and in the interest of public order and peace and harmony that the change of the user of the sites was decided upon by the competent authorities; it was clearly a governmental and executive function in consonance with the existing circumstances and the demands of the public interest. Therefore, the rule of promissory estoppel would not apply in such a situation: A.I.R. 1986 P.&H. 167: 1986 Punj. L.J. 126: 1986 Rev.L.R. 103.

Where the State Minister as Chairman of the Haryana Urban Development Authority had recommended the claimant for allotment of plot but no application valid under law was made, and there was nothing to show that the claimant had acted upon that recommendation to his detriment, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel is not attracted; the Authority is not bound to allot the plot to the claimant: 1989 Punj.L.J. 647.

(d). In case of lease, licence, permit, etc.—The State has to function as a Model State and it cannot back out, with the passage of time, after giving assurance to the citizens to do a particular thing which is within its competence. Thus, where the State Government sanctioned to grant lease of disputed land to the petitioner but it cancelled the order of sanction of leasing the land in petitioner's favour after a period of six years without assigning any reasons regarding irregularity in sanctioning of the lease, held, the State Government was estopped from cancelling the sanction of lease: 1991 Punj.L.J. 145.

The doctrine of promissory estoppel applies when there is a clear and unequivocal promise relying on which the other side has acted to his prejudice. Thus, where no clear and unequivocal promise was given at any time to the petitioner-allottees of impugned land that said land would not be resumed or that they would not be evicted, held, on resumption of land by Government subsequently, the petitioners could not invoke doctrine of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1989 Gau. 12: (1987) 2 Gau.L.R. 421 (D.B.).

It is no doubt true that there is a limitation that the principle of estoppel does not operate at the level of Government policy, where there is a change of Government policy, the statement is applicable but not in a case where there is neither a change in the Government policy nor a replacement of the earlier policy by a new one. The petitioner was granted lease of a building owned by State Government for a period of 3 years. The petitioner invested huge amount of money as the guidelines issued by the State Government provided a maximum period of 30 years for the lease. The petitioner applied for renewal of the lease and it was extended for 6 months. When renewal was in force, the State Government issued a notification inviting tenders for leasing out the impugned building which was in valid occupation of the petitioner and the petitioner pleaded estoppel. Held, it was on the basis of the Government policy and the guidelines appended to the Government order that the petitioner acquired the right to the benefit of lease of impugned building; the right that was invested in the petitioner by virtue of the Government policy could not be taken away unless the policy was changed by the Government. As the said policy continued to exist the right of petitioner to take advantage of such policy also existed; the notification inviting tenders during the rightful occupation of the petitioner of the impugned building was unjustified, the principle of estoppel operated against the Government: A.I.R. 1989 Karn. 192.

If the public interest suffers, the equitable doctrine of estoppel cannot be invoked. On the other hand, in the ordinary course if a citizen is induced to act upon the promise of the Government and he alters his position, on the principles of promissory estoppel, the citizen has to be protected. Where original acquisition proceedings regarding petitioners land were withdrawn on technical grounds pursuant to which petitioner developed a dairy farm on impugned land but subsequently Government issued a notification acquiring the land of the petitioners and the aggrieved petitioner pleaded estoppel, held, the State Government never made any promise to the effect that the disputed land of the petitioner would not be acquired in future. Further, the petitioner failed to plead promises made by the Government in objections he had filed under S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. Thus, the doctrine of promissory estoppel could not be invoked by the petitioner: A.I.R. 1989 Guj. 187: (1989-1) 30 Guj.L.R. 194 (D.B.).

Where land belonged to the Municipal Corporation but it was leased out by the Stadium Committee headed by the District Collector which had no right over the land and was no part of the Corporation, held, the lease being illegal, it was not open to the lessee to contend that the Corporation was estopped from asserting the illegality of the lease or the consequent construction on the land as being in violation of the T.N. Parks, playfields and Open Spaces (Preservation and Regulation) Act, 1959: (1990-2) 106 Mad.L.W. 610 (D.B.).

Where the State Government set up a High Powered Committee to compute compensation for the acquired lands of an inamdar who undertook not to prefer appeal against the award to be passed on its basis but on finding the compensation so computed to be excessive and unreasonable, the Government reviewed it, held, there was absolutely no Government representation that the inamdar would be paid compensation as computed by the High Powered Committee; it could not also be said that the inamdar had, relying on such representation, acted to his detriment; besides, the High Powered Committee was only a fact finding Committee; by no stretch of imagination could it be termed as an effective State organ which could bind the Government by its report; the doctrine of promissory estoppel was not attracted: (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. 896 (D.B.).

Acts of Parliament are not representations; they either create duties for statutory bodies or rights for citizens or both; in either event the citizen has a legal remedy to compel the statutory body to perform its duty towards him. Thus, where the Delhi Development Authority had given a plot of land on perpetual lease for construction of a cinema house and the lessee invoked the doctrine of promissory estoppel against the Authority that it had not carried out the assurances of planned development of the District Centre embodied in the Delhi Development Act when tenders for the lease were invited and consequently the lessee incurred losses in its cinema business which rendered him incapable of making timely payment of annual rent resulting in accumulation of arrears, held, for want of pleadings and evidence that the lessee had available alternative sites at lower rent which but for the Authority's assurances he would have taken, the only inference is that the lessee had entered into the transaction as a prudent businessman on commercial considerations with open eyes; the doctrine of estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 83: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Del. 742 (D.B.).

The Municipal Committee resolved to sell certain land and the petitioner deposited money even before said resolution was approved. The Municipal Committee accepted the money subject to the approval of the State Government. Before any approval could be obtained the petitioner submitted a building plan which was sanctioned. The petitioner proceeded with the construction but subsequently sanction of the plan was revoked and the petitioner pleaded estoppel. Held, as there was no evidence of any promise or representation by the Committee on the basis of which the petitioner might have altered his position, the petitioner was not entitled to invoke the principle of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1994 P.&H. 175.

Where the Regional Development Authority granted permission to the petitioner regarding construction of a Cinema House but the State Government set it aside under S. 64 of the Bihar Regional Development Authority (Second) Ordinance, 1976 which empowered State Government to set aside any resolution of the Authority if it was in excess of authority conferred by law, held, as permission granted was absolutely legal, the State Government could not set it aside. Further, the State Government never objected to said construction and, thus, it would be estopped from setting aside the permission when the construction was near completion: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 26 (Pat.) (D.B.).

A body corporate, whether statutory or incorporated, has to act within the framework and guidance of its binding rules; thus, where the Municipal Corporation did not communicate its decision on the sanction sought from it for a building plan within 2 months of the application, it could not be contended that the Corporation had thereby refused to sanction the plan and a fresh sanction is required to be sought unless the relevant rule expressly provides therefor: (1992) 2 Cal.H.N. 163: (1992) 2 Cal.L.J. 122.

Where permission by the then Minister for Works and Housing was granted to the Indian Express with the Delhi Development Authority concurring to amalgamation of two leaseout plots on the basis whereof two basements and extra construction were built, held, the lessor Government is clearly precluded by promissory estoppel to contend that the Minister's order was illegal, improper and invalid: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 872: (1986) 1 S.C.C. 133.

Where respondent applied for permission to transfer the disputed property by way of sale under S. 27(2) of the Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act, 1976 and the permission was granted after making an enquiry but subsequently the competent authority recalled its earlier order under S. 27 and declared the said sale in favour of petitioners as null and void, held, it was a duty of the competent authority to take care and caution before passing an order under S. 27 granting permission and once permission was granted and properties were sold on the basis of such permission, the innocent and bona fide purchaser could not be made to suffer for any lapse or negligence on the part of the competent authority: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 38: (1987) 1 Cal.L.J. 143: (1987) 1 Cal.H.N. 251.

Where a promoter constructed and sold flats on the representation when S. 7-A of the Maharashtra Ownership Flats (Regulation of the Promotion of Construction, Sale, Management and Transfer) Act, 1963 that only one building would be raised on the plot but later on by amendment of the section construction of an additional building was also allowed, held, the promoter could not be estopped to raise the additional building in accordance with the law and building rules: (1994) 1 Bom.C.R. 444.

Where the competent authority granted permission under S. 21(1) of the Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act, 1976 on the condition that the construction would commence within the time specified and on the breach of condition, it cancelled the permission, held, the condition being illegal, the competent authority could not contend the condition having been accepted, its validity could not be impugned in the writ Court; there can be no estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1994 Guj. 130.

Where the Municipal Corporation in the tender and auction notices had expressly reserved its rights to cancel the auction or to refuse the highest bid or tender and it cancelled the auction, held, the doctrine of estopped was not attracted; the Corporation had made no promise to hold the auction at any rate; the party had done nothing to its prejudice pursuant to any promise. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1427, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1982 Mad. 56 (D.B.).

Where a Municipal Corporation invited tenders for sale of a property and the tender of the petitioner was found to be the highest and subsequently, the Corporation sought for confirmation from the petitioner about her willingness to deposit the entire amount of bid within sixty days from the date of receipt of the final acceptance of the tender by the Corporation, and the petitioner agreed to fulfil said condition and wrote to the Corporation in that regard but the petitioner did not get any reply from the Corporation and on enquiries, came to know that it was trying to dispose of the property to the Government of India, without finalising the tender in her favour, she, therefore, sought a declaration from the writ Court that the transaction should be completed in her favour, held, the Corporation merely sought confirmation from the petitioner as to whether she was agreeable to pay the bid amount within sixty days from the date of receipt of final acceptance of the tender, as the petitioner did not specify the same in her tender. Therefore, that by itself could not be considered as a promise made by the respondent for accepting the tender of the petitioner. The principles of estoppel could not be invoked: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 312.

Where upon the Company's request for leasing out a large area in a certain area in the Port for keeping its goods was responded to by the Port's Traffic Manager indicating willingness to give a lessor area in a different part on conditions stated, held, it did not result in an agreement of lease; it did not satisfy the requirements of S. 34 of the Major Port Trusts Act, 1963 either; since the promise made by the Traffic Inspector is void and unenforceable against the Board of Trustees, it is doubtful whether the Chairman of the Board himself could have sanctioned the lease, the doctrine of promissory estoppel is not attracted: A.I.R. 1991 Andh. Pra. 331: (1991) 1 An.L.T. 582 (D.B.).

Where the State had executed a valid lease deed in favour of a person who was entitled thereunder to claim possession but on the representation of the State that he would be granted lease of another alternative property he surrendered his first lease to the State, held, the State Government was estopped from declining to lease the alternative property to him; he had changed his position to his detriment on the State's representation; the State must show ideal conduct qua citizens and must not drive law-abiding citizens to litigations: A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 120 (D.B.).

Where the Corporation of the city had leased certain petty shops to the petitioners for certain period whereafter it sought to evict them to which they pleaded that as the then Minister for Urban Development had promised them that they would not be evicted, the Corporation could not evict them, held, once the petitioners had entered into the lease with the Corporation, they were bound by the terms thereof. Thus, when the lease had come to a lawful end then the question of invoking the doctrine of promissory estoppel could not arise: A.I.R. 1987 Karn. 159.

Where the Panchayat Rules provided that the shops could be leased out only by public auction, held, no estoppel can operate against the Panchayat merely because by its illegal resolution the Panchayat had leased the shop for 3 years on enhanced rent; there can be no estoppel against statute: (1990) 1 M.L.J. 241.

Where land belonging to a devaswom was leased by a Trustee, with the Commissioner's sanction, for 99 years with provision for renewal but not for revision of rent and thereafter the State Government allowed him to clear-fell a part of the leased land and it was only thereafter that the State Government initiated revisional proceedings for cancellation of the Commissioner's sanction under S. 99 of the Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act, 1951 which were sought to be quashed on the ground that the lessee had acted to his detriment on the Government's representation by investing large amounts in clear felling and development of the land and it was, therefore, estopped from exercising its revisional powers, held, the rule of estoppel is not attracted; the grant of clear-felling permit did not imply validity of the lease; the lessee did not act to his detriment on the faith of that representation; and there could be no estoppel because the revisional power was exercisable for the public good and for persons other than the Government: A.I.R. 1972 Ker. 39: 1970 Ker.L.T. 838: 1970 Ker.L.J. 911 (F.B.).

Where land acquired for excavation of bajri for use in the Canal Headworks at Harika Pattan was no more required on completion of the project and it was auctioned for cultivation without success as it had become banjar qadim and choe-burd whereafter it was leased out on annual rent and the lessee reclaimed the land to make it barani and constructed residential quarters for himself and his servants at the cost of Rs. 1,40,000 and Rs. 80,000 on the assurance that it was a long lease for 20 years and when the Government decided to surrender the land to the original owners on refund of compensation, the lessee purchased their rights by registered deeds, held, the Government was estopped from refusing to transfer the land to the lessee or from dispossessing him from the land: 1992 Punj.L.J. 83.

Where State Government granted licence to the petitioner to establish a saw mill and the petitioner acting on the said permission spent huge amount but, subsequently, said permission was withdrawn, held, it would be inequitable if the petitioner was not allowed to start this mill and the Government was estopped from cancelling the licence. [A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 806, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1990 Gau. 24: (1989) 1 Gau.L.R. 63 (D.B.).

The rule of promissory estoppel is not founded upon any right, statutory or contractual but on equity. Thus, where the contract contained a clause for extension of time in case the work was not completed but the State revoked the clause when the contractors had already invested money on the basis of the aforesaid clause, held, the contractor had altered his position on the assurance from the State, the rule of promissory estoppel was attracted; revocation was illegal: A.I.R. 1984 J.&K. 10.

The plaintiff-contractor entered into a contract with defendant trust for construction of a road. Under the terms of the contract it was obligatory on the plaintiff to settle the rate at the earliest with the Engineer on account of additional work done by him. The plaintiff received payment after completion of work. But, thereafter filed a suit claiming payment for additional work on account of having supplied earth beyond the lead of two miles. Though the defendant-trust pleaded that the plaintiff was to supply the earth at flat rate irrespective of any lead.

Held, the plaintiff neither settled the extra rate with the Engineer concerned nor filed any bill claiming that amount. Thus, the plaintiff by his own acts and conduct was disentitled to claim amount on account of additional work done by him: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 185.

The tender of the petitioner, a trader in tendu leaves, was accepted by the State Government. The petitioner's application for renewal of last year's agreement was refused on the ground that unit for which the petitioner's bid was accepted had been regrouped into another unit and the petitioner pleaded estoppel.

Held, the Government did not make any promise. On the other hand, under the agreement option was given to the petitioner to apply for renewal of his agreement on such terms as the State Government might accept but if was open to State Government under the agreement to refuse renewal without disclosing any reason. There was valid reason for refusing renewal. Thus, the principle of estoppel was inapplicable: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 212 (D.B.).

Corporation invited tenders on the condition that if the tenderer was not intimated within forty days he must get in touch with the Corporation, otherwise it would presume that the Corporation's acceptance or rejection of his tender, whichever be the case, would be assumed to have been communicated to him. On expiry of 40 days the tenderer approached the Corporation and was apprised that the finalisation of the contract was not proceeded with because of the High Court's injunction, whereupon the tenderer demanded back the earnest money. Held, the contract not having been finalised within the stipulated time, it stood frustrated; the Corporation was estopped thereafter from finalising the contract unilaterally and refusing to refund the earnest money: A.I.R. 1990 All. 205 (D.B.).

Where the respondent-State Electricity Board invited tenders for supply of conductors and petitioner's tender was accepted by the Board and the petitioner supplied conductors amounting to one-third of total supply but by a letter the respondent asked the petitioners to defer further supply in pursuance of a clause of the contract due to unavoidable circumstances but subsequently the respondent invited fresh tenders, held, as the respondent deferred further supplies in pursuance of terms of contract between the parties, no question of promissory estoppel arose: A.I.R. 1984 Madh. Pra. 44: 1984 M.P.L.J. 20 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners-lessees of the forest land granted to them by the Government applied for renewal of the lease and they also paid the renewal fee as well as premium on the demand made by the Government and were allowed to continue in possession of leasehold land pending the formal grant of renewal but subsequently after a long time the impugned Government orders changing the policy of the Government was passed as a result of which grant of renewal was refused, held, the Departmental Officers who had delayed the issue of the formal grant of renewal could not take advantage of impugned Government orders which came into existence long subsequently and say that the petitioners had no right of renewal under the said Government Orders. The delay in the disposal of their application for renewal of lease by the respondents could not prejudice the applicants in any way: A.I.R. 1985 Mad. 104 (D.B.).

When there is a clash between personal and public interest, the latter must prevail. The petitioner applied for and was granted provisional certificate to start a factory for manufacture of hydrated and burnt lime by the District Industries Centre. The petitioner was allotted plots on lease for that purpose. The petitioner also got sanctioned a loan from State Financial Corporation and started construction of the factory. The petitioner applied for grant of "no objection certificate' from the Special Area Development Authority (SADA) and Town and Country Planning Authority but it was refused on the ground that manufacture of hydrated lime would result in air pollution though State Pollution Board had granted it.

Held, the SADA and the Town and Country Planning Authority were not parties to the grant of lease of the plots for manufacturing hydrated and burnt lime and the petitioner had not acted on their promises in erecting the factory. There could be no promissory estoppel against them because the petitioner had taken loan and constructed the factory at his own risk. Overriding public interest required that even the District Industries Centre which had granted provisional certificate to start said factory to the petitioner should not be bound by its promise and should be free to act unfettered by it: A.I.R. 1989 Madh. Pra. 82: 1989 M.P.L.J. 63 (D.B.).

Where by an open advertisement, the Collector acting on behalf of the President of India and in association with the Department of Tourism invited tender for lease of land and construction thereupon of a good and accomplished restaurant and eventually a completed contract between the parties was executed, construction was raised and the restaurant partially started functioning when the Government cancelled the contract on the ground of want of authority in the Collector, held, there had been a specific promise held by the Government inducing the petitioners to carry a belief in their mind about the validity of leasehold rights and allowing the construction to go ahead and the petitioners acted on that promise and assurance since the representation was clear in terms, in spirit as also in law. Therefore, the respondent-Government was estopped from going back from its promise: (1989) 2 Bom.C.R. 261 (D.B.).

The petitioner was granted lease of impugned well for certain period after Collector gave permission to the Panchayat for leasing out said well. On expiry of period of lease, the Resident Deputy Collector granted further extension to the petitioner without any proposal to that effect from the Panchayat contrary to S. 98 (1) of the Gujarat Panchayats Acts, 1962. Order of Resident Deputy Collector was cancelled on the ground that recommendation of Panchayat or previous sanction of Collector for extension of lease was missing. The petitioner contended that Panchayat had no authority to deal with the well and its recommendation was not necessary. Held, the petitioner had never questioned the rights of the Panchayat in the past. It had entered into a contract with the Panchayat pursuant to order granting him lease of the impugned well. It was, therefore, not open to the petitioner to contend that Panchayat had no authority to deal with the well in question and that its recommendation was not necessary for considering the question of any lease for a further period beyond the expiry of the period for which it was granted to the petitioner: A.I.R. 1991 Guj. 63.

Where on account of failure of the petitioner, who was highest bidder in an auction held by the State, to submit property statement within stipulated time the auction held in his favour was cancelled and the petitioner who had participated in the second auction subsequently challenged the order of cancellation of auction in his favour, held, by participating in the second auction which was a follow up action as a result of passing of cancellation order the petitioner must be deemed to have waived his right to challenge said order of cancellation of earlier auction: A.I.R. 1989 Ori. 233 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners were not given coupes for which they had given highest bids at the auctions as the State Government refused to ratify the bids for good reasons and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, before the ratification by the State Government of the bids of the petitioners and execution of agreements between the State and the petitioners it could not be said that the petitioners had altered their position to their prejudice and that consequently the State was estopped by doctrine of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1987 Ori. 115: (1987) 63 Cut.L.T. 339 (D.B.).

Where on expiry of lease of a restaurant belonging to Government, fresh auction was held thrice, in which the erstwhile lessee consciously participated, expressed no grievance with regard to holding the auctions and calling for tenders and he did not insist for offer being made to him, on any revision of rent, at the appropriate time, it was subsequently, not open to him to turn round, when the ultimate results had gone against him, to say that there had been a violation of the rules to his prejudice: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 108.

Where an auction bid had to be approved by competent authorities and it was cancelled and rebid ordered but no clear and specific case is made out but is only vaguely and generally averred that the first bidder had acted on the faith of the promise embodied in the acceptance of his bid at the auction, held, in the absence of the requisite factual foundation, the doctrine of estoppel was not attracted. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, applied; A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 267, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1980 N.O.C. 180: 1980 B.L.J.R. 306 (D.B.).

By a resolution passed by the Public Utilities and Markets Committee on 11th July, 1941 the plaintiff was to be the sole occupier of stall No. 85 and 86 and he was to hold stall No. 84 as one of the occupiers along with B. However, the rent roll was not corrected in accordance with the resolution and consequently subsequent rent receipts and licences were issued showing that B and the plaintiff were joint occupiers of all the three stalls. No objection was taken on behalf of the plaintiff to the licences and rent receipts as he was in occupation of the three stalls at all material times in terms of the resolution of 1941.

Held, that it could not be said that because of acceptance of the rent receipts and licences without any objection the plaintiff was estopped from claiming to be the sole occupier of stall No. 85 and 86 because the plaintiff did not make any representation to the Corporation on which the Corporation acted. The issue of rent receipts or licences was the act of the Corporation itself. Moreover, it is well-known that the person claiming the benefit of an estoppel must show that he was not aware of the true state of thing. If he was aware of the real state of affairs or had means of knowledge, there can be no estoppel and the Corporation could not say that it was not aware of the resolution of 1941: (1959-60) 64 Cal.W.N. 60.

When on the basis of order passed by Mayor-in-Council allotting to the respondent a stall, respondent has deposited the sum demanded as per proper receipt, the Corporation is estopped from cancelling its order: (1991) 2 Cal.L.J. 1: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 492.

Where the petitioners were bidders in auctions held by the Municipal Council for collection of terminal/passenger tax and they had deposited the requisite amounts as required under the agreements besides security deposit/earnest money but before the date of commencement of those contracts, they were cancelled, held, as individual cases had not been picked or chosen but the State Government had issued general orders taking a policy decision that the collection of terminal tax would not be by way of auctions, no case of discrimination was made out. The principle of promissory estoppel was not applicable: A.I.R. 1991 Madh. Pra. 99: 1991 M.P.L.J. 77 (D.B.).

Where the auction in which the petitioner purchased a shop, was subject to confirmation but said confirmation was not granted, however, the petitioner not only remained in possession of the shop but also raised construction without any sanction and apprehending dispossession also got an injunction order in his favour, held, he being a rank trespasser was not entitled to the protection of the Court on the ground that after having illegally entered into possession, he raised the construction on the disputed property and was not estopped; no amount of acquiescence will legalise the act which is otherwise illegal: 1993 Punj.L.J. 638 (D.B.).

Certain Harijan persons took Nazul land on lease for one year by offering highest bids relying on the representation made by the Tahsildar that the land would be transferred to Harijan lessees on payment of 90 times the land revenue. The Government later on decided to sell fifty percent land in public auction and fifty percent by auction to Harijans. Held, that the Government must strictly adhere to the conditions on which the Nazul land was put to auction by which lease was granted and the Government should determine the eligibility of the Harijan lessees for permanent transfer of the Nazul lands in their favour under the Rules before disposing it of in any other manner.

The Government is not exempted from liability to carry out the representation made by it as to its future conduct and it cannot on some undefined and undisclosed ground of necessity or expediency fail to carry out the promise solemnly made by it, nor claim to be the Judge of its own obligation to the citizen of an ex parte appraisement of the circumstances in which the obligation is claimed not to be enforceable: 1968 Punj.L.J. 142.

The ordinary laws of estoppel that arise out of the conduct of the principals apply equally well to contracts entered into by a District Board through its executive officers, with different bus-owners in respect of licences: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 227: (1938) 1 M.L.J. 391.

Where under a scheme for giving gainful employment to the educated unemployed persons the petitioners were granted routes for operating their buses by the State Road Transport Corporation as its nominee but subsequently the Corporation invited fresh tenders from the educated unemployed persons for operating on various routes including the routes granted to the petitioners and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, there was no question of estoppel against the Corporation particularly when the petitioners expressed their inability to operate on their routes on the highest rate offered by the fresh tenderers: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 103: 1985 M.P.L.J. 434 (D.B.).

Where permits for supply of cement were issued to the petitioners and the petitioners paid advance price and commenced construction of buildings but the State Government refused to supply the quantity of cement covered by permits on account of amendment of Cement Control Order by the Central Government pursuant to which State Order was also amended, held, the amendments were effected by statutory orders issued by the Central and State Governments. There could not be any question of promissory estoppel against statutory orders issued by competent authorities having the force of law: A.I.R. 1985 Ker. 255: 1985 Ker.L.T. 244.

Where the contract for setting up an ash-handling plant was granted by the State Electricity Board to a sister concern of the Board's Consulting Engineers who had participated in the drawing up of the project and the grant was impugned by an unsuccessful bider in a writ petition, held, the contract was not void; it was only voidable at the Board's instance; since there was ample evidence on record that the petitioner had never, despite knowledge, objected to the consideration of the successful bidder for the grant of contract even in his representation to the Chief Minister and other high dignitaries, he was estopped from impugning the same after the contract had been granted: A.I.R. 1992 Madh. Pra. 318: 1992 Jab.L.J. 593: 1992 M.P.L.J. 953 (D.B.).

Where licences were granted for one year to the handicapped and riot victims to run public call offices at the bus stands and no legal right of renewal of the licence was granted or guaranteed to them, held, the new policy to allot the booths by public auction could not be said to be arbitrary; the authorities could not be compelled to renew the licences of the allottees; the doctrine of estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 461.

Where one of the conditions under which licence was granted to the appellants—producers of yarn—was that the packing of yarn was to be in accordance with directions of Textile Commissioner and Textile Commissioner issued a notification wherein every producer of yarn was required to pack it in hank form which was challenged by the appellants, held, the appellants, having accepted the condition while taking the licence, could not now turn round and say that they were not bound by the same: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1596: (1993) 3 S.C.C. 438.

Promissory estoppel is a part of the principle of equity. It arises out and on account of equity and ends in equity. It has been said that where law ends equity begins. By its very nature, therefore, it can be called in aid where the justice of the case so requires. It follows that the doctrine of promissory estoppel will not apply to enforce contractual relations between the parties nor would it apply in the teeth of an obligation or liability imposed by law. In order to base one's claims on promissory estoppel one must state definitely and specifically that he acted on the faith of the promise or representation held out to him. In other words, he must make out a clear and proper case of promissory estoppel.

An auction was held in respect of impugned Jalkar and the settlement was made in favour of the petitioner. Thereafter respondent made several representations to the Collector who decided to hold a fresh bid after giving notice to both, the petitioner and respondent. The bid was knocked down and parwana was issued in favour of the petitioner as respondent did not participate. But on finding that no notice was served on the respondent, Collector ordered re-bid subsequently in which both the petitioner and respondent participated. But bid was knocked down in respondent's favour and the petitioner pleaded estoppel.

Held, a promise was made to respondent to give him notice of bid but bid was held without any notice having been served on him though on the assurance of the authority he had deposited certain amount. The petitioner's bid was not arbitrarily cancelled rather he was given a chance to participate in the bid. Thus, the petitioner could not rely upon the doctrine of promissory estoppel: 1980 B.L.J.R. 306: 1981 Pat.L.J.R. 477 (D.B.).

Where on account of default in payment committed by the appellant the fishery rights were granted to the respondent and the respondent deposited prescribed amount and requested the authority to issue the patta of settlement of the Jalkar in his favour but taking a favourable view of the representations made by the appellant, the Government decided settlement of Jalkar with the appellant and the respondent pleaded estoppel, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was not applicable as it is well settled that there cannot be any estoppel against the Government in exercise of its sovereign, legislative and executive functions.

Further, as the settlement of Jalkar with respondent was not made and executed in the manner prescribed by Art. 299 of the Constitution it could not be held to be binding on the State Government. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2149: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 13: 1977 U.J. (S.C.) 586: (1977) 4 S.C.C. 145.

The petitioner, highest bidder in a public auction, was issued a provisional parwana of settlement of the impugned ghat after he had deposited half of auction money the petitioner thereafter invested huge sums of money over the improvement, running and management of the ghat. But subsequently the Government settled ghat in question in favour of another person. Held, the Government are not exempt from the equity arising out of the acts done by citizens to their prejudice, relying upon the representation made by the Government. Thus, the Government was estopped from making settlement of ghat in favour of person other than the petitioner. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 267: 1974 B.L.J.R. 595 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner society applied for extension of lease of fishery granted to it and the State Government granted extension pursuant to which the petitioner deposited revenue, incurred expenditure in making fishing arrangements but subsequently Government cancelled its previous order of extension, held, the State Government was estopped from cancelling the extension order: A.I.R. 1982 Gau. 14.

Where the Deputy Commissioner's purported action in granting fishery rights was approved by the Commissioner and some consequential deposits were also accepted which was in direct infraction of the State's general instructions and specific directions qua the grantee, held, the State is not bound by the doctrine of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1986 Pat. 267: 1986 Pat.L.J.R. 149: 1986 B.L.J.R. 206 (F.B.) [Overruled in A.I.R. 1992 Pat. 21 only on another point.]

Where a Government notification to change the system of allotment of lease right for minerals was issued after the petitioners had applied for leases in response to earlier advertisement and petitioners raised objections at the time of draw of lot against the changed system on account of impugned notification, held, it could not be said that by their conduct the petitioners had become disentitled to question the validity of the notification: A.I.R. 1980 Raj. 83: 1979 W.L.N. 354: 1979 Raj.L.W. 502 (D.B.).

A mining lease was sanctioned in favour of the petitioner for which Rs. 25,000 was fixed as annual dead rent but subsequently, the said rent was revised and was fixed at Rs. 68, 000 and the petitioner agreed to it and accordingly, the lease deed was registered. Held, the petitioner having himself accepted the revised terms and further having undertaken to pay the revised rates could not be permitted to go back on the principle of estoppel: 1994 D.N.J. 616 (Raj.).

Where petitioner applied for distributorship of L.P.G. and a letter of intent offering the distributorship was issued to him relying upon which he took various steps to comply with the requirements specified in the letter and completed all the formalities for the commissioning of the distributorship but later on said letter was cancelled on some non-existent ground, held, principle of promissory estoppel was attracted: A.I.R. 1991 All. 1: 1990 All.L.J. 686: 1990 All.W.C. 1305 (D.B.). Where there was a provision for transfer of R.E.P. licence and it was so transferred to the petitioner with notice to the Licensing Authority and the licence had been used by the time the irregularity came to the notice of the Licensing Authority, held, the petitioner could not be made to suffer for any lapse or negligence on the part of the original licensee: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 358: (1985) 2 Cal. H.N. 122.

Where petitioner-company which was supplying meat to respondents for many years conveyed to the respondents that it would supply frozen meat, if asked, at a competitive rate cheaper than other and the respondents stated that at the appropriate time a tender would be floated in which the petitioner could also offer a tender in terms of the advertisement but no such tender was floated and respondents accepted offer of another company at a higher rate than what was offered by petitioner which was contested by the petitioner-company, held, there was no unfairness or unfair discrimination against the petitioner-company: A.I.R. 1990 P.&H. 206 (D.B.).

Where the lessee of a sea-shore plot carrying on business of salt-manufacture was permitted by the Government to induct a financial partner only for the purposes of providing finance and in view of S. 14 of the Partnership Act, 1932, the leasehold rights did not become partnership property and later on by an undisclosed and clandestine deed of retirement the lessee retired from the partnership and the Government thereafter renewed the lease and received royalty from the financial partner (because of withholding of material information and the fraud practised on the Government), held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel and acquiescence is not attracted: A.I.R. 1995 Guj. 61.

Where the petitioner applied to the State Government for settlement of a piece of land on a sea coast with a view to manufacture salt and though the State Government allowed him in 1961 to occupy the land on a licence fee per year, it kept matter pending from 1972 but did not disturb the petitioner's possession till 1979 when it wanted to settle the land in favour of another person, held, the Government was clearly bound by estoppel (1987) 1 Cal.H.N. 106.

Where the petitioners-travel agents, after investing considerable amounts for the purpose of fulfilling the conditions imposed by the Government for obtaining the recognition to deal with passport matters, secured such recognition but subsequently the Government withdrew said recognition, held, the petitioners were entitled to the benefit of doctrine of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1993 Mad. 216.

Where a recognised travelling agent had for over two decades been dealing with the Regional Passport Office on behalf of his clients and was, earlier in 1979, derecognised for failure to apply for renewal and on moving the Court his facilities were restored, contend in 1988 that the Government was barred by promissory estoppel from terminating his recognition on enunciation of a new policy in 1986 and his failure to apply for renewal, held, the recognition as a travelling agent is not a right but a privilege; there is no evidence of any promise of allowing him to continue to deal with the Regional Passport Office notwithstanding any change in Government policy; no conditions for invoking promissory estoppel made out: A.I.R. 1990 Guj. 167: (1989-2) 30 Guj.L.R. 856: (1989-2) 9 Guj.L.H. 234 (D.B.).

(e). In excise cases.—There is no estoppel applicable to excise matters but it is well settled that the Revenue cannot change its opinion at all at its sweet will. The Department should not be permitted to take different stand when there is no good or cogent reason for the change of the view. But, if the facts are different or if further and fresh facts are brought on record or if the process of manufacture has changed or if the relevant entries in the Tariff have undergone a modification or if subsequent to the earlier decision there has been the pronouncement of a High Court or the Supreme Court which necessitates reconsideration of the issue, in that event, undoubtedly the Department have power to take a different view of the matter: (1991) 55 E.L.T. 189 (Cal.).

If according to law a commodity fell within a particular tariff item, held, the fact that the Central Excise Department earlier approved its classification under another tariff item will not estop the Department from revising that classification to one under which it should legally fall. [A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 617, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 999: (1991) 1 (Supp.) S.C.C. 57.

Where under a notification certain varieties of cloth were exempted from excise duty and the Superintendent, Central Excise misinterpreting another notification wrote to the assessee that they were also exempt from additional duty as well and the assessee in consequence neither charged nor deposited the additional duty but the Assistant Collector, the proper officer empowered to recover excise under R. 10 of the Central Excise Rules read with R. 173-J, called upon the assessee to pay the additional duty, held, the rule of estoppel was not attracted; it is a rule of equity and cannot prevail over a rule of law: (1975) 2 Karn.L.J. 93.

Where in exercise of its powers under Rr. 57-K and 57-N of the Central Excise Rules, the Central Government notified that the vanaspati and soap manufacturers would be allowed money credit adjustable in the payment of excise duty on their final products if they used a certain type of oils as an input but subsequently the notification was rescinded, held, the money credit earned during the period the notification remained in force could not be taken away; the manufacturers had the right to get it adjusted against the excise duty payable by them. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 522, Foll.]: (1990-2) 10 Guj.L.H. 617 (D.B.).

Where the Central Government, to attract fresh investment, announced an excise relief to the new tyre factories established under S. 11 of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, 1951 as also to established factories undertaking substantial expansion but later on revoked the relief announced for the existing factories, held, though the revocation was effected under S. 8(1) of the Central Excise Rules, 1944, a legislative power, the Government was estopped from doing so as it could not show that revocation was made in public interest the burden whereof lay upon it; the Courts insist on a highly rigorous standard of proof for discharging such burden; a mere allegation of the industries taking undue advantage of the concession with no supporting affidavit of a concerned officer from the Finance Department containing relevant particulars is not sufficient to repel the estoppel: A.I.R. 1991 Raj. 45: (1989) 2 Raj.L.W. 386: (1989) 2 Raj.L.R. 662 (D.B.).

Where a clear representation was made by the Central Government that the MODVAT system was being adopted for a particular article and following such representation/promise with its implementation, the petitioners voluntarily adopted the scheme which was optional under R. 57-G, but subsequently, the Government, by a notification, withdrew the MODVAT benefits in respect of that article, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was fully attracted and applicable in the instant case, especially when the benefit of MODVAT having been extended, was withdrawn by the Government without any reasons germane or otherwise being assigned: 1988 Mah.L.J. 807: (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 68 (D.B.).

Where the Under Secretary of the Central Board of Excise and Customs by his letter, dated 24-5-1976, to the Cigarette Manufacturers' Association that they could seek exemption from excise duty on the value of corrugated fibre board containers wherein cigarettes were delivered on the factory gate on the basis whereof they did not recover excise duty thereon from the customers, held, though the letter did not constitute a special order of exemption contemplated under R. 8(2) of the Central Excise Rules, 1944, yet it would operate as a promissory estoppel against the Board; it was precluded from recovering excise duty on the containers. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 806: (1985) 4 S.C.C. 369.

Where under a Government notification certain dyes were exempted from excise duty if they were manufactured from any other dyes liable to excise duty at the time of manufacture, held, a manufacturer who had voluntarily paid excise duty on the basic dyes though not liable to such duty, held, he was not entitled to claim exemption of duty on the dyes manufactured from such basic dyes; the payment of duty on basic dyes not liable to duty was not contemplated under the notification and could not earn any exemption; the manufacturer could not contend that but for the notification he would not have manufactured the dyes; the Department is not estopped from levying duty on the manufactured dyes: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 537: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 77.

The basic requirement for the applicability of the doctrine of promissory estoppel is a representation on the part of the Government. Where Government issued a notification allowing the liquor retail vending licencees to open bars within or adjoining their licenced premises subject to certain conditions but subsequently Government in public interest decided not to grant new licences or renew the existing licences for the bars attached to the retail vending shops, held, as there was no representation by the Government that the licences for the bars would be continued so long as the retail vending shops were allowed to function, there was no question of promissory estoppel. Further, even assuming that there was any representation on the part of the Government when bars were permitted to be opened, the principle of promissory estoppel could not be invoked as the larger public interest required a change of policy, as a result of which, the impugned decision was taken: A.I.R. 1993 Mad. 282: (1993-2) 112 Mad.L.W. 18 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners were granted licenses for the supply of country liquor at the specified rates and some business was already transacted before another letter was served by the Board to the petitioners to reduce the price and although the petitioner started the supply at the reduced rate but clarified by way of affidavits that they were doing so under protest, held, rule of promissory estoppel could be invoked against the Board authorities and they could not abruptly modify the price without recalling its earlier order. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1978 Pat. 157: 1978 B.L.J.R. 1: 1978 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 342 (D.B.).

Commissioner revoking licence of bottling Indian made Foreign liquor granted to party holding licence for bottling beer by making endorsement in his licence without opportunity of hearing—Principle of promissory estoppel is attracted: 1983 Tax.L.R. 2681 (All.).

Where the petitioner-Company applied to the State Government for allotment of industrial alcohol or rectified spirit and the Government allotted specified quantity of rectified spirit per year subject to availability of alcohol in each year in the State and thereafter the petitioner-Company took steps to put up the plant and machinery and also secured loans but State Government thereafter decided to allot denatured spirit to petitioner instead of rectified spirit, held, the plant, which has been put up by the petitioner-Company, was designed to have only rectified spirit as the raw material. Such a substitution of raw material would adversely affect the production, ability, capacity and viability of the plant. The Government was not entitled to modify its earlier order and insist upon the supply of denatured spirit; the Government was estopped from imposing such unreasonable condition on the petitioner: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 205.

Licensees granted privilege to supply arrack by wholesale—Licensees expending money and acquiring large stocks—Amendment abolishing privilege—Rules enabling licensees to get licence renewed also abolished—Repeal of rules by Ordinance which Governor is entitled to promulgate cannot be challenged on ground of promissory estoppel: 1984 Tax.L.R. 2545: (1984) 1 M.L.J. 96: (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. 29 (D.B.).

Where notification prescribing a reduced strength for sale of country liquor was issued by the State Government in the middle of the year and the petitioners, licence-holders for sale of country liquor of higher strength pleaded estoppel, held, the declaration of strength had been made by the State Government in discharge of its statutory function. Moreover, the notification was a piece of subordinate legislation and was not an executive direction because it formulated a binding rule of conduct generally for the purposes of the Excise Act. The notification had been made in exercise of the legislative function of the State Government. The doctrine of promissory estoppel was, hence, inapplicable to it: A.I.R. 1981 All. 292: 1981 All.W.C. 410 (F.B.).

Courts have power in appropriate cases to compel performance of the obligations imposed upon departmental authorities by orders which are executive in character, when they find that any person has acted to his detriment on solemn promises made by the State Government or its authorities concerned. Thus, where the petitioner agreed to supply the country spirit to the Government Warehouses during certain period on the assurance of Excise Commissioner that he would be paying at least 42 paise per L.P. Litre and under the provisions of the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, 1915, the Excise Commissioner was competent to do so, held, the State was bound to pay the difference between 42 paise and 33 paise per L.P. Litre, which had already been paid: A.I.R. 1975 Pat. 123: 1975 B.L.J.R. 192 (D.B.).

Where the memorandum, the letter and the sale notification on the basis of which the appellants were claiming the right to continue the licence to vend liquor for a period of five years, clearly mentioned that the grant of licence was on an annual basis and such renewal after every year was subject to the conditions mentioned therein and also subject to any change in policy and thereafter Government changed its policy, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was not applicable since the Government was fully competent to change its policy under the terms of the grant of licence itself; and it is also well settled that the right to vend excisable articles is exclusively and absolutely owned by the State Government: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1191: (1992) 2 S.C.C. 631.

The petitioners contended that Sale Officers who conducted the auctions for the arrack shops had represented that supplies of arrack would be made at a specific rate and on that basis only they had made their bids at the auction sales. They further stated that Taluk Excise Officers had passed the indents on the basis that licencees could lift arrack at specified rate and they placed reliance on certain rubber stamp seals used by Excise Officers on the indent forms. On failure of the Commissioner to supply arrack on the basis of entitlement quota the petitioners pleaded estoppel. Held, no record or document has been produced to substantiate the plea that the Sale Officers had made said representation. As regards the Excise Officers, except for some instances where rubber stamp seals relating to the previous years had been used, there was no other material to sustain the statement of petitioners. Further, it is settled that estoppel cannot be pleaded against the State in exercise of its legislative or statutory functions and the Government is not bound by act of its Officers and agents beyond the scope of their authority. Therefore, both on grounds of paucity of materials as well as on grounds of law, the argument relating to promissory estoppel could not be sustained. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285, Rel. on]: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 93.

(f). In case of house/property tax.—There can be no promissory estoppel or equitable estoppel against Government in exercise of its sovereign, legislative or executive functions and the power to impose a tax is legislative power. Thus, the delegated authority who was the Chief Commissioner exercising the power of Legislature conferred by S. 7-A of the Capital of Punjab (Development and Regulation) Act, 1952 in issuing impugned notification levying house tax was immune from attack on the basis of promissory estoppel: (1979) 1 Ren.L.R. 701: (1979) 2 Ren.C.J. 123: (1979) 12 Ren.C.R. 210: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Punj. 388 (D.B.).

Where the area in ownership of a Government Company came to be included in the area covered by the Madhya Pradesh Nagar Tatha Gram Nivesh Adhiniyam 1973, and under an agreement entered into between the Government Company and the Special Area Development Authority constituted under the 1973 Act, it was agreed that in lieu of exemption from the payment of property tax, the company would be paying an agreed amount annually for five years with an additional agreed amount as grants-in-aid, towards development, and the company discharged all its liabilities under the agreement, held, the company had, acting upon the agreement, altered its position by making transfer of its properties, and was rendering civic services by payment of an amount for development and, thus, the Special Area Authority was estopped from demanding the property tax contrary to and in derogation of the terms of agreement: A.I.R. 1991 Madh. Pra. 332: 1991 M.P.L.J. 790 (D.B.).

(g). In case of sales tax.—Where the cashew manufacturers impugned the revocation by a subsequent notification the exemption from sales tax levy by an earlier notification under the Kerala General Sales-tax Act, 1963 but there was nothing to show that they had in fact altered their position by acting upon such representation to their prejudice sufficient to create an estoppel, held, the Government having the power under the Act to issue and revoke the notifications and the revocation being in response to a public hue and cry, promissory estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2239: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 365: (1986) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 121: (1986) 1 S.C.R. 610.

The Government can withdraw an exemption granted by it earlier if such withdrawal could be done without offending the rule of promissory estoppel and depriving an industry entitled to claim exemption from payment of tax under the said rule. If the Government grants exemption to a new industry and if on the basis of the representation made by the Government an industry is established in order to avail the benefit of exemption, it may then follow that the new industry can legitimately raise a grievance that the exemption could not be withdrawn except by means of legislation, having regard to the fact that promissory estoppel cannot be claimed against a statute. Thus, where an exemption granted by the State Government under Gujarat Sales Tax Act (1 of 1970) was only by way of concession to encourage setting up of industries, held, as such it was always open to the State to withdraw or revoke the concession; therefore, the same could be withdrawn without violating the rule of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 142: (1987) 1 S.C.C. 31: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 38.

A brochure was issued by the State Government announcing its "new policy" declaring that incentive and concession, one of them being—refund of sales tax would be available to those persons who set up selective large scale industries in the focal point. Acting on it the appellants-industrialists met the Chief Minister and found him interested in encouraging in setting up of industries and Director of Industries also assured them that the concession as announced shall be available. The appellants accordingly, set up industries. Held, a provision or agreement to refund tax due or realised in accordance with law cannot be comprehended. No law can be made to refund tax to a manufacturer realised under a statute. This would be contrary to the Constitution. Any agreement for such refund being contrary to public policy was void under S. 23 of the Contract Act. The constitutional requirements of levy of tax being for the welfare of the society and not for a specific individual, the agreement or promise made by the Government was in contravention of public purpose, thus, violative of public policy. No legal relationship could have arisen by operation of promissory estoppel as it was contrary both to the Constitution and the law. [A.I.R. 1977 P.&H. 268, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1075: (1992) 2 S.C.C. 411.

There can be no question of estoppel against the Government in the exercise of its legislative, sovereign or executive powers. Thus, where at the time of auction held for grant of licences to sell country liquor, the Government announced exemption from sales tax in respect of sale of country liquor but by a subsequent notification said exemption was withdrawn and sales tax was imposed, held, the fact that sales of country liquor was exempted from sales tax as announced by the Government previously could not operate as an estoppel against the State Government and preclude it from subjecting the sales to tax if it felt impelled to do so in the interest of the Revenues of the State which were required for execution of the plans designed to meet the ever increasing pressing needs of the developing society: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2237: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 656: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 540. See also I.L.R. (1979) 2 Karn. 1909.

Doubtless as regards proprietary interest, there may be estoppel by conduct known as estoppel by pais. But any conduct of a Government servant in violation of his duty, will not operate as estoppel against Government.

The Sales Tax Authorities under Orissa Sales Tax Act had no jurisdiction to grant certificates of registration to fictitious persons or to persons who had no business. Hence, though these persons may technically be said to be holders of registration certificates, nevertheless, in the eye of law, they cannot be held to be registered dealers because they have not been "validly" registered under the provisions of the Act and any mistake committed by the subordinate officers of the Sales Tax Department either due to negligence or due to collusion, cannot, on general principles, operate as estoppel against Government. If a person in good faith is prevented from paying tax on the assertion by the person authorised to levy taxes to the effect that no tax was payable there may be an estoppel so far as realisation of penalty or interest from him for the tax that is ultimately found to be payable, is concerned. But it does not affect his liability to pay the tax. The question of levying penalty or charging interest for non-payment of taxes is a matter of discretion with the taxing authorities but the levy of taxation is not a matter of discretion, it is clearly a statutory duty : I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 575 : (1965) 16 S.T.C. 271 : A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 44.

A necessary ingredient of a proper plea of promissory estoppel is the averments as to a representation by way of holding out a promise and the other party acting upon that representation. If there is no case that a person has acted upon the representation of another the very basis or foundation of the plea of estoppel must be found to be absent.

Where the Government made a representation under Sales Tax Act and the assessing authorities took a stand contrary to such representation but when there was no case before Sales Tax Officer or the Court in tax revision that, based upon the representation of the Government the assessee altered his position by acting on the faith of it.

Where an assessee manufacturing 26 varieties of compressed woollen felt of varying hardness, density and thickness sent a sample of only one variety to the Commissioner of Sales-tax for claiming exemption of sales tax allowed to cloth under S. 42-B and Entry 6, Sch. 1 of the M.P. General Sales-tax Act, 1952 on the basis whereof the Commissioner accepted it as cloth eligible for exemption, held, the Commissioner was not estopped from declining to accept the other varieties as cloth which were not pliable, an essential attribute of cloth; however, the Commissioner asked to consider waiver of past tax to save the industry from financial ruination: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 626: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 103: (1986) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 202.

(h). In case of electricity charges.—An electricity Board is an autonomous statutory body; though subject to Government's exercise of some powers, it is not otherwise subordinate to the Government; in matters of fixing tariff, it has to act in exercise of its statutory powers under the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948 and the Government under S. 78-A thereof can only issue directions on questions of policy; the Board's non-compliance therewith would not amount to disobedience of lawful orders. Thus, if the Government under such a direction asks the Board to grant concessional tariffs to mini steel plants and the Board declines to do so, the mini steel mills cannot compel the Board to charge them concessional rates; the doctrine of estoppel is not attracted, the Board not having made any representations to them. [A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 76 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Andh. Pra. 189: (1981) 1 An.W.R. 404 (D.B.).

Where State Government announced certain concession/incentives for establishment of new Industries in State and one of them being exemption from payment of minimum consumption guarantee charges for a period of five years but as the bills issued by State Electricity Board to petitioner included minimum consumption charges, petitioner invoked doctrine of promissory estoppel, held, the State Electricity Board was not estopped by rule of estoppel from charging the minimum consumption charges as the policy decision of the Government was not binding on the Board. [(1993) 1 Civ. Rev. Cas. Rep. 658, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1995 All. 209 (D.B.).

It is one thing to say that the Government had on the party's representation and request expressed its willingness or consent or decision to accord exemption; it is, however, a totally different thing to contend that the party had acted and changed its position to its detriment on the Government's promise to exempt the party: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 371 (D.B.).

Neither S. 49 nor S. 59 of the Electricity Act, 1948 empowers the Board to enhance the rates for supply fixed under an agreement; the Board cannot override contractual obligations by unilaterally enhancing the rates by making regulations under S. 79 (j) of the Electricity Act, 1948; the power to make regulations under S. 79 (j) of the Electricity Act, 1948 must obviously be exercised consistently with the Act; the regulations so made cannot go beyond the Act. If the power to enhance the rates unilaterally in derogation of the contract does not reside anywhere in the Electricity Act, 1948, it cannot be created by regulations made thereunder which are in the nature of subordinate legislation. [A.I.R. 1972 Ker. 206; A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 100, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1967.

Where the State Electricity Board, on detecting short meter reading resulting from wrong wiring, raised revised demand which was resisted by the consumer on the ground that as under the agreement it had to pay and had paid the charges every month as and when the bill was tendered, the Board could not issue the revised bill, held, that clause in the agreement referred to charges for supply of electric energy in regular course; had there been no wrong wiring or under-recordings, the bills tendered would have shown higher amounts than those paid by the consumer; that clause did not preclude the Board from making a revised demand on discovery of mistake at a later stage: A.I.R. 1988 Guj. 121: (1988-1) 8 Guj.L.H. 36: (1988-1) 29 Guj.L.R. 165.

Under a fuel adjustment clause contained in tariffs framed for supply of electricity, State Electricity Board was entitled to receive price of electricity whenever the final rate of fuel surcharge was worked out by it. The Board kept on levying fuel charge provisionally for a number of years on the petitioner but subsequently, it issued revised bills and claimed surcharge retrospectively on determination of final rate.

Held, the liability to pay fuel surcharge arose under the fuel adjustment clause and the petitioners were aware of said clause and had agreed to pay surcharge as and when final rates were worked out by the Board. Thus, there was no question of promissory estoppel or equitable estoppel: A.I.R. 1984 Raj. 131.

Where short reading in the electricity meter of the petitioner, a Company carrying on an industry, resulting from wrong wiring was detected after several months and the State Electricity Board issued a revised demand notice retrospectively, but the petitioner contended that demand was unjustified as it could not recover the same from its customers, held, the petitioner not having shown that it was obliged to market its finished goods at a rate lower than the prevailing market rate, the contention had no merit; all that had happened was that the petitioner had been charged much less for its electricity consumption, the manufacturing cost for its end products must have gone down much lower than what it was for other similarly situated units; the resultant effect was larger margin of profit for the petitioner and not any loss. Thus, the petitioner could not invoke the principle of estoppel: A.I.R. 1988 Guj. 121: (1988-1) 8 Guj.L.H. 36: (1988-1) 29 Guj.L.R. 165.

Where a Power Corporation was, as per its agreement with the State Government, permitted to supply electricity to sister concerns and third parties and to charge its own price therefor and though a uniform tariff was applicable for the electricity drawn by the Corporation and other concerns from the Electricity Board, but no provision was made in the agreement for granting rebate to the Corporation, held, the normal rule being that an agreement incorporates all the terms and conditions governing the relationship between the parties, and, therefore, the demand for rebate not incorporated in the agreement between the parties could not be enforced independently of the terms of the written agreement: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 314 (Karn.).

Where the Electricity Board had granted rebate in consumption charges consequent upon a resolution passed by the State Government and the consumers enjoyed the rebate and concession, held, the Board is not estopped from withdrawing the rebate and concession on the State Government's modifying the resolution. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1979 N.O.C. 76: 1978 B.L.J.R 568 (D.B.).

Where an Electricity Board granted 25 per cent rebate in demand and energy charges to high tension industries which was later on extended by the State Government to all industries except those which were notified in its order, and the rebate was subsequently withdrawn both by the Board as well as the Government, held, as the claimant had commenced regular production after the Board and the State Government had withdrawn the rebate, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1521: (1993) 2 S.C.C. 425.

Where the State Government agreed to make available power at concessional rate in order to persuade the petitioners to agree to locate their Industries, held, it would not enable the petitioners to disown their obligations to pay higher tariffs as determined by State Electricity Board from time to time for the periods beyond the periods covered by special agreements regarding concessional tariff: A.I.R. 1985 Andh. Pra. 299 (D.B.).

Where a concession for supplying electricity was granted by the Portuguese Government to a Company and the Central Government, after Goa's liberation, had for years been acting in a manner convincingly consistent with the belief that the Company was a grantee of a valid and legal concession under the Electricity Act, 1910, held, the concession was valid and on the principle of estoppel, binding on the Central Government since the petitioners did undergo expenditure on the strength of the representation of Government. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1972 Goa 33.

Where "Power Intensive Industries" were classified on the basis of (i) the intensity of power consumed, more or less, as raw-material, and (ii) ratio of the cost of power and cost of the end product, roughly at 20 per cent; and such differential was evolved as a rational basis to distinguish "Power Intensive Industries" from the High Tensions Category-1 consumers, held, merely because some delay occurred in bringing in other similar industries to this category, the classification did not cease to be reasonable, rational or violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution; especially when some of the objecting industries themselves had enjoyed concessional rates of tariff as "Power Intensive Industries" for about 12 years: A.I.R. 1993 Andh. Pra. 183: (1993) 1 An.W.R. 353: (1993) 1 A.P.L.J. 465 (D.B.).

Where the Chief Engineer of the Board initially felt that a consumer deprived of electric energy arising out of a strike or lock out need not pay the minimum charge but upon reconsideration in the light of the agreement's terms he decided not to grant any such remission and the first view was contained only in an inter-departmental communication never conveyed to the consumers, held, the earlier view cannot give rise to an estoppel; the rule of estoppel is not attracted: (1988) 1 Raj.L.R. 988 (Raj.).

Where the supplementary agreement between the consumer and the Electricity Board was executed but the additional supply was commenced 16 months thereafter and the first bill therefor was issued a year thereafter, held, it could not be contended that a writ petition filed 4 months thereafter to impugn the relevant clause in the agreement was hit by laches; it could not be contended that the consumer had thereby acquiesced in the higher charges by conduct: A.I.R. 1988 Raj. 64 (D.B.).

Where following the tripartite negotiations between the State Electricity Board and the appellant-Company, the Company was assured uninterrupted supply of electricity and supply of power at concessional rates but there was not any unilateral promise made by the State or the Electricity Board to the Company and subsequently by an amendment the tariff rates were increased which were challenged by the appellants, held, the foundation of promissory estoppel was absent as the agreement was the result of negotiations between the parties and on such negotiations, the terms and conditions were agreed upon between the parties and there was no unilateral promise to be acted upon: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 2169.

(i). In case of Railways.—To find whether estoppel could be based on a representation, it has to be viewed as a whole; it must also be clear and unambiguous, not tentative or uncertain. Thus, where the Railway Board promised concessional freight rates for carriage of raw materials to a fertiliser factory intended to be set up subject to the stipulation that as the special rates were being quoted ahead of the factory's actual setting up, there might be a need to review them when the goods were actually moved, held, the factory could not enforce the special concessional rates because the Board's representation was neither clear nor unqualified: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2414.

Where goods despatched to various destinations by wagons upto 9-1-87 were charged freight for the shortest and the cheapest route irrespective of their actual route as provided under R. 125(1) (b) of the Goods Tariff No. 39, Part I, Vol. I whereafter the Railways started charging freight for the longest route, held, the Railway Administration was estopped from denying to the consignor the benefit of R. 125(1)(b) which amounts to a promise to the consignor: A.I.R. 1994 Guj. 104.

Contract between plaintiff and Government on printed forms—Plaintiff to supply bhusa at certain stations, in certain qualities at certain period—Written agreement containing clause that non-supply of wagons not to be excused for non-performance—Oral agreement that Government would supply wagons—Plaintiff led to belief up to last moment that wagons would be supplied—Wagons not made available—Estoppel: I.L.R. (1957) Punj. 783 : A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 141.

Entitlement of the contractor for an outagency of Railways to be paid charges even with regard to goods for which there was no consignee and when wharfage charges were not collected. See (1982) 1 Karn.L.J. 169.

(j). In case of promise to give loan.—No estoppel can arise if there is no clear and unequivocal promise. Where the sanctioning letter of the Corporation had stated that it had agreed to advance loan for setting up the specified project and also clearly stated that the intimation did not constitute a commitment on the part of the Corporation and in fact later withdrew the sanction, held, no estoppel can arise in view of the fact that there was no definite and precise promise to be acted upon. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1992 Ori. 93: (1991) 72 Cut.L.T. 185 (D.B.).

Promissory estoppel being an equitable doctrine must yield when equity so demands; if shown from the facts and circumstances that it is inequitable to hold the Government to its promises, the Court will not raise equity in promisee's favour; the Court also will not enforce the promise if public interest will suffer in fulfilment thereof. It is only when the Court is satisfied that in the overriding public interest the authorities should not be bound by their promise and should be freed from it that the Court would refuse to enforce the promise. Thus, where a Company seeking rehabilitation finance was found on detailed inspection that it was hopelessly mismanaged but instead of being denied the benefits of the rehabilitation scheme, it was called upon to comply with certain requirements which the Company was initially not ready and willing to fulfil the conditions and the Bank thought that the scheme would be of no help to the Company, held, the Company having rendered itself disentitled to the scheme by its own misconduct and mismanagement, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was not attracted, especially when equity was against the Company. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1993 Guj. 132: (1993-1) 13 Guj.L.H. 560.

The principle of promissory estoppel is akin to the principle of legitimate expectation. Unless there is overriding reason of public policy or other compelling or overriding consideration of public interest or other extenuating circumstances, in normal circumstances, the State is bound to fulfil its promise. Where State Government promised to give interest free sales tax loan to the industrial units which came into production within a certain period and the petitioner company was sanctioned certain sum out of which only a part was disbursed and remaining loan was not paid on the ground that as it was facing financial constraints, therefore, State was not in a position to grant loan as demanded by the petitioner and the petitioner pleaded estoppel, held, plea of promissory estoppel was not applicable: A.I.R. 1994 Pat. 162 (F.B.).

Where the State Financial Corporation not only advanced a term loan but also agreed to advance an additional loan on the basis whereof the customer later on sought assistance of other financial institutions to expand his business to the terms, conditions and concessions whereof the Corporation also agreed to join on principle but subsequently the Corporation cancelled its additional term loan but also withdrew the concessions and reliefs for the earlier term loan as well, held, the customer had tried to expand his business and raised capital therefor on the Corporation's assurance; the principles of promissory estoppel were clearly attracted against it: A.I.R. 1994 All. 123 (D.B.).

Where acting on the solemn undertaking by the appellant Financial Corporation that it would advance loan to the respondent, the respondent executed project of setting up a hotel and, thus, incurred expenses and suffered liabilities but thereafter the appellant-Financial Corporation refused to disburse the loans in terms of the agreement entered into between the parties, held, the principle of promissory estoppel would estop the Corporation from backing out of its obligation arising from a solemn promise made by it to the respondent: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 848: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 379: 1983 U.J. (S.C.) 564, affirming A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 198 which had affirmed A.I.R. 1981 Guj. 212. See also (1984-1) 25 Guj.L.R. 267.

Where the petitioner applied for a term loan which was sanctioned by the respondent-bank and certain amount was disbursed towards the loan but subsequently Bank refrained from releasing further amounts whereupon petitioner pleaded promissory estoppel, held, principle of promissory estoppel could not be invoked as there was a specific term in the contract which empowered respondent-bank to terminate the agreement of loan: A.I.R. 1995 Del. 199 (D.B.).

(k). Other cases.—The doctrine of promissory estoppel also applies against the Government. It is no defence for the Government to say that because of executive necessity, it need not keep up its promise. Where employees of a Central Government owned public sector undertaking after having been promised assignment of land by State Government were refused allotment on the ground that State Government employees were to be given preference in matter of assignment of housing sites, held, had the Government told the management of the public sector undertaking in the beginning itself when vast tracts of land were readily available for construction purposes, the management would have explored alternative arrangements to provide housing accommodation to their employees. Because of the promise made by the State Government, the management, thinking that the promise would be acted upon, did not explore other possibilities. It was the promise of the Government that had altered the position of the petitioner-society. Thus, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was applicable to the facts of the case: A.I.R. 1990 Andh. Pra. 331: (1990) 1 An.W.R. 840.

An agency agreement for operating pay phones entered into between the agent and the Telephone Department empowered the latter to change the rate of commission payable to the agent and also, on three months' notice, to revise the terms and conditions thereof. S. 4(2) of the Indian Telegraphs Act, 1885 does not restrict or abridge the Central Government's power to do so. The agency agreement is, thus, not statutorily regulated; the decision to reduce the rate of commission would come into effect only when the number of calls exceed 10,000. The agent collects huge charges from the customers which he deposits after retaining them for several days and the demand for security deposit or its increase is merely to protect the Department's interest; there is also an arbitration clause in the agreement; the agreement is for a limited period and renewable from time to time; and it also contains a provision for its termination; the decision to reduce the commission or to demand enhanced security deposit is by the Government itself, and not by its delegate, and has been made in public interest. The doctrine of promissory estoppel is not attracted merely because the agent is aggrieved by the reduction in the rate of commission or enhancement of the security deposit which allegedly would cause him irreparable loss for which he has made no case: A.I.R. 1995 Cal. 234 (D.B.).

Where royalty on timber was agreed to be imposed not on the timber actually used but on the mill's installed capacity consequent upon a meeting of the Nagaland Timber Industries Association and the State Government, held, royalty on the installed capacity is indeed a tax and the State Legislature cannot impose it even if "forest" is included in the State List; therefore, the imposition of royalty on the installed capacity is illegal; the agreement agreeing to imposition of royalty on the mills' installed capacity cannot create a promissory estoppel. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 552, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1995 Gau. 37 (D.B.).

Where a public sector company entered into and concluded a contract with a private party for sale of its R.E.P. licences to be issued to it by the Government against its exports or railway wagons to Bahrain and Vietnam for a consideration then computed which later on was found to be the result of a mistake as to the true value of the licences which in fact was more than double of the agreed consideration whereupon the public sector company repudiated the contract which was opposed to by the private party on the ground of promissory estoppel, held, there can be no promissory estoppel in respect of a concluded contract; it applies only when there is no such contract but only a promise made by the party intending to create a future legal relation and the other party had acted upon it and changed its position; the rule of promissory estoppel is a rule of equity, not of contract; the Court will not apply it if it is satisfied that the promise was made under a mistake as to an essential or material fact to his prejudice, even if it is a unilateral mistake; the promisee cannot be allowed to take advantage of such a mistake; it would be inequitable to the Government even if the doctrine of promissory estoppel was assumed to be applicable: A.I.R. 1984 Cal. 306: (1984) 2 Cal.H.N. 212: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 840 (D.B.).

Sanction for construction of building—Mere supply of electricity cannot amount to according sanction for building—Supply of electricity and charging for the same would also not estop Corporation from demolishing structure: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 82.

Where State Government appointed petitioner as poet laureate and by an order converted his limited term of appointment into one of life appointment but with the assumption of office by a new Government petitioner's appointment to said post was terminated, and the petitioner pleaded estoppel, held, no case for invoking said doctrine was made out as petitioner suffered no detriment by being appointed as a poet laureate. Further, the doctrine of promissory estoppel has no application to the abolition of a Governmental post: A.I.R. 1985 Andh. Pra. 136: (1984) 2 An.W.R. 449: (1984) 1 An.L.T. 20.

The Madras Education Rules and the Text Book Committee Rules are instructions for guidance of the Department; not designed to safeguard the publisher's interest but conceived in public interest, the Rules confer no right on the publishers; they hold no representation or even an assurance to the publishers that they will not be changed nor do envisage the publishers' participation in the scheme; the Government is at liberty to change the text books or to delete or add to their list or prescribe the text books from outside the list. The Government cannot be estopped from resiling from the Rules: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 1126.

Where State Government at the request of the appellant withdrew an appeal against an earlier suit filed by appellant for a declaration that Government was not entitled to make deductions from his salary but thereafter State Government filed a suit under S. 70 of the Contract Act, 1872 for recovery of amount spent on appellant's training and appellant pleaded estoppel, held, the State withdrew appeal at the instance of appellant. No assurance by words or conduct could be said to have been given by the State that no legal action would be taken to recover the amount from him. Therefore, the principle of promissory estoppel was not applicable: A.I.R. 1987 P.&H. 117: (1987) 91 Punj.L.R. 681.

Rr. 6 and 32 of U.P. Service Rules are two different methods of appointment—No preference can be given to one source over the other—R. 22 is applicable only to appointments made under R. 6 and not to those made by Governor under R. 32(2)—Question of seniority of public servant is justifiable—Person appointed under R. 32(2) belongs to same service as persons recruited under R. 6 and hence he cannot be discriminated against—Judicial Officer accepting service in the State Judicial Branch, on repeated assurances by Government—It is not open to Government to retract from them—Principle of legal or equitable estoppel would apply—Evidence Act, 1872, S. 115 : (1964) 8 Fac. L.R. 375 (All.).

Where on the basis of certain specific promises made by the State Government as inducement, the employees moved into a newly created department, held, the employees having acted thereon could not be denied rights and benefits promised to them. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 768.

Where the Collector had provisionally allotted some fair price sugar shops to dealers who then made requisite deposits, executed agreements and obtained licences when the determination of the number of shops and the attachment of ration cards to them was in the hands of the Government, held, it could not be said that the Collector had made to them a firm, clear, unambiguous and unequivocal representation on the basis whereof they had acted to their detriment; the Government was, thus, not estopped from keeping the provisional allotments and the scheme under abeyance: A.I.R. 1974 Andh. Pra. 55: (1973) 2 An.W.R. 157 (D.B.).

Where permission to transport sandalwood had been granted, and the sandalwood was successively transferred, State would be estopped from asserting its title to the wood: (1976) 2 Kam.L.J. 297.

Factory once treated by Mahapalika as being outside its octroi limits—It does not operate as estoppel against Mahapalika—Once goods were brought within the boundary, octroi dues were payable: 1969 All.Cr.R. 228: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 347.

The petitioner purchased an estate and made an application under S. 11 of the Himachal Pradesh Abolition of Big Landed Estates and Land Reforms Act for the acquisition of the proprietary rights. The Administration accorded sanction to the petitioner for the felling of trees upon payment of 15 per cent of the sale price of the trees as required under sub-Ss. (2) and (3) of S. 11 of the Himachal Pradesh Private Forests Act, 1954. The petitioner requested the Divisional Forest Officer to issue an export permit on payment of fees stipulated. The Divisional Forest Officer having failed to issue the export permit, the petitioner prayed the Judicial Commissioner's Court to issue a writ. Held, that as the Government had accorded sanction to the petitioner to fell the trees without payment of price therefor, and as most of the trees had been felled and converted into charcoal or timber, the petitioner had acted to her prejudice relying on the aforesaid order of Government and the doctrine of changed situation had come into play. The Government was, therefore, estopped from putting their plea that the compensation did not confer proprietary rights in the trees on the petitioner: A.I.R 1961 Him. Pra. 32.

Where the Government, having postponed the enforcement of Ss. 2 and 4 of the Madras City Police and Gaming (Amendment) Act, 1949 till 30-6-1976 by a notification but later on enforced them from 31-3-1975 and the Race Club contended that on the Government's assurance embodied in the notification, it had borrowed several lakhs of rupees for giving advances to owners for purchase of race horses, and incurred other expenditure which was set at naught by preponing the enforcement, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel could not be invoked; the preponement had a beneficial effect upon thousands of poor and middle class people who were losing heavily and undergoing sufferings by betting on horse races; besides, there was no representation that the two sections would not be brought into force earlier than 30-6-1976: A.I.R. 1976 Mad. 238: 1976 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 88 (D.B.).

When the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act contained no provision to enable the Government to exempt any land from the Act's operation nor did the Act itself exclude a well-run farm from a big land owner's surplus area but merely barred its use for settlement of evicted tenants and on the enactment of the Haryana Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1972 such farms stood vested in the State Government under S. 12 thereof, held, it could not be contended that any representation was made by the Government that such lands purchased by persons from big landholders would be exempt from the operation of the law of ceilings; the rule of estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1977 P.&H. 221: 1977 Punj.L.J. 230: 1977 Rev.L.R. 418: I.L.R. (1977) 2 Punj. 116 (F.B.).

Where the father and sons claiming separate permissible area under the Punjab Land Reforms Act had in their declarations in the affidavit form had described the sales effected by them after the appointed day but before the enactment of the Act as bona fide so that they would not affect the permissible limit of their agricultural holdings, held, they could not subsequently impugn those very sales in civil suits on the ground that they were without consideration, not for legal necessity and not binding on them; no one can state a fact on solemn affirmation before one forum and contend conversely in the other Court; the doctrine of promissory estoppel is attracted: 1994 Punj.L.J. 530: (1994-3) 108 Punj.L.R. 453.

Where a shrewd and reasoned politician appointed as Vice-Chancellor on the promise that his term therefor would be renewed and consequently he resigned his membership of the Legislative Assembly, held, the doctrine of estoppel was attracted; the Chancellor could not be allowed to resile from the promise: A.I.R. 1982 P.&H. 439 (F.B.)

The Development Authority brought into force a housing scheme and the petitioner society came forward to take up the building activity. The lay out was sanctioned by Director, Town and Country Planning and scheme was approved. The State Government directed finalisation of the scheme under S. 50(7) of the M.P. Nagar Tatha Gram Nivesh Adhiniyam, 1973. The Development Authority duly complied with the said direction but thereafter State Government revoked the scheme under S. 52 of the Adhiniyam, on the ground that continuance of the scheme was contrary to Master Plan and was against public interest and the petitioner pleaded estoppel. Held, the development work undertaken by the petitioner either under the contract or as an agent of the Development Authority was at a stage when the scheme had actually not come into force and was only at the initial stage of proposal. Even if for any reason the Department of Town and Country Planning or any other authority had approved the plans or even observed that it was in accordance with the Town and Development Scheme, it was all done before steps were taken to bring about a proper housing scheme as required by S. 50 of the Adhiniyam. The land could be acquired and the petitioner could be asked to take up the development and the construction work only thereafter. There was, therefore, no representation by the State Government of having approved or sanctioned any scheme in terms of S. 50 of the Adhiniyam which led the petitioner to enter into contract with the Development Authority and proceed to develop the land and invest capital in so doing. Thus, any expression or opinion by the Town and Country Planning Authorities prior to the coming into force of the Scheme would not estop the Government from forming of opinion leading to an action under S. 52(1) (c) of the Adhiniyam based upon the material put before it and collected under the steps taken under S. 50 of the Adhiniyam: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 193 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner, a voluntary organisation working primarily for the welfare of tribal people, was sanctioned a grant for certain amount by the State Government for meeting its administrative and functional expenses but grant was stopped in the middle of the financial year, held, as the petitioner under the impression and bona fide belief that grant had been sanctioned continued their activities for various projects, the Government was estopped from cancelling the grant in the middle of the financial year: A.I.R. 1987 Raj. 26: 1986 Raj.L.W. 179: 1986 Raj.L.R. 407.

26. Estoppel against University/Education Board.—Cases pertaining to refusal to permit a candidate to appear in the examination or cancellation of the examination may broadly be categorised as: (1) Where the candidate practised fraud or was guilty of misstatement or suppression of facts in his application form on the basis whereof he was admitted to the examination; (2) Where there was technical defect in the filled up form or there was any deficiency, like shortage in attendance which the authorities were competent to condone in their discretion under the statute, rules or regulations; (3) Where the candidate was patently ineligible on the particulars supplied by him; and (4) Where his eligibility depended upon one of the two reasonably possible interpretations of law or rules or regulations having the force of law. (i) Cases in the first category donot attract estoppel and authorities are within their rights to cancel the admission or the examination on discovery of fraud because fraud vitiates everything; (ii) Cases in the second category attract estoppel when the admission card has been issued and the candidate has appeared even if in one paper; the authorities will be deemed to have represented to the candidate that the defect had been cured or the deficiency had been condoned; but if the examination had not yet begun, the invocation of estoppel will depend upon the facts of each case; (iii) Cases in the third category do not attract estoppel for there can be no estoppel against the statute like in a case where a candidate not having passed the B.A. examination was appearing in the LL.B. examination; (iv) Each case falling under the fourth category will attract estoppel or not will depend on peculiar facts of each case; if the candidate has appeared even in a single paper, the authorities may well be deemed to have accepted the other possible interpretation which favours the candidate. Thus, where a candidate was allowed to and did appear in the examination as an ex-student, held, the University was estopped from cancelling his examination later on by relying upon the other possible interpretation of an "ex-student" in the Ordinance which worked to the examinee's disadvantage: A.I.R. 1978 Madh. Pra. 86 (F.B.).

Where revaluation of answer books, sought by an examinee and allowed by the University, results in awarding of lower or higher marks in the reappraisal, held, it would be binding both on the examinee and the University; both of them are estopped from impugning the marks; there is no justification for the contention that since the University Ordinance No. 159, issued under the Nagpur University Act, 1974, is a beneficial legislation, the revaluation will not bind the candidate unless it results in enhancement of his marks: A.I.R. 1986 Bom. 255: 1985 Mah.L.J. 705: (1986) 2 Bom.C.R. 567 (D.B.).

Where a failed student applied to the Head of the Department under the Transitory Regulation of Magadh University for permission to reappear at the examination with full knowledge that such benefit was available only to those who had passed the Master of Honours so as to improve their Class and not to a failed candidate, but he managed to obtain the admit card and appear in the examination, held, the benefit of the Regulation could not be extended to him; besides, the principle of estoppel could not apply to the University for mere grant of the admit card to the failed candidate: A.I.R. 1990 Pat. 205: 1990 B.B.C.J. 424 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner submitted his application for appearing in the examination beyond the last date and his application was not rejected and his name did find a place in the nominal roll and he was also issued a hall ticket to take up the examination without getting an undertaking that he would appear in the examination at his own risk, since decision was pending on his belated application, held, once the application of the petitioner, though submitted after last date, was entertained, processed and treated as valid, it was not open to the respondent to stop the publication of result of the petitioner on the ground that no decision had yet been taken on his belated application: (1994) 1 M.L.J. 111.

The proviso to Ordinance 83-A of the Gujarat University conferred widest powers on the University to cancel name of student for the examination who had failed to keep duly the terms as per the requirement of the University for relevant course even if irregularity in terms had not been noticed at the time of admission of examination. The name of the petitioner who had appeared at the theory examination, but was yet to appear at the practical examination was cancelled from the list of candidates permitted to take up the examination on the ground that he failed to keep regular terms. The petitioner pleaded estoppel. Held, the petitioner had not completed the examination since he was still to appear at the practical examination and, thus, it could not be contended that on account of the omission on the part of the authorities to take proper care in the matter of the petitioner having not kept regular terms and by the acceptance of the application form for admission and allotment of seat number and consequent appearance of the petitioner in theory examination, the University was estopped by acquiescence in cancelling the name of the petitioner from the list of the candidates permitted to appear in the examination: A.I.R. 1985 Guj. 99 (D.B.).

Where admission of the petitioners was cancelled in mid-session when they were virtually about to complete their course on the ground that they failed to comply with condition mentioned in the Rules for admission and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, cancellation of admission of the petitioners at a time when they had almost finished the course and that too for no fault of theirs, was barred on ground of promissory estoppel: A.I.R. 1990 Madh. Pra. 15 (D.B.).

Where Ordinance 310 of the Marathwada University mandated that no student failing to secure 50 per cent aggregate marks is eligible to sit in the examination and the University has no discretion in the matter, held, the University is not estopped from refusing admission where it has represented that the student could appear in the examination subject to production of the eligibility certificate: (1987) 2 Bom.C.R. 409 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner was declared successful in I. Com. examination by mistake and was, thus, admitted for B. Com. course by the University but after five months of his admission to said course the University declared him as failed, held, evidently the petitioner was not misled by the mark-sheet issued by the University and therefore, the University was not estopped from declaring him unsuccessful: A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 29 (Ori.) (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 309: (1956) 1 M.L.J. 25.

Where the petitioner was declared successful in B.A. Part I examination and on the basis of the University's assurance contained in the mark sheet, the petitioner appeared in subsequent years in other examinations but after a lapse of more than two years the University declared that petitioner had failed in B.A. Part I examination, held, mark-sheet was prepared by the University Authorities and doctrine of promissory estoppel was applicable because it was on the assurance of the University Authorities, contained in the mark-sheet, that the petitioner secured admission and passed in subsequent examinations; and, moreover, the Court cannot be oblivious to the principles of equities which are in favour of the petitioner as it is too late in the day for the University to ask the petitioner to appear in B.A. Part I examination: A.I.R. 1992 All. 122: (1991) 18 All.L.R. 403.

Where the petitioner, a student of B.A. Part I was wrongly declared successful and she continued to prosecute her studies unabated in the College and stepped up the academic ladder to reach III year but she was not allowed to appear in Part III examination on the ground that she had not cleared the B.A. Part I examination, held, the petitioner should be allowed to appear in Part III examination, though her result should not be declared until she cleared B.A. Part I examination: A.I.R. 1989 Madh. Pra. 197 (D.B.).

Where petitioner was declared successful as per provisional list of the result but later on by means of a correction slip which was issued after two and half months he was declared unsuccessful on account of mistake which had occurred as the tabulators misread the Grace Marks Rules of the University, held, the University was not estopped from issuing correction slip correcting the examination result of the petitioner. [A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 941; A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 382; A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 823; A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 183, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1991 Karn. 35.

Where notwithstanding the provision in the proviso to Regn. 120 of the Council of Higher Secondary Education Orissa Regulations that a candidate failing in some subjects in the Higher Secondary Examination has to clear all subjects at one time, a candidate so failing was permitted to appear, after scrutiny of his application by the School as well as the Council, piecemeal for each failed subject and having cleared them was declared successful, held, the Council was estopped subsequently from revoking his result on the ground of his not having passed the failed subjects in one go: A.I.R. 1990 Ori. 228 (D.B.).

As per regulations of Rajasthan Secondary Education Board, dealing with High Secondary Examinations, if a candidate obtained less than 33% marks in one of the papers of 10th Class examination, he/she was not entitled to admission for 11th class. The appellant failed to obtain 33% marks in Mathematics and, therefore, he took admission in a private school in 11th Class and successfully took the examination of said class. When he sought to appear in 12th class examination to be conducted by the Board he was declared ineligible as per rules. The appellant contended that as he had been admitted in 11th class and passed the same, he should be permitted to appear in the Senior Higher Secondary. Held, as the appellant was not having minimum qualification, he could not be admitted to 11th class. In view of this, the appellant could not derive any benefit and the principle of estoppel could not be pressed into service: A.I.R. 1995 Raj. 115 (D.B.).

Where a student, shown as having passed the High School examination as per the results published in a newspaper having exclusive right to publish them, was admitted in the College and passed the Intermediate and B.A. Part I examinations and upon his subsequently failing to obtain the High School Certificate, the Board of the High School and Intermediate Examination issued him a notice to show cause against cancellation of his admission to the Intermediate course, held, the Board's inaction during all this period had rendered the student's originally impeachable admission as unimpeachable; though the admission was in direct violation of a statute, yet the doctrine of equitable estoppel which is a rule of justice should prevail over all other rules: A.I.R. 1974 All. 290.

Where a student passing an examination from some other Board was given admission in a College affiliated to the Madurai University after forgoing his fees deposited in some other College and his admission was not provisional and the regulations of the University showed that the University authorities could grant exemption from the operation of the rule in appropriate case, taking resort to which, the University cancelled his admission after 4 or 5 months from the date of admission, held, doctrine of estoppel was clearly applicable to the present case and thus, cancellation of his admission was not justified. [A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 309; A.I.R. 1968 Del. 131, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Mad. 315: (1978) 1 M.L.J. 440: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 394 (D.B.).

Where a candidate declared successful in the Intermediate Arts examination was granted a provisional certificate by the University as also a College leaving certificate on the basis whereof she got admitted to the B.A. Course—was later on asked by the College Authorities to discontinue her studies for not having passed the Intermediate examination whereupon she produced a fresh provisional certificate from the University declaring her to have passed the Intermediate examination, held, there could not be a better case for attracting the rule of estoppel: A.I.R. 1985 Ori. 37: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 221 (D.B.).

Where petitioner was declared to have passed Intermediate Science examination and on that basis she got herself enrolled in College but later on her result was cancelled due to mass-copying involving 11 other students, held, petitioner was entitled to be protected by applying the principle of promissory estoppel. [A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 188 (D.B.), Overruled]: A.I.R. 1993 Ori. 27: (1992) 74 Cut.L.T. 603 (F.B.).

Where after declaring result of entrance test, the University discovered that there was mass copying in the said test and, thus, cancelled it and announced a date for a fresh test to which some of the successful candidates objected, held, mere announcement of the result of the test created no vested rights in the candidate, nor was there any question of estoppel since it was not shown that any of the candidates was damnified in any way: A.I.R. 1974 Andh. Pra. 283: (1974) 2 An.W.R. 89.

Where on the basis of revised mark-sheet issued to the petitioner as a result of revaluation, the petitioner was shown to have passed B.Sc. Part I examination and on the basis of said mark-sheet, the petitioner was admitted in B.Sc. Part II and he took examination of said course but subsequently his result was withheld on the ground that he had failed in Part I examination, held, on the representation made by the University as conveyed by the mark-sheet, the petitioner did not re-appear at the B.Sc. Part I examination. The University had the opportunity of checking its records before admitting the petitioner to Part II examination and they were, hence, in a position to discover the mistake if there was any, not having done that the University was clearly estopped from withholding the petitioner's result. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376; A.I.R. 1973 All. 442, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1285, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1983 All. 378: (1983) 9 All.L.R. 254.

Where the Court found that the mark-sheet on the basis whereof the failed examinee had obtained admission to the College on the basis of a wrong information communicated to the Headmaster of the School on account of an unholy alliance forged by the examinee in the Board's office and the Board had made no representation to the examinee at all, held, no estoppel can operate against the Board; it is well known that fraud vitiates all actions; and the law is not different for a claim based on estoppel: A.I.R. 1981 Ori. 91 (1981) 51 Cut.L.T. 455 (D.B.).

Where examinees sought a mandamus to the University for declaring their examination results when they had obtained the admit cards by a fraudulent collusion with the Principal of the Government Teacher's Training College, held, there could not possibly be any legal estoppel in their favour; the hallowed rule is that fraud vitiates everything. [A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 8, Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 122, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1987 Pat. 259: 1987 Pat.L.J.R. (H.C.) 591: 1987 B.L.J.R. 590 (F.B.).

Where a student misled by the mark-sheet showing her to have been passed in English could not send her form for appearing in the supplementary examination, held, the University was estopped from contending that she did not obtain 30 marks in English; estoppel is attracted even if the representation resulted from a mistake; it need not arise out of a fraudulent intent. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812; (1892) 19 Ind. App. 203 (P.C.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 276 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner was declared successful in B.A. Part I examination in June, 1987 and on the basis of said result the petitioner obtained admission in second year B.A. course but in November, 1987, she was informed that her result for the B.A. Part I examination had been cancelled whereupon she pleaded estoppel, held, when the petitioner's result for B.A. Part I examination was cancelled, there was enough time for her to prepare for the papers of that examination. At that time the petitioner had not been placed in a situation where she could not possibly appear in B.A. Part I examination for the current session. Therefore, the principle of estoppel was not applicable. [A.I.R. 1973 All. 442; 1987 All.L.J. 388, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1988 All. 234 (D.B.).

Where the Board of Secondary Education had declared an examinee to have passed on the basis whereof he was admitted in the College but the Board later on notified his having failed when there was no time left for him to apply to sit in the supplementary examination, held, the examinee having acted upon the Board's representation, the Board was estopped from asserting that the examinee had not secured the requisite marks: A.I.R. 1984 Ori. 215 (D.B.).

Where petitioners were allowed to continue their studies in the Science stream but after some months the Principal of the College after detecting certain irregularities in their admission to Science stream directed them to switch over to Arts group in Class

XII final examination or to take fresh admission in Class XI examination, held, as the students were admitted though provisionally by the Admission Committee of the College or the Principal of the College contrary to the instruction and/or regulations prescribed from time to time by the Higher Secondary Council, they could not be held responsible for such omission and commission and, thus, they could not be made to suffer for laches and lapses of the respondent-Principal: A.I.R. 1990 Cal. 253.

Where the students, despite shortage of attendance, were allowed to take practical as also a part of final examinations and were not detained as required under Regn. 21 of the Orissa University of Agriculture and Technology Under-Graduate and Post-Graduate Semester Regulations, held, the University Authorities were estopped from debarring them from the entire examination: A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 17: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 429 (D.B.).

Where the marks and division obtained by the High School certificate examinees as per mark-sheets supplied to them were at variance with the results printed by the Board which could have easily been discovered by them, held, the examinees could not invoke the rule of estoppel against the Board when it revoked their results indicated in the mark-sheets and issued fresh mark-sheets in conformity with the printed results which reduced their marks and division; the erroneous marking had been corrected under the Board rules which permitted revised marking by special examiners after valuation of the first set of examiners was found to be erratic: A.I.R. 1990 Ori. 90 (D.B.).

Where all that the petitioner had done after he was declared to have passed, was that he had applied to different institutions for job and had received two call letters when the University corrected its mistake by declaring him unsuccessful, held, a mere application for job could not be said to bring about change or alteration of the position of the petitioner; therefore, principle of promissory estoppel had no application to such a case. [A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 188 (D.B.), Overruled]: A.I.R. 1993 Ori. 27: (1992) 74 Cut.L.T. 603 (F.B.).

Where the University authorities after admission of a candidate to the House Surgeoncy course on the mark-sheet, dated 1-2-1991, showing her to have passed in the M.B.,B.S. informed her on 23-4-1991 that it was found that she had in fact failed in the subjects of medicine and O.G., held, the settled position is that whether or not estoppel is attracted depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case; it is also settled that the examining authorities can rectify their errors properly and within reasonable time whether or not it goes to the advantage or disadvantage of the student; the doctrine of promissory estoppel is, thus, not attracted. However, the University was directed to allow the student to complete her House Surgeoncy course and pass the medical and O.G. examinations to complete the M.B.,B.S. course without requiring her to study the House Surgeoncy course thereafter: (1993-1) 111 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 63.

27. Estoppel in cases of admission to educational institutions.—Basis of selection changed abruptly to the detriment of candidates—Principle of equitable estoppel—Applicability: A.I.R 1969 Ori. 80.

Where the Government in the brochure informed that though for the purpose of admission of the foreign nationals sponsoring by the Government was necessary but not in case of candidates from the developed countries, held, such a guideline could not fall within the pale of promissory estoppel: (1992) 2 Serv.L.R. 605: (1992) 1 Cal.L.J. 212: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 701.

Person not eligible admitted by Principal of College—Cancellation at instance of University—There is no question of estoppel: 1970 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 258 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners were refused permission to appear in B.Sc. (Agriculture) Part I examination as it was found by University that they were admitted by the Principal of College in said course in breach of criteria prescribed by Admissions Committee and the petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, there can be no estoppel against law particularly where the legislative mandate is so clear and emphatic, namely, that no one admitted in contravention of the provisions of S. 28 shall be permitted to appear at the examination. Thus, the University was well within its right by virtue of sub-S. (6) of S. 28 of the U.P. State Universities Act, 1973 not to permit the petitioners to take up the examination. Further, at no point of time did the University which was the final authority in regard to the admissions and grant of permission to the students to appear at the examinations held by it, directly or by any act or omission or even by implication made any representation to the petitioners or led them to act to their detriment believing any such supposed representation so as to attract the principle of estoppel; whatever was done in the present case was in disregard/breach of the criteria laid down by the University: A.I.R. 1985 All. 1 (D.B.).

The petitioner applied for admission to B.Arch. course and the only information given to petitioner and other candidates as mentioned in information brochure was that the candidate should have passed Intermediate examination with Physics, Chemistry and Maths. The petitioner was permitted to appear in the entrance examination and was declared successful but thereafter he was refused admission on the ground that he did not obtain 55% marks in Intermediate examination though the candidates were not informed about said condition earlier.

Held, the petitioner having been admitted to the entrance examination and having been allotted Roll No. could not be declared to be not eligible. Thus, the respondents were estopped from refusing admission to the petitioner to B.Arch. course: A.I.R. 1985 All. 257 (D.B.).

Where a candidate applied for admission to the engineering course with full knowledge of the prospectus which set forth instructions to the candidates, prescriptions with regard to eligibility for the course, and the methodology of selection, but he was not admitted for not satisfying the mark rules, held, he was estopped from challenging the prescription on constitutional ground; if the candidate had any objection to their validity, he ought not to have sought admission under the very same prescriptions: A.I.R. 1986 Mad. 179.

Where the provisional admission of the petitioner to a certain course was cancelled on the ground that he did not possess requisite minimum qualification and certificates filed by him were from a fake and bogus institution, held, the cancellation of the petitioners' admission was neither illegal nor without jurisdiction and principle of equitable and promissory estoppel did not operate in this case: A.I.R. 1993 Raj. 187.

Where a candidate lower in merits was mistakenly admitted to the clinical pathology course, his admission was cancelled after he had studied only for 3 days and he had thereby lost no chance for admission elsewhere, held, the doctrine of estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1995 Madh. Pra. 23.

Where petitioner who had obtained less than qualifying marks but stating the facts truly in his application, was provisionally admitted to a particular course by the University and who had also paid fees, etc. and started attending the classes after completion of the necessary formalities, and subsequently his admission was cancelled, held, the plea of estoppel was available to the petitioner: A.I.R. 1992 Del. 105: (1991) 43 Del.L.T. 670 (D.B.).

Where a girl candidate deficient by 6 marks from the prescribed minimum for admission to the post graduate course was nevertheless admitted, allowed to pay fees, attend classes and continue studies for the full first year and the College, even though advised of her ineligibility and cancellation of her admission by the University six months before the examination, did not inform the student, held, the doctrine of estoppel was clearly attracted; she could not be kept out of the examination as she had concealed no fact and committed no fraud. [A.I.R. 1968 Del. 131, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 27 (D.B.).

Where petitioner was granted admission as a result of mistake on the part of the respondent-University and there was no suppression of facts by the candidate who acting on the representation made by the University persued particular course for a reasonable period of time but her admission was cancelled when said mistake was detected by the University, held, the University was estopped from cancelling her admission: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 107 (All.) (D.B.).

Where the petitioners joined a certificate course in physical education on the basis of recognition granted by the State of Haryana to said course but subsequently the State Government derecognized said course while the petitioners were persuing the course, held, as the petitioners had joined the course on the basis of the recognition given by the State of Haryana and the recognition was in force at the time when they joined the course, the Government was estopped from derecognising the certificates obtained by them at the end of the course: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2027: (1987) 2 S.C.C. 445.

Where a candidate provisionally admitted in the course of physical training instructor had regularly attended the classes and underwent training during the entire course period of one year whereafter without notice to, or hearing, the student's admission was cancelled on the ground that his sports certificate on the basis whereof he was admitted had not been verified and attested, as required under the Rules, by the Rajasthan Sports Council, held, the authorities, having failed to carefully scrutinise the certificate at the initial stage, were themselves to blame and were estopped from cancelling the admission after the course was over. [A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1075, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1995 Raj. 44.

When a student is admitted into the institution without resorting to mala fide practice or unfair means and the School in its turn also over-looked a regulation which prohibited such admission, there could be no interference from the end of the School if the student succeed in the examination in due course: (1988) 2 Cal.L.J. 197: (1988) 2 Cal.H.N. 271.

Where a student secured admission in the Polytechnic in "reservation quota' by fraudulently obtaining a false certificate of belonging to a scheduled caste, held, the authorities could not be estopped from cancelling his admission after he had completed one year's studies. [A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 8, Dissented; A.I.R. 1979 Del. 87, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1982 Madh. Pra. 205: 1982 M.P.L.J. 695 (D.B.).

Where petitioner claimed his status to be a backward class and he was given admission provisionally on that basis but it was subject to final decision and as on enquiry the caste certificate produced by him was found to be false, his admission was cancelled, held, the mere fact that the petitioner had studied for four years subsequent thereto could not be a ground to say that he acted to his detriment. At no point of time, the respondent acquiesced to the continuance of the pursuit of study by the petitioner as a Backward Class student. It was not open to the petitioner to blow hot and cold to plead that the respondent was estopped to cancel the provisional admission. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C.376, Disting.; (1983) 1 A.P.L.J. (H.C.) 250, Expl.]: A.I.R. 1986 Andh. Pra. 196.

Where a candidate belonging to the reserved category sat in the entrance examination without submitting the requisite category certificate and thus as a general category candidate but failed to qualify and subsequently contended that he should have been considered as a reserved category candidate, held, the Admit Card itself had given him sufficient notice of his candidature and he had moreover already taken examination as a general category candidate, he was estopped from challenging his non-selection: A.I.R. 1994 J.&K. 42 (D.B.).

Advertisement by College inviting applications for admission therein—Subsequent instructions by State barring admission to non-residents of Punjab—College held estopped from refusing to consider applications by non-residents of Punjab: 1981 Lab.I.C. 768 (Punj.).

Where State Government invited applications for admission to certain course for which minimum qualification was intermediate and the petitioners who held certificate of "Vidushi" from Prayag Mahila Vidyalaya, Allahabad and "Madhyama" from Hindi Vishwavidyalaya, Allahabad which were recognised by the State Government as equivalent to Intermediate were granted admission but later on their admission was cancelled on the ground that they did not have the minimum qualification, held, there could not be any justification for cancellation of the admission of the petitioners at a point of time when they had almost completed their courses of studies and moreover it was not the case of the respondents that the petitioners had not been able to follow the instructions given to them in English: A.I.R. 1994 Pat. 15 (D.B.).

Where a candidate for admission to the M. Tech. course had given Industrial Management as his first choice but accepted admission for Hydraulics on the promise that he would be considered for his first preference subject to availability of seats was refused the only seat which fell vacant and was claimed by him, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was attracted; the Institute must be tied down to its promise: A.I.R. 1987 Mad. 22.

Where the petitioner appeared at entrance examination with knowledge of rules framed for purpose of valuation of answer scripts but later on challenged the arbitrary or capricious manner in which the answer books were examined and evalued, held, it could not be stated that as the petitioner had appeared at the examination he was estopped from challenging the validity of the said rules: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 127: (1982) 2 Cal.L.J. 196.

Where the mark-sheet for M.Sc. (Previous) examination showed the examinee to have been successful and upon his application for scrutiny of some of his answer books the University reaffirmed that there was no change in the marks obtained by him, held, the University was estopped from contending on the completion of his final year's course that having failed in the previous examination he was not entitled to take the M.Sc. (Final) examination: A.I.R. 1973 All. 442.

Where the appellant, a diploma holder serving in an Engineering College, applied for admission to B.E. Degree course beyond the last date, and certain objections were raised by the Officer-in-Charge, Admissions, including the objection that the appellant had obtained less than 60 per cent marks in the Diploma examination passed by him, and after considering all facts and circumstances and also the objections by the office to the admission of a candidate, the Vice-Chancellor directed his admission and the appellant deposited the requisite fees but by a subsequent order his admission was put in abeyance on the ground that he was admitted by mistake and the appellant pleaded estoppel, held, when after considering all the objections to the admission of a candidate, the Vice-Chancellor directed the admission of such a candidate, such admission could not be said to have been made through mistake. Further, assuming that the appellant was admitted through mistake, the appellant not being at fault, it was difficult to sustain the order withholding the admission of the appellant. [W.P. No. 521 of 1988, D/4-5-1988 (Raj.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 823: (1989) 15 All.L.R. 356: (1989) 1 S.C.C. 399.

Where a candidate was admitted to B.E. (Civil) Course on the basis of being a Konda Reddy as per the Community Certificate issued by a Deputy Tahsildar which was countermanded by the Divisional Officer and upon the candidate's writ petition further enquiry was ordered by the High Court pending which the candidate was allowed to take the final examination and direction was issued for publication of result without awaiting the result of enquiry. [1993 W.L.R. 485; 1991 W.L.R. 898, Rel. on]: (1994) 1 M.L.J. 95.

Where the petitioners were duly admitted to the Engineering College but subsequently their admission was cancelled on the ground that they failed to secure minimum marks in the qualifying examination as laid down in the prospectus though regulations of the University did not lay down any minimum marks of eligibility for admission to Engineering College, held, as the petitioners were selected for admission after being intimated as successful, the College was estopped from cancelling their admissions: A.I.R. 1989 Ori. 173: (1989) 68 Cut.L.T. 65: (1989) 1 Ori.L.R. 440 (D.B.).

Where the appellant while securing his admission in the Law College admittedly submitted his mark-sheet alongwith the application for admission and subsequently pursued his studies for two years and the University also granted him the admission card for the Pre-Law and Intermediate Law examinations and thereafter he was admitted to the Final year of the course but at the stage of the declaration of his results of the Pre-Law and Inter-Law examinations, the University raised the objection to his so-called ineligibility to be admitted to the Law course, held, the University was clearly estopped from refusing to declare the results of the appellant's examination or from preventing him from pursuing his final year course: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1075.

Where petitioners were admitted to LL.B. course even though they failed to secure minimum 40% marks in the qualifying examination on the recommendations of the Education Minister but later on their admission was cancelled, held, since the obtaining of 40% marks in the qualifying examination was the condition precedent for the eligibility for admission to the course of instruction in law, mere acquiescence or permission granted by the University to the petitioners on the recommendation of the then Education Minister to prosecute their studies could not operate as estoppel, the same being contrary to the statutory rule. [A.I.R. 1978 Madh. Pra. 86, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1988 Madh. Pra. 138: 1988 M.P.L.J. 9 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1989 Madh. Pra. 292: 1989 M.P.L.J. 476 (D.B.); (1983) 2 Kam.L.J. 175; 1979 M.P.L.J. 637.

Where condition precedent for admission to BAMS course was that candidate must have passed Sanskrit in Intermediate and the petitioner did not fulfil that requirement but he was nevertheless issued a letter for admission in said course but subsequently admission was refused and the petitioner pleaded estoppel, held, said condition was requirement of law and there could be no estoppel against law: A.I.R. 1986 All. 158 (D.B.).

Where the State Medical Faculty of Homeopathy, anticipating amendment of Regn. 35, granted maximum grace marks of 20 per cent in each subject, declared a failed examinee as passed in 4 out of 5 subjects which decision was recalled 6 months thereafter on the twin pleas of non-approval by the Government and the latter's advice that the Faculty had no such power, held, since the decision did not require the approval of the Government which could only annul, but did not annul, the Faculty's decision, it was not without jurisdiction; the Faculty was estopped from recalling the earlier decision: A.I.R. 1977 Ori. 123 (D.B.).

Provisions relating to reservations made in the Constitution are only enabling provisions in the exercise of which it is open to the executive Government to make reservations. Whether reservations should be provided to a particular category or classes of persons to whom reservations can be made is exclusively a matter for the executive Government to decide. A Court cannot compel the executive Government to make reservations if it decides not to make reservations to a category or classes of persons for whom reservations can be made. Thus, where the State Government did not provide for reservation to the category of outstanding sports persons in Medical Colleges as in the past and the petitioner raised plea of promissory estoppel, held, the principle of promissory estoppel could hardly be applied to such a case, where Government was free to modify its policies from year to year depending on a variety of factors: A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 58.

One of the essential requirements to invoke the doctrine of promissory estoppel is that one party by his word or conduct made to the other has to make a clear and unequivocal promise or representation which is intended to create a legal relation or affect the legal relation in future, having regard to the dealings which have taken place between the parties. Thus, where there was reservation in the Medical course earlier also for the wards of the Armed Forces personnel transferred to the State of Maharashtra but for the first time a restriction was imposed that such transfer must be within a period of one year prior to receipt of application, which was challenged, inter alia on the ground of doctrines of promissory estoppel and the legitimate expectations, held, when the transfer of Armed forces personnel was not shown to have been made to enable his ward to get admission in medical course nor was it shown that such transfer was sought for enabling his ward to get such admission, the challenge on the basis of aforesaid two doctrines was without any merits: 1993 Mah.L.J. 1370 (D.B.).

Merely because a candidate was allowed to sit in the entrance test for admission to a Medical College, held, does not operate as an estoppel against the Selection Committee and preclude it from not admitting the candidate for want of proof of the candidate's requisite domicile. [A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 470, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1972 Andh. Pra. 83 (D.B.).

Where two candidates for admission to the Government College in the M.B.,B.S. course were placed only on merit lists and the Government had directed that they be admitted in other Colleges of the Annamalai University which was later on found to be beyond the Government's power, held, they had no right to admission to the Government College as they were only placed in the waiting list; the Government's direction for their admission based on an erroneous view of law could not amount to a representation giving rise to the rule of estoppel: A.I.R. 1988 Mad. 212 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner was allotted a seat in Medical College under the Army quota due to mistake committed by Selection Agency and on securing the seat, she discontinued her studies in the Agricultural College and joined the Medical College but about 4 months thereafter her admission was cancelled, held, based upon her selection and allotment to the Medical College, the petitioner gave up her course of study in the Agricultural College and, thus, she altered her position to her detriment. Therefore, the respondent-University was estopped from cancelling her admission: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 297.

Estoppel arises only if there has been a representation by the persons sought to be estopped and the person setting up estoppel has shifted her position to her detriment on account of the representation. Where the petitioner after an eleven year course of study sponsored by the University passed the I.S.C. Examination and thereafter joined the B.Sc. degree course and thereafter she sought admission to M.B.,B.S. course and was provisionally selected also but she was required to produce a certificate from the concerned University to the effect that she had passed an "Examination equivalent to pre-degree with eligibility for admission for M.B.,B.S." and as she could not produce it, her provisional selection was cancelled and contending that she was admitted in B.Sc. degree course after treating the I.S.C. examination equivalent to that of pre-degree examination but the respondents wrongfully refused to treat I.S.C. examination as equivalent to pre-degree examination with eligibility to medical course, held, there was no representation made to the petitioner when she joined the B.Sc. degree course that thereby she would acquire eligibility to join medical course. There was no averment in the petition that even when she joined the B.Sc. degree course her intention was to ultimately join the medical course, and under the belief that eligibility to B.Sc. degree course was the same as the eligibility to medical course she joined the B.Sc. degree course. There was also no averment in the petition regarding detriment which she would suffer. Thus, as the necessary ingredients constituting estoppel were not established, said doctrine was inapplicable: A.I.R. 1981 Ker. 149: 1981 Ker.L.T. 380 (F.B.).

The petitioner fell short of attendance in B.Sc. Part I therefore she took re-admission in said course during next year and pursued her studies. Thereafter petitioner sought admission to M.B.,B.S. course through a quota reserved for bona fide students of degree course and annexed a certificate in that regard alongwith the application though she qualified for being admitted against reserved quota but she was refused admission on the ground that she was not a bona fide student of degree course. Held, the certificate of being a bona fide student of the degree course was issued by the University authorities and the application form for M.B.,B.S. course and said certificate was accepted by the University. She was entitled to appear at the examination and considered against the quota reserved for students of degree course. The University was estopped from contending that the petitioner was not a bona fide student of degree course: A.I.R. 1989 All. 35: 1989 All.W.C. 369: (1989) 15 All.L.R. 90 (D.B.).

Where alongwith her application for admission to M.B.,B.S. course, the petitioner enclosed a letter stating that her actual date of birth was 12-4-1969 and not 12-4-1970 as mentioned in her School record and she was permitted to take the entrance examination even though she was underaged, and she passed said examination but was refused admission on the ground of being underaged, held, when the application was accepted and the petitioner was permitted to sit for the examination, the only conclusion was that her plea that her age was not correctly entered in the school register was accepted. Further, the acceptance of application form amounted to a promise to be acted upon and, thus, the petitioner suffered a detriment and, therefore, the respondents were estopped from pleading that the petitioner was not entitled to a seat in the medical course: A.I.R. 1988 Andh. Pra. 2.

Where petitioner secured admission to M.B.,B.S. course on production of a false social status certificate but he was admitted provisionally subject to verification and report by the Director of Tribal Welfare and when said Officer reported that the petitioner maintained a false social status his provisional admission was cancelled, held, as admission of petitioner was subject to verification by Director of Tribal Welfare there was no unequivocal assurance that the admission given to the petitioner was final and conclusive. Further, the petitioner knew on the date of submitting application that he did not belong to Scheduled Caste but he produced a false certificate therefore, he could not invoke doctrine of equitable estoppel, as a person who comes to equity must come with clean hands: A.I.R. 1989 Andh. Pra. 159: (1989) 2 An.L.T. 491.

Where petitioner was granted provisional admission to M.B.B.S. Part I course on the basis of his claim to be a member of Schedule Tribe and he also appeared for Part I Examination but he was prevented from appearing at Part II of M.B.B.S. course on the ground that petitioner's name had not been cleared by the Director of Tribal Welfare and the aggrieved petitioner invoked the doctrine of promissory estoppel, held, the plea of promissory estoppel could not be made applicable to the facts of the case as the doctrine of estoppel applies to a case where a person is given an unequivocal assurance and on such assurance, he acted and having made such promise, later relent to extend the promise, with the result, the party suffers. Admittedly, the petitioner's admission into first year M.B.B.S. course was only provisional and his social status claim had yet to be cleared by the Director of Tribal Welfare and as long as the petitioner's social status claim was not so cleared, the petitioner was not entitled to seek continuation in the M.B.B.S. course. [A.I.R. 1989 Andh. Pra. 159, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1995 Andh. Pra. 181.

Where minimum marks required for admission to M.B.,B.S. entrance examination by SC/ST candidates were 35% but as seats were left vacant in the reserved quota, the minimum percentage was reduced to 25% by the State Government and the said action was challenged, held, plea of estoppel could not be raised against the Government in such a case. [A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2045, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 481: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 258: (1988) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 351; A.I.R. 1989 Madh. Pra. 61: 1988 M.P.L.J. 799: 1989 Jab.L.J. 3 (D.B.).

Where a candidate of the general category had been admitted to the Medical College treating her to be that of scheduled caste by mistake but immediately thereafter when the mistake was detected, her admission was cancelled, held, the principle of estoppel could not be invoked as she knew that she was given admission under a mistake: A.I.R. 1987 All. 22: 1986 All.W.C. 165 (D.B.).

Where candidates obtained admission to a medical course in Maharashtra claiming to be Mahadeo Kolis, declared a Scheduled Tribe as early as in 1933 and it was found that their father had described himself as a Hindu Koli as per his School admission register of 1943, held, they were rightly refused the status of Mahadeo Kolis by the authorities; merely because they had been admitted on their false representation as to their caste, they cannot invoke the doctrine of equity or promissory estoppel; their hands were not clean: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 94.

Where a person coming from West Pakistan on his claim of belonging to a scheduled caste got provisional admission and readmission in the M.B.,B.S. course and was in the fifth and final year when his admission was cancelled on the ground that on verification it was discovered that he did not belong to a Scheduled Caste, held, it was not open to the Authorities at that late stage to turn round and cancel his admission; they were estopped by inordinate delay of four years. [A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 347, Disting.; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Del. 87.

Where the petitioner secured admission in Medical course on the basis of a false declaration that he belonged to the Scheduled Tribe but the truth came to the notice of the Authorities after about three years, when the petitioner was in final year of M.B.,B.S., held, the Authorities were estopped from unseating him on the principle of estoppel. [A.I.R. 1979 Del. 87, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 8.

Where the petitioner who had produced a caste certificate showing that he belonged to a Scheduled Caste was admitted to first year M.B.,B.S. course in 1975 but after four years by impugned order the respondent cancelled his admission on the ground that he belonged to an upper class and the petitioner pleaded estoppel, held, as there was acquiescence on the part of the Authorities concerned and no forgery or fraud was alleged to have been committed by the petitioner, it would be too late in 1979, when the petitioner was finishing his final year M.B.,B.S. course to cancel his admission to the Ist year M.B.,B.S. course which was made in as far back as in the year 1975. Further, if the impugned order was allowed to stand, it would lead to a ridiculous situation, too harsh and against the petitioner not commensurate with the fault, if any, committed by him before his admission. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376; A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 8, Foll.; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621, Expl.]: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 122: 1982 B.L.J.R. 238 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners applied for, and were granted admission in M.B.,B.S. course in a self-financing Institute on the basis of the prospectus issued by it without concealing any information and they were allowed to appear in the examinations for certain semesters by the University to which said Institute was affiliated and in this way the petitioners spent considerable time and money in the Institute for the portion of the M.B.,B.S. course, but subsequently the University took the stand that they were not eligible for being admitted to the said course, held, the principle of equitable estoppel squarely applied to the facts of the case and the petitioners could not be prevented from prosecuting their studies further: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 45: (1991) 1 M.L.J. 163.

The petitioner doing her degree course in science had appeared in the entrance examination of M.B.B.S. On declaration of results her name appeared in the list of successful candidates which was also communicated to her by the authorities and on that representation she left her degree course in science and took admission in M.B.B.S. complying with all the formalities required Subsequently, she was informed by a notice, about cancellation of her admission in M.B.B.S. as she was selected by mistake due to error in decoding of index number. Held, the petitioner had changed her position substantially to her prejudice on the representation of the Selection Board and it would be now impossible to restore the status quo. As the petitioner had all the qualifications as laid down by the University and examination had been prescribed for making a selection because there were more candidates than seats. Thus, the principle of estoppel directly applied and the order of cancellation could not be permitted to stand as a bar against the petitioner continuing in the Medical College because it was sheer negligence of the Selection Board. [A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 276; A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 309; A.I.R. 1972 Mys. 135, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 155: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 69 (D.B.).

Where a candidate acting on the basis of the representation made by the Selection Committee intimating that he had been provisionally selected for admission to the Medical College in Orissa, for a reserved seat for Scheduled Caste, resigned from Government service only in order to join the College, but later he was refused admission on the ground that he was Scheduled Caste belonging to State of West Bengal and thus, was not entitled to be admitted against a seat reserved for Scheduled Castes in State of Orissa, held, the petitioner had never suppressed any fact from the Authorities and had declared his permanent address being that of State of West Bengal and there was no requirement in the prospectus or in the application form that the Scheduled Castes of Orissa only were to be admitted against the reserved seat. Furthermore, he, on the basis of the representation made by the Selection Committee, had acted to his gross detriment resigning from Government service. Thus, it would be as such completely inequitable and against all senses of fair play and justice to refuse him admission to which he had otherwise become entitled: A.I.R. 1989 Ori. 120: (1988) 2 Ori.L.R. 28 (D.B.).

It cannot be laid down that a prospectus relating to post graduate courses once issued by the Government, cannot be altered at all at a subsequent stage. The Government which has the competence to issue rules or regulations, has, as a corollary, powers to amend or alter or even repeal and reissue such rules and regulations. Further, in the sphere of higher educations in professional courses, a static and stagnant continuity of Rules once formulated would be totally inappropriate and dangerously counter-productive. A theory of promissory estoppel cannot be countenanced in such situations Thus, the doctrine of promissory estoppel would not have application in relation to admissions to higher specialised studies in Medical Colleges run by or under the Control of Government. [1986 Mah.L.J. 907, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1992 Bom. 233: (1992) 94 Bom.L.R. 43: 1991 Mah.L.J.1336 (F.B.).

Where the original prospectus issued for admission to post graduate medical course did not contain any provision for reservation for Scheduled Caste or Scheduled Tribe candidates but the Government by impugned notification made a reservation for Scheduled Caste and Scheduled Tribe candidates and the petitioners challenged said action of the Government on the principle of promissory estoppel, held, even if it be assumed that the issue of prospectus amounted to a representation and promise that the admission would be purely on the basis of merit, it would be inequitable to hold the Government to the alleged promise made in the prospectus as it would be interfering with the constitutional mandate in Art. 46 of the Constitution which is fundamental in the governance of the country (Art. 37 of the Constitution) and would unduly interfere with the accepted policy of the State and Union Governments to provide for real opportunity of advancement of the interest of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 126: 1982 Pat.L.J.R. 267: 1982 B.L.J.R. 433 (D.B.).

Where the petitioners applied for admission to post graduate course in Medicine on the basis of representation contained in notice and prospectus issued at the time when applications for admission were invited that candidates would be selected on the basis of merit but at the time of final selection the Government changed the basis of selection and made a reservation for the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribe candidates, held, Government was estopped from changing the basis of selection subsequently. [A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 80, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 164: 1981 B.L.J. 237: 1981 B.L.J.R. 294: 1981 Pat.L.J.R. 110 (D.B.).

Where at the time when the petitioners took admission to first M.B.B.S. course the rules governing the admissions to post graduate medical course provided that only marks obtained at the final M.B.B.S. examination would be considered for preparing merit list for post graduate course but subsequently University changed the criteria for preparing the merit list for admission to post graduate course and petitioners pleaded estoppel, held, while the petitioner and similarly situated students were admitted to first M.B.B.S. course, no promise could be said to have been made by the University that the same rules which were then governing the admissions to post graduate medical courses would continue to apply to them. It was also difficult to believe that the petitioners and others like them joined M.B.B.S. course because the rules governing admission to post graduate medical courses provided that only the marks obtained at the final M.B.B.S. examination would be taken into consideration for judging their merits, and that they would not have joined the medical course if those rules were going to be changed by the University. It was also not possible to accept that when they joined the medical course all of them had done so with a view to prosecute post graduate medical course also. Further, the University framed the Rules in exercise of its statutory powers. Therefore, the principle of promissory estoppel could not be applied: A.I.R. 1991 Guj. 23: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 1066 (D.B.).

Where certain rules meant for selection of candidates for post graduate courses in medicine provided for weightages of marks for extra curricular activities, rural service and for sterilization operations and the State Government as per directions of the Supreme Court deleted said rules and the petitioners who sought admission to post graduate course pleaded estoppel, held, the principle of estoppel which was an equitable principle could not be taken aid of by the petitioners. The rules of admission are not statutory in nature and are subject to change and amendment from time to time. The rules containing weightages of marks came to be deleted as a result of the decision of the Court and the principle of estoppel cannot operate against the State in such a situation: A.I.R. 1992 Madh. Pra. 364 (D.B.).

Where the College Dean acted arbitrarily, beyond his authority and without the Government's knowledge or consent, directed admission of candidates to the Post Graduate Medical courses in contravention of the existing rules, held, the doctrine of promissory estoppel is not available to uphold admissions which are not in conformity with the rules: A.I.R. 1982 Goa 1.

Where University in exercise of its statutory powers had enacted rules after obtaining directions from the High Court for preparation of merit list for admission to Post Graduate Medical courses, which rules sought to effect a change in the earlier rules, held, the principle of estoppel was not available against the Government in exercise of its legislative, sovereign or executive powers and as in the instant case, the rules were framed by the University in exercise of its power under S. 32(2) of the Medical Council Act, 1956 which were also approved by the Executive Council, the University was not estopped from changing the rules: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 65: (1983-2) 24 Guj.L.R. 1214: (1983) 3 Guj.L.H. 752 (D.B.).

Where the respondent did not challenge the merit list prepared in the context of selection for house jobs in 1988 but later on it challenged the merit list for admission to M.D. course which was nothing but a reproduction of the merit list of 1988 confined to a narrower group of students of the same batch, held, the respondent should be barred to challenge said merit list on equitable considerations: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1872: (1991) 4 S.C.C. 279.

Where admission to the post graduate course in a Medical College was challenged by several petitioners under Art. 226 of the Constitution and a consent order in the appeal against the judgment of the Single Judge provided for according of consideration for selection to writ petitioners alongwith 'other eligible candidates' who had applied for admission during the 1989 session and one such candidate challenged his omission from the selection made in terms of the consent order, held, the candidate, not satisfying the eligibility test of one year's rural service, was rightly not selected as he was not amongst other eligible candidates'; merely because he had earlier been allowed to sit in the entrance test and given an admit card would not clothe him with promissory estoppel. Participation in the test, and ultimate selection are two different things; his claim that he was superior in merit than those selected cannot override the eligibility ban. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 375, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1995 J.&K. 68.

Where petitioners submitted their applications for admission to post graduate course in Medicine and the respondent published a notice giving list of selected candidates on the basis of a Government notification restricting selections for post graduate course to students of the current batch only and precluding the students of earlier batches from competing or being selected. While the original rules for selection entitled residents of all batches 1 year to compete and did not preclude them from selection and the petitioners who were precluded from being selected for Post Graduate course on basis of impugned Government notification pleaded estoppel, held, the Government and the Authorities concerned were stopped on basis of principle of equitable estoppel from issuing the impugned notification as it was against the rules of equity and good conscience to use them against the candidates including the petitioners. [A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 80, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Goa 39.

Where the appellant who had passed her M.B.B.S. examination from the State of Andhra Pradesh, applied to the Maharashtra Government praying for creation of a Housepost and the State of Maharashtra after considering the high merit of the appellant specifically created a supernumerary Housepost for the appellant and after completing her house-job, the appellant applied for the issuance of an application form for the Post-Graduate Degree course in medical sciences which was refused on the ground of failure to observe reciprocity by the State of Andhra Pradesh and the appellant pleaded estoppel, held, though the appellant could be refused at the very outset, that is to say, her application for creation of a supernumerary Housepost could be turned down on the ground of failure to observe reciprocity by the State of Andhra Pradesh. But, after creating the supernumerary Housepost specifically for the appellant so as to enable her to become eligible for the Post Graduate Degree course in medical sciences, the State of Maharashtra was not at all justified in refusing her even an application form and in not considering her case for admission in the Post Graduate Degree course. [W.P. No. 28 of 1987, D/- 3-8-1988 (Bom.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 382.

The petitioner appeared in Pre-Medical test conducted by Aligarh Muslim University and took admission in Medical College, Aligarh. After completing first year she was transferred to Medical College, Lucknow and she completed her M.B.B.S. Thereafter, she was refused admission in post graduate course on the basis of a Government order under which students admitted through CPMT, a Pre-medical test conducted by the State were eligible for reserved quota for Post Graduate course. Held, while admitting the petitioner into the M.B.B.S. course, her attention was not drawn towards the bar provided in the said Government order. She was allowed to complete her course for M.B.,B.S. classes. She was also allowed to participate in the test for admission to post graduate classes and certificate of merit was also granted to her. Further, the State Government had acquiesced to the transfer of the petitioner from Aligarh to Lucknow Medical College. The State Government was estopped from denying her admission to the Post Graduate course on the ground that she was a transferred student from Aligarh and had not passed CPMT: A.I.R. 1990 All. 179 (D.B.).

Where prospectus did not provide that only fresh candidates were to be admitted to the post graduate study course and the petitioner had clearly mentioned in his application that he was an "in service" candidate and he was allowed to undergo the process of selection and was selected, held, his admission could not subsequently be cancelled on the ground that he was an "in service" candidate: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 106.

Some medical graduates challenged the prospectus for admission into the post graduate medical admission for the year 1989 on the allegation that the prescription that a candidate for the purpose of getting admitted to the Post Graduate course must complete his or her house job of 12 months on or before 31st May, 1989, was contrary to the directions of Supreme Court in (1987) 4 S.C.C. 459. The State contended that the All India Entrance Examination for Post Graduate Medical Courses held by the All India Institute of Medical Sciences was not conducted in time as fixed by the Supreme Court and intimation of the results was sent late and because of that several States also were not complying with the time-frame indicated by the Court in the said decision and as such the scheme formulated by the Court was not being implemented properly. It was also found that those who had qualified beyond the cut-off date in the previous year had taken examination in terms of the prospectus of present year with the new group. Held, as the mistake of the State in fixing a date beyond the cut-off date fixed by the Supreme Court had misled a group of candidates, therefore, in interest of all, the mistake committed by the State was to be condoned and on the basis of the result of the selection examination with 31-5-89 as the cut-off date admissions for the present year were to be permitted. [A.I.R. 1989 Pat. 241 (D.B.), Affrimed]: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 749.

28. Estoppel by negligence.—In order to create estoppel by negligence mere negligence on the part of the true owner is not enough. Negligence must be so serious a character as to amount to a breach of duty owing by the owner to the party defrauded or to the general public of which the party defrauded is one: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 551.

Estoppel by negligence and representation—Theft of goods entrusted with mercantile agent with full authority of disposal: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 355.

In support of plea of estoppel on the ground of negligence, it must be shown that the party against whom the plea is raised owed a duty to the party who raises the plea, or towards the general public of which is he one. There is another requirement which has to be proved before a plea of estoppel on the ground of negligence can be upheld and that requirement is that the negligence on which it is based should not be indirectly or remotely connected with misleading effected assigned to it, but must be proximate or real cause of that result. Negligence which can sustain a plea of estoppel must be in the transaction itself and it should be so connected with the result to which it led that it is impossible to treat the two separately.

Where after the intimation card, on the production of which the respondent in practice used to proceed to issue a cheque against the bills received by it from the appellant for the supply of coal, had been duly posted by the respondent to the appellant it fell into dishonest hands and was fraudulently used by some persons, that would not create an impediment in the way of the appellant's claim on the ground that the appellant was negligent and his negligence creates estoppel. It cannot be said that when the appellant received the intimation card, it owed a duty to the respondent to keep the said card in a locked drawer. But assuming that the appellant had a kind of duty towards the respondent having regard to the fact that the intimation card was an important document, in the absence of any collusion between the appellant and the person who made fraudulent use of the intimation card it cannot be said that the appellant did not show that degree of diligence in receiving the card and trusting his employees to bring the letters from the letter box or in keeping it in safe custody after it was received as he should have. In ordinary course of business, it would be assumed by a businessman that after letters are placed on the table or in a file which is kept at some other place, they would not be pilfered by any of his employees. Under these circumstances, if the intimation card in question was taken away by some fraudulent person, the appellant cannot be charged with negligence which, in turn, can be held to be the proximate cause of the loss caused to the respondent: (1964) 1 S.C.A. 491: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 859: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 152.

If there was no duty cast upon the customer to scrutinise his bank pass book as soon as received and to inform the banker about any inaccuracies therein negligence on the part of the customer to inform the bank of inaccuracies in the pass book cannot result in estoppel. Estoppel of this kind is described as estoppel by negligence or by conduct or by representation or by holding out of ostensible authority. There could be no case of estoppel by conduct or representation unless there was a duty to inform: I.L.R. (1955) 2 Cal. 365.

For negligence to constitute an estoppel it is necessary to imply the existence of some duty which the party against whom estoppel is alleged owes to the other party. There is a duty of some sort on the part of the customer to inform the bank of irregularities when he comes to know of it. But by mere negligence one cannot presume that there has been a breach of duty by the customer to the bank. The customer should not by his conduct facilitate payment of money on forged cheques. In the absence of such circumstances, mere negligence would not prevent a customer from successfully suing the bank for recovery of the amount.

The authorities in England have more or less consistently held that there is no duty on the part of the customer to intimate the banker about any error that may be seen in the pass book and he will be entitled to claim any amount paid on a forged cheque though there may be some negligence or inaction on his part in not being careful to discover the errors in the pass book or other documents. Where there was no evidence to show that anyone other than the person handling the bank account of a firm/company knew that the forged cheques had been encashed, held, the company/firm could not be non-suited on the ground of negligence or inaction. [(1973) 2 Mys.L.J. 156, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1603: (1987) 2 S.C.C. 666: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1872: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 1137.

Where bank made payment on a forged cheque and the plaintiff customer immediately after coming to know of the payment of cheque complained to the bank that the cheque was forged and called upon the bank to credit the said amount to his account, held, as plaintiff did not ratify the payment of cheque, bank could not plead estoppel against him in order to avoid its liability under S. 85(2) of the Negotiable Instruments Act. [A.I.R. 1978 Cal. 55, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1989 Cal. 92: (1988) 1 Cal.H.N. 272.

Bank giving double credit inadvertently to its customer—Customer acting upon the credit to his detriment—Estoppel—Customer grossly negligent in scrutinising the weekly statements, accounts and correspondence—Constructive notice—Banker in the circumstances not estopped from claiming refund of excess credit from the customer: (1964) 2 M.L.J. 104: A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 202.

Where a Company's seal was made available by it to its Manager enabling him to use it for endorsement of the Company's cheques, held, it amounted to a representation to the bank that he was its Manager; on his endorsing one of the cheques in his own favour and defalcating the amount, the Company was estopped by its conduct from contending that its Manager has no authority to endorse the cheque and foist the liability therefor on the Bank: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 363 (D.B.).

Where one X took delivery of goods on forged railway receipt and pledged them to Y. Held, Railway Authorities were not estopped from suing Y for recovery of goods since Y advanced money to X not on the representation made by the Railway. Assuming that the Railway Authorities were negligent in effecting delivery on the basis of railway receipt presented by X, the question that arose was whether the act of Y in accepting to advance money on the pledge, of the commodity was the proximate result of such negligence on the part of the Railway Authorities. It was the result of acting upon the representations made by X that Y agreed to enter into the transaction. The entering into the transaction by Y was not caused by any representation to that effect that the consignment had been delivered to X by the Railway Authorities under railway receipt. That being so, it could not be said that the neglect of the Railway Authorities in relation to the delivery of the goods on the basis of the railway receipt was responsible for inducing Y to enter into the transaction. All that can be said against the Railway Authorities was that they should not have delivered the consignment on the basis of the railway receipt presented before them. In giving delivery on the basis of that railway receipt, it could not be said that the Railway Authorities were doing something which could induce others to believe that the person holding the consignment was the real owner thereof or that he had a right to deal with the same: I.L.R. (1967) 1 All. 398: A.I.R. 1967 All. 549.

29. Estoppel by pleadings.—If the factual position giving rise to the plea of estoppel is not pleaded, the pleading would be defective in law. If, on the other hand, the factual position giving rise to estoppel is pleaded and if only the word "estoppel" is not pleaded, the Court would be entitled to connive at that much of inadequacy of pleading: A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 142: (1986) 88 Bom.L.R. 633: (1987) 1 Bom.C.R. 547.

A sued B and her sons, C, D and E for possession of two houses. C made a statement that he had no interest in the house; on the basis of the statement B and C were removed from the array of the parties and possession over one house was given to A and one was left with D. Later on C sold the house to F who sued D for possession. Held, that the statement by C being a declaration by a party to a suit was binding and he and his representatives-in-interest were estopped from claiming any interest in the property; (2) that if the statement was made either in ignorance or under some wrong impression it has definitely to be proved, and the best person to prove it was C; (3) that if the plaintiff F had no title it is not necessary for the defendant D to establish his title. If D can show that the plaintiff has no title to maintain the suit, the plaintiff's suit would be dismissed irrespective of the fact whether the defendant had any right or not: A.I.R. 1957 All. 135.

Where plea of estoppel is not set up in the pleadings or issues, it cannot be availed of later because estoppel is eminently a matter of pleading: 119 I.C. 152: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 467; (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 179: 44 I.C. 254; 43 I.C. 556: 46 P.R. 1918: 52 I.C. 739; 23 C.L.J. 122; 16 Nag.L.J. 248: A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 61; I.L.R. 14 Lah. 218: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 179.

When a party has asserted a certain position in a previous litigation, he cannot agitate the matter on the assumption of fresh fact against persons who were parties in the previous suit: 106 I.C. 484 (L). See also (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 243: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 525.

A party to a suit cannot be allowed to take a contrary stand than what it has taken in previous litigation: 1983 M.P.W.N. 253.

There is a distinction between a case where the defendant consented to a judgment after pleading as defence the matter which he seeks to set up in the later pleading and a case where he consents to a judgment before setting up of any pleading. The defendant in the latter case is not estopped as against the plaintiff from subsequently setting up matters which might have constituted the defence because there has never been an issue: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 29: A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 178.

Estoppel by pleading—First suit for judicial separation withdrawn on persuasion of friends—Second suit for divorce on same grounds not barred by estoppel—O. 23, R. 1, C.P.Code has no application: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 41: I.L.R. (1969) Bom. 1043: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 341 (D.B.).

Once an issue of a matrimonial offence has been litigated between the parties and decided by a competent Court neither party can claim as of right to re-open the issue and litigate it all over again. But a party who has made a charge and succeeded in proving it is not precluded from repeating it. So also where there is no adjudication in a charge it is open to a party to make that charge again and it is also open to the other to deny it: (1958) 1 W.L.R. 1275.

Application by landlord for eviction of tenant specifically stating that tenant should deposit certain amount of interest on arrears of rent for exonerating himself from eviction—Amount stated deposited by tenant on date of first hearing—Landlord estopped from contending that deposit falls short on proper calculation: 1969 Cur. L.J. 415: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 571: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 367.

Estoppel by pleadings—Mysore Tenancy Act (XIII of 1952), S. 30—Application under S. 30 by landlord for recovery of rent money agreed to be paid by way of land revenue—Dismissed by Tahsildar on accepting tenant's plea that tenant was liable to pay land revenue and not rent—Subsequent suit by landlord in civil Court for recovery of money—Tenant is estopped from setting plea contrary to that period raised before Tahsildar: (1968) 1 Mys.L.J. 188.

Pleadings—Suit by plaintiff 1—the consignee and plaintiff 2—the insurer as subrogatee of rights of plaintiff 1 by payment of the claim of plaintiff 2 against Railways for damages for loss of goods in transit by fire—Railways in their pleading, denying the subrogation and the right of plaintiff 2—In appeal against decree in favour of plaintiff 1, Railways cannot turn round and utilise allegations of subrogation made by plaintiffs as ground for non-suiting plaintiffs: (1969) 71 Bom.L.R. 214: I.L.R. (1969) Bom. 864: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 401.

Estoppel by pleadings—Suit by prior mortgagee for sale impleading puisne mortgagee—Decree therein not providing for payment of balance of sale amount to puisne mortgagee—Second suit by puisne mortgagee not barred by res judicata—Party cannot be permitted to assume inconsistent positions: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 336.

No estoppel against pleading that the transaction (lease) is void under statute: (1973) 2 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 300.

New and inconsistent plea—Employee alleging absence of any domestic enquiry—Employee cannot be allowed to contend that no proper procedure was followed: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 147.

Where there was no pleading regarding request of principal-debtor to create a contract of surety, held, such a plea could not be reheard subsequently: 1979 B.B.C.J. 140.

Mesne profits—Court if can award more than what is claimed—Plaintiff having no special means of knowing exact income from the land during relevant period—Plaintiff, held, not estopped from claiming larger sum as mesne profits than what was claimed by him in the plaint: (1962) 2 An.W.R. 18: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 42.

30. Estoppel by admission.—It is true that the doctrine of estoppel precludes a party from taking up a position which is inconsistent with an admission which he has previously made, but this doctrine comes into play only when the admission was designed actually or apparently to influence the conduct of the party claiming the estoppel and when the said party has changed his position in reliance on the admission. It does not apply to an erroneous admission on a point of law or when the admission is gratuitous and a party making such an admission is entitled to retract the same and to prove that the admission was mistaken or untrue: (1957) 59 Punj.L.R. 475: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 317.

A gratuitous admission made by a party in possession in mutation proceedings before a Revenue Officer that another person is the owner of the property does not bind either maker or the person claiming under him and cannot operate as estoppel. Title to immovable property cannot be transferred by mere admission; title can pass only by effecting a transfer in one of the modes permitted by law and the making of an admission is not one of those recognized modes. Therefore, by person's mere admission that some other person is the owner of a certain property, when in fact that other person has no title at all, he will not denude himself of ownership of the property which really vests in him. Nor is it possible to construe this gratuitous admission as a representation on the faith of which the latter changed his position: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 15.

Where an admission was made in a compromise affected between parties to the suit but not incorporated in any decree as the suit itself was dismissed in default, held, being a gratuitous admission, it did not amount to an estoppel; it could be withdrawn or shown to be untrue and erroneous as and when it was sought to be relied upon against its maker; it can, however, be considered as a piece of evidence alongwith other evidence but not as a binding admission; of course, the position would have been different if an executable decree based on it had been passed: (1985) 11 All.L.R. 172.

Admissions are declarations against one's interest; they are good but not conclusive evidence; and they can be withdrawn by proving them to be mistaken or untrue. Estoppels, on the other hand, create absolute bar. Besides, estoppels deals with facts, not rights; a party is not estopped from asserting a right which he said that he would not assert; and there can be no estoppel against a statute: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 121 (S.N.) (S.C.).

Admission—When amounts to estoppel: (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 39.

An admission inferred from conduct does neither amount to an estoppel nor is conclusive proof of the matter admitted, but it is certainly strong prima facie evidence and may be conclusive when not rebutted by any evidence: 1939 M.L.R. 229 (Civ.).

Admission may operate as estoppel and they do so where parties had agreed to abide by them: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 998: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. 686.

Admissions do not operate as estoppel but they must be explained by persons making them: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 748.

Admissions are relevant against the maker thereof and as laid down in S. 31, they are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted, but they may operate as estoppel: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 359 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

An admission operates as estoppel and can appropriately be used against its maker: 1979 All.W.C. 162: (1979) 5 All.L.R. 245: 1979 All.L.J. 231.

Defendants admitting liability to account—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 735. Admission on matter of law. See A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 486.

Admission by mistake—Whether estoppel—It can operate as estoppel. See 1979 All.L.J. (N.O.C.) 54.

The admission made by the party in the pleadings is inconclusive and no opportunity need be given to explain the same. If there is evidentiary admission, the only presumption is, that there is an admission made, but is a rebuttable presumption. Unless the admission amounts to estoppel it cannot be used against him. The title cannot pass by a mere admission. Thus, where in a suit filed by a plaintiff-temple for declaration of title in respect of certain land belonging to the temple, plaintiff-temple relied upon an admission made by Ex-Chairman of a Trust Board against his own interest in respect of impugned land, held, said admission which was sought to be made use of against defendant Ex-Chairman was not pleaded and no evidence was adduced in that regard. This said admission, even though, was found to be true could not be used as estoppel against maker thereof in a declaratory suit: (1984) 1 An.W.R. 16.

A statement made under some misconception or even misapprehension can certainly be allowed to be withdrawn if it was contrary to the record and was not supported by facts and the law applicable thereto: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 27: (1989) 1 Ren.L.R. 690: (1989) 38 Del.L.T. 94.

Admissions which may have been made under a mistake as to the true legal character of the venture, cannot operate to create an estoppel or acquiescence nor can they be invoked for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on the Industrial Tribunal, when such a jurisdiction does not vest in it; neither consent nor acquiescence of a party can operate to vest jurisdiction in a Tribunal, where in fact, none otherwise exists: 1968 Lab.I.C. 1546 (Del.).

Admission in the pleading of a previous suit—Admission binds the party making it in subsequent suit and can be used against him: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 385.

Admission by predecessor of defendant in a previous suit—Is binding on defendant in present suit: A.I.R. 1969 All. 248.

Where a defendant in his written statement in a former suit makes admission regarding the title of a co-defendant in that suit, those admissions do not operate as estoppel in the absence of proof that the co-defendant owing to the written statement acted in any way in which he would not have acted if the written statement had not been filed: 190 I.C. 609: A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 136.

Where in an earlier suit the father of the appellants admitted that he was in possession of gold belonging to the joint family though Commissioners' report in subsequent suit for partition did not advert to existence of gold, held, the statement of father of appellants clearly bound them as they were his legal representatives and successors-in-interest; merely because the Commissioner's report did not refer to existence of gold, the admission made by father of the appellants could not be ignored: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 16 (D.B.).

Assessment of mesne profits—Admission in plaint. See A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 447.

Admission operates as estoppel unless allowed to be withdrawn: (1990-1) 97 Punj.L.R. 135: 1990 Punj.L.J. 44.

Admission by Counsel in course of proceeding—Can be withdrawn unless circumstances are such as to give rise to an estoppel: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 211.

Where the petitioners sought to take advantage of what they described as admission in Government's affidavits filed in connection with certain earlier proceedings of similar nature and other admissions in Parliament on behalf of the Government, held, such admissions being mere expression of opinion limited to the context and rather vague hopes and not specific assurances, were not binding on the Government to create estoppel: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2164: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 67.

When the facts are fully set out and admitted, a party's opinion about the legal effect of those facts is of no consequence and no estoppel arises by reason of the admission of the party as to such effect (See A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 62). Thus, where the petitioner—company pleaded that the law reports published by it were not newspapers and, thus, Working Journalists Act was not applicable to its establishment and its employees though law reports published by it were registered as newspapers under the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867 and under Indian Post Office Act, 1898 and it had also filed a declaration under the 1867 Act that law reports published by it were newspapers, held, the admission on the part of the petitioner would not estop them from pleading that the law reports journal was not a newspaper within the meaning of the Working Journalists Act: A.I.R. 1983 Bom. 201 (D.B.).

Oral admission of contents of permit by operator—Inadmissible unless operator is entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents—Admissions given in ignorance of legal rights do not operate as estoppel: A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 138.

Admission of a party about due registration of document—If conclusive: A.I.R. 1963 Mys. 335.

Where the defendant's brother in a document had admitted the defendant's title to suit properties and their alienation by the defendant to the plaintiffs and in their suit for possession of those properties on their title and the denial of execution of the document by the defendant's brother was disbelieved, held, the document, relied upon as admission, and not estoppel, was sufficient evidence to prove the defendant's title to the suit properties and their alienation by the defendant to the plaintiffs: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2548.

Where recitals in the pattas and entries in the Inam Register clearly indicated that the subject matter of the grant was both melawaram and kudiwaram, and for rendering personal service, held, the mere fact that the Inamdar had erroneously claimed to be a melawaramdar and called the tenants in possession as kudiwaramdars, held, his admission would not estop the Inamdar that the inam was personal and inalienable: (1974) 87 Mad.L.W. 67 (D.B.).

An admission in a document (will) regarding the alleged adoption of a deceased person cannot amount to an estoppel because it is not made in the lifetime of the deceased and he could not alter his own position acting on faith of the representation made thereby: 1963 Jab. L.J. 817: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 348.

Where a person who was entitled to challenge the will was present at the time of mutation on the basis of will but did not object, held, he is not estopped from challenging the will, subsequently, if he is able to show that admission was not binding on him or that it was made in ignorance of true facts. [A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 650, Disting.]: 1980 Punj.L.J. 466.

Wrong statement made by party in mutation proceedings—Not binding on him in suit subsequently field by him—Held, further, as it was not the defendants' case that they had made any change in their position qua the suit and on account of the said admission of the plaintiff, it could not act even as an estoppel: 1968 Cur. L.J. 213.

Estoppel by admissions—Proceedings under O. 21, R. 58, C.P.Code—Statements made by objector amounting to admissions—Statements proved to be wrong in subsequent proceedings—Objector not estopped from challenging title of another person with respect to the property: 1961 B.L.J.R. 795: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 218.

The admission of liability under a decree obtained against the ward does not create an estoppel and debar the Court of Wards from challenging the validity of the decree on the ground that certain formalities under the Court of Wards Act not having been complied with the decree was not validly obtained: (1929) 31 Punj.L.R. 749: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 798.

Petition to quash order of Income-tax Officer levying penalty—Officer in his counter-affidavit admitting contents of affidavit by petitioner alleging want of jurisdiction in Income-tax Officer—Would not have operated as estoppel, even if could have been taken on point of law: A.I.R. 1968 All. 203.

Mere conduct is not admission under S. 17 of the Evidence Act for making it eligible to be used as an admission under S. 21 of said Act. Thus, where the respondents, trustees of disputed trust, under coercion submitted return and paid taxes to Board of Religious trust, under Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act which applied only in case of public trust, in respect of suit properties but subsequently denied the fact that impugned trust was public, held, the trustees not being fully conscious of their rights or not being aware of the true state of law or facts, submitted to the dictates of Board and, therefore, their conduct neither amounted to waiver or acquiescence with knowledge of their legal rights. Therefore, they were not estopped from denying the fact that the disputed trust was a public one. [1968 Pat.L.J.R. 507, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 95: 1973 Pat.L.J.R. 509 (D.B.).

Admission in writ petition before Supreme Court that certain lands in possession of petitioners were pasture lands and that they were used by him for grazing his cattle—It is not open to the petitioner in subsequent writ petition before High Court to turn round and say that admission is not correct—He has to abide by that admission: A.I.R. 1970 Goa 59.

Where the owners of the suit land being unsatisfied with the compensation received in respect of their land from the land acquisition officer pleaded that they should get at least Rs. 5,000 per acre, held, said claim could neither operate as estoppel nor an admission precluding the appellants from showing that the land was worth more: A.I.R. 1971 Ker. 51 (F.B.).

In every case of estoppel there is a representation and consequently an admission of the existence of a fact. If such an admission is accepted and acted upon by the person to whom it is made, the maker of the admission subsequently cannot be permitted to show that the admission he made was false. Thus, where appellant representing himself to be sole proprietor of a firm took premises on rent from the respondent and executed a rent note in that capacity and the respondent always treated appellant to be his tenant in his individual capacity and infact served a notice upon the appellant alleging that he was his tenant which was not denied by the appellant, held, the admission made by the appellant in the rent note and in his reply to notice that he was sole proprietor of the firm operated as estoppel and he could not subsequently plead that firm was tenant of respondent although rent had always been paid by the firm. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1697, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 Del. 555.

Mere admission of existing co-tenancy does not amount to creation of fresh tenancy and therefore, is not contrary to any statute law such as provided in S. 33, U.P. Tenancy Act. The doctrine that there can be no estoppel against statute does not apply in such a case: 1952 R.D. (B.R.) 269.

Where in ignorance of the party's legal rights flowing from S. 203(6) of the Haryana Municipal Act that a Town Planning Scheme not implemented and completed within 5 years of its sanction by the Government lapses, an admission was made that land acquired under the Scheme after its lapse vested in the Municipal Committee, held, it did not bind the party: 1989 Punj.L.J. 424.

Eviction proceedings—Original tenant stating that he was tenant from month to month—His successors cannot change the stand and take a plea that since the transaction was of a licence, no suit for ejectment on the basis of a lease was maintainable: 1979 (U.P.) R.C.C. 215: 1979 All. Ren. Cas. 301: 1979 All.L.J. 356.

The admission of the proprietor, whose legal representative is the plaintiff, is only relevant under S. 21 of Evidence Act. It cannot estop him. Under S. 115 of the Evidence Act if all the ingredients constituting estoppel thereunder have not been proved, vague statement of having planted trees made in 1942, without any mention of the number of trees or their kind cannot be held to be groveland under the Agra Tenancy Act; nor can it exclude the possibility that the trees were planted in or after 1928: 1952 R.D. 156: 1952 All.L.J. (Rev.) 285.

An admission made in ignorance of legal rights or under duress cannot bind its maker. Thus, where a candidate, very anxious to appear in Part II of the LL.B. examination, gave an undertaking to the University to file his employer's permission therefor when in fact no such permission was necessary or to abide by any order the University might pass, held, the undertaking was given in terrorem and in complete ignorance of his legal rights; as the University was bent on prohibiting him from taking the examination he had no alternative but to write the letter; the letter would not put him out of Court in case he challenged cancellation of his candidature by the University: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 311: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 15: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 722.

In criminal proceedings between A and B. B admitted A's title to land in dispute and thereby caused A to give him some land—Subsequent suit by A for declaration of title to and possession of the land—Held, B was estopped from denying A's title thereto by his previous admission: 1953 B.L.J.R. 214: A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 318.

Where an accused obtained acquittal in a criminal revision in the High Court by admitting that he would not interfere with the defendant's rights, held, it did not amount to an unqualified admission; it only amounted to an undertaking not to take law into his own hands; besides, it was an admission made in terrorem; he was, therefore, not precluded from suing the defendants under S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for framing of a Scheme: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1569: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 780: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 721.

31. Estoppel by attestation.—Mere attestation of a deed does not by itself impute to the attesting witness any knowledge of its contents. Similarly, a person's relationship with the mortgagor cannot by itself necessarily have the effect of fixing the former with the knowledge of the contents of the deed so as to make out a case of estoppel against such a person: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 226.

Though participation in a transaction which prima facie would affect the participant's interest can normally amount to his tacit consent to the transaction and the recitals in the deed but there is an exception to the rule; if it is established that he was unwittingly made an attestor to the deed without having opportunity to be acquainted with its contents, he could not be taken as having consented to the transaction: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 37 (S.N.) (D.B.).

There can be no doubt that an attesting witness can be shown to have fully understood the particular transaction so that his attestation may support the inference that he was a consenting party and might therefore, be estopped from questioning the effectiveness of the transaction attested by him. It is, however, a question of fact and should be determined with reference to circumstances of the case: 1958 Ker.L.T. 1062: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 237.

The mere attestation of a deed by a party does not estop him from asserting that he did not have the knowledge of the contents of the document or that he was not bound by the recitals in the document: I.L.R. 9 Lah. 224: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 432. See also A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 551: I.L.R. 14 Lah. 369; 145 I.C. 746: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 703; (1936) 38 Punj.L.R. 416: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 978.

Mere attestation of a document will not create an estoppel and it should be proved that the contents of the documents were known to the attestor and that other circumstances were known to him and yet he did not protest against the recitals. [(1972) 1 M.L.J. 317, Disting.; (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 363, Rel. on]: (1992) 1 M.L.J. 163.

But if the person attesting asserts the facts that are stated in the document he is estopped: 116 I.C. 716: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 271; A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 20: 54 M.L.J. 254 (P.C.).

Where an attesting witness is present at the transaction and attests the deed, having heard its contents, he is estopped from challenging the right of the transferee: 150 I.C. 765: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 93. See also I.L.R. 15 Pat. 721: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 119; 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 238. Attestation when amounts to estoppel: I.L.R. 49 Cal. 334: A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 20: 42 M.L.J. 434 (P.C.). See also I.L.R. 42 Cal. 876; I.L.R. 36 Cal. 780 (P.C.); I.L.R. 37 All. 350; I.L.R. 15 Pat. 721: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 169; 1981 M.P.W.N. 55.

Attestation of a deed by itself estop a man from denying nothing whatever excepting that he has witnessed the execution of the deed. It conveys neither directly nor by implication any knowledge of contents of the document, and it ought not to be put forward alone for the purpose of establishing that a man consented to the transaction which the document effects. Of course, there may be cases in which attestation is made in circumstances when coupled with other evidence of consent and acquiescence in the execution of a document, it is relevant to the question whether the attesting witness had knowledge of the contents and agreed to them: 1937 Pat.W.N. 144: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 353; A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 32.

Where a person having interest actual or contingent, in the property being conveyed by a third party to another attests the deed as a witness after reciting that he had acquainted himself with its contents, held, he ceases to be a mere witness to the executor's identity and signatures; he is, rather, deemed to have concurred to the passing of his interest to the alienee; he is estopped from contending to the contrary: A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 390: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 112 (D.B.).

If it is shown to the Court that an attesting witness was a consenting party to a particular transaction, he would be estopped from questioning the effectiveness of the said transaction, on a later occasion on the ground that he was not a party thereto. Thus, where the plaintiff was not aware of the contents of the gift deed executed by her father and she could not be said to be a consenting party to the transaction, held, the principle of estoppel could not be applied: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 363.

Estoppel by attestation—Plaintiff attesting document with full knowledge of its contents—Plaintiff is estopped from challenging validity of gift made under the document and cannot dispute nature of possession of defendant: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 291.

A nearest reversioner cannot be held to be estopped merely because he did not challenge an alienation made by a widow at its inception or merely because he attested the deed of transfer by her. In the absence of any evidence that he had made any representation and the transferee had acted on the faith of it in buying the property, a plea of estoppel is not tenable in law: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 236: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 662: 1949 Nag.L.J. 22.

The attestation by the reversioner of an alienation by the widow cannot be taken as presumptive proof of necessity where the document contained no recital of the purpose for which the money was required: 145 I.C. 862: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 637: 65 M.L.J. 282.

Where members of the joint family agreed not to sell their shares to outsider after partition, of the joint family property and a condition was incorporated in the partition deed that in case any alienation was proposed preference to purchase should be given to the other co-sharers; twelve years thereafter the mother gifted her share by a gift deed attested by the donee's brother to her only daughter who in her turn sold the gifted property for consideration without her brothers' knowledge to the vendor who, being aware of the right of pre-emption, was not a bona fide purchaser; on the brothers' suit for declaration of their pre-emption right and recovery of the properties from the purchaser, held, by attesting the gift deed, the plaintiffs had extinguished by waiver their right under the partition deed; they were estopped from pressing their suit: A.I.R. 1987 Mad. 15: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 56: (1986) 1 M.L.J. 203.

Where as per the sale deed executed in 1929 in the name of the wife who was shown to have paid half the consideration and the balance, as per recitals and registration endorsement, was paid by the husband and in 1950 the husband executed a settlement stating therein that he had purchased the property benami in the name of his wife, he gave a life estate to his daughter on the condition that upon her death, her son would take it absolutely, which settlement was attested by the daughter, held, the daughter was estopped from contending, having attested the settlement deed, that her father was not the owner of the property even if he had revoked the settlement subsequently by a will in 1956: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 185 (D.B.).

Where the plaintiff-husband himself stated that the mortgages in question were executed by the defendant-wife at his direction, held, it could not be contended that he was not aware of the recitals therein and, therefore, the attestation by him would not in any way constitute an estoppel. [(1971) 84 Mad.L.W. 176; A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 390, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Mad. 278: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 54.

Where an uneducated lady had merely attested a partition deed and also stated that she knew its contents, held, it cannot be taken as her admission of the properties being joint, especially where no such issue was framed and no evidence was adduced; mere attestation does not amount to release or abandonment of her rights in the property; it has to be a conscious act; and her conduct after attestation did not show that she had given up her rights in the property: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 590.

Where the father attests the sale deed of the coparcenery property, his son cannot be estopped from claiming the property as he gets it in his own right by birth and not by succession. The bar created by estoppel is a personal one. Estoppel is principle of law of evidence and does not create substantive rights of absolute character. It only operates to close the mouth of the person who has acted in certain way from setting up what may be the true facts of the case: I.L.R. (1965) 1 Mad. 287: (1964) 77 Mad.L.W. 555.

Where a muslim father executed sale deed in respect of certain land belonging to his petitioner-minor son and though the sale was against petitioner's interest he did not object to the sale but he in fact attested the sale deed, when his father conveyed the lands as an owner, held, petitioner thereby was estopped by conduct and record to assail the impugned sale deed or to claim any interest in land later on: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1205.

Where an attesting witness for the vendee in a sale deed contended that the property thereby purchased was for the benefit of the witness as well as of the vendee, held, the attestation was for the purpose of binding the witness to the purchase by the vendee; the witness was estopped from staking his claim to the property. [I.L.R. 36 Mad. 564; I.L.R. 38 Mad. 396, Rel. on]: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 549.

Where a sale deed standing in the name of the plaintiff's brother had been attested by the plaintiff himself who also contended that the property was nevertheless purchased for the benefit of both the brothers, held, the attestation could only be for the purpose of binding the plaintiff to the purchase of property in the name of his brother; the plaintiff's contention rejected: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 549.

A making sale deed in favour of C and D—C and D attesting subsequent sale deed made by A in favour of Y—Endorsement on subsequent sale deed showing that sale deed was read over and explained to C and D—Neither subsequent sale deed produced nor scribe, making endorsement examined—Mere attestation by C and D does not estop them from claiming title under former sale deed: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 719.

Sunni Mahomedan conveying more than third of the estate by will—Attestation by heir—Whether estopped: I.L.R. 6 Rang. 542: A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 307.

A, B and C co-owners of a well—A executing compromise deed undertaking not to install pumping set—B and C merely attesting the deed are not estopped from claiming their own right to install the pump—By their attestation they will be estopped only from pleading that A did not give an undertaking not to install the pump: 1963 Cur. L.J. 423 (Punj.).

32. Estoppel by compromise or consent.—Compromise decree and estoppel, see A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 82: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 782. The test for determining whether there is an estoppel in any particular case in consequence of a decree passed on a compromise must depend upon the answer to the question "Did the parties decide for themselves the particular matter in dispute by the compromise and was the matter expressly embodied in the decree" "the compromise or was it necessarily involved, in, or was it the basis of, what was embodied in the decree": A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 116.

Consent decree—Estoppel. See C.P. Code, 1908, S. 1: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 210; A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 595.

Consent decree—Judgment by consent acts as effective estoppel. See (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 67.

For purposes of estoppel, an order by consent is as effective as an order of the Court made otherwise than by consent. In other words the only difference between an order made by consent and one not so made is that the first stands unless and until it is discharged by mutual agreement or is set aside by an order of the Court: The second stands unless and until it is discharged on appeal. A consent order even where it has been obtained by fraud or mistake, is not a nullity. The order stands until it has been effectively set aside: 57 M.L.J. 429.

A judgment by consent or default is as effective an estoppel between the parties as the judgment whereby the Court exercises its mind on a contested case. Even though the matter may have passed from the stage of representation into an agreement, there are cases where the Courts are entitled to entertain a plea of estoppel in order to prevent fraud or circuity of action: A.I.R. 1975 Pat. 58: 1975 Pat.L.J.R. 27: 1974 B.L.J.R. 757 (D.B.). Thus, where an earlier partition suit, filed by the plaintiff, had been compromised, held, he was estopped from filing a fresh suit for partition on the ground that the compromise decree was vitiated by fraud, undue influences, etc., when there was no satisfactory evidence in support of such allegations. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 352; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 346, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 Andh. Pra. 303 (D.B.).

Consent decree—If creates estoppel—Principle applicable as if the matter is decided after contest: (1968-69) 73 Cal. W.N. 328.

A consent decree, it is equally well settled, does not operate as res judicata though a judgment by consent raises an estoppel between the parties as much as a judgment whereby a decree is passed in exercise of Court's mind in a contested case. However, before a consent decree tantamounts to an estoppel, it is necessary that the question raised in the subsequent suit was present to the minds of the parties at the time the previous suit was decided and it was actually dealt with by the consent decree: A.I.R. 1974 Gau. 5.

A party to a consent decree is estopped from going behind the terms to which he has voluntarily submitted on the ground that the decree was wrongly passed: 26 Sind L.R. 395: A.I.R. 1923 Sind 29. Also see I.L.R. 13 Lah. 70: A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 281; 1983 B.B.C.J. 433.

Estoppel by judgment or estoppel by conduct in view of a compromise decree is required to be pleaded specifically and is also required to be established by proper materials. Every statement in a compromise decree cannot operate as estoppel by judgment and only such statements or admissions in the compromise decree which in substance constituted the issues involved in the lis will operate as estoppel by judgment: (1979) 1 Cal.L.J. 182: (1979) 1 Cal.H.N. 142.

Consent decree raises an estoppel—Consent decree—Section does not in terms apply to consent decree but the underlying principle of estoppel does apply—Whether principle is applicable or not depends upon interpretation of terms of compromise: I.L.R. 45 Pat. 533.

Consent decree containing term contrary to law, or public policy—Unless set aside in proper proceedings will operate as res judicata or estoppel: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 184.

Even one of the parties to an agreement, held, is not estopped from, subsequently, challenging its validity on the ground of it being opposed to public policy: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 248.

Consent decree—Binding nature of—Principle of estoppel by judgment: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 104.

Proof of knowledge amounts to proof of consent: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 531: (1968) 2 M.L.J. 233.

Where in the case the petitioner has obtained advantage of the consent decree and in fact got the said decree modified from time to time and both the parties acted on the basis of modification and having acquiesced and acted upon such a decree, the parties, have altered their position, it will, therefore, cause prejudice to the other party if such a decree is held to be a nullity, is set aside and allowed to be re-opened: (1991) 1 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 182.

Where an agreement was reached between appellant and the Improvement Trust regarding exclusion of certain land from the scheme and to pay compensation to the appellant, with State also joining as one of the parties, relying on which an award was passed by the Collector, held, having taken advantage of the agreement in part and having repeatedly agreed to the terms of the compromise between the appellant and the Improvement Trust, the State Government could not be permitted to back out: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 366: (1992) 4 S.C.C. 243: (1992) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 723.

Consent decree after abandonment of plea by defendant—Effect—Plea in execution—If open. See 1970 Ker.L.R. 716.

The Courts can adopt a procedure to settle the dispute departing from the usual course of procedure governing the case i.e. "extra cursus curiae", provided the parties to the dispute have either consented to the said course or have acquiesced in the said procedure. A party thereto thereafter cannot turn round and say that the Court alone is to be blamed for adopting the said procedure. This is based on the doctrine of estoppel. The parties are bound by the order which in the circumstances of the case partakes the character of a consent decree. [1896 A.C. 136; A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 856; A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 95 and A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 71 (F.B.), Foll.]: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 42.

In a case where the matter is adjusted, as a result of a compromise, the parties agree not to try out their titles and rights, but acknowledge and define them for the purpose of the compromise with a view to avoid a determination of their true nature. Even if one or both the parties may have been under a mistake in respect of the title as is subsequently discovered, that circumstance will not detract from the finality and binding character of the compromise. When a matter is compromised, it binds the parties and mistake has no place therein: A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 128: I.L.R. (1953) Trav.-Co. 770.

So long as a consent decree stands, it is not open to either party thereto to give the go by to it even if it contains clauses which are not strictly legal: (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 243.

Where a suit had been compromised, without any reservations, on payment of certain sum by one party to the other, held, principle of estoppel bars a subsequent suit based on litigation in the said previous suit. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 346, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 79 (Del.).

Where the main contesting parties on intervention of lawyers had amicably settled their dispute as to the management of a temple and the High Court had passed its orders on 21-10-1991 on the basis of the joint-memo submitted before it, held, three defendants whose interest was protected by the second plaintiff could not impugn that settlement almost two years thereafter that not being signatories to the joint memo, they were not bound by the High Court's order; their silence from the date of order over the years demonstrated their acquiescence; the doctrine of estoppel was attracted: A.I.R. 1994 Karn. 303.

Where the plaintiffs filed a suit for possession of the disputed land on the ground that their brother entered into fictitious transaction of exchange with the defendant whereunder he transferred the impugned land belonging to the three brothers to the defendant and the defendant in turn agreed to give in 1/2 share in certain land to their brother and mutation was also sanctioned in 1963 but the plaintiffs objected to the said transaction only in 1973, held, the plaintiffs had in fact accepted the exchange transaction and were consenting parties to the same or at least they ratified the same by their act and conduct. They could not now seek the possession of the suit land after such a long period and they were estopped from filing the suit by their act and conduct: 1988 Punj.L.J. 413.

Where an earlier suit was dismissed on compromise on the defendant's giving up his claim to the suit property and the plaintiff giving up the costs, held, though that may not amount to a consent decree but it certainly amounts to a representation by the defendant on the basis whereof the plaintiff gave up his costs; it may not operate as res judicata as laid down in A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 591 but it certainly operates as estoppel against the defendant raising his claim to the property. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 346, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 All. 378.

Where the plaintiff's title to a house was declared by a previous compromise decree which under law does not require registration, held, it does not operate as res judicata but only as an estoppel in his subsequent suit for partition; his title cannot be challenged in the subsequent suit. [A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 478; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 82; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 548, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 222: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 359: (1982) 1 Cal.L.J. 179 (D.B.).

Where the plaintiffs' ancestors' claim to the suit plots was settled by a compromise whereby they were allotted some other plots and by another compromise the suit plots were allotted exclusively to the defendants' ancestors and others and the rents were also separately fixed for different lands and the decree in terms of the compromise was passed on the same date in the presence of, and without objection from, the parties' representatives on the plaintiffs' subsequent claim to the same old suit lands, held, the plaintiffs and their ancestors acquiesced in the recording of the compromise and passing of the decree with full notice and thus induced a reasonable belief in the minds of the defendants and their ancestors that the compromise had been accepted on the basis whereof the defendants also altered their position by undertaking the obligation to pay the entire rents for the plots so allotted to them and their co-sharers, the plaintiffs were estopped from impugning the compromise decree to the defendants' prejudice. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 254: 1974 B.L.J.R. 242 (D.B.).

Where in a previous suit, the plaintiffs gave up their right of pre-emption by entering into a compromise, held, subsequently the plaintiffs were estopped from challenging the sale and claiming the right of pre-emption in the disputed property: 1994 D.N.J. 261 (Raj.).

Compromise—Court assuming jurisdiction extra cursum curiae—Appeal, when lies Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 16. A party can challenge the validity of the compromise, when he has not taken advantage of the benefit thereunder: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 334. See also I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal. 266: (1937-38) 42 Cal.W.N. 701: A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 500.

Where under a compromise between a Hindu widow and the reversioners, the reversioners take up the management of the property, agreeing to pay off the debts due to the creditors of the widow, they are not estopped from subsequently denying that the debt due to certain creditors is binding on the estate when the compromise has not influenced the conduct of the creditors in any manner and it cannot be said that they were misled into acting in a particular way which they would not have done but for the compromise: 199 I.C. 425: A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 448.

Where a gift of land by its holder to a distant collateral was sought to be set aside by the reversioners of the donor and a compromise decree was passed whereby one eighth of the gifted land was to be given to the reversioners on the death of the donor, besides some share in land to the donee's brothers, and upon the donor's death the reversioners sought to enforce the decree by a suit but its maintainability was impugned by the donee that the donor's sister, a nearer reversioner, was still alive, held, the compromise decree was binding on all the parties therein including the donee; the donee could not wriggle out of its binding effect; having derived benefits under the decree, he was estopped and could not escape from its disadvantages; the donor's sister could have her remedy against the reversioners: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 395.

Where the defendant executed a sale deed in respect of plaint properties and subsequently plaintiff filed a suit among other matters for cancellation of said sale deed but said suit was compromised and thereafter the plaintiff filed another suit for setting aside the impugned sale deed, held, the earlier compromise decree, to which the plaintiff was a party acted as an estoppel by judgment against the plaintiff-appellant from questioning the validity of the sale deed. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 346, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1971 Ker. 234: 1971 Ker.L.J. 169: 1971 Ker.L.T. 307 (D.B.).

Where in the consolidation of holding proceedings A first did not take inferior land though its area was larger and he knowingly allowed B to make improvements in land allowed to B on representation that no complaint or appeal shall be made in future against the order passed by the Consolidation Officer, the order being a consent order, A, on general principles would be estopped from agitating the question subsequently: 1967 Cur.L.J. 602: (1967) 69 Punj. L.R. 689: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 267 (F.B.).

The respondent-Improvement trust framed a scheme for development and pavement of streets and acquired shop of the deceased and heirs of deceased challenged said scheme in a writ petition wherein an order was passed on 13-5-1976 specifically stating that the deceased, was survived by five heirs who were entitled to one plot each for the shop. Though prior to said writ-petition, a civil Court had passed a consent decree on 9-2-1976 wherein it was held that the petitioners were allotted different shops under a family partition, but said consent decree was not referred to in writ proceedings. Subsequently, the petitioners contended that all the 13 heirs of the deceased were entitled to plots in the scheme. Held, the consent decree dated 9-2-1976 under which the petitioners claimed to have acquired the right in the property of deceased was in existence on the day when the writ petition was disposed of and the predecessor-in-interest of the petitioners who were claiming additional plots were party to said writ petition but they did not urge that deceased had other heirs also whose right had been recognised under the civil Court decree. Thus, the successor in-interest of those petitioners could not urge that judgment dated 13-5-1976 did not affect their rights: 1991 Punj.L.J. 370.

Existing market—Closure without legal power by Municipality of—Consent to such closure—Consent does not validate closure—No estoppel: 1963 M.P.L.J. 69: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 134.

Where on the High Court setting aside the order of extension and directing release of goods, the Customs authorities went in appeal and asked for stay of operation of the order but the appellate Court, on the respondent's resistance put them on terms, held, its effect was that the respondents could take advantage of the Court's order on furnishing bank guarantee and to renew the same as and when required till the disposal of the appeal; it was not an order by consent in the strict sense; it could not amount to waiver of any of their rights by the respondents: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 368: (1979) 4 E.L.T. 313 (D.B.).

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, Ss. 8,10—Insolvency petition by creditor against a firm and its partners A, B and C—Debt and acts of insolvency proved—By consent payment of debt in monthly instalments ordered—In case of default, order or adjudication deemed to have been passed—Appeal by B and C only—Order accompanied by consent of parties—Order cannot be impeached as consent order—Plea that Court did not find as fact that insolvency was committed, is not open to B and C who participated in proceedings—[C.P. Code, 1908, O. 23, R. 1]: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 1062.

The principles of estoppel did not apply to cases, where consent was not lawful and was not free and valid. Thus, where rent was fixed on the basis of consent terms, tainted by fraud, held, there was no estoppel for bringing fresh application: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 259.

The notice by the sub-tenant to the landlord under S. 17 (2) of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 and the landlord's right to contest it under S. 17(3) thereof create no absolute bar against sub-letting; they do not protect the landlords against themselves; no public policy is involved therein. The landlords may, therefore, waive their right by agreement or conduct; thus, a compromise decree may validly operate as estoppel as well as res judicata against them. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 82; A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 812; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 346, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1973 Del. 9: 1972 Rajdhani L.R. 80.

Tenant filing suit against landlord for declaration that he was entitled to occupancy rights in suit land—Compromise between parties—Tenant agreeing to give up his contention that suit land was situated in darmila inam and that he had rights of occupancy—Landlord granting him lease for ten years—Suit decreed in terms of compromise—Suit by landlord for ejectment of tenant—Compromise held precluded tenant from agitating question of occupancy rights: (1954) 2 M.L.J. 83: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 739: I.L.R. (1955) Mad. 227.

Where tenants had explicitly agreed to the eviction order and obtained time for vacation on the ground that the landlady required the building bona fide for demolition and reconstruction under S. 10 of the Madras Building (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, held, the tenants could not contend that the eviction order could not be executed on the ground that the Courts below had not satisfied themselves about the existence of the statutory grounds. [A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 794;

A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 838; (1971) 84 Mad.L.W. 9, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 47.

Eviction petition compromised—Withdrawal of—Subsequent petition on some cause of action—Effect—Held, that there must be a representation made by one party to other and that other party must have acted on such a representation in a way that it altered his position detrimental to his interests. The respondents having failed to bring their case within the ambit of law governing the application of doctrine of estoppel, the contention that the present suit is barred on the principle of estoppel has to be repealed: I.L.R. (1974) 2 Del. 63.

Where a consent decree was passed accepting position of landlord and tenants, held, such a relationship cannot be denied in a subsequent suit: 1974 B.B.C.J. 689; 1982 All.L.J. 1419 [Compromise petition filed in prior writ petition, whether can be challenged in subsequent writ petition.]

Agreement not to file appeal, against eviction decree, if tenant given time—Time given—Tenant is precluded from filing appeal: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 221.

Where a tenant's suit for declaration and for non-interference in his possession and removal of encroachments was decreed against the landlord on contest and after six months' pendency of his appeal the landlord moved the lower appellate Court to decide the appeal on the basis of a three years old compromise between the parties arrived at two months before the filing of written statement by the landlord without a whisper about it in the pleadings or proceedings till then, and even though the lower appellate Court got the genuineness of the compromise confirmed through the trial Court and accepted its finding but did not act on it and affirmed the trial Court's decree on merits, held, since for over three years the compromise was not acted upon and both the parties had invited the trial Court to decide the suit on merits on evidence, both the parties had thus given a go-by to the compromise; the lower appellate Court could not have rendered its judgment on a compromise which was not acted upon; the suit not having been adjusted wholly or partially and the suit claim not having been satisfied, O. 23, R. 3 of the C.P.Code was not attracted. [A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 245, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Mys. 327: (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 671.

Where the Additional District Judge had restored a reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, with the consent of the Government pleader, held, the Government was estopped from seeking its review even if restoration was ordered under an erroneous view of law: 1989 Punj.L.J. 595.

Where the judgment-debtor volunteered himself to a decree and he subscribed his signature to the joint endorsement made on the plaint, when the relief of scaling down the debt was available to him as per T.N. Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938, held, just on account of the judgment-debtor subscribing to a compromise he is not estopped from claiming benefits under that Act. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 591, Foll.]: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 649.

Where a judgment-debtor paid a sum of Rs. 100 to the decree-holder who agreed, by compromise, to deem the decree to be fully satisfied on the judgment-debtor paying another Rs. 350 within three months and on the payment not having been made in time the decree-holder sought to recover full decretal amount in execution to which the judgment-debtor objected to on the ground that he, being an agriculturist, was statutorily protected against execution, held, in the absence of evidence of conscious waiver of his rights by the judgment-debtor, he was not estopped from pressing his objection merely because of the compromise between the parties: A.I.R. 1974 Ker. 139: 1973 Ker.L.T. 796.

Where a compromise was entered into between the parties and the compromise decree clearly provided for equal division of property between father and son and it also stated that no party could claim anything against the other and that on the death of the father his share would go to another person, held, subsequent suit by son for possession of property of his deceased father on the ground that under Muslim law without his consent his father could not bequeath property to another was barred on principle of estoppel. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 807; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2069; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 797; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 554, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 8: (1983) 1 An.W.R. 53.

The plaintiff in the present suit took active part in the previous suit by his minor son H. The plaintiff had filed a petition to the effect that H was the adopted son of M and therefore, he also should be made a party to the suit. He swore an affidavit on behalf of his minor son H as his guardian. Later, a written statement was filed on behalf of H which was verified by the plaintiff as his guardian. Subsequently, the suit was referred to arbitration, and before the arbitrator a compromise was filed, which was entered into on behalf of H by the plaintiff as his guardian, and, the consent decree in terms of the compromise was passed by the Court in presence of the plaintiff, who was a party to the consent decree itself. It was declared that H was the adopted son of M which position the plaintiff himself took up from the very beginning of the suit. The controversy between the parties to that suit was whether the adoption of H was legal and in accordance with law. This was the real dispute between the parties, and a compromise of the dispute was arrived at, which was incorporated in the decree which was passed in terms of the compromise and the award. The compromise declared that H was the legally adopted son of M and that he should be considered to have been born of the loins of M. That H was adopted son of M was a representation of fact made both by the widow of M and H through his guardian, and natural father, the plaintiff which induced the ancestor of the defendants to believe it to be true, and to act upon such belief to his detriment, because but for his being induced in this manner, he would not have agreed being the admitted next reversioner to the estate of M at least after the death of M and his widow, to give any properties out of the properties of M to H. Held, that the consent decree raised an estoppel as much as a decree passed in invitum and that the plaintiff was estopped from contending in the subsequent suit that the adoption of H was invalid: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 365.

Where a decree provides that if a smaller amount is paid by a certain date it would be deemed to be satisfied and the judgment-debtor deposits that amount in Court after the due date, the decree-holder withdrawing that amount is not estopped from executing the decree for the balance of the decretal amount, as the judgment-debtor's position has not been worsened in any way and no improper advantage has been gained by the decree-holder by such withdrawal. The fact that the judgment-debtor has stated, in his application for permission to deposit the amount, that he is making the deposit in full satisfaction of the decretal amount, makes no difference. The bare act of decree-holder in withdrawing the amount cannot be interpreted to mean that he impliedly agreed to the condition. The condition is meaningless after the due date has elapsed and therefore, the decree holder is within his rights in ignoring it and in withdrawing the amount, treating it as part satisfaction of his claim: I.L.R. (1949) Nag. 295: A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 385: 1949 Nag.L.J. 513.

In execution of a money decree obtained by B the property of the judgment-debtor was attached and brought to sale. A intervened and objected to the execution sale. The execution proceeding was compromised whereby A promised to pay a certain sum of money in two instalments. The terms of the compromise declared that if there was any default in payment, the sale shall be confirmed. No payment was made and the result was that the sale was confirmed. Later on A brought a suit wherein he challenged the title of B to the property on the ground that previous to the auction sale the title of the judgment-debtor to the property sold had already been transferred to him (A) and that there was no proper and valid attachment of that property. B raised plea of estoppel as a bar to this suit. Held that the compromise petition did not disclose that any statement amounting to any representation was made by A in that execution proceeding, and upon the footing of that representation anything was done by B and that the terms in that compromise petition did not stop A from challenging the title of B, which was quite different from challenging the sale in execution of the decree: 1953 B.L.J.R. 90: A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 383.

Where possession of a premises in the godown whereof were stored oil seeds pledged to the judgment-debtor No. 1 by the other judgment-debtors was delivered in execution by the bailiff to the decree-holder and the oil seeds were put by him in the custody of the decree-holder's employees and the Court on the judgment-debtors' application restrained the decree-holder and the custodian by an interim injunction not to remove or dispose of the oil seeds which was made absolute by the parties' consent till disposal of the injunction application and operation of the permission to remove the goods granted on terms by the Court to the judgment-debtor No. 1 was also stayed by the Court, held, the decree-holder was not estopped from claiming damages for use and occupation of the godown merely because the interim injunction was made absolute by his consent: A.I.R. 1986 Cal. 313.

In the previous proceedings under O. 21, R. 90, C.P. Code, based on the ground that the attachment was invalid, the objector, by a compromise obtained time from the decree-holder, to pay his decretal dues and agreed that on failure to pay, the Court sale in favour of the decree-holder would stand good. The objector failed to pay and the Court sale was confirmed. On the question of estoppel raised in the subsequent litigation: Held, that the objector's representation led the decree-holder to a belief that the sale was a good sale and to act upon that belief by forbearing from contesting the objection application under O. 21, R. 90, C.P. Code. Therefore, S. 115, Evidence Act applied and the objector could not be allowed to turn round and contest the legality of the sale or of the attachment in subsequent proceedings: 1959 B.L.J.R. 594: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 36.

Right to take out procession—Accompanied with music on public highway—Representative suit for declaration of right is maintainable—Hindus have unrestricted right to take out such processions at all hours subject to restrictions put by authorities to prevent breach of peace—Previous compromise, effect of: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 104: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 18.

Conduct—Compromise during pendency of suit—Plaintiff continuing to prosecute suit—Effect—Right to invoke compromise later: 1961 M.P.L.J. 322: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 245.

33. Estoppel in cases of auction sale.—The principle that where the sale is confirmed, there could be no dispute about validity of the title of the auction purchaser is confined to cases where a party to the suit having had opportunities of questioning the validity of the sale did not do so and take appropriate proceedings to challenge the validity subsequently. Either the principles of estoppel or the principle of res judicata would be applicable, and they would be precluded from contesting the validity of the sale, as there are adequate provisions under O. 21, or S. 47, C.P.Code enabling them to contest the validity of the execution sale. But this principle is not applicable to a person challenging auction sale who was not a party to the earlier litigation and was even not aware of such proceedings. [I.L.R. 18 Cal. 164 (P.C.) ; (1964) 77 Mad.L.W. 69, Foll.; (1964) 77 Mad. L.W. 691, Appl.; (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 349, Disting.]: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 708 (D.B.).

Where a property gifted in 1946 was sold in execution of a money decree passed against the donor a decade thereafter and upon the donee's objections having been dismissed and during the pendency of his suit under O. 21, R. 63 of the C.P.Code, the property was sold in auction and resold by the auction purchaser to a third party without the objector having informed the executing Court about the pendency of his suit, held, nothing having been brought on record that the donee had knowledge of the auction sale proceedings, he could not be estopped from challenging the auction purchaser's right to the property; the donee's inaction or, to be more precise lack of vigilance in not approaching the executing Court to stay its hands did not amount to implied consent or estoppel against him either under S. 115 or S. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882: A.I.R. 1975 Raj. 45: 1974 Raj.L.W. 220.

Attachment under O. 21, R. 52 or O. 21, R. 46, C.P.Code—Denial by public officer that he had any money in his custody or denial of debt by garnishee—Provisions of O. 21, Rr. 58 to 63 are not attracted to such case and public officer or garnishee is not precluded from so contending and challenging validity of attachment in spite of order passed in those proceedings: A.I.R. 1970 Andh. Pra. 162.

Whether general principles of estoppel apply to Court auction sale—Plaintiff estopped from challenging the Court sale in favour of auction purchaser: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Karn. 1556.

Statute provides for two very different methods of preparing and issuing proclamations of sale; one under O. 21, R. 66 of the C.P.Code and the other under Ss. 13 and 14 of the Bihar Money Lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939; the latter applies to a certain class of cases and the former to all other cases. But even if a decree is subject to be executed under the latter Act, its execution under the Code is not without jurisdiction; therefore, if a judgment-debtor accepts the position that no notice of valuation of the property to be auction sold be issued and the valuation furnished by him is entered in the proclamation, he is deemed to have waived the requirement of notice; he is estopped from reagitating the objection: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 27: 1970 B.L.J.R. 481 (D.B.).

Where the second sale proclamation referred to a live lease and occupation of a substantial part of the property by tenants or subtenants as a result whereof the second sale fetched a lower price than the first sale and the first auction purchaser was rendered liable for the deficiency on the ground that, being in possession of a part of the property, he must be deemed to have known about the lease and sub-lease and was, thus, estopped from attributing to the same the lower price fetched in the second auction, held, the real question under O. 21, R. 71 of the C.P.Code is whether the deficiency is attributable to the auction purchaser's default or to any other reason arising from other supervening circumstance; the auction purchaser is not taking advantage of his own wrong; he could not be estopped from contending that it is the disclosure of the encumbrance which occasioned the fall in price: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1290: (1975) 1 S.C.C. 815.

Where the sale proclamation embodied the statement as to the area of the property as made by the executing decree-holder and the auction-purchaser purchased the property on the faith of that statement acting to his prejudice, the statement in the sale proclamation would operate as estoppel against the decree-holder: I.L.R. (1948) 2 Cal. 284.

Where certain members of a Hindu joint family who were fully aware that the suit mortgages had been attached and put to sale in execution, did not raise any objection to the attachment or sale: Held, that the conduct of the members constituted a clear representation to the decree-holder and auction purchasers that they had no objection to the sale and that they could not sue to set aside the sale: 10 O.W.N. 58: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 166. See also 16 Mys.L.J. 32: 42 Mys. H.C.R. 669.

Plea open only to person for whom representation was meant, and hence in respect of declarations in sale proclamation only auction-purchaser can plead estoppel and, not private purchaser from judgment-debtor: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 34.

Decree for maintenance creating recurring charge on certain property—Sale in execution is not free from encumbrance as in case of mortgage decree—Property can be sold each time future maintenance becomes due—Sale proclamation not stating that property was subject to recurring charge—Whether operates as estoppel: A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 40.

A purchaser of mortgaged property at a sale in execution of a decree is estopped from denying the validity of the mortgage if the mortgagor himself could not be permitted to deny its validity: 139 I.C. 695: I.L.R. 15 Pat. 721: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 169.

Irregularities in sale proclamation—Judgment-debtor having no knowledge of irregularity applying for adjournment of sale—No waiver—Only deliberate intention on his part to waive his right to object to irregularity in proclamation could constitute waiver, as estoppel must be certain to every intent and not to be taken by argument or inference: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 5: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Mad. 781: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 421.

Judgment-debtor not objecting to low price advertised in proclamation cannot complain of it after sale: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 275.

Where the executing Court on the judgment-debtor's application praying the date of sale of his property should not be advertised in local newspapers refrained to do so, held, having preventing the Court from thus publicising the date of sale, the judgment-debtor cannot be allowed to contend, after the sale had been affected, that it was invalid for want of proper publication in the local papers: A.I.R. 1972 Mys. 321: (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 20 (D.B.).

No objection to undervaluation in sale proclamation—Even though notice under O. 21, R. 66 was served personally on judgment-debtor—Sale at inadequate price—Judgment-debtor is estopped from raising objection that inadequacy of price was due to under valuation in sale proclamation: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 216: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 84.

Application for setting aside sale held under provisions of Partition Act—Who can apply—Provisions of O. 21, R. 89 are attracted in view of S. 7 (b) of Partition Act—Estoppel: I.L.R (1963) 2 Punj. 665: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 531.

Judgment-debtor's right to dispute executability of decree—Adjournment of

Where a property auction purchased in execution of a money decree was in possession of a tenant who gave, on the basis of the sale certificate, symbolic possession with promise to give actual possession thereafter, as endorsed by him on the warrant, to the auction purchaser which the tenant failed to do and on the auction purchaser's suit for possession, the tenant impugned the maintainability of the suit for non-impleadment of the decree-holder, a necessary party to whom the tenant claimed to have already given the possession to the decree-holder, his landlord, held, having made the endorsement on the warrant of possession, the tenant was estopped from denying the title of the auction purchaser; the decree-holder was not a necessary party: 1984 Raj.L.W. 433.

The decree-holder respondent put up a property for sale in execution of a decree which he held against a judgment-debtor. That property was purchased by the petitioner and the sale was duly confirmed by the Court. Later an application was made by the respondent under S. 151, C.P. Code, asking that the sale be set aside on the ground that by a mistake the decree-holder had sold his own property in execution of the decree. Held, that in putting up the property for sale in execution of his decree the respondent represented that the property was property saleable in execution which could be purchased by any person as the property of the judgment-debtor sold in execution. There was a clear representation to that effect and the petitioner acted on that representation and changed the whole of her position by purchasing the property. It was not therefore, open to the respondent to say that what he represented was not the true state of facts: 89 Cal.L.J. 209: A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 125.

In a suit for declaration of title and for possession, it was contended that the plaintiff No. 3 was estopped from challenging the sale held in execution of rent-decree because he held out his wife as the owner of the tenure and she was a party to the rent-decree. It was not, however, shown what declaration, act or omission on the part of plaintiff No. 3 intentionally caused or permitted the superior land-lord or the auction-purchasers to believe that the wife was the owner of the tenure and act upon such belief. No issue was raised on the question. Held, in the circumstances, that there was no estoppel: I.L.R. 36 Pat. 381: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 442.

Where on an application to set aside execution sale under O. 21, R. 90, C.P. Code, the Court declined to accept the personal security offered by the petitioner and required him to furnish either cash security or the security of immovable property and dismissed the application on the ground that the security as ordered was not furnished, it would not be right to say that there is any estoppel against the petitioner and his appeal against the order dismissing his application under O. 21, R. 90 is not barred on that ground: (1955) 2 M.L.J. 99: A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 486.

When a person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit, or proceedings between himself and such person or his representative to deny the truth of that thing. This is estoppel by conduct.

Where the proceedings in execution of a money decree against the assets of the deceased judgment-debtor were regularly gone through after notice to the legal representatives and in spite of every opportunity provided under the code itself for objecting to the sale, the property was allowed to be put up for sale, the conduct of the legal representatives attracted the rule of estoppel by conduct and, hence, a subsequent suit by them for declaration of their title to the property against the auction purchaser must be held to have been barred. A bidder at the auction would, in the circumstances quite properly infer that the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor, who were parties to the execution, had no objection to the property being sold as liable for the decree amount. It would be unjust if this manifestly misleading conduct should be allowed to have its way and a bona fide purchaser in a Court auction defeated. If they had any idea of asserting their own title, they were duty bound to speak before the sale: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 401: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 609.

Where in an auction of a property ordered to be sold by the District Judge, the State Government sought to participate and applied for and granted permission by the said Judge but a third person, being the highest bidder was allowed to purchase the property, whereafter the State Government contended that the auction was invalid as the District Judge had no jurisdiction to sell the property, held, the State Government's unqualified participation in the auction amounted to a representation to all concerned that the property could be sold in auction by the District Judge and if on the basis of such representation a person bona fide acting on such representation of the State Government participated in auction and being the highest bidder was allowed to purchase the property, thereafter it was no longer open to the State Government to contend that the said sale made by the District Judge was void and illegal: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 39 (Cal.).

Setting aside of sale—Application by person other than owner of house, when owner has not applied—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 90.

Where the disputed land was sold in auction by the revenue Court for arrears of rent after the plaintiff's objection against the sale was rejected and the plaintiff receives the balance of the sale proceeds after adjusting the arrears of rent, it is not subsequently open to the plaintiff to say that she was not bound by the sale. She is estopped from challenging the propriety of the Court auction sale: (1960) 2 Ori.J.D. 82.

Where the Government never represented during the auction proceeding to the transferee that the impugned building was included in the lot for which he was bidding though there was an apparent discrepancy between the description of the property by name and its delienation by boundaries in the sale certificate and the transferees failed to enquire as to whether the property proposed to be transferred to them was indeed the property of the transferor, and the Government thereafter claimed said property from the petitioner, held, the sale certificate was void to the extent that it included within the boundaries set out therein the property comprising the impugned building. Therefore, the plea of estoppel could not prevail: A.I.R. 1976 Him. Pra. 29 (D.B.).

34. Estoppel in execution proceedings.—Where in the revision proceedings, the petitioner represented the entire estate of the deceased judgment-debtor but subsequently contended in the same execution proceedings that in the absence of other representatives of the deceased the execution proceedings were liable to be dismissed, held, he was estopped from raising the said contention: A.I.R. 1991 Ori. 88.

Decree against undischarged insolvent passed ex parte—Execution of—Judgment-debtor having allowed the decree to be final against him, cannot be allowed to question validity and enforceability of decree in execution proceedings: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 188: (1966) 1 An.W.R. 281.

Where a suit on hundis executed by the Managing Director of a Company in his personal capacity as well as for the Company was ex parte decreed as the order of stay under S. 4 of the T.N. Relief Undertakings (Special Provisions Act, 1969 had expired earlier and the fresh notification of further stay was not placed before it and the Managing Director's application for setting aside the decree was dismissed, held, it was his duty to place the order of further stay before the Court on the expiration of the earlier stay order; he had not done so either on that day or with the application for setting aside ex parte decree or even during the earlier stages of execution; he is deemed to have waived the benefit of stay; besides, stay was for the benefit of the Company, not his person: A.I.R. 1983 Mad. 264: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. 317: (1983) 2 M.L.J. 382.

Decree transmitted for execution directly to subordinate Court in different district—Proceedings in transferee Court are without jurisdiction—Decree-holder taking no steps under R. 10 in transferee Court—No occasion for judgment-debtor to raise objection against jurisdiction of transferee Court—No waiver: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 88.

Where the judgment-debtor contested the suit for the properties mentioned in the decree and put forth the claim for reimbursement of money spent for their improvements, he cannot be permitted to say in the execution proceedings that the property is not identifiable under O. 20, R. 9 of the C.P.Code: 1961 Raj.L.W. 128.

If in a proceeding under O. 21, R. 58, C.P. Code, the decree-holder omits to raise the plea that the proceeding ought to be under S. 47, C.P. Code and not under O. 21, R. 58, he is not thereby estopped from pleading that in defence in a regular suit filed under O. 21, R. 63: A.I.R. 1934 All. 699.

The question as to what is the proper basis for the valuation of a suit under O. 21, R. 63 of the C.P. Code by an unsuccessful claimant, whether it is the amount of the decree sought to be executed or value of the property against which the decree was sought to be executed, is one of law and a party who has acted in the lower Court on one basis is not precluded from maintaining the contrary in the appellate Court: I.L.R. 55 All. 315: A.I.R. 1933 All. 249 (F.B.).

Where a judgment-debtor's resistance to execution proceedings of a mortgage decree on the ground of his being entitled to benefit given in the Tamil Nadu Debt Relief Act (13 of 1980), was not allowed and said order became final between the parties, held, subsequently, the judgment-debtor was barred from claiming benefit of the 1980 Act, which he claimed by virtue of order of discharge passed by Tehsildar subsequent to civil suit, in which said mortgage decree had been passed by having recourse to S. 47 of the C.P.Code, 1908: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 326 (Mad.).

Where the averment in the plaint of the defendant not being an agriculturist was neither specifically denied nor gone into during the trial which ended in a compromise money decree against the defendant, held, the defendant was not estopped from seeking stay of execution under S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1938: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 663.

Where civil Court declared the petitioner to be the owner of land, held, non-execution of decree for 3 years would not divest the petitioner of land's ownership and the respondent is debarred from challenging the ownership: 1980 Punj.L.J. 579.

Where a decree by making an arbitration award a rule of the Court was sought to be declared null and void under S. 47 of the C.P.Code in the Delhi Court which had passed the decree and which later on dismissed the objections, held, the objectors were estopped from impugning the validity and executability of the decree in the Court at Gurgaon to which the decree had been transferred for execution: 1991 Punj.L.J. 521.

Where on an application under O. 21, R. 97, C.P.Code, the executing Court declared that the appellant who was a sub-tenant of the respondent in suit premises had become direct tenant of landlord in view of S. 20 of the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952 and thus, there could be no question of payment of rent by the appellant to the respondent and said order of executing Court was not challenged in appeal or revision by the decree-holder or by the respondent and nor was any suit filed by them for setting aside the said order but subsequently in a suit filed by the tenant for eviction of sub-tenant the respondent contended that said order was a nullity as the executing Court had wrongly applied the provisions of S. 20 of the Delhi and Ajmer Rent Control Act, 1952 which stood repealed and were not applicable, held, as order of executing Court was not challenged it became final and was binding on the respondent who was a party to those execution proceedings. Therefore, the respondent was estopped from contending that order of executing Court was a nullity: A.I.R. 1989 Raj. 24: (1988) 1 Raj.L.R. 844: 1988 Raj.L.W. 631.

Where decree-holder filed execution petition to recover decretal dues by attachment and sale of property belonging to judgment-debtor and the decree-holder asked the executing Court to secure the permission of competent authority for sale of the property as the judgment-debtor belonged to Scheduled Tribe and permission was later obtained by the appellant with whom judgment-debtor was negotiating for a private sale of his property and said permission was produced by the decree-holder in the execution proceedings as if the permission was granted in his favour, held, the decree-holder was estopped from contending that the judgment-debtor did not belong to Scheduled Tribe and, therefore, permission of the competent authority was not needed to validate the sale: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1820.

Plea of limitation not raised in previous application for execution—Plea in subsequent execution at late stage—Estoppel—Res judicata: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 521.

35. Estoppel by election.—Where a man is entitled to one of two inconsistent rights and he has with full knowledge done an unequivocal act indicating his choice of the one, he cannot afterwards pursue the other which after the first choice is by reason of the inconsistency no longer open to him. Such case do not require detriment to the other party as foundation for their application: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 301: (1956) 1 M.L.J. 276.

Where a person, having two alternative courses of actions mutually exclusive chooses to adopt one and rejects the other expressly or impliedly then he is said to have elected to choose one. He is subsequently precluded from adopting the course which he intended to reject. It is known as doctrine of election. Like estoppel it is also child of equity. It is founded on the principle that one should not be permitted to approbate and reprobate, that is, blow hot and cold in same breath. It has been extended and applied as an aspect of estoppel to prevent a person from falling a victim to what would have otherwise resulted in injustice to him and unfair advantage to other. A lessor may after expiry of period for which lease is granted renew the same or resume that is re-enter. But if out of the two that is re-entry or resumption, the two divergent courses, he chooses to grant fresh lease or at least creates that impression by his conduct spread over long time it results in abandonment which is an aggravated form of waiver, he cannot subsequently turn round and claim that he intended to re-enter: A.I.R. 1987 All. 56: (1987) 13 All.L.R. 92 (D.B.).

The maxim that a person cannot "approbate and reprobate" is only one application of the doctrine of election, and its operation must be confined to reliefs claimed in respect of the same transaction and to the persons who are parties thereto. The principle of election does not forbid a party from claiming the same relief against different persons in different suits in respect of the same property though the grounds of relief are different and inconsistent: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 593.

In order to establish estoppel by election all that is necessary is that the party should have sufficient information and knowledge to be able to recognise that he has two rights inconsistent with each other and knowing that if he chooses one of those two rights and enforces that right, it necessarily is an act of election and necessarily precludes him from contending that the act adopted and ratified by him is invalid and that he should be allowed to change his position thereafter and say that the other remedy and right is the proper one. Where the plaintiff, who was entitled to a sum of money under a compromise entered into by his mother on his behalf during his minority, withdraws that money with the knowledge of the compromise under an order of the Court at a time when suit on his behalf challenging the very compromise was pending and with knowledge of the contentions in the suit, the plaintiff clearly elected to abide by the compromise and accept it. He thereby precludes himself on the broad principles of estoppel from challenging the compromise subsequently on the ground that it was brought about wrongly and against his interests. It is not necessary that all the details and facts leading up to the compromise should be known to a party, nor is it necessary that the party should be aware of the implications that may follow upon his election: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 721.

Where a man has an election between several inconsistent course of actions, he will be confined to that which he first adopts; the election if made with the knowledge of facts, is in itself binding. The election must be, however, a voluntary act, not forced upon him by circumstances over which he had no control and notwithstanding his protest: I.L.R. 59 Cal. 1464: (1931-32) 36 Cal.W.N. 955: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 39.

Double remedies—Election of one—Estoppel as to the other remedy: A.I.R. 1928 Sind 40.

Where a person concerned has the choice of two rights, either of which he is at liberty to adopt, but not both, and he adopts the one he cannot afterwards adopt the other: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Punj. 271: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 157.

Reliefs claimed in alternative interlinked —Plaintiffs could not be put on election to choose between reliefs: 31 Cut.L.T. 61: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 108.

Doctrine of election is doctrine of equity—Election under void transaction—Effect: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 207.

The doctrine of election belongs to the species of estoppel; the test is whether a party has chosen one of the alternative remedies and drawn its benefit and, if so, it should not be allowed to seek the other remedy. Thus, where the judgment-debtor in a decree for specific performance in execution for recovery of costs stated that there were large deposits in the Court (i.e., money deposited by the decree-holder as consideration for sale) and therefore his moneys with the third parties need not be attached, held, it did not mean that he had elected to abide by the decree when he was in fact vigorously persuing his appeal against the decree in the appellate Court; it did not amount to approbation and reprobation; he had exercised no election: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 591 (D.B.).

Estoppel by election—Basis of—Order winding up a banking company—Party accepting dividend thereunder cannot appeal against it—Banking Companies Act, 1949, S. 38: 1965 B.L.J.R. 558: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 502.

Where a State Financial Corporation had obtained a mortgage decree from the Court, it was precluded from taking recourse to S. 29 of the State Financial Corporations Act, 1951 by seizure and sale of the mortgaged property, as that would put the debtor to "double jeopardy"; by obtaining the Court decree, the Corporation had elected and availed of one remedy out of the two; it was precluded from seizing and selling the mortgaged goods otherwise than by execution of the decree. [A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 132, Expl. and Disting.]: A.I.R. 1987 Ori. 119: (1987) 63 Cut.L.T. 151 (D.B.).

In the case of a usufructuary mortgage, as the mortgagee's interest in the property terminates on redemption, a lease granted by him also comes to an end at the same time under S. 111 (c), T.P. Act. The lessee then in possession, would, on happening of that event become a trespasser and therefore cannot by any act of his own create the relationship of lessor and tenant between himself and the mortgagor. But where the mortgagor has treated the tenant as holding under him and sought relief on that footing in the eviction proceedings before the Rent Controller, he cannot thereafter turn round and assert that he was not his tenant and claim to treat the mortgagee as continuing in possession and therefore liable to pay him mesne profits by reason of wrongful occupation. He is precluded by his election in so doing: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 301: (1956) 1 M.L.J. 276.

A Government servant was given the option to retire voluntarily on proportionate pension as an alternative to dismissal. The Government servant chose voluntary retirement and the Government passed the order accordingly. Subsequently he challenged the order of the Government. Held, that the Government servant was estopped from impugning the order of the Government to which he had himself agreed. He had taken full advantage of the order of the Government granting him the pension for which he applied and it would be quite unfair and inequitable subsequently to allow him to repudicate the order. He could not be allowed to blow hot and cold in the same breath. The principles of waiver and estoppel clearly applied to the circumstances of the case: A.I.R. 1957 Assam 77. See also A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 100, cited infra.

In a subsequent suit for rectification of the instrument of guarantee: Held, that having elected to take their chance of succeeding upon the terms of the instrument as it stood, the sureties were estopped from reagitating the question on the basis of the very ground which they had waived on the former occasion: I.L.R. 59 Cal. 985: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 889.

Hindu widow—Alienation by reversioner—Election—Minority of Hindu reversioner—Principles applicable. See A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 68: (1954) 2 M.L.J. (Andh.) 162 Obiter.—In order to constitute election or ratification it is not essential that a reversioner should assent to the transaction impeached only when he is in titulo. The ratification can be effected even during the lifetime of the widow and before the reversion falls. There is no justification for limiting this doctrine to cases of alienation by Hindu widows. It applies to awards as well: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 222: (1960) 1 An. W.R. 340 (Estoppel by accepting benefit under transaction).

Where the appellant had an option either to consider himself, under the T.N. Debt Relief Act, 1972, a non-agriculturist debtor and claim benefits conferred as a debtor under the said Act, or treat himself as an Agriculturist within the meaning of the T.N. Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938 and claim benefits on that basis, and he chose to claim the benefit under the former Act, claiming that he was non-agriculturist debtor, held, having taken that stand and availed the benefits on that basis , it will not be open to him, in appeal to change the position and say that he was an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of stay under S. 3 of the T.N. Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938: (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. 562 (D.B.).

To constitute an abandonment or waiver, it must be a voluntary act on the part of the person possessing the rights; if by force of circumstances, he is compelled to adopt one of the two courses, it cannot be said that he adopted the one and abandoned the other. Thus, where under a consent order of eviction passed on 14-10-1968, the tenant was required to vacate the premises by 30-6-1973 but as law then stood, such an order could not be passed without the Court being satisfied about the genuineness of the landlady's claim and the landlady, withdrew her review petition for modification of the consent order on the tenant's objection and filed a second eviction petition but meanwhile in view of a later Supreme Court decision, the consent order became valid and executable and she sought execution thereof, held, at the time of her second eviction petition, she had no inconsistent rights and no inconsistent courses open to her; she could not be said to have abandoned one of her rights or courses; there was, thus, no abandonment or waiver on her part to estop her from executing the consent decree: A.I.R. 1975 Karn. 225: (1975) 2 Karn.L.J. 316.

Compromise petition—Widow of deceased brother relinquishing her right under her husband's will and accepting in lieu maintenance allowance made charge on family Lands—Document not merely reciting past event but itself creating right in immovable properties of the value of Rs. 100 or more—Absence of registration—Document inadmissible in evidence—Widow whether estopped by election from claiming partition of family properties—Evidence Act, 1872, S. 115: (1965) 1 An.W.R. 134.

Where a property with a charge for maintenance of the estranged wife was agreed to be sold and upon the husband's refusal to execute the deed, its specific performance was decreed and upheld by the single Judge whereunder the sale price was deposited in the Court and in execution of the grant of costs, when the husband's Letters Patent appeal was still pending, the husband prayed to the executing Court that the decree-holder could realise the costs from the deposit in the Court whereupon the decree holder challenged the maintainability of the Letters Patent appeal on the ground that the husband, having claimed the Court deposit as his own, was estopped from prosecuting the appeal, as he could not approbate and reprobate, held, since the appellate jurisdiction is statutory and contains no restriction which could stultify his right to appeal for such conduct, the husband's appeal is not rendered incompetent; it could not be said that he had abandoned his right to appeal with full knowledge of his legal rights; the rule of election is a rule of equity; the decree holder's contention does not advance either equity or justice: (1981) 2 M.L.J. 110 (D.B.).

Where the plaintiff in an earlier suit invited the jurisdiction of the authorities of the Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowment Department for declaring that he was the hereditary trustee on the ground that the suit temple was a public temple and thereafter he filed another suit for the declaration that the suit temple was a private temple, held, the plaintiff was entitled to choose one of the two inconsistent remedies, namely, for a declaration that it was a private temple and for a declaration that the office of the trusteeship was hereditary, and since he elected one remedy, namely for a declaration that he was holding the office as hereditary trustee and pursuing the same, he could not thereafter turn round and come forward with a prayer for the relief that the suit temple was a private temple; he was bounded by his election: (1991) 1 M.L.J. 67 (D.B.).

Where during the pendency of an appeal under S. 28 of the Mysore (Personal and Miscellaneous) Inam Abolitions Act, 1954 preferred by an Inamdar against registration of lands in the name of the tenant and not his own, the Deputy Commissioner awarded to him compensation under S. 17 of that Act which he received without preferring an appeal against the same separately provided under S. 31 of that Act, held, the Inamdar's right of appeal under S. 28 cannot be said to have come to an end; he was certainly a "party aggrieved"; the right of appeal is not confined to mere presentation of the memorandum of appeal but extends to its hearing and disposal on merits; the order of registration and award of compensation are different orders; there is no scope for invocation of the principle that one who takes benefit of the one must suffer the detriment of the other; there is no question of putting the Inamder to election as between the two orders which are not in the alternative and are governed by separate statutory provisions:

Estoppel by conduct—Applies to corporations as well as to individuals: (1979) 2 Karn.L.J. 318.

Estoppel by conduct is of the very essence of the rules of estoppel embodied in Ss. 115, 116 and 117 of the Evidence Act, but since the acts of the parties which come in for consideration in a litigation the acts, that is, of the party sought to be estopped, and those of the other who has been led thereby to change his position and who therefore pleads the bar of estoppel against the former must necessarily be acts performed prior to the commencement of the litigation. The conduct of a party in the course of the litigation, while it may affect the question of costs should be wholly irrelevant for judging those acts: A.I.R. 1958 All. 54 (D.B.).

To found a plea of estoppel by conduct there should be precise pleadings setting up the facts constituting the estoppel: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 447.

No person can be estopped either by attornment, pleading or other conduct, where the conduct constituting the estoppel was founded on a mistake of facts: A.I.R 1964 Cal. 439.

A party having, by his conduct, induced the other party to make an immediate payment of the decretal amount and having entered into an engagement with him which makes it impossible for him to question the decree, is estopped from acting contrary to his undertaking: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 644. See also A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 385.

Legitimacy—Treatment of defendant as member of family—No representation acted upon by defendant—Plaintiff not estopped from questioning legitimacy: 142 I.C. 606: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 412: unless the act which the plaintiff did to his own prejudice is referable to the defendant's representation, no estoppel arises: I.L.R. 61 Cal. 64: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 441.

Estoppel by conduct—Estoppel against law—Representation on matter of law—Facts rendering adoption by Hindu widow devoid of legal force known to person alleged to be adopted—Conduct of widow treating adoption as valid cannot operate as estoppel against widow: 1963 Jab.L.J. 817: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 348.

Where a property was sold on behalf of a Hindu minor through his karta or guardian on the condition of repurchase, held, the purchaser cannot repudiate the condition of repurchase; he is estopped by his conduct: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 65: (1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 436.

Estoppel by conduct—Purchaser of share of property—Subject to mortgage—No objection raised to the mutation of name in Butwara proceedings—Patti also granted—Mortgage not estopped. See A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 274.

Sale of property mortgaged by a co-partner as security for advances made to him independent of partnership business by his partner—Partner-creditor not a consenting party to sale—Receipt of the amount due by partner-creditor from out of sale proceeds, does not estop him from relying upon the sale as an act of insolvency: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 99: A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 106.

First application for eviction made in April, 1963 on ground that tenant was in arrears of rent from October, 1959—Part of arrears of rent paid together with interest and costs on first day of hearing—Pending first application, second application for eviction made in April, 1964 also on ground of arrears of rent from October, 1959—On entire arrears of rent together with interest and costs being paid according to S. 13 (2) (i), proviso, statement made by landlord that he withdrew second application and application dismissed by Rent Controller on same day—Held, that conduct of landlord estopped him from pursuing it and in any case only inference would be that he had waived his claim under first application: 1966 Cur. L.J. 862 (Punj.).

Sale deed by widow and daughter of last male holder executed in 1947—Suit by plaintiff daughter's son for declaration that sale deed by widow was not for legal necessity—Death of widow during pendency of litigation in 1960—Daughter held became absolute owner because of Act—Plaintiff's suit was not maintainable—Daughter estopped from challenging alienation being co-executant: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 335.

Agreement to sell—Sanction of military authorities conditions precedent—Title passes after sanction—Attachment of goods for recovery of income-tax arrears due from vendor, after passing of title is illegal—S. 26 (2) and S. 46, Income-tax Act held did not apply—Auction sale for recovery of income-tax arrears—Vendee purchasing property is not estopped from challenging attachment: A.I.R. 1963 All. 346.

Where though the respondent purchased the suit property in an auction from the custodian, Evacuee property in the year 1964 but he never took possession thereof and subsequently, said land was allotted in favour of another person and mutation was also sanctioned in his favour and, thereafter in favour of his son "S", who sold the suit land to the appellants who had been in possession of the suit land since its purchase and after 11 years from the date of alleged sale in favour of the respondent, he filed a suit for possession thereof, held, the respondent did not get the mutation sanctioned in his favour after its allotment to him right from 1964. His conduct was responsible for the appellants in believing that "S" was the owner of the suit property. Therefore, the respondent was estopped from filing the suit: (1993-1) 103 Punj.L.R. 86.

Judgment-debtor applying to set aside sale under R. 89—Auction purchaser on receiving its notice not depositing full amount under R. 85—His action being on belief created by judgment-debtor he does not forfeit his solatium amount—Estoppel of judgment-debtor: (1963) 2 An.W.R. 241: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 423.

By reason merely of an application which they filed for extension of time to file the amended plaint in accordance with the finding of the Court, the plaintiffs would not be estopped from coming up in revision against the order of the Court: A.I.R. 1953 Him. Pra. 123.

Suit by A against B, C—On death of A during pendency of suit, D applying for substitution of his name in place of A on basis of Will—Subsequent suit by X against B,C and D on basis of khata executed by A filed long after D's application in previous suit—Held, by omission to take plea on basis of Will in X's suit, it could not be said that D made B to believe that he was not sole heir of A: 1952 Raj.L.W. 492: I.L.R. (1952) 2 Raj. 431.

Widow—Surrender by—Only father taking benefit under it—Son, claiming through him, not receiving benefit under it—No estoppel against son to challenge surrender: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 47.

Where a kobala is executed by the Hindu mother on behalf of the minor on the footing that she is competent to transfer the property of the minor and this position is accepted by the alienee who has obtained an advantage by the transaction of sale and has got the entire property, including the share of the minor and has agreed to reconvey the property in its entirety, the alienee cannot turn round and repudiate the authority of the mother to effect the sale on behalf of the minor, or to repurchase the property of the minor upon refund of the consideration money. The alienee will be estopped by her conduct from doing so, and she must fulfil her part of the obligation by reconveying the property in favour of all the alienors including the minor: (1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 436: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 65.

The plaintiff and the first defendant were sisters. In the suit for possession of half share of the suit property, the plaintiff alleged that the suit property was the absolute property of her mother and upon her death this property devolved on her and the first defendant as her mother's heirs. Since according to her, the first defendant did not want to join her as co-plaintiff in the suit for possession and mesne profits she was joined as a defendant.

In a notice sent to the first defendant before filing the suit by the plaintiff it was stated that the plaintiff and the first defendant were joint owners of the suit properties which were in the possession of their father, and requested for her co-operation in order to effect the division of the properties. A copy of this notice was sent to the father and he sent a reply of it to the plaintiff. No reply, however, was sent by the first defendant. In the suit filed by the plaintiff, it was contended by the father that the first defendant by her conduct in not replying to the notice and in not co-operating with the plaintiff in filing the suit, was estopped from claiming possession of her alleged half share of the properties. Held, that the conduct of the defendant did not justify the inference of estoppel. It did not mean that she impliedly admitted that she had no interest in the properties: (1965) 2 S.C.W.R. 644: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812.

Instrument of guarantee—Alteration on instrument while in custody of guarantor and principal debtor—Alteration to benefit of guarantor—Alteration whether substantial—Guarantor if can avoid instrument of guarantee. See (1964) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 137: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 746.

Conduct—Co-operative Society—Election of Directors—Previous approval of Registrar—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 154.

Conduct—Gift to members of tarwad—Estoppel against tarwad: A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 77.

Joint family—Conduct—Estoppel by: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 388.

C.P.Code, 1908, O. 41, Rr. 1 and 2—New point—Question held mixed question of law and fact—Defendant held estopped from raising it in appeal: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 300.

A person who has acted as a trustee of a public temple as evinced by his own admissions and conduct and who has obtained decrees of the Courts in that capacity cannot subsequently turn round and claim the temple to be a private temple, or the properties as his absolute properties: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 270: (1964) 2 An.W.R. 457.

Where the Head of a Muth was not empowered but nevertheless granted permanent lease of the Muth property and upon his demise the new Head continued to realise rent, as the agent as well as the successor of the first Head, held, no estoppel could be invoked against the new Head in his suit for recovery of property on the ground of the lease being illegal: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 9.

Fire insurance—Damage to property caused by fire—Suit relating to claim of compensation in respect of—Clause in fire insurance policy stipulating period within which such suit is to be brought—Suit not brought within that period—It is barred—Conduct of insurance company held did not amount to estoppel: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 638.

If the owner of the Railways allows the Railways represented by its manager to deal with third person as a legal entity and to enter into a contract on that footing, he cannot, when a suit is brought on such contract, assert his position as the proper party nor can the Railway Administration repudiate its liability to be sued: I.L.R. 56 All. 828: 1934 All.L.J. 1093: A.I.R. 1934 All. 740.

Wife's succession not affected by estoppel arising out of husband's action: 1962 Jab.L.J. 286: 1962 M.P.L.J. 30.

Succession suit—Frame of plaint settled in a manner and using such expressions as are usually and commonly used in claims under customary law—Issue very widely worded and at the trial the parties knowing that they were litigating according to customary law and leading evidence accordingly—Defendants themselves attempting to support their title according to customary law—Defendants having themselves relied upon customary law cannot at later stage say that such law does not apply to the case: 1970 Cur. L.J. 195 (Punj.).

Assam Panchayat Act (XXIV of 1959), S. 3 (1) and (2), provisos—Gaon Sabha created by State Government recommending creation of another Gaon Sabha out of its area—Is estopped from challenging creation thereof by State Government. (Obiter): A.I.R. 1969 Assam 61.

Where in a suit to perpetually restrain the Municipal Corporation from interfering with the plaintiff's possession and construction over a plot, the Corporation contended that there was no such plot but as per the Town Planning Scheme there was a street at the suit site, held, since no street existed at the site and houses had already been allowed without objection from the Corporation to be built indiscriminately with no regard to the alleged public street, the Corporation was estopped from objecting to the construction of building on the plot: 1992 Punj.L.J. 273.

The defendant participated in the proceeding and all the witnesses examined on his side were brought to the Court on several dates after the default had occurred. The plaintiff cross-examined the witnesses and the suit has already reached the stage of argument. It was only at that stage that the defendant put in an application for dismissal of the suit. The defendant's conduct has been rightly relied upon by the trial Court for estopping him from raising the plea at such a belated stage: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 206.

An agreement between the Government and a grantee under a sanad was based on the assumption that the lands granted were Kadim Inam. The grantee led the Government by his conduct to believe that he accepted the assumption and obtained the benefit of a lower jodi.Held, that the grantee was estopped from contending that the lands were not Kadim Inam: (1934) 36 Bom.L.R. 1055: A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 47.

Defendant making payment of revenue and cess in excess of his liability in property and to the advantage of plaintiff—Later taking advantage of same—Payment by plaintiff of amount in excess of his liability in other property—Right to contribution from defendant—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 255. Estoppel is purely personal: I.L.R. 14 Cal. 406; I.L.R. 50 All. 885: A.I.R. 1928 All. 459. See also A.I.R. 1937 All. 701 (F.B.) [Agreement to abide by statement of third party—Binding nature of such statement—Right to challenge—Estoppel]; 20 Nag.L.J. 209 [Non-enhancement of assessment of Government land, if operates as estoppel against Government]. The fact that the Government based the assessment of a Zamindari on charges actually, though illegally, levied in the past does not give rise to the inference that they consented to the levy of similar charges in the future and the Government are not, therefore, estopped from disputing the legality of levies in the future. Basing assessment upon actual charges made in the past does not amount to affirmance that charges of a similar nature will be allowed in the future: I.L.R. (1949) Nag. 263: A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 140.

Where the order passed by the Collector confiscating a truck under S. 6-A of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 was set aside in review as owner had not been impleaded as a party and after making him a party and considering the case on merits order of confiscating the truck was again passed in review, held, the owner, even if not filed an appeal against the earlier order, was not estopped from filing an appeal against the confiscation order passed in review: 1978 All.L.J. 118: 1978 All.Cr.R. 150: 1978 All. W.C. 316.

A drawee who clearly makes the representation of acceptance not only by signing the bill but also by his conduct in accepting the documents and taking delivery of the goods, held, is estopped from denying the acceptance after having taken advantage of the documents. In such a case, there would be acceptance by conduct by virtue of estoppel and this conduct is in addition to the signature on the face of the bill. [A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 653, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 Del. 240: (1982) 22 Del.L.T. 326.

37. Waiver—General.—"Waiver" is the abandonment of a right in a way which entitles the other party to plead abandonment by way of confession and avoidance if that right is asserted thereafter; a waiver may be express or implied by conduct, and it may as well be without consideration: (1994) 3 Karn.L.J. 493.

Waiver may be express or implied. It may be intentional or due to inaction or gross carelessness or absence of diligence on the part of the party having the right or advantage in his favour. The party having such right or privilege has a discretion to exercise the same: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 436.

The general principle is that every one has a right to waive and to agree to waive the advantage of a law or rule made solely for the benefit and protection of the individual in his private capacity which may be dispensed with without infringing any public right or public policy. One can waive any benefit conferred upon him by Act of Parliament, unless it can be shown that such an agreement is in the circumstances of the particular case contrary to public policy: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 234: (1991) 2 Cal.L.J. 188.

"Waiver" arises in a situation where the person is entitled to alternative rights inconsistent with one another. If he has knowledge of the facts which give rise in law to the alternative rights and acts in a manner which is inconsistent only with his having chosen to rely on one of those rights, the law holds him to his choice even though he was unware of what would be the legal consequence of what he did. This is also sometimes described as Election rather than "Waiver". There is another type of waiver which debars a person from raising a particular defence to a claim against him. It arises when he either agrees with the claimant not to raise that particular defence or so conducts himself as to be estopped from raising it: (1987) 1 Cal.L.J. 188: (1987) 1 Cal.H.N. 220: (1986-87) 91 Cal.W.N. 971.

The essential element of waiver is that there must be a voluntary and intentional relinquishment of a known right or such conduct as warrants the inference of the relinquishment of such right. It means the forsaking the assertion of a right at the proper opportunity. Waiver is distinct from estoppel in that in waiver the essential element is actual intent to abandon or surrender right, while in estoppel such intent is immaterial. The necessary condition is the detriment of the other party by the conduct of the one estopped. An estoppel may result though the party estopped did not intend to lose any existing right. Thus, voluntary choice is the essence of waiver for which there must have existed an opportunity for a choice between the relinquishment and the conferment of the right in question: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1834; A.I.R. 1990 Ker. 261.

A waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right. There can be no waiver unless the person against whom the waiver is claimed had full knowledge of his rights and of facts enabling him to take effectual action for the enforcement of such rights: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 933; 1970 Lab.I.C. 614: 1970 Serv.L.R. 134.

Waiver means abandonment of a right; it may be express or implied from conduct; but it must be, "an intentional act with knowledge". There can be no waiver unless the person concerned is fully informed, and has full knowledge, of his right; and it must be an intentional abandonment. Thus, where a sugar mill sought full exemption of sales tax granted by statute and the State contended that it had waived its right by a letter, held, it could not be said that the mill was aware of its right to exemption under law; though ignorance of law in a certain context is no excuse but, as Lord Acton said, there is no and never has been a presumption that every one knows the law; on facts, waiver not established: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621.

Waiver is a matter of agreement, express or implied. In order to hold that the plaintiff must be deemed to have waived his rights, the Court must come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was aware of his right: I.L.R. (1955) 2 Cal. 365.

A waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of such right. The party waiving must have knowledge of the rights which he waives. A person cannot be held bound by any waiver unless he is aware of what exactly he is waiving and what rights he is giving up: A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 65.

There can be no waiver unless the person who is said to have waived is fully informed as to his right and with full knowledge of such right he intentionally abandons it: (1983) 2 Serv.L.J. 462.

Waiver means abandonment of a right and its basic requirement is that it must be an intentional act with knowledge of one's rights. There can be no waiver unless the person who is said to have waived is fully informed as to his rights and with full knowledge about the same he intentionally abandons them: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 61: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 238.

A person who is entitled to the benefit of a stipulation in a contract or of a statutory provision may waive it and allow the contract or transaction to proceed as though the stipulation or provision did not exist. Waiver of this kind depends upon consent, and the fact that the other party has acted upon it is sufficient consideration. Where the waiver is not express, it may be implied from conduct which is inconsistent with the continuance of the right. Where the plaintiff was permitted to withdraw the suit but he was to pay the costs of the defendant within two months of the date of the order or before the institution of the second suit but the plaintiff failed to do so and the defendant withdrew the costs deposited by the plaintiff after the disposal of the second suit, held, this conduct clearly showed that he could not have any intention to waive his right; if he wanted to waive, he could have withdrawn the deposited costs before the disposal of the suit. [A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 113; A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 257, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1955 Punj. 97, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 Bom. 220: 1971 Mah.L.J. 315.

There is a distinction between statutory provisions (i) conferring jurisdiction and (ii) regulating procedure; jurisdiction can neither be waived nor created by consent but procedure, on the other hand, may be waived by conduct or agreement. Waiver arises where a party is entitled to inconsistent alternative rights; if he knows the facts on which the alternative rights are founded and acts in a manner inconsistent with one set of right, the law holds him to the choice even if he was unaware of its legal consequences; "waiver" is sometimes described as "election": A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2065.

Cases relating to waiver: I.L.R. 11 Rang. 79: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 52 ; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 546. See also 171 I.C. 461: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 399 ; 20 Nag.L.J. 209.

Question of waiver is a mixed question of law and fact: (1979) 1 L.L.J. 478: 1979 Serv.L.J. 433: 1979 Lab.I.C. 506 (Cal.).

The plea of waiver being a plea of fact, it has to be pleaded and proved. Thus, where the State had raised the plea in its affidavit in reply to a writ petition which did not have even a vague indication thereof, held, it could not be allowed to be raised for the first time at the hearing: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621.

Waiver of privilege conferred by statute: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 211.

It may be stated as a general rule that if the statute is solely for the benefit of a person, he may waive his right or the benefit, if he thinks fit, or give up the rights of personal or private nature created under an agreement, but he cannot waive a benefit, conferred by a statute which has public policy for its object. Therefore, where a prohibition or interdiction is absolute in respect of a provident fund standing to the credit of a subscriber, it is not open for a person to circumvent the provisions of law by entering into an agreement. It is not, therefore, open for the dependent to waive his right and agree to have the amount brought into the Court for payment to the decree-holder in satisfaction of his decree: (1966) 1 L.L.J. 361: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 303.

Where though at the time of filing written statement, the defendant had sought scaling down of the mortgage debt under the T.N. Indebted Agriculturists Relief Act, 1972, but he gave it up at the time of passing of preliminary decree and even paid some amount thereafter and even after passing of final decree and he only sought extension of time for further payment, held, subsequently, he could not seek relief under the aforesaid Act once again: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 753 (D.B.).

Protection granted to agriculturists against attachment of their dwelling houses is not intended to confer any personal benefit on them; it is based on public policy so as to avoid interruption of agricultural operation which is against the national interest. Thus, the plea of waiver or estoppel is not available to the decree-holder against the agricultural judgment-debtor objecting to the attachment of his dwelling house. [A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 391; A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 155; A.I.R. 1952 All. 680, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Kam. 84: (1974) 2 Kam.L.J. 108.

Houses, etc.—Judgment-debtor's only residential house—Before passing order of attachment, the Court must decide that the property is not exempt from attachment—Failure to do so renders the order null—Sale effected in pursuance of such an order must be set aside—Benefit of section cannot be waived and more so by constructive res judicata: 1966 Cur. L.J. 921.

Attachment—Exemption from—Provision is mandatory—Property not liable to attachment—Judgment-debtor agreeing to its attachment—He cannot waive protection given under S. 60: 1961 Raj.L.W. 261.

Protection given under S. 60(1), proviso (c) of the C.P.Code, exempting house of an agriculturist from attachment, held, cannot be waived: A.I.R. 1983 Andh. Pra. 136 (D.B.).

Principle of waiver—Applicability and scope—Applies to mandatory provisions also—Limitations are (i) that party cannot waive a statutory requirement which has been inserted by Legislature in public interest as distinguished from the interest of the parties, and (ii) parties cannot by waiver invest Tribunal with jurisdiction which it does not have—Requirement of Cl. 2 of First Schedule to Arbitration Act, 1940 is capable of being waived—Thus, where two arbitrators did not appoint an umpire though it was one of the terms of the reference, but the plaintiff waived that non-compliance by appearing before the Tribunal, he could not later on object to the award being invalid on the ground of non-compliance with Cl. 2 of the First Schedule to Arbitration Act—[Arbitration Act, 1940, First Schedule, Cl. 2]: (1967) 69 Bom. L.R. 237: 1967 Mah.L.J. 532: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 373.

Waiver of non-compliance with a provision of an Act—Effect: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 373: (1967) 69 Bom.L.R. 237: 1967 Mah.L.J. 532.

Laches—Waiver: A.I.R. 1957 All. 91.

Mere waiver, acquiescence or laches not amounting to an abandonment of his right or to an estoppel against a person cannot disentitle that person from claiming relief in equity in respect of his executed and not merely executory contract: (1953) 1 M.L.J. 374: 1953 S.C.R. 351: A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 98. There can be no waiver of the ground of limitation. [A.I.R. 1920 P.C. 139; I.L.R. 47 Pat. 226, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1991 Bom. 35.

Where an application for bringing on record the legal representative of a deceased party (tenant in an eviction proceeding) was moved beyond 30 days of the party's death, held, the legal representative is not estopped from contending that it be dismissed under S. 3 of the Limitation Act, 1963 even if the legal representative had participated in the proceedings; mere participation does not amount to waiver: A.I.R. 1976 All. 15: (1975) 1 All.L.R. 580: 1976 All.L.J. 178 (D.B.).

Mere delay of the plaintiff in enforcing his right is not itself sufficient to refuse him relief. Since waiver is contractual, there must be an agreement under which the plaintiff released his rights or agreed not to assert such right: I.L.R. (1973) Mys. 790.

Proceeding under Employees' Provident Funds and Miscellaneous Provisions Act (1952)—Initiation of—Delay in—Does not amount to waiver: 1983 Lab.I.C. 940 (Pat.).

The case of waiver and implied agreement involves questions of law and fact and in the absence of specific pleading and specific issue such pleas cannot be allowed to be raised in appeal: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 146.

Plea of waiver not raised before trial Court nor question to that effect was framed by Court—Held, waiver was largely question of fact and first appellate Court was wrong in entertaining question of waiver for first time in appeal before it: 1967 All.L.J. 371.

Obiter.—Where a man with the knowledge of the irregularity of particular course nevertheless concurs in it, he cannot afterwards take advantage of the irregularity: 1956 An.L.T. 781: 1956 An.W.R. 868.

Vesting of estate cannot be divested by acts of waiver or estopped by State or its Officers: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 387.

An agreement to waive all illegality is void on the ground of public policy: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 689.

38. Waiver of statutory notice.—A notice under S. 80, C.P. Code is for the benefit of the State or the public officer concerned and the requirement of the notice can be waived by the person entitled to the notice. Thus, where plaintiff sustained injuries on account of an accident caused by negligence of defendant, a driver in police department, and in a suit for damages filed by plaintiff no notice under S. 80, C.P.Code was issued to defendant-driver who chose to remain ex parte and filed no written statement, held, the defendant-driver would be deemed to have waived the requirement of notice under S. 80, C.P.Code and suit was not defective for want of notice. [A.I.R. 1973 P.&H. 339, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1983 Ker. 46: 1982 Ker.L.T. 962: 1982 Ker.L.J. 585 (D.B.).

Intention is a purely subjective matter and, therefore, it is the surrounding circumstances and the proved facts from which the Courts gather the intention of a party. Whether certain proved and admitted facts in law amount to waiver or not has necessarily to be held to be a question of law. Intention has to be assumed, for the purpose of waiver, from the conduct of the parties. Where the State Government decided to associate itself with the proceedings and thus it did not object to the validity of the notice under S. 80 of the C.P. Code, held, the waiver was intentional on the part of the State Government. [I.L.R. 40 Cal. 503; I.L.R. 21 All. 496, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 437 (D.B.).

Where a suit was instituted against the State Government as well as the Land Reforms Deputy Collector to restrain them from settlement by auction of his fishery rights but without serving them with the notice under S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure as that would render the suit infructuous, held, the suit was not maintainable for want of notice; though the requirement of the notice was for protection of the Government and the public servants and they could, thus, waive it, but it is difficult to cull out the principle of waiver from the facts of the case. [A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 190, Overruled; A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 303, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 141: 1970 Pat.L.J.R. 387: 1970 B.L.J.R. 343 (D.B.).

Objection to maintainability of suit for want of proper notice under S. 80, C.P.Code overruled—In appeal, State not taking objection—State deemed to have waived it—Private party not entitled to take objection, it is open only to State: A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 280.

Objection about defect in notice under S. 80, C.P.Code, not raised in written statement—Inference that objection has been waived can be drawn: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 451.

Waiver postulates a voluntary and deliberate mental act, mere negligence or delay per se in raising the plea of want of notice under S. 80, C.P.Code, by the defendant does not constitute waiver. Non-adoption of the plea of want of notice in the written statement may conceivably be attributable to ignorance of law or sheer negligence on the part of either defendant or his Counsel. It would be extremely unfair in such circumstances to ascribe waiver of notice to the defendant. It follows that the plea of waiver can be sustained only on the basis of evidence, direct or circumstantial, that it had been consciously given up by the defendant. [A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 197; A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 274; A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 25; A.I.R. 1964 All. 471; A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 108; A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 160, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 51.

Waiver of notice by the Chief Commercial Superintendent of Railway—Validity. See A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 17 (D.B.).

Goods consigned on Railway A for delivery on Railway B—Goods destroyed by fire in godown of A—Notice by consignor under S. 77 to A—Consignor directed to contact Railway B—Further notice under S. 80, C.P. Code given by consignor to B and suit brought against B by both consignor and consignee—Held, that there was no compliance with S. 80, C.P. Code—Suit also held bad for non-joinder for no cause of action and dismissed—Railway A also held not estopped under S. 115, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 172.

Arbitration proceedings—Requirement of service of notice to Government pleader—Government pleader whether could be said to have waived requirement and State if estopped from challenging award. See 1979 B.L.J.R. 720.

39. Waiver of objection to admissibility of evidence.—Where a document has been admitted without objection, held, it cannot be challenged in appeal; but if the evidence was received without objection in direct contravention of an imperative provision of law, whether by acquiescence, or waiver or estoppel, its admission could be challenged as being in positive violation of a legislative enactment: A.I.R. 1990 Ker. 146: (1989) 2 Ker.L.J. 349: (1989) 1 Ker.L.T. 813.

Admitting a document to go in trial without challenge or protest cannot take the place of proof of execution which would establish it, what it purports to be. Where evidence has been received without remonstration or demur, in direct contravention of an imperative provision of law, the principle of acquiescence, waiver or estoppel can never be imported to cure the defect, for none of these principles is available against a positive legislative enactment. [A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 160, Rel. on]: 1984 Ker.L.T. 855.

When the parties themselves have allowed certain statements to be placed on the record as a part of their evidence, it is not open to them to urge later either in the same Court or in a Court of appeal that the evidence produced was inadmissible. To allow them to do so would indeed be permitting them both to approbate and reprobate: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 908.

The admissibility of any evidence may be challenged at any stage, even though it is not objected to at the time of admission. The mode of proof, however, is a different matter: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 515.

Evidence—Inadmissibility of, by reason of prior decision—No estoppel by reason of: I.L.R. 7 Pat. 85: A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 32.

Objection to admission of additional evidence not raised before lower Appellate Court—Estoppel against raising the same in revision: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 110.

Secondary evidence—Insufficiently stamped documents not produced before Court—Secondary evidence as to contents of such document—Admissibility—Opposite party not objecting to admission of such secondary evidence—Effect: (1967) 2 An.W.R. 444.

The party by its own conduct may waive the objection about the production of secondary evidence by not raising the relevant contention at the time when the secondary evidence of the original is sought to be tendered before the trial Court. Thus, where no objection was taken to the production of secondary evidence in trial Court, held, waiver of objection may be inferred: A.I.R. 1984 Guj. 69: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 831 (D.B.).

Termination of service—Notice of discharge—Necessity—Waiver—Effect of. See A.I.R. 1956 Tripura 33.

Where the Municipal Board, having leased out a nazul land, had terminated the lease by quit notice under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 of which the clerk receiving rent thereafter was not aware, held, it would not amount to waiver of notice by the Board; there can be no waiver unless the Board was shown to have full knowledge of the facts enabling it to enforce its rights: A.I.R. 1977 All. 386: 1977 All.W.C. 651.

Affidavits filed by assessee—Department not objecting to their being taken in evidence by High Court—Appeal to Supreme Court—Objection must be taken to have been waived: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 339.

40. Waiver—In case of remand.—Inherent power of remand—Remand to admit fresh evidence from parties for reasons not covered by O. 41, R. 27—Respondent accepting pecuniary benefit under order of remand, cannot say that order of remand was wrong in law: (1960) 2 Ori.J.D. 82.

Where at the time the case was remanded back to the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal by the Revenue Tribunal, no objection was taken by the petitioner to the order of remand, held, subsequently, after the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal had passed its revised order, the petitioner could not challenge the validity of order of remand: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1192: (1986) 3 S.C.C. 349.

Where in second appeal arising from a suit for eviction, the tenant had argued that the Courts below were right in not deciding the question of title and accepting his argument, the second appellate Court, while remanding the matter, did not give any direction to the Court below to investigate into the question of title and decide it finally, held, in appeal arising from the order of remand Court, the tenant could not be allowed to turn round and say that the Court below should have decided finally on its merit, the question of title: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 195.

Deputy Commissioner remanding case regarding fixation of fair rent for disposal—Rent Controller recording evidence and fixing fair rent—Appeal dismissed by Deputy Commissioner and also application for review—Party not prevented from challenging order of remand: 1958 Nag.L.J. (Notes) 2.

Where the High Court in revision remitted the case for eviction for decision in accordance with law and the special leave petition against that order was dismissed by the Supreme Court, held, the remand order continued to exist; merely because in another case the Supreme Court declared that in matters relating to eviction proceedings the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in exercise of revisional power under S. 115 of the C.P.Code would not ipso facto render the order of remand a nullity; by sitting on the fencing, not challenging the remand order on the strength of the Supreme Court's subsequent authority and participating in the proceedings, the tenant had waived his rights and was estopped from impugning the final order on the ground that the remand order was a nullity: A.I.R. 1991 Ker. 102: (1990) 2 Ker.L.J. 263: (1990) 2 Ker.L.T. 454.

The assessee, a Bar Council, deriving income from securities (interest) and other income by way of enrolment fees, contended that its income by enrolment fees was exempt under S. 10 (23-A) and interest on securities was exempt from tax under S. 11 of the Income-tax Act, 1961. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal allowed its claim regarding exemption under S. 10 (23-A) and remanded the matter in respect of claim for exemption under S. 11 for examining the purpose for which the securities were held by the assessee. The Department did not challenge the order of remand on the ground that by reason of exemption having been obtained by the assessee under S. 10 (23-A) exemption under S. 11 was ruled out and thus remand was unnecessary. Held, as the Revenue acquiesced in the view taken by the Tribunal that the claim for exemption under S. 11 could not be said to be ruled out by reason of the provisions of S. 10 (23-A), the doctrine of estoppel would come in the picture and the Revenue would be estopped from raising the said point subsequently: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1462: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 308: 1981 U.J. (S.C.) 507.

41. Waiver—Illustrative cases.—The right to challenge a decree can be waived even by conduct after the passing of the decree: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 76: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 12.

Where a car carrying smuggled goods was seized and the Customs Authorities knowing that the person in charge of the car was not its owner but only a hirer continued with the seizure proceedings without mandatory notice under S. 124 of the Customs Act, 1962 to the car owner, held, merely because the owner with knowledge of the proceedings did not participate could not amount to the "waiver" of his right to contest the adjudication proceedings; he could not be estopped from doing so: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 131: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 746.

Where even though the defendant-Life Insurance Corporation accepted the 3rd, 4th and 5th premiums payable in terms of policy and granted receipt and it even accepted belated payment of second premium along with interest without any demur but claimed that no amount was payable to plaintiff nominee of deceased assured as policy had lapsed because 2nd premium was not paid in time, held, Life Insurance Corporation would be deemed to have waived its right to withhold payment under said policy on account of non payment of 2nd premium: A.I.R. 1989 Pat. 269.

Where the Life Insurance Corporation had not demanded interest from the assured in respect of some periods while realising interest for other periods, held, the Corporation could be taken to have waived its right to interest for those other periods; that was the reason it never demanded interest for those periods; and it continued to accept premium from the assured for those periods without interest; all essentials of waiver stand satisfied: A.I.R. 1979 Pat. 124: 1979 B.L.J.R. 225 (D.B.).

Decree-holder not claiming interest in execution application—Waiver—Interest cannot be claimed by subsequent application: 1958 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 17.

Non-raising of objection as to non-joinder of party, at earlier stage, must be considered as waived: 19 Law Rep. 22: (1969) 2 Mys.L.J. 23.

It is open to plaintiff to waive his right of getting vacant possession of the property on execution of the decree and to seek specific performance of the contract by compelling the defendant to execute the document conveying his right under the decree, without insisting on getting vacant possession: A.I.R. 1991 Ker. 288: (1991) 1 Ker.L.J. 339: (1991) 1 Ker.L.T. 787.

A decree-holder who had obtained a charge for maintenance applied for execution but omitted to mention the charge in the execution petition. Subsequently, she applied to enforce the charge in subsequent execution. Held, that the omission of the decree-holder to disclose the charge in the first application could hardly be treated as a waiver on her part for all time. At best, it was a waiver on her part in the first execution case. Held, further, that the mere fact that she omitted in her first application for execution to mention the existence of the charge would not estop her under S. 115, Evidence Act from enforcing the charge in subsequent execution in absence of anything to indicate that by her omission she intentionally caused or permitted the auction-purchaser to believe that the property in question was not subject to a charge and to act upon such belief: (1955-56) 60 Cal.W.N. 1080: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 204.

For a plea of waiver there must be a proper pleading and sufficient evidence to bound it. The person said to have waived his right must know his rights and then only the question of waiver can arise. There must also be a contract or an agreement. Where, in execution proceedings, the judgment-debtor merely asked for a month's time to deposit the decretal amount expressing his willingness to withdraw his application under O. 21, R. 90, and the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser had no objection, that was far from an agreement which gave rise to a waiver: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 731: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 45: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 230.

In a suit instituted by a firm through its partner, a mere certificate of registration of the firm was filed and it was not averred or shown that the said partner was shown as such in the Register of Firms. Though the defendant's plea in the written statement was one of non-compliance with the prerequisite condition under S. 69(2) of the Partnership Act, 1930 but he did not join, nor pressed for raising and trying the issue nor sought from the plaintiff the names of its partners. Held, the defendant had waived the right to raise the objection; he was precluded from calling upon the Court to dismiss the suit for non-compliance with the statutory pre-requisite: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 63: (1971) 1 An.W.R. 287.

In order to constitute a waiver it must be found that the writ petitioner had any previous adequate opportunity to raise an objection effectively and had not done so: (1981) 1 Cal.L.J. 305.

Natural justice—Rules as to—Principle of waiver: A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 316: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 98 (D.B.).

The delay of either party in not performing the terms of the contract for sale on his part, or in not prosecuting his rights through the inference of the Court by the institution of an action will constitute such laches as will disentitle him to the aid of the Court. Such delay would even amount to an abandonment on his part of the contract: 1953 Ker.L.T. 397: I.L.R. (1953) Trav.-Co. 1011: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 377(F.B.).

Where the plaintiff failed to complete the work within the stipulated period and no action was taken by the Chief Engineer in terms of Cl. (2) of the agreement and he allowed the plaintiff to continue the work and accepted the performance of the contract work and prepared the final bill and after that he recommended the penalty to be imposed in terms of Cl. (2) of the agreement and the plaintiff pleaded estoppel, held, the Chief Engineer was the person to determine the compensation for delay in work. Obviously he did not do. In the circumstance of the case, it would amount to a waiver of his right to fix the compensation and to recover the same from the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 229: 1971 Raj.L.W. 194 (D.B.).

Waiver of right to pre-empt—Evidence—Receipt executed by vendor in favour of vendee and signed by pre-emptor is no evidence to prove that pre-emptor had signed it as an attesting witness—An attesting witness merely testifies that the executant of the document signed that document in his presence—He is not supposed to know the contents of the document which is executed by the executant: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 14.

One A sold his land to B, C, brother of A was present at the time of mutation and raised no objection to the sale effected by his brother. C, however, asserted that he would file a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale. The vendee B never objected to the right of pre-emption claimed by C in his suit. Held, that the conduct of C could not amount to any representation to the vendee that he had in any way precluded himself to bring a suit for pre-emption in future. If any person could defeat C on the ground of waiver it was the vendee and no one else. The plea of a waiver could only be raised by a party who had accepted the representation of another and had acted to his detriment in relying upon it. Such a plea was not available to the rival pre-emptor D and more so when C had filed the earlier suit for pre-emption. All that could be said was that C admitted the sale and did not object to it. That by itself could not constitute waiver. C's claim for pre-emption could not therefore, be defeated by the rival pre-emptor D: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 308.

A right created by contract, for example in a consent decree, may be waived. This waiver can be either express or implied. Such a right can be created only where it is agreed between the parties that the right created by consent shall be given up and the other side as a result thereof has altered its position. Where a party has two rights, the mere exercise of one right does not amount to waiver of the other but there are alternative rights, the exercise of one right might imply that the party has waived the exercise of the other. The nature of the rights and liabilities created by the consent decree must be clearly borne in mind. Where by a consent decree in a suit for possession and arrears of rent, the decree-holder is entitled to the payment of mesne profits in certain instalments and in default to execute the decree for possession, when there is default in payment of instalments it is not that the decree-holder has two alternative rights, namely, either to get the money or get possession. Upon default, he is entitled to both. Clearly therefore, the acceptance of money after the default cannot by itself amount to a waiver. In order to amount to an abandonment of a right, parties must agree that the right should no longer be enforced or there should arise an estoppel which prevents the decree-holder from enforcing the right. For an estoppel to arise, it requires a representation on behalf of the judgment-creditor and a change of position on behalf of the judgment-debtor consequent thereto. Held, that the onus was upon the judgmentdebtor to prove waiver on the part of the decree-holder to exercise a right which had arisen under the decree and that the judgment-debtor had not been able to establish waiver which would estop the judgment creditor from demanding execution of the decree by recovery of possession: A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 473.

Requirements—Indian firm entering into contract with foreign State-owned trade enterprise for supply of machinery—Firm suing enterprise on such contract—Enterprise entering unconditional appearance and not reserving right to claim immunity of foreign State—No waiver by such conduct of enterprise: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 192.

Merely because a person had waived his remuneration for earlier periods, it does not follow from it that he waived his remuneration for period subsequent to such waiver: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 18: A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 191.

Waiver—Scope and applicability—Agent of owner is not entitled to benefit of liability of carrier under S. 8 of the Carriers Act, 1865—Suit by agent on basis of S. 8 is not maintainable even though no objection to maintainability is raised in written statement: (1963) 2 An.W.R. 190: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 71.

Past maintenance—Widow of deceased coparcener has legal right to claim arrears—Defeasance of such right—Express allegation and proof of waiver, abandonment and estoppel essential—Demand by widow for such arrears and refusal, not necessary to support her claim: (1966) 1 An. W.R. 57.

Representation — Waiver — Letter by Government of India to the contractor stating that in order to avoid hardship to the contractor, the Government, after consideration, had decided to undertake the initial liability for the payments to the contractor for goods supplied relating to areas now included in Pakistan and to recover Pakistan's share through debt settlement. Held, that the letter did not constitute waiver on part of Government of India of their position under Indian Independence (Rights, Property and Liabilities) Order 1947, S. 8 (1): (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 186: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 5.

Defect in or lack or basic incompetence in jurisdiction can never be waived. Defect in procedure only can be waived. Where the constitution of an arbitration Court by the Secretary of the Calcutta Grain, Oilseed and Rice Association was not in accordance with the Rules of the Association, the appointment went to the root of the matter and the constitution of the Court was a nullity. Therefore, if an application is made to set aside the award challenging the jurisdiction of such an arbitration Court, the fact that the applicant appeared in the arbitration and took part in the proceedings does not amount to waiver. Nor could the appearance before the arbitrator be considered as a fresh agreement in absence of any averment in affidavit that there was fresh agreement between the parties: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 547.

Jurisdiction of High Court—Question of fact—Notice of ejectment—Question of waiver raised for first time in writ petition—Decision necessary for disposal of petition—High Court could decide it in the circumstances: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 629: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 179.

Where the Supreme Court had directed the transfer of a criminal trial under Ss. 161, 165, 384, 420, 164, 165-A of the Indian Penal Code and S. 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act of the Chief Minister from the Court of the Special Judge to the High Court per incuriam and against Ss. 6 and 7 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952, held, merely because no objection was then raised against the transfer on this ground would not amount to waiver; earlier direction of transfer revoked: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1531.

Convening of a meeting and the resolution passed at such meeting being invalid the person thereby affected cannot be said to have waived the illegality by his allowing the proceedings to take place without any objection from him: (1967) 1 Mys.L.J. 405: 9 Law Rep. 174.

Where the Chief Conservator of Forests was one of the members of the Selection Board and was also a candidate, and none of the candidates offering for selection had any opportunity of appearing before the Selection Board nor were they aware of the procedure followed by the Board as the selections were made on consideration of records of candidates only, the mere fact that the unsuccessful candidate did not register with the Board in time their objections as to validity of the constitution of the Board did not amount to acquiescence. They could, therefore, agitate the validity of constitution of Selection Board in the writ petition filed by them: 1970 Serv. L.R. 134: 1970 Lab.I.C. 614 (Mys.).

Initiation of proceedings under taxing statute—Irregularity in procedure—Jurisdiction of Taxing Officer to assess—Waiver and acquiescence by assessee—Effect of. See A.I.R. 1957 Assam 103. Failure to appoint umpire—Waiver of irregularity—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1954 All. 673.

When no objection to the constitution of the R.T.A. on the ground of bias of one of its members was taken by the petitioner when the R.T.A. considered his renewal application or, when it decided the matter, held, that he was now estopped from raising this objection in an application under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution: 1956 B.L.J.R. 607: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 732.

Failure to raise objection—Constitution of Tribunal of Bar Council—Allegation of bias against member—Objection raised for first time before High Court—When amounts to waiver. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 425: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 254.

Where plaintiff sought to recover certain amount from the defendant on the basis of a pro-note and in reply to notice sent by plaintiff, the defendant refuted the factum of execution of any agreement or pro-note and any obligation thereunder but subsequently he took the stand that there was no presentment of pro-note, held, in view of his reply to notice sent by plaintiff, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the right of presentment of pro-note in view of the S. 76 (c) of Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. [A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 297, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 P.&H. 197.

Where an allotted site together with the building raised thereon was resumed for non-payment of instalments and the Chief Commissioner in revision under S. 10(4) of the Capital of Punjab (Sale of Sites and Building) Rules, 1960 had finally confirmed the order of resumption but allowed the allottee the option of its repurchase and the allottee thereafter sent Rs. 70,000 to the Estate Officer and asked for the balance amount including interest payable by the allottee, held, the acceptance of the money by the Estate Officer was in the context of the allottee's right to repurchase and not as unpaid instalments; it did not constitute waiver on his part of the order of resumption: (1990-2) 98 Punj.L.R. 289: 1990 Punj.L.J. 444: (1990) 2 Rev.L.R. 148.

Where a show-cause notice was issued to the appellant, who had a mining lease, by the Collector for not complying with certain conditions and thereafter the State Government cancelled his lease and forfeited the security deposit but a day after the State Government had cancelled the lease, the Collector issued another notice and directed the appellant to rectify the breaches within 60 days from the receipt of notice, whereupon the appellant pleaded a case of waiver of the first notice on account of the issuance of the second notice, held, when the State Government cancelled the licence, the lease came to an end. Obviously, without knowledge of this termination of the lease, the Collector sent the second notice. There was no intentional abandonment which is essential for "waiver". Indeed, the Collector could not have had even knowledge of the cancellation of the lease by the State Government. Moreover, once the lease had been cancelled, it was beyond the Collector's powers by any act of his to bring the lease back to life. Therefore, the doctrine of waiver was not applicable: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1691: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 741: 1977 U.J. (S.C.) 331.

42. Estoppel against estoppel.—Estoppel against estoppel sets matter at large—This principle applies equally in case of admission so that admission against admission also sets matter at large: 1969 Raj.L.W. 507.

Where the case is one of two competing estoppels, one arising out of the execution of a mortgage and the other arising out of a judgment in the previous suit, the latter estoppel should prevail. In the words of Lord Coke estoppel against estoppel sets the matter at large: I.L.R. 7 Luck. 73: A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 263.

Where the widow after her re-marriage as also the brother of her deceased husband knew that she had no right in the property of her deceased husband, held, it cannot be said that either of them had made a representation to the other for founding the plea of estoppel against each other: A.I.R. 1972 Him. Pra. 20: (1971) 1 Sim.L.J. 1 (D.B.).

43. Estoppel in cases of fraud.—Fraud and estoppel have a number of features in common though the doctrine of estoppel is more broad based. The essential elements of actionable fraud are: (1) that the person alleged to have committed fraud has made a material representation to his victim; (2) that the representation made is false to the knowledge of the maker or was made recklessly without knowledge of its truth and as a positive assertion ; (3) the representation has been made with the intention that it be acted upon by the party to be defrauded; (4) that that party acted in reliance upon such a representation and that (5) he thereby suffered injury. The absence of any one of these elements is fatal to an action based on fraud. To constitute an estoppel, the following elements must be present: (1) either a representation or concealment of material facts; (2) such a representation must have been made with the knowledge of real facts; (3) the party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the matter; (4) the intention of the person making the representation was that the other party should act upon it; (5) the other party was thereby induced to act upon it ; and (6) did so to its detriment.

The common feature of both estoppel and fraud is that law will not come to the rescue of a person who has not suffered deception, as, where he has not been led to believe in the truth of the representation. Similarly, omission to disclose facts which are known to exist, cannot furnish a ground for an action on the basis of fraud. No redress is available to a person who with full knowledge of the falsity of the representation, acts to his detriment as the injury in such a case will be of one's own inviting.

Held, on the facts of the case, that the principles of estoppel could not be invoked by the Official Liquidator or the Company so as to pin down the Managing Director to the false averments made by him. The person sought to be defrauded was not the Company but the Inspector of Insurance. With a view to satisfy the insurance administration, false entries had been made in the books of the Company as to the receipt of certain moneys by way of free gifts and false credits were shown which had no factual existence. Once the Inspector of Insurance had been hoodwinked by the Directors as a result of false entries on the Company's credit side, later on by making debit entries in order to cancel the credit entries, the Company cannot be said to have been deprived of the benefit which it had never actually received in the first instance: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 543.

Colourable and fraudulent transaction of lease brought about to defeat Income-tax law—Fraud perpetrated and lessor deriving benefit before he transferred that property—Transferee from him cannot avoid the lease by setting up the plea that it was a sham and nominal transaction: A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 10. As between parties in pari delicto there can be no estoppel: I.L.R. 23 Cal. 962; I.L.R. 33 Cal. 967; I.L.R. 35 Cal. 551 (P.C.); I.L.R. 31 Mad. 27. But see (1903-4) 8 Cal.W.N. 623; 32 M.L.J. 488; 36 Cal.L.J. 391.

G sold his share of the suit house to R: Thereafter G and his mother sold the entire house including G's share to A and B. In the suit instituted by R for possession of portion sold to him by G, it was found that at the time of the second sale R had represented to the defendant's vendee (A and B) that one-third share in the house had been mortgaged to him and that he had completely suppressed the fact of sale in his favour with respect to that share and that by concealment of this latter fact R induced the defendant vendees to pay him money on behalf of vendors and also to have the sale deed completed in favour of the vendees which they would not have done had they knew that one-third of the house had already been sold to R. Held, that all the ingredients of S. 115 were present and the principle of estoppel fully operated against R.: 1963 Raj.L.W. 177: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 552: A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 141.

Where plaintiff, an illiterate woman and entirely dependent on the defendant, was persuaded to subscribe her signature to a partition deed in the belief that it was to avoid tax, held, such a partition deed could not operate to estop the plaintiff from claiming her legitimate share. [A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 50, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 133 (D.B.).

The marriage of a girl with a fickle-minded and lacking in worldly wisdom boy was solemnised on the condition agreed to between their respective fathers that the groom's father would settle a substantial part of his property in favour of his son and daughter-in-law. But later on, the groom's father backed out and in litigation in the revenue Court, a compromise was arrived at and power to sell the properties was granted to the attorneys named but the groom's father nevertheless sold the lands to third parties which sales were challenged by the wife and her minor daughter as null and void being in breach of the trust said to have been created by the compromise. Held, though the documents did not create any trust, express or constructive and the suit was liable to be dismissed but the doctrine of promissory estoppel was attracted. But for the promise made as aforesaid by the boy's father, the girl and her father would not have changed their positions to their detriment and there would have been no marriage. The impugned sales made by the boy's father who became smart and took advantage of helpless condition of his daughter-in-law and minor grand daughter as also of his own son, the purchasers having stepped into the shoes of the boy and his father were bound in equity to make good the promise made by the boy's father for the benefit of his daughter-in-law; invoking its powers under Art. 142 of the Constitution, the Supreme Court directed the purchasers to pay to the wife and her daughter a sum of Rs. 60,000 in full and final satisfaction of their claim; a decree for that amount passed in their favour and rest of the suit dismissed: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1624.

One's own fraud cannot be pleaded: A.I.R. 1929 All. 237. Fraud committed upon creditors—Judgment-debtor is estopped: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 298.

Doctrine of estoppel cannot be invoked by the defendant claiming from her husband, through whose concealed fraud the plaintiff was kept in ignorance of his real rights and was in consequence induced to execute a release of all his claims: (1931-32) 36 Cal.W.N. 758: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 353. See also 4 O.W.N. 1019; A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 280.

A person who furnishes false information to the Government in feigned compliance with a statutory requirement cannot defend against prosecution for his fraud by challenging the validity of the requirement itself: (1969) 24 Law. Ed. 2nd 275: A.I.R. 1970 U.S.S.C. 78.

44. Estoppel by judgment/decree.—(See also Note 7, supra). There can be no estoppel by judgment or decree apart from the doctrine of res judicata unless the same matter is found to be in issue in the former trial as that now in question and unless the judgment was rendered on the merits: 1938 Mad.W.N. 224 (2): 47 Mad.L.W. 374. See also 1940 Nag.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 163.

Judgment not inter partes whether operates as estoppel. See A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 86 (D.B.). The essence of estoppel by judgment is that a party cannot be allowed to say one thing at one time and another at later time. A judgment can be an estoppel only as between the parties to it unless it is a judgment in rem which is binding against all the world. That a judgment in personam cannot be construed as being conclusive against persons not parties thereto is borne out by the scheme of the Evidence Act from Ss. 40 to 44. Only judgments referred to in S. 41 constitute conclusive proof of what they contain and S. 40 in terms provides that judgments not referred to in Ss. 40, 41 and 42 are irrelevant unless the existence of such judgments is a fact in issue or relevant under some other provisions of the Act. Even if they are relevant this would not be conclusive. When the subsequent suit is not between the parties to the prior litigation, no question of estoppel would arise: 1958 An.L.T. 938: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 280.

A judgment not only creates a right, it also works as an estoppel. A judgment creating a charge on immovable property binds not only the parties to the suit but also their privies. The term "privy" is a term of the law meaning a partaker who is not a party, that is in this connection, it includes all who derive title to the land the subject of the charge from one who was a party to the suit by the decree in which the land was charged. It follows, therefore, that the charge is effective against a bona fide purchaser of the land for value without notice by reason of the law of estoppel by record: I.L.R. (1938) Nag. 431: 172 I.C. 949: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 129.

Estoppel by judgment — Res judicata creates estoppel by judgment: A.I.R. 1969 All. 504.

Persons represented in prior suits—Estoppel by judgment: (1957) 3 All E.R. 559.

A judicial decision, during the pendency of an appeal against it, does not attain finality; it cannot, therefore, operate either as res judicata or estoppel: A.I.R. 1981 Ker. 52.

Party contending that a decree for damages may be granted and not specific performance—Court accepting the contention and granting decree for damages—He is estopped from contending in appeal that the lower Court erred in granting damages: 1979 All.L.J. 1018.

Where the civil Court granted a declaration that the Government was the owner of the suit land but the decree was not executed and the occupants continued to remain there as trespassers, held, the occupants were estopped from asserting that the Government had ceased to be the owner: 1981 Rev.L.R. 26 (P.&H.).

Where an ex parte decree under S. 63 and S. 180 of U.P. Tenancy Act was passed without summons having not been served on the opposite party and the decree was never given effect to in revenue records and the opposite party had no knowledge of the decree, the decree would not give rise to estoppel against the opposite party: 1979 All.W.C. 357: 1979 All.L.J. 659.

There is no estoppel in so far as the duty of all concerned to enforce and comply with the directions of the Supreme Court is concerned: A.I.R. 1995 Pat. 144 (D.B.).

Estoppel as to valuation of suit—Suit for declaration that property not liable to attachment and sale under a decree—Valuation of suit in trial Court not corrected at proper stage—Plaintiff estopped from pleading under-valuation for changing the forum of appeal: (1963) 65 Punj. L.R. 664: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 400.

Suit for declaration, accounts and injuction in Court of second class Sub-Judge—Objection to valuation—Finding that valuation beyond Court's jurisdiction—Suit sent to first class Subordinate Judge and tried there—Appeal to High Court by defendant—Objection to forum not competent: 189 I.C. 836: (1940) 42 Bom.L.R. 443: A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 242.

Where in a suit for partition and separate possession the main contention was the validity of the adoption and the plaintiff's valuation of the suit properties right upto the Supreme Court stage was never objected to as less than their market value when they were in the defendant's own possession, held, it was not open to the defendant to plead estoppel on the ground that he was misled about their true valuation because of the plaintiff's representation in the plaint; it could not in the circumstances be presumed that the defendant was actually misled by the plaintiff's representation and had for that reason altered his position to his prejudice: A.I.R. 1971 Mys. 174: (1971) 1 Mys.L.J. 154.

Where letters of administration were granted on payment of full Court-fee as then determined but they were revoked for non-filing of the inventory and accounts within six months and a second application was made subsequently, held, the applicant could not be required to pay the Court-fee afresh; the first payment of the Court-fee operated as estoppel and res judicata: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 303 (Pat.).

Value of subject-matter in dispute—Suit for declaration of title and possession valued at Rs. 5,500—Defendants alleging that value exceeded Rs. 20,000—Question left undetermined—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1955 Assam 126.

46. Estoppel by acceptance of costs.—Costs are within the discretion of the Court. The Court is not debarred from awarding costs to an unsuccessful respondent, if the facts of a particular case justify such a course. Where the costs are granted on an unconditional order, the respondent can have no opportunity to waive his right to question the validity or correctness of the order and therefore, the acceptance of costs cannot operate as estoppel against him in the absence of proof of waiver: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 102.

Where an amendment of plaint is allowed by the Judge on payment of costs, the acceptance of the costs by the defendant without protest precludes him from contesting the validity of the order: I.L.R. 61 Cal. 433: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 488: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 554.

Where amendments were allowed and costs were awarded not by way of a conditional order but in the Court's discretion, held, acceptance of costs by the opposite party does not preclude the other party from impugning the validity of the order allowing the costs; the doctrine of estoppel is not attracted: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2562.

Where the amendment of the plaint was allowed subject to payment of cost and the defendant accepted the cost but under protest, held, the cost having been accepted with reservation, the defendant was not estopped from challenging the order allowing amendment: A.I.R. 1992 Ori. 168. See also A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 173: (1975) 1 Cut.W.R. 63. But see A.I.R. 1989 P.&H. 229: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 517 (D.B.) [Acceptance of costs, even though under protest, for allowing amendment, estops him from challenging the order allowing amendment].

Where amendment of plaint as demanded by the plaintiff was allowed subject to payment of costs and the defendant accepted the costs, held, he was estopped later on from challenging the amendment: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 191 (Madh. Pra.).

Where the landlord amended his eviction petition to add the plea of also being the owner of the demised premises on payment of costs accepted by the Counsel for the tenant, held, the tenant was estopped from challenging the order allowing amendment of the petition: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 352: (1982) 1 Ren.C.J. 342: (1982) 21 Del.L.T. 112.

Where amendment of a written statement was allowed subject to conditional costs which was accepted by the plaintiff, held, the plaintiff was estopped from impugning the order allowing amendment in revision. [A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 637; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 55; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 813; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 974;

Where plaintiff failed to pay adjournment cost as directed by the Court and the defendant participated in the proceedings after the default had occurred and when the suit was at the stage of the argument, the defendant applied for dismissal of the suit on the ground that adjournment cost as directed had not been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, held, the defendant was estopped by his conduct from raising the plea at such a belated stage: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 80: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 206.

Where an application purportedly instituted under S. 8 of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925 for which the prescribed period of limitation is 90 days was allowed to be amended several times by the Sikh Gurdwara Tribunal so as to conform it to the requirements of S. 8 when under law, prior to such amendments it was a nullity, held, merely because the Counsel for the opposite party had accepted costs of amendment, despite vehement opposition, it could not be said that the opposite party had acquiesced in the amendments and was estopped from impugning them in the appeal against dismissal of the main application; the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the application as it did not satisfy the requirements of S. 8; no jurisdiction can be conferred by waiver or acquiescence; there is no estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 273 (D.B.).

Where an ex parte decree passed against a defendant is directed to be set aside on payment of costs, the mere acceptance by the plaintiff's Counsel of a portion of the costs paid by the defendant will not preclude the plaintiff from filing an application in revision against the order setting aside the ex parte decree, unless a conscious decision to abandon the plaintiff's right of filing such an application has been taken by his Counsel after a full comprehension of all the facts: I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 436: A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 461: 1944 Nag.L.J. 134.

Where the application for restoration of a suit dismissed for default was allowed subject to the payment of the costs, held, the defendant who accepted the costs either directly or through his Counsel, is precluded or barred from attacking the validity of the said order. [A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 19; A.I.R. 1976 Andh. Pra. 205, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1990 Gau. 12 (1989) 1 Gau.L.R. 53.

Where the party has accepted the costs that were awarded for restoration of the proceedings dismissed for default, which were compensatory costs in relation to the wastage of time that was involved in the proceedings that came to be set aside, held, that fact can, under no circumstances, legally debar the party accepting the costs from raising a challenge on a point of law to the correctness of the order on merits. [A.I.R. 1989 P.&H. 229, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1991 Bom. 296: (1991) 2 Bom.C.R. 658.

Where the plaintiffs accepted the costs in connection with a separate order passed in the proceedings which followed in compliance with the order of remand passed by appellate Court and subsequently the plaintiffs filed an appeal against the remand order, held, the right of the plaintiffs to file appeal against the order of remand was not at all affected by the benefit derived by them in connection with a subsequent independent order passed after the order of remand: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 43.

47. Estoppel between landlord and tenant.—(See also Notes under S. 116). See A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 296 ; (1953) 2 M.L.J. 478: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 161. Landlord or tenant accepting or paying rent—Right to have fair rent determined, if lost—Acceptance of payment, if amounts to waiver of right. See 1957 Jab.L.J. 256 (M.B.).

The acceptance by the landlord of rent at a uniform rate does not by itself raise any estoppel against the landlord, because there is no representation thereby that it would confer permanent tenancy on the lessee: I.L.R. 58 Bom. 419: A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 194.

Agreement to pay enhanced rent—Failure to register as required by Agra Tenancy Act—Tenant continuing to pay rent—No estoppel from asserting in a subsequent proceeding that rent was payable only on the old scale: 13 R.D. 859.

Landlord's acceptance of rent does not amount to waiver: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 185: 1969 All.L.J. 365: 1969 Ren. C.J. 418.

The acceptance of rent without objection or grievance by the landlord after the forfeiture of a lease or in the event of failure to do a statutory obligation by a tenant would amount to waiver. An acceptance of rent to operate as a waiver of forfeiture, must be in respect of rent which had accrued since the breach of the covenant or failure in compliance with a provision of the statute which resulted in the forfeiture: A.I.R. 1980 Cal. 155: (1980) 1 Cal.H.N. 203: (1980) 1 Cal.L.J. 588: (1979-80) 84 Cal.W.N. 455.

Mere acceptance of money order for money less than agreed rent will not amount to waiver on part of landlord: (1961-62) 66 Cal.W.N. 414: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 608.

Deposit of rent beyond the due date—Withdrawal of deposited rent by landlord—Has no effect on question of default by tenant: A.I.R. 1969 Assam 66 (F.B.).

The landlord filed a suit for eviction against tenant from the tenanted portion as well as from the portion which was trespassed upon by the tenant. The High Court granted conditional stay of execution proceedings relating to delivery of possession of untenanted portion of the suit premises to the landlord subject to payment of arrears of rent and damages for trespass. The landlord withdrew arrears of rent deposited by the tenant. Thereafter landlord filed a fresh suit for eviction in respect of tenanted portion on ground of default in payment of arrears of rent and tenant pleaded waiver. Held, the acceptance of rent could not amount to waiver as it was in a different proceeding altogether. Further, once a default had occurred, mere acceptance by itself would not amount to waiver: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 184: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 135: 1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 61: 1984 B.L.J.R. 244 (D.B.).

The landlord had instituted a suit for eviction of the tenant on the ground that he was a defaulter within the meaning of S. 11(1)(d) of the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1947, having failed to pay rent for two months. In that suit the tenant obtained an order under S. 11-A of that Act for deposit of the arrears of rent and accordingly deposited the same and the landlord withdrew the said amount. But as the said suit was found to be premature, the landlord withdrew it with permission to file a fresh suit to which tenant did not object. But when a fresh suit was filed for same cause of action the tenant objected contending that the withdrawal of rent in the earlier suit would amount to a waiver of the cause of action. Held, under the provisions of the said Act, a tenant continues to be a tenant after the tenancy is determined and he continues in occupation of the premises and, thus, the landlord has no option but to treat him as such and accept rent from him. Further, S. 11-A of that Act specifically provides that acceptance of rent deposited under said provision will not wipe out the cause of action that a landlord might have against a tenant. Accordingly, tenant's contention merited rejection: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 223: 1975 B.B.C.J. 738

Where the landlord had withdrawn the rent deposited in the Court by the tenant beyond the time permitted under S. 26 of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, held, the landlord is not estopped from agitating that the tenant's deposit is not in accordance with law; the landlord could not be deemed to have waived his right to proceed against the tenant for non-payment of rent: A.I.R. 1979 N.O.C. 71 (Madh. Pra.). See also 1984 B.L.J.R. 244: 1984 B.B.C.J. 61.

Waiver of notice to quit—Deposit of rent in Court by tenant—Under Rent Control Act—Withdrawal by landlord does not constitute waiver: A.I.R. 1965 Assam 55. See also 1965 All.L.J. 249.

Where the plaintiff obtained a temporary injunction on the condition of depositing monthly damages in the Court which the Court permitted the defendant to withdraw "without prejudice", held, the withdrawal by the defendant by itself could not affect the parties' rights; it could not create any equity in favour of the plaintiff; the defendant is not estopped for in India estoppels are treated as rules of evidence founded on the representation of one party to the other; there is no such representation: A.I.R. 1983 Cal. 343: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 759: (1982) 2 Cal.L.J. 74 (D.B.).

Notice to quit—Waiver of—Acceptance of rent when amounts to waiver—Act showing landlord's intention to treat lease as subsisting is necessary: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 16.

Where a landlord after service of notice to quit immediately sued the tenant for eviction, held, mere acceptance of rent could not amount to a waiver, especially when the rent was accepted as compensation for use and occupation: A.I.R. 1990 Ker. 261.

Where landlord sent a notice to the tenant-Company terminating the lease but allowed time of four months for removal of machinery, etc. and later on tenants contended that as landlord accepted rent after notice was given it amounted to waiver, held, there was no evidence to show that the rent was accepted at any time after the notice was given to the Company. Further, any rent which the appellants accepted was really not rent but mere compensation for wrongful use and occupation of the land as there was no intention on the part of the lessor to treat the lease as subsisting. Thus, there was no waiver of notice: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 170: (1980) 4 S.C.C. 430: (1981) 1 S.C.R. 815.

Where even after the service of first quit notice, the defendant-tenant tendered rent for the post notice period by money order to the plaintiff and continued in possession and thereafter the second notice was served by the plaintiff, held, there was waiver of the notice by both the parties who treated the tenancy as continuing after the service of the first notice and, thus, the second notice was valid: A.I.R. 1991 Cal. 291: (1991) 1 Cal.L.T. 380.

Where an eviction suit was dismissed in second appeal on the ground that the notice to quit was invalid with a further observation that the form of permission to sue granted by the Rent Controller was highly unsatisfactory and the landlord's plea for modification of the form of permission ultimately failed at the highest forum on the tenant's plea that there was nothing wrong with the previous permission but thereafter on the landlord instituting the second suit for eviction on the fresh notice to quit but on the previous permission, the tenant sued the landlord for a declaration that the previous permission was invalid because of the High Court's observation in the second appellate judgment, held, the High Court did not hold the permission to be invalid; its observation as to the highly unsatisfactory form could not operate as res judicata; and it was the tenant who was approbating and reprobating as to the validity of the permission: A.I.R. 1976 All. 216: 1975 All.L.J. 333.

Where in a suit for eviction, the tenant had sub-letted the premises without previous consent of the landlord under S. 13(1)(a) of West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act and the landlord accepted the rent even though he had knowledge about sub-letting, held, acceptance of rent would not operate as waiver of notice to quit given to the tenant [A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 408; A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 122 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1980 Cal. 70 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Cal. 61: (1981) 1 Cal.H.N. 55.

Tenant sub-letting accommodation only with oral permission—Sub-letting is unlawful—Oral permission by landlord cannot operate as waiver of benefit of prohibition—He is not estopped from pleading that sub-letting is unlawful: 1968 M.P.L.J. 251: 1969 Jab.L.J. 157: A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 130.

It is necessary for the tenant to obtain the consent in writing to sub-let the premises. The mere permission or acquiescence will not do. The consent must be to the specific sub-letting and must be in writing. [I.L.R. (1974) 1 Del. 389, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 145: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 70: (1988) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 345; 1979 Rajdhani L.R. 7: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Del. 84.

Written consent of landlord necessary—Acquiescence of landlord no substitute for such written consent: (1964) 2 M.L.J. 288.

Where in a suit for ejectment of a tenant on the ground of sub-letting by tenant without the consent of the landlord, the landlord has admitted that the sub-tenancy had lasted for four years with his knowledge and the rent has been paid by the sub-tenant in the presence of the landlord and on several occasions passed on to him by the tenant, a presumption of acquiescence will arise. Such a presumption which will be strengthened by the fact that the landlord offered no explanation why he had waited for four years before filing the suit for ejectment on the ground of illegal sub-letting and will not be displaced by a bare denial of the landlord that he had not acquiesced: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 504: A.I.R. 1966 All. 214.

Waiver is of a right based either on contract or statute; the terms of a contract are subject purely to the parties' agreement. Courts are, therefore, inclined to uphold reasonable arrangements between the parties for relaxation of the contractual terms. The waiver of a contractual right is, therefore, close to acquiescence. The parties to a lease containing the mode of its termination may vary it and the tenant may if he so wishes altogether abandon his right to a notice to quit; that right is not inherent but contractual or customary and in the absence thereof S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which is not mandatory, prevails; that right may be waived by the tenant's conduct either in not raising the objection or not insisting on the notice and if the landlord acts upon such representation, the tenant is estopped from raising the objection subsequently: A.I.R. 1971 Del. 98 (D.B.).

Where a tenant in an eviction proceeding had raised no objection as to the want of notice to quit under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act in his written statement, held, he is deemed to have waived the same; he cannot be allowed after expiry of more than two and a half years when he had lost on merits to amend his written statement in appeal to incorporate the objection therein by way of amendment; such an amendment would be justified if the tenant had come forward with utmost bona fides and on showing that he could not possibly have taken the objection at the initial stage or had some other strong justification for leave to amend. Merely because the law as then interpreted did not deem the quit notice as a necessary pre-condition for seeking eviction is no such ground. [A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 110, Expl.; (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 672, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 269.

Where in a suit for ejectment, the tenant had not put forward any plea of waiver by the landlord of the demand for surrender of possession made as per a notice, held, in the absence of specific pleadings trial Court rightly did not go into the question of waiver: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1726: 1981 All.L.J. 1028: (1981) 4 S.C.C. 117.

The principle of waiver connotes issuance of notice and non-response thereto. Everyone has a right to waive an advantage or protection which law seeks to give him/her. Undoubtedly, if a notice is issued and no representation was made by either the owner, tenant or a sub-tenant, it would amount to waiver of the opportunity and such person cannot be permitted to turn round, to say that they were not afforded an opportunity to state their views: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 2130.

Where subsequent to issuance of notice of eviction by the landlord, damages for use and occupation of tenanted land were demanded by him and the landlord also accepted said damages, held, it would not amount to waiver of notice of eviction by the landlord: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 64 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

The failure or omission of the lessee to reply to a defective quit notice is no waiver, the lessee may well ignore it; he is thereby not estopped from pleading in the Court that the suit was bad for want of a proper and valid notice; he is under no obligation to point out the defect to the plaintiff. (See A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 197). Besides, the validity or legality of the quit notice, being a question of law, can be raised even at a late stage if no further investigation of facts is required; thus, the lessee's failure to question the validity of the quit notice in the original written statement could not be deemed to be a waiver of his right to question its validity. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 559; A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 297; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2526, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Andh. Pra. 205 (D.B.).

Tenant cannot be permitted on the one hand to say that there is no partition and on the other hand to say that one of the brothers had no right to give quit notice on behalf of the others when the joint family is still subsisting: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 21: (1967) 1 An.L.T. 340.

Merely because after service of the notice of demand for payment of arrears of rent and on failure for surrender of possession, the tenant stood surety for the landlord for the payment of sales tax arrears due from the landlord, held, waiver of said notice could not be inferred when no amount whatever had been paid by the tenant to the sales tax authorities on behalf of the landlord and the landlord had refused to make any endorsement in the rent deed adjusting the proposed payment of sales tax against the arrears of rent: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1726: (1981) 4 S.C.C. 117.

A tenant who was under an obligation to vacate the land without any notice at the expiry of the term of the lease did not do so and the landlord brought a suit for his ejectment after giving 15 day's notice. The defendant tenant denied the validity and receipt of notice but the validity of the notice was not questioned on ground that 15 day's notice was not sufficient in law. The trial Court decreed the suit on ground that notice was sufficient and valid. The appellate Court dismissed the suit observing that six months' notice was necessary. In second appeal, the plaintiff for the first time contended that in law no notice was at all necessary. Held, that the conduct of the plaintiff in giving 15 days' notice and not raising the plea in the lower Courts could not operate in the circumstances as a waiver or estop him from pleading that in law no notice was at all necessary: I.L.R. (1954) 6 Assam 95: A.I.R. 1954 Assam 102.

Where in the coupon of money order sent to the landlord, the tenant stated that he would vacate the premises within 6 to 8 months, held, even if such a quit notice was defective for want of specific date by which the tenant would vacate the premises, but as the landlord had accepted it, the tenant would be estopped from challenging the validity of such a notice given by him. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 471, Foll.; (1977) 2 Cal.L.J. 586, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 759: (1987) 1 S.C.C. 562: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 635: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 527.

Though the striking out of the tenant's defence for non-deposit of rent under S. 13 of the Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1950 certainly works to the landlord's advantage but the landlord is entitled to give up that advantage for that will not be opposed to public policy. Thus, where the landlord neither objected to the maintainability of the tenant's application under S. 13(4) of that Act nor to the Court's order passed thereon, held, the landlord is deemed to have waived his right by conduct. [1979 Raj.L.W. 170, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 24 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Even if there is any mandatory provision which confers any right or privilege or advantage to any of the parties to the litigation, such right, privilege or advantage may be waived by the party in whose favour the provision of law stands. Thus, where in a suit for eviction, the tenant had been allowed by the Court to deposit rents month by month during the pendency of the suit but there was a delay of about 11 days on his part in depositing the rent for a particular month, which gave a right to the landlord to have the tenant's defence struck out under S. 17(3) of the W.B. Premises Tenancy Act, 1956, but the landlord did not exercise that right, held, the conduct on the part of the landlord clearly indicated that he did waive his right given to him under S. 17(3) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 436.

Where the landlord failed to impugn the maintainability of the tenant's application for deposit of admitted arrears of rent under S. 17(2) of the W.B. Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 in the appeal and the case was remanded, held, had he done so in the Court of appeal it would have defeated the order of remand; he could not raise the contention after remand (Obiter): A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 73.

Where the Court in its discretion under S. 11-A of the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction Control) Act, 1947 directed the tenant to deposit rent for each month by the 15th day of the succeeding month, the non-compliance whereof results under the statutory mandate in striking out of his defence and the tenant deposits rent beyond time which the landlord withdraws, held, the landlord has thereby waived his right to ask for striking out of the tenant's defence. [A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 211, Approv.]: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 1: 1980 Pat.L.J.R. 208: 1980 B.L.J.R. 592 (F.B.).

The general principle is that every one has a right to waive and to agree to waive the advantage of a law or rule made solely for the benefit and protection of the individual in his private capacity which may be dispensed with without infringing any public right or public policy. Thus, the maxim which sanctions the non-observance of the statutory provision is cuilibet licet renuntiare juri pro se introducto. If there is any express prohibition against contracting out of a statute in it then no question can arise of any one entering into a contract which is so prohibited but where there is no such prohibition it will have to be seen whether an Act is intended to have a more extensive operation as a matter of public policy. S. 1-A of U.P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 exempting buildings constructed after 1-1-1951 from the operation of the Act was meant for the benefit of owners of buildings which were under erection or were constructed after January 1, 1951, if a particular owner did not wish to avail of the benefit of that section there was no bar created by it in the way of his waiving or giving up or abandoning the advantage or the benefit contemplated by the section. No question of policy, much less public policy, was involved and such a benefit or advantage could always be waived: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2213: 1971 Ren. C.R. 320: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 343.

A ground for eviction under S. 14(1)(d) of Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958, is created for the benefit of landlord providing that when the suit premises is not occupied by tenant for six months immediately before the filing of the application for recovery of possession, a right accrues to the landlord to claim eviction, but where the landlord himself creates situation which forces the tenant not to live in the disputed premises for particular length of time, such a landlord cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong and will be estopped from filing a petition for eviction relying on aforesaid Cl. (d): A.I.R. 1986 Del. 23: (1985) 27 Del.L.T. 399.

Where residential premises were used by the tenant for running a hotel and the landlord raised no objection thereto, held, it would not invariably erect an estoppel against the landlord; the breach of the covenant for user is a continuing breach; any acquiescence in the breach or receipt of rent with the knowledge of the breach would constitute waiver upto the time of acquiescence or receipt of rent; the landlord could not be taken to have given an irrevocable sanction to such breach: A.I.R. 1972 Andh. Pra. 335: (1972) 1 An.W.R. 152.

Where though the premises were let out for residential purposes but for seven years no objection was raised by the landlord for change of user by the tenant, held, as the landlord had accepted the user to be other than residential, he was estopped from subsequently seeking eviction on the ground of change of user: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 184.

Where a building constructed for residential purposes was let to the Government for non-residential use and the new owner, after its purchase, sued the Government for eviction on the ground of his bona fide requirement for personal use, the plea of estoppel was raised against the new landlord, held, since the non-residential use by the Government was without the Rent Controller's permission in writing, the building did not lose its residential character; even if the Government could invoke doctrine of estoppel against the original owner, the second owner could not be estopped from contending that it was a residential building liable to be vacated on the ground pleaded. [A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 413 (F.B.), Disting.]: A.I.R. 1976 Andh. Pra. 90: (1975) 2 A.P.L.J. (H.C.) 40 (D.B.).

Where the landlord was staying in the flats adjoining the one let out to the tenant who was a medical practitioner, and the landlord knew that the tenant was using for 20 years major portion of the flat for his professional purposes and the landlord never objected to it, the landlord is estopped from raising the question that the flat was let out for residential purposes only: (1957) 59 Punj.L.R. 355: I.L.R. (1957) Punj. 1564.

Where in a suit for eviction on the ground of change of user of suit premises, the tenant had taken a categoric stand during the enquiry that he had taken the suit premises on rent only for running his clinic and not for his residential needs as well, held, having taken up such a stand, the tenant could not reprobate and subsequently contend that the lease of the suit premises was of a composite nature and as such the benefit of the enlarged definition of a "non-residential building" as amended by East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction (Chandigarh Amendment) Act, 1982 which provided that a building let out for residential and also for non-residential purposes would constitute a non-residential building, would enure to his benefit: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2179: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 711.

Where landlord sought eviction of the tenant on account of change of user of impugned premises and though the premises were let out for tailoring purposes the tenant was using the premises for cycle repairs almost since the inception of lease, held, the landlord must be deemed to have waived the infraction of condition as to user of the premises as provided in rent note and must be deemed to have acquiesced in change of user of premises: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 1: (1981) 1 Guj.L.H. 287: (1981) 22 Guj.L.R. 1264.

Where the original landlords did not object to the erection of barbed wire fencing or the locking of gate of suit premises by the tenants for nearly 13 years but the successor in title of interest of original landlords filed a suit for possession on the ground that said action of tenants amounted to trespass, held, as the previous landlords clearly waived the so-called breaches on the part of the tenant, it was not open for the successor-in-title of interest of original landlords to initiate legal action. A.I.R. 1988 Bom. 354: 1987 Mah.L.J. 917.

Where the landlord filed an application seeking eviction of his tenant on the ground of bona fide requirement and the tenant contended that after retirement the landlord did not take any action for eviction of the tenant but instead joined a service on daily wages and, thus, the landlord was not entitled to an order of eviction under Chap. III-A of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961 as his requirement was not bona fide , held, seeking a stray employment and not filing an application immediately after retirement cannot be said to be mala fide. Further, no period is prescribed under the Act for filing an application by a retired Government servant or any other landlord as specified in S. 23-J of said Act nor any delay in filing the application for eviction creates any ban or any impediment or even any estoppel on the landlord. Thus, an order of eviction against the tenant could be passed: A.I.R. 1990 Madh. Pra. 262.

Where in a suit for eviction by landlord on ground of bona fide requirement under S. 12(1)(b) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, the tenant had contended before the appellate Court that said section did not apply, held, the tenant was estopped from assailing eviction order on the ground that as S. 12(1)(h) of the Act had not been complied with, decree for eviction passed against him was liable to be set aside: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1890.

Where at the request of the landlord, the tenant shifted to another premises on the landlord's assurance that in the new premises, he could live as long as he desired, held, taking advantage of the position that to the new premises, the U.P. Rent Control Act was not applicable (though it was applicable to the earlier premises), the landlord could not seek tenant's eviction; the landlord's suit for eviction was barred by principle of estoppel: A.I.R. 1971 All. 297.

Tenant whether contractual or statutory—On facts, held that tenant was not statutory tenant on date of his death and that the tenancy was heritable—Conduct of landlord's mukhtor in accepting rent, etc. after determination of tenancy held was evidence of continuation of tenancy: 1965 Cur. L.J. 393 (Punj.).

Waiver of a right cannot be lightly inferred and something more than inaction of the right holder in exercising the right is necessary to establish it. Thus, when permission is granted to a landlord under S. 3 of C.P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act to file a suit to evict the tenant, the mere fact of the landlord not taking any steps to evict the tenant for several months after the permission is granted or his accepting rent for those months cannot amount to waiver A.I.R. 1967 All. 325.

In respect of certain lease of lands given in 1958, the landlord sought declaration that they were invalid being contrary to the provisions of Bombay Prevention of Fragmentation and Consolidation of Holdings Act, 1947 and got it so declared. But during the pendency of writ petition against such declaration, said 1958 Act was amended which provided for validation of illegal transfers on payment of penalty and, thus, the tenant withdrew the petition, paid the amount of fine for validation of lease and got it declared valid from 20-4-1968 on 7-6-1968, the tenant gave a notice under S. 32(o) of the Bombay Tenancy Act expressing his intention to purchase the lands under his occupancy. Held, the landlord having taken recourse to invalidate the leases on the ground that they were contrary to the Bombay Prevention of Fragmentation and Consolidation of Holdings Act, 1947 could not be allowed to turn round and say that the leases were not invalid and, consequently, the notice of the tenant was not proper: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 486: (1991) 2 (Supp.) S.C.C. 590.

Where plea of void tenancy by tenant was neither raised initially before the Rent Controller who had jurisdiction to decide the legal and valid relationship of landlord and tenant and only on such finding he could proceed to grant permission to give quit notice on the grounds mentioned under Cl. 13 (3) of the C.P. and Berar House Rent Control Order, 1949, nor in appeal, held, the finding as to legal and valid relationship of landlord and tenant and permission of the Rent Controller had become final and conclusive and, thus, tenant could not challenge permission obtained by landlord from the Rent Controller on the ground of tenancy being void before the civil Court: A.I.R. 1984 Bom. 65: 1983 Mah.L.J. 1114.

Where buildings constructed after 26-8-1957 were exempted under S. 32 of the A.P. Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1960 from operation of the Act and the landlord's petition for eviction in respect of an exempted building, having been dismissed by the Rent Controller, he instituted a civil suit for eviction, held, the landlord could not be said to have "waived" his right to claim the relief in the civil suit: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2089.

A subsequent suit under S. 183 of the U.P. Tenancy Act, 1939 between the same parties is not barred merely because of withdrawal of a prior suit under S. 142 thereof: 1952 All.L.J. (Rev.) 128.

Where a question arose as to the validity of the lease and the plaintiff-landlord had earlier withdrawn proceedings for arrears of rent and for termination of tenancy but he later on filed fresh proceedings, held, it could not be said that there was any waiver or estoppel which would prevent the plaintiff from contending that impugned lease was void. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 689, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 Bom. 25: 1979 Mah.L.J. 450 (D.B.).

Where a tenant impugned his eviction in revision on the ground that the super-structure belonged to him and not to the landlord for which, however, he had laid no foundation in his written statement before the trial Court, held, he could not be allowed to agitate the point in revision. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 149, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 150: (1972) 2 M.L.J. 386: (1970) 83 Mad.L.W. 518.

Monthly tenancy—Rent payable according to English calender—Notice to quit and vacate on last day of English calendar month—Objection that notice was invalid on ground that period of notice should have commenced from day of month in which tenancy was created, not taken in pleadings—Tenant held estopped from contending that notice did not coincide with last day of calender month of tenancy—Notice was held to be valid: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 311.

In order that a tenant may raise the plea of estoppel as against his landlord, there should be a representation believed in by the tenants and it must be a case consistent with the document under which the tenancy was created. Where the alleged representation was contrary to the terms of the document between the parties held, that the plea of estoppel was not available: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 643: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 682. See also 1937 R.D. 256 ; 1936 R.D. 541 ; 1940 R.D. 488: 1940 O.A. 1017.

Estoppel—Plea not available to tenant: (1961) 2 An. W.R. 312.

Where on an appeal against an eviction order, the Appellate Authority remanded the case to the Rent Controller for amendment of the eviction petition to incorporate the ground of bona fide self-requirement with leave to the tenant to disprove the ground by leading evidence and after such trial the Controller passed the eviction order, held, the tenant having obtained full benefit of the remand order was estopped from impugning the remand order as without jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1979 P.&H. 132.

Where the transferee-landlord at the proper opportunity sued the tenant for eviction who resisted it on the ground that his was a thika tenancy covered by the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949 and the predecessor-in-interest of the landlord had so admitted in the earlier eviction proceedings, held, as there was no final determination of the tenant being a thika tenant in the earlier proceedings, the rule of estoppel was not attracted; it was open for the transferee-landlord to impugn the tenant's contention in the record proceedings: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1834.

Under the circumstances of the case the doctrine of estoppel could not operate against the tenant and preclude him from contending at the time of the appeal that he was entitled, in spite of what had happened before, to take up the position that he was a thika tenant under the existing law and as such entitled to the benefits conferred upon such tenants by that law as it stood then: 93 Cal.L.J. 52: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 549.

Where after an order for ejectment under S. 61 of the Oudh Rent Act for arrears of rent, the landlord filed a fresh suit for arrears of rent, it operates as an admission on the part of the Zamindar that the defendant is his tenant in spite of the previous decree for his ejectment and operates also as an estoppel under S. 115 against the landlord seeking execution of his ejectment decree: 1941 R.D. 415: 1941 O.A. (Supp.) 434.

According to the first clause of a lease deed, the lease could be terminated by thirty days' notice and according to fourth clause the lessor could without notice put an end to the lease if there was any default in the payment of rent or breach of any covenant. Thereupon the lessor had a right of entry. The eighth clause was: "the lessee will vacate the land at one month's notice without fuss if it is wanted at any time for building". After giving notice to quit, the lessor brought a suit for ejectment and recovery of arrears of rent.

It was contended by the lessee that the eighth clause in the lease was a bar to the suit because the lessor could only sue for ejectment if the land is wanted for building. Held, that Cl. (8) meant that if the land was wanted for any building, the lessee was not to make any "fuss" ; that clause was not in derogation of the powers which the lessor had under the other clauses of the lease deed and that no question of estoppel could be raised against the lessor: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 243: I.L.R. (1954) Punj. 249.

The fact that a registered lease was not given does not affect the question: L.R. 3 All. 543 (Rev.). See also A.I.R. 1932 All. 437; 1940 R.D. 224: 1940 All.W.R. (B.R.) 85 ; 1940 R.D. 197: 1940 All.W.R. (B.R.) 65.

Lease for term of 10 years with renewal clause—Lessee building house on land leased—Lessor is not estopped from taking khas possession of lease-hold: 1953 B.L.J.R. 304: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 41.

M obtained a lease of certain premises for the period of ten years and constructs a big shed thereon. Afterwards M gave it on lease to a Company. After the termination of the lease of M, the Company obtained the lease of the premises from the original lessor. In 1938, that is after the termination of his lease, M brought a suit against the Company and the original lessor praying for declaration of his right to pull down and remove the shed. This suit was ultimately compromised between M and the Company and one of the terms of compromise was that the Company would continue to use the shed for nine months and thereafter use it at its option for a period of two years, and that if the Company wished to vacate the shed within this period, it could do so on giving two months' notice and removing its machineries and other fixtures. The amount of compensation on payment of which the Company would continue to use the shed was fixed at Rs. 125 per month and the Company actually paid this amount and remained in occupation for nine months and then for the optional period of two years without giving any notice to M to remove the shed. In a subsequent suit by M against the Company for compensation for use and occupation of the shed: Held, (1) that by the petition of compromise in terms of which the suit was decreed, the Company admitted the title of M to the shed ; (2) that this compromise decree and the payment of compensation thereafter by the Company stood in the way of the Company's contention that M had lost title to the shed or that the title thereto had vested in the original lessor and from him in it, even if such were the effect of S. 108 (h), Transfer of Property Act ; (3) that even if no formal tenancy was created in M's favour by the compromise decree, still estoppel would nevertheless arise, because the position accepted by the Company was virtually that of a tenant and payment of compensation was for use and occupation ; (4) that it would make no difference that the Company was already in possession of the shed at the time of the compromise decree, because the rule of estoppel had been extended to cases where a tenant was already in possession: A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 148.

Tenants recorded as occupancy tenants by order of Collector and treated as such for over 28 years—Subsequent suit for declaration that they were only statutory tenants—Non-maintainability: 14 L.R. 135 (Rev.): 17 R.D. 174. See also 1941 R.D. 415: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 475.

Landlord and tenant—Estoppel—Suit for rent—Money decree—Execution proceedings taken as if the decree was a rent decree—Objection to the form of execution proceedings not taken by the tenant—Effect—Tenant not barred from contending afterwards that the decree was only a money decree—No estoppel: 119 I.C. 882: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 150. See also 1939 R.D. 135: 1939 All.W.R. (B.R.) 149.

Acquisition of co-tenancy by estoppel: 1964 All. W.R. (H.C.) 458.

Where the Managing Director of a Company originally took the premises on rent in his own name and though some correspondence and documents did show that the rent was paid by the Company and at some stage the Company and the landlord did consider that the Company was the tenant but nothing on record showed the point of time when such relationship came into existence and there was no plea that the Managing Director's tenancy was determined or surrendered to the Company at any time, held, the plea of estoppel was not available to the landlord against the Company sought to be evicted as a tenant; the Company was at liberty to plead that it was not the tenant and no eviction petition was maintainable against it: (1989) 38 Del.L.T. 94: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 27: (1989) 1 Ren.L.R. 690.

Landlord and tenant—Defendant admitting to be taken by deity through plaintiff Sarbarakar—Defendant is estopped from challenging Sarbarakar's right to sue him as tenant: 1964 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 73.

A person himself having obtained a lease from power-of-attorney holder cannot question the authority of the power-of-attorney holder to grant a lease in reversion to another person on the principle of estoppel. See (1975) 1 Kam.L.J. 262.

Where admissions as to a party's status as a tenant were made in the amendment application, held, whether or not they operate as estoppel, they are certainly evidence in the proceedings: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 221.

Where in the rent control proceedings for eviction, the plaintiff had proceeded on the ground that the defendant was a tenant, held, in a subsequent civil suit for declaration of title, she could not be allowed to proceed on the ground that the defendant was a licencee merely because the Appellate Authority under the Rent Control Act had incidentally observed that the defendant could be a trespasser or licencee, specially when the defendant had claimed title in himself: A.I.R. 1992 Ori. 183.

Where in a proceeding for possession under S. 58 of the M.B. Land Revenue and Tenancy Act, the defendant claimed to be a sub-tenant and sought protection under the Ryotwari Sub-lessees Protection Act and the Court accepting his claim dismissed the said proceedings, held, subsequently, he cannot urge that he was not sub-tenant: 1978 M.P.L.J. (Note) 47.

The plaintiffs, who were the tenants of a land agreed with defendant 3 to buy the land and obtained an extension of time to pay the price and also applied to him to continue them as tenants of the land. Defendant 3 acted in all this as an agent of the heirs of the landlord and all these negotiations took place before the defendants 1 to 5 purchased the land. Held, that the acts of the plaintiffs could not amount to an admission of the title of the defendants 1 to 5 neither did they prove the presence of the ingredients necessary to bring S. 115 into play and, therefore, there could be no bar of estoppel or waiver: A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 25.

Where in enhancement proceeding relating to a holding, the landlord, misled by the patwari's entry, described the tenant as also the tenant of an adjacent place of fallow land, he is not precluded from contesting the status of the occupier and from bringing a suit that the defendant was not a tenant of the fallow land: 14 L.R. 68 (Rev.): 17 R.D. 62.

Where the defendants had been receiving deficit grants from the Government on the representation that certain amount had to be paid on account of house rent of the School building, held, in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent they were estopped from asserting that no liability for payment of rent could be fastened upon them: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1495: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 354.

Persons in cultivating possession under lessee are tenants—Application by landlord against such persons for arrears of rent and in alternative for ejectment—Suit by such persons for declaration of their rights—Landlord is estopped from denying that plaintiffs are not tenants: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 526.

Tenancy described as occupancy holding in sale deed and notice under S. 26-C of the W.B. Tenancy Act, 1885—On application for pre-emption vendee disputing nature of tenancy—No estoppel. See (1953-54) 58 Cal. W.N. 612.

Covenant against alienation—Transfer recognised by lessor—Effect: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 228.

Tenant while opposing application for granting permission under S. 3 of the U.P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act (III of 1947) did not object to jurisdiction of the Officer granting permission—Principle of estoppel would be applicable against tenant in objecting such jurisdiction in suit filed after obtaining permission: 1964 All.W.R. (H.C.) 413: 1964 All.L.J. 788.

Where a tenant evicted under the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 had obtained extra time from the decree-holder on the promise of his vacating the premises at the end thereof, held, he is not estopped from raising the plea, when the landlord applies for leave to execute the decree from the Competent Authority under S. 19(4) of the Slum Areas (Improvement and Clearance) Act, 1956, that he was unable to obtain alternative accommodation and, therefore, the leave to execute the eviction order be declined. [A.I.R. 1972 Del. 206, Appl.]: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 208.

Where a tenant had been inducted as a tenant for a limited period after the Rent Controller's sanction under S. 21 of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 and on the landlord's applying for the tenant's eviction on expiry of the limited period, held, it could not be contended that after having taken advantage of the sanction, the tenant was estopped from impugning the legality of the original sanction. [1976 Ren. C.J. 582 (Del.), Overruled]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 193: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 756: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 52: (1980) 1 S.C.R. 281.

Where a limited tenancy under S. 21 of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 was created for 2 years and upon the expiry thereof the tenant refused to quit despite his statement before the Controller at the time of the grant, held, in the absence of evidence to the effect that the tenant did not understand or accept what was stated by the landlord before the Controller or that the tenant and the landlord were in collusion or that the tenant was a victim of fraud or the weaker side in the bargain, it could not be presumed that the sanction of the Controller to create the tenancy was nullity; having obtained the benefit of the sanction, the tenant was estopped from impugning the sanction. [1985 Rajdhani L.R. 492, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1986: (1987) 32 Del.L.T. 354: (1987) 4 S.C.C. 1.

Where lessees of land for 10 years were sought to be unsuccessfully evicted therefrom under the Punjab Village Common Lands (Regulation) Act, 1961 and the lessees thereafter put in manure and continued to be in its cultivating possession for over 36 years on payment of nominal rent, held, their plea of estoppel against the Panchayat had no substance; they had been harvesting crops years after years and earning far more than what they had invested; they had, thus, suffered no detriment. Besides, merely because the Panchayat had lost the earlier eviction case could not amount to a representation to the lessees: 1992 Punj.L.J. 303.

Where in case of a permanent lease which provided for its cancellation on default for non-payment of rent for three years and the predecessors of the current lessors had demanded and accepted rent from the successors of the lessees without impugning their rights to purchase the leasehold rights, the current lessors were estopped from contending that the successor lessees had no right or interest in the land. [A.I.R. 1967 All. 405, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 575: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 253: 1980 U.J. (S.C.) 361.

Where in proceedings under the Bombay Tenancy Act, the defendant categorically stated that he was not a tenant on the disputed land but he assisted his nieces, predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff-vendors in cultivation of said land as a member of family, held, in a subsequent suit of permanent injunction filed by the vendors it was not open for the defendant to contend that he was cultivating the land as a permanent tenant: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 340: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 967.

Where in an eviction petition filed on the ground of wilful default in payment of rent, the tenant specifically pleaded that in spite of the offering of the rent made by her every month it was the landlord who refused to accept the same and was postponing the receipt of it resulting in accumulation of rents, held, having raised a specific plea in the counter statement, it was not open to the tenant to change her case in the course of the evidence by stating that she was permitted to pay the rent in the same manner in which she was paying to the prior landlord. It might be that prior landlord failed to take any action for recovery of rent even when there was accumulation of rent but that would not imply that there was an implied contract between present landlord and tenant that the latter could pay the rent as and when she pleased: A.I.R. 1989 Mad. 317.

Where the rented premises in question was put to auction and in the meanwhile the original landlord filed an eviction petition and during its pendency sale was confirmed in favour of the new landlord and an eviction order was passed by the Rent Controller against the tenants but thereafter tenants pleaded want of jurisdiction in Rent Controller on account of subsequent change of the landlord, held, as the tenants did not object to the decree being passed against them inspite of the fact that the landlord had changed, they would be estopped in law from challenging the validity of a decree for want of jurisdiction in the Rent Controller. [1969 Ren.C.R. 398 (S.C.), Rel. on; (1966) 68 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 14, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1987 Del. 1: (1987) 1 Ren.C.R. 382: 1987 Rajdhani L.R. 626.

Where a tenant of the Port Trust served with a quit notice, on the promise of the Estate Manager—appointed to lease out the Trust properties from time to time or to terminate its lease, that on deposit of certain amount the lease of a portion in the reconstructed property would be given to him, held, the Estate Manager not clothed with any such authority, not even an ostensible authority, to bind the Port Trust, his promise was ultra vires; no estoppel arises against the Trust: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 14: (1991) 1 (Supp.) S.C.C. 68: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 761.

Fraudulent assignment of tenancy—Assignee a confederate in fraud—Tenant not estopped to prove his possession as against assignee—Court will not help assignee: I.L.R. (1962) Ker. 681: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 79.

Though a tenant can never be estopped from claiming occupancy right in respect of land in an estate by reason of the statute, he will be estopped from saying that the land is an estate. If he has previously taken it on the footing that it is not an estate it may be that the estoppel extends only up to his surrendering vacant possession; after the surrenders, he may agitate any question he likes. But he cannot keep the possession which he obtained by representing that he will not claim the land to be an estate: 119 I.C. 577: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 529.

Landlord allowing ex-proprietary tenant to continue in possession after ejectment is estopped from denying status of the tenant: 14 R.D. 502 ; 15 R.D. 39.

Grant of permanent lease by holder of grant-in-interest—If estopped from saying that he was mere ryot—Purchaser at execution sale is not estopped: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 87.

Landlord and tenant—Forfeiture of lease—Waiver—What amounts to: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 132: 1960 Cr.L.J. 605.

Lessee stating that he has leased premises vacant—Statement of whether constitutes relinquishement: (1967) 12 Law Rep. 368 (Mys.).

Where in a suit for eviction, there is no recital in the plaint of any plea of estoppel against the defendant, held, that there is no justification for invoking the doctrine of estoppel on the basis of averments in a previously instituted suit by the defendant against the plaintiff, where those averments cannot be the foundation of the theory of estoppel and cannot be said to be consistent only with the theory of any representation by the defendant: (1956) 69 Mad.L.W. (Andh.) 30: 1956 An.W.R. 544.

Where an ex parte eviction order is passed on the tenant's defence against delivery of possession or his written statement is struck out, the Court is not relieved of its duty under O. 20, R. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, whether or not the suit is contested, and, therefore, the tenant in appeal against the ex parte eviction decree is entitled to contend and show, if possible on the plaintiff's evidence on record, both at the trial and in appeal, that the landlord was not entitled to the decree though he could not be permitted to cross-examine the landlord's witnesses ex parte examined or by calling his own witnesses; the doctrine of estoppel would not operate against him: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 110: (1975) 1 Cal.L.J. 1: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N. 188 (F.B.).

Permanent tenancy—New agreement—Waiver—Implied surrender. See A.I.R. 1957 All. 346.

Where "A" obtained an occupancy right under a patta but afterwards sold half his holding to B and thereafter the remaining half to C, a stranger, which was sought to be pre-empted by B which was resisted by C on the ground that A and B were not occupancy tenants as they could be created only by the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 and not by a contract, held, in view of the fact that the kobala by which C had purchased the holding described it as occupancy tenant, C was estopped from denying the status of A and B as occupancy tenants. [A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 253 and A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 144, Rel. on; (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 612, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1972 Cal. 520 (F.B.).

Tenant making grave on abadi—Zamindar's servants standing by and not objecting—No acquiescence: A.I.R. 1929 All. 386: 115 I.C. 628.

Where a Zamindar took nazarana and admitted the tenant into land pending the execution of a lease deed, he is estopped from denying that he had admitted the tenant into the land with the intention of giving a lease: L.R. 3 All. 543 (Rev.). See also 1943 All.W.R. (Rev.) 156.

Where in rent receipts given by the agent of the Zamindar the tenants are described as occupancy tenants, in the absence of evidence to show that the agent had power to confer occupancy rights, the Zamindar is not estopped from asserting that the tenants had no occupancy rights: L.R. 3 All. 517 (Rev.) See also 1939 R.D. 135 ; 1941 R.D. 678.

Permanent lease of vatan lands—Succeeding vatandar receiving rent for ratifying lease—Suit in ejectment—Estoppel: (1929) 31 Bom.L.R. 218: A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 174. See also A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 435.

48. Estoppel in criminal cases.—(See also Note 18, supra). Estoppel in matter of defence taken—Falsity of defence—Effect: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1943 (Bom.).

Where the petitioner pleaded promissory estoppel on the ground that the Investigating Officer who was in charge of the relevant investigation had promised him that even though he was recording his statement still he would not be called to give any evidence in Court, but said plea came forth for the first time nearly ten years after the statement was recorded, held, as the said Officer did not have jurisdiction to give such a promise, it was impossible to accept that any such promise would ever have been given or in fact was given by the Investigating Officer. Therefore, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was inapplicable to the present case: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 469.

Where the prosecution did not examine an Inspector, by no means a material witness, but offered and kept ready him for cross-examination but the Counsel for the accused failed to take advantage thereof, held, the accused could not take advantage of the prosecution's failure to examine the Inspector: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1092: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1357: (1985) 3 S.C.C. 45: (1985-2) 26 Guj.L.R. 988.

Where the deceased in the medico, legal reports had stated to the Doctor that it was her husband who had poured petrol over her and set her to fire which was relied upon by the prosecution and proved, in the absence of the Doctor who had left service and whose whereabouts were not known, by the record clerk who had in normal course of duty had seen the Doctor writing and signing but finding that in other declarations she had assigned this role to her husband's brother and the prosecution to upheld conviction in appeal, desired to disown the first confession as not having been properly proved, held, the prosecution could not be allowed to wriggle out of it to exclude the evidence of inconsistency of dying declarations; conviction set aside: 1991 Cr.L.J. 310: (1990) 42 Del.L.T. 299 (D.B.).

In the absence of proof of the deceased's identity or her being alive when she was taken by the accused to his dispensary or that none else had access to her while inside the dispensary, held, there would be no warrant for the inference that the accused had caused her death; the prosecution was estopped from seeking his conviction even if he had raised no such plea in defence: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1842: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2666: (1991) 3 S.C.C. 609.

Where as per the written statement filed by the State Government to the earlier writ petition it was mentioned that the prisoner was 16 years of age at the time of the commission of the offence, held, in the subsequent writ petition for direction to the State Government to determine his period of detention under S. 34 of the Children Act, 1960, the State Government was estopped from challenging the age of petitioner being less than 16 years at the time of commission of offence in view of its earlier admission: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1897 (P.&H.).

Where by the time the accused started to manufacture an article of food (corn flakes) the final Rules made under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, prescribing the standard and maximum moisture content had come into force to their knowledge, held, clearly they started manufacture with full knowledge of the standard prescribed by the Government for corn flakes and therefore, the accused cannot be permitted to raise the plea that they had no opportunity of expressing their objections to the prescription of a maximum moisture content in the standards and that they had no knowledge that the Government was going to prescribe such a maximum content when there was no indication in the draft Rules published by the Government: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1605 (Del.) (D.B.).

49. Estoppel in case of preventive detention.—Where on the representation of the detenu detained under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, the detaining authority promised him to supply the documents which were relied upon in the grounds of detention, but they were not supplied, held, the detaining authority after having made that promise could not take the stand that it was "graciousness" on the part of the detaining authority to have promised to supply the documents. That promise was in accordance with the law and, thus, the detaining authority was bound to supply those documents: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1340 (Del.) (D.B.).

Where petitioner a detenu under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 was represented before Advisory Board constituted under said Act through a Counsel and the request of the petitioner as recorded in his representation for the recording of statement of a witness was not brought to the notice of the Board by his Counsel, held, the request should be deemed to have been given up by the petitioner and he could not thereafter complain against non-recording of statement of witness by the Board: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1198 (Del.) (D.B.).

Where though a detenu under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, had made a request before the Advisory Board that he might be allowed to be represented by a "friend" but he failed to take the "friend" alongwith him and proceeded to conduct his case all by himself, held, the detenu having not, admittedly, taken his friend alongwith him before the Board, he could not fall back on his right to be represented by a "friend" and contend that the Advisory Board did not, on its own, ask him if he had brought his "friend" with him. Thus, he could not claim any breach of due procedure on the part of the Advisory Board. [1982 Cr.L.J. 340 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1291 (Ker.) (D.B.).

50. Estoppel in company matters.— Where a director of a banking company dealt with the shares on the footing that the allottees were holders of the shares with a clear knowledge of the circumstances that he was interested in the particular transaction of the board meeting of the company, in suit by the company against the allottees he was estopped from contending that the allotment was invalid. He could not be allowed to say that he was interested in the allotment and could not vote: (1965) 2 Comp.L.J. 99: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 170.

Share certificate—Nominal or face value of shares not conclusive—Company not estopped from showing that consideration for issue of shares and failed or that the transaction of particular shares had become illusory or inoperative: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 36: 1969 Raj.L.W. 473: I.L.R. (1969) 9 Raj. 340 (D.B.).

Applicant under S. 155, Companies Act, proceeding on basis that three persons were originally recorded owners in her petition for share certificate—Order for succession certificate also indicating that Court proceeded on basis that names of three persons appeared as owners of shares—Held, there was no question of applicant being misled by representation contained in share certificate: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 196.

M one of joint share-holders, knowing that original shares belonged to three persons including herself—She also knowing that bonus shares were issued and were meant to be allotted in name of said shareholders—Held, that if M was person primarily concerned in plea of estoppel she had knowledge of these facts; and her daughter claiming through her could not take advantage of her ignorance—Held, further that plea of estoppel did not fall within ambit of S. 115: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 196.

The question whether certain fully paid-up shares were issued by the company to the State as price of the good-will of the agency owned by the State and which the company took over as price of the assets of the agency or in lieu of grant of monopoly rights by the State to the company depends upon the interpretation of the various documents which passed between the company and the State and is not a pure question of fact but a mixed question of fact and law, and therefore, there cannot be an estoppel in such a matter: 1969 Raj.L.W. 473: I.L.R. (1969) 19 Raj. 340: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 36 (D.B.).

Rectification of register of shares—Transfer of shares without consideration and without knowledge of owner making use of blank transfer application — Legality — Application by owner for restoring her name as owner—Held, application should be allowed—Estoppel: (1964) 2 M.L.J. 309.

Rectification of Register—Powers of directors—Doctrine of estoppel and that of indoor management—Protection under when available—Transfer of shares by member to non-member—Transferee's name registered in company's register but cancelled subsequently without notice to transferee—Transfer not ultra vires—Transferee held was entitled to protection: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 52: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 277.

Estoppel against statute—Class of shareholders deprived of their rights under Companies Act by amendment of articles of association—Omission to object to amendment by shareholders concerned not fatal to their plea under Ss. 397 and 398 Companies Act.

Where a public limited company doing forward contracts business, in a special meeting passed a resolution depriving certain class of its shareholders of their right to vote and to declare and receive dividend, etc., held, that neither their absence at the meeting nor their failure to object at the subsequent elections held in accordance with the amended articles of association estopped them from raising the plea under Ss. 397 and 398, Companies Act, the rights sought to be deprived being fundamental statutory rights conferred on them under the Companies Act which no shareholder could be permitted to barter away: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 762: (1962) 32 Comp. Cas. 937: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 485.

A bank is not estopped from contending that the name of the transferor should remain in the register of share-holders because the bank knew about the transfer by the share-holder's phone call intimating it, and impliedly accepting the transfer of the shares by not sending any notices of meetings or dividend notices or dividend warrants to the share-holder in respect of the shares: (1957) 2 M.L.J. 517: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 702: I.L.R. (1957) Mad. 1058.

The principle on which the law of estoppel is attracted, is that a person who by his declaration or act or omission caused another person to believe a thing to be true should not be allowed to deny the truth of that thing. Where the contributory making the winding up petition was a party to the statements made in the balance-sheet, the director's report, the board's meetings and directors answers to the auditor's comments and various other documents and does not deny the truth of the things that have happened but only says that those things are unlawful, wrongful, and injurious to the interest of the company and it is on that footing that he has raised the various contentions in the winding up petition, the law relating to estoppel has no application: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 98.

Where during the course of a winding up of a company a certain person gave an undertaking to the Court that he would pay a certain sum of money to the official liquidator if the assets of the company, namely, a mill, be handed over to him and he obtained possession he is estopped from resiling from it: A.I.R. 1930 All. 330.

Where a winding up petition against a company for its failure to pay accrued interest on fixed deposits made to it was decided by a consent order whereby the company was directed to file a suit within specified time to establish its case of the deposit being fraudulent and not binding on the company failing which it would lose all rights to dispute the validity of the deposit on any ground whatsoever and the company did not file the suit within the time, held, the company was thereby estopped from disputing its liability under the fixed deposit or to impugn the maintainability of the winding up petition: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 71.

A special general meeting of the Central Co-operative Union Ltd., was held on 27th March, 1955, for the election of a new Board of Directors and a Chairman. The validity of this meeting was the subject-matter of an appeal before the Supreme Court and it was ultimately compromised between the parties who agreed to a fresh meeting being called for election. Such meeting was held on 30th March, 1956, at which the petitioner was present and he was elected as a Director of the new Board. The petitioner himself proposed three of the retiring Directors as members of the new Board and also the names of three other persons as office-bearers and both the proposals were passed unanimously. However, the petitioner referred a dispute with regard to the validity of the meeting held on 27th March, 1955 to Registrar who repeated the objection on 24th March, 1956. Held, that in the circumstances the petitioner was estopped from contesting the validity of the meeting held on 27th March, 1955, or the order of the Registrar, dated 24th March, 1956: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 154.

Companies Act, 1956, Ss. 433, 434, 466—Inability to pay debts—Disputed debts—Company Court if can consider legality of a debt—Procedure to be adopted in the event of genuine dispute regarding a debt in winding up proceedings—Decretal debt stands on the same footing as any ordinary debt: (1967) 1 Comp. L.J. 172 (Cal.).

The Official Receiver is not bound by the admission of the validity of a mortgage executed by the insolvent by some of his creditors nor is he precluded on that account from applying under S. 54 to have it annulled as a fraudulent preference: (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 436: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 354.

Where a sale notice issued by the Court in winding up proceedings left it to the discretion of the Court the terms and conditions of sale like the number and duration of instalments for payment of purchase money, interest thereon, the default clause and the bank guarantee and they were in fact determined by the Court, held, such a procedure should be avoided; the terms and conditions should be clearly set down in the sale notice; the Court should not countenance a situation where it has to negotiate the terms which is inconsistent with its dignity; the Supreme Court modified the terms on the appeal of financial institutions: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1524: (1993) 3 S.C.C. 40: (1993) 2 M.L.J. 14.

Where a retired company employee being tried under S. 630 of the companies Act, 1956 for selling the company flat allotted to him pleaded estoppel on the ground that the company's Managing Director had promised to sell the flat on book value (1/100th of its market value) and it was on that promise that the accused sold the flat believing it to be his property, held, apart from there being no evidence on record, no estoppel could be pleaded in such a case; it is the Board of directors, and not the Managing Director who could promise to sell the flat; and even the Board, trustee of the shareholders could not have sold it at such a ludicrously low price; and even the income-tax law would not have permitted such a sale: (1994) 1 Bom.C.R. 3.

51. Estoppel in taxation matters.—(See also Note 21, supra). Estoppel—Principle does not apply to income-tax proceedings: (1966) 2 I.T.J. 558: (1966) 61 I.T.R. 214 (All.).

Income cannot be taxed on basis of estoppel or any other equitable doctrine: (1965) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 142: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1216.

The principle of estoppel or res judicata has no application to income-tax cases. There is no estoppel against an assessee who makes admissions but the admissions made by him are undoubtedly pieces of evidence in the case which can be considered: I.L.R. 22 Pat. 55: A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 169. Determination of depreciation allowance—Limits for—Original cost accepted for some years—Income-tax Officer can go behind it to find out actual cost for himself—No bar of res judicata or estoppel. See A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 304: 25 I.T.R. 558. The doctrine of estoppel does not apply in cases of successive assessments. An assessment is complete in itself and the taxing department is not bound by any contention it took up in one assessment when the question arises with regard to a different assessment: (1954) 56 Bom.L.R. 810: A.I.R. 1955 Bom. 53: I.L.R. (1954) Bom. 1260.

Decisions arrived at in one assessment year are binding neither on the assessee nor on the Revenue in respect of subsequent assessment years. The principle of estoppel has no applicability to successive assessments. The Revenue Authorities are not bound by any contention or admission or decision taken up in one assessment when the same issue comes up for decision in a different assessment.

There is no estoppel against a statute. Where the Revenue Authorities take a particular view of the statutory provisions in the income-tax assessment and later on realise that it was a mistaken view, they cannot be estopped from taking a correct view of the statutory provisions later on: (1985) 156 I.T.R. 569.

There is no such principle that the Income-tax Department ought not to be permitted to go back on what it once said. If a bona fide mistake had been committed, it is open to the Department to rectify that mistake. It cannot be said that there is any estoppel in regard to this matter. The point though taken in an appeal has to be allowed. Even a pleading can be allowed to be amended in proceedings before a Court and a stand contradictory to that which had been taken earlier can be permitted to be taken. This is so especially in cases where the original stand was on the basis of a bona fide mistake: 1973 Ker.L.R. 358: 1973 Ker.L.T. 502 (D.B.).

It is not only the right but the duty of the Assessing Officer to consider whether or not the books disclose the true state of accounts and the correct income can be deduced therefrom. It is incorrect to say, that the Officer is bound to accept the system of accounting regularly employed by the assessee, the correctness of which had not been questioned in the past. There is no estoppel in these matters, and the Officer is not bound by the method followed in the earlier years. [(1976) 1 Cal.L.J. 102, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1338.

A tax levied without the authority of law infringes the assessee's fundamental rights; merely because he had included the exempted item in his return mistakenly and deposited the tax, held, he could impugn the same and seek refund; there could be no estoppel against the assessee: 1961 Raj.L.W. 420: A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 51.

An assessee who does not raise any objection to rectification before I.T.O., held, cannot be estopped from raising contention that rectifications were without justification: 1983 Tax.L.R. (N.O.C.) 89: 138 I.T.R. 734 (Del.).

Where an assessee was allowed a clearing certificate for leaving India upon his undertaking to pay the income-tax dues by monthly instalments and furnish security therefor, held, both the undertaking and the security were meant to be acted upon; the surety was, thus, precluded from contending that the assessee was not, as per S. 220(7) of the Income-tax Act, 1961, in default; the doctrine of promissory estoppel was attracted: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 626 (D.B.).

In order to enable a big assessee, who had been found to have evaded huge income-tax and was also liable to be prosecuted, to approach the Settlement Commission, the departmental appeals as well as the assessee's appeals were withdrawn by mutual understanding. But when the assessee moved the Commission, the Commissioner of Income-tax in exercise of his statutory powers raised objection with the result that the proceedings before the Commission, under statutory force, were dropped. However, thereafter the Commission, though having no power, at the assessee's instance reopened the proceedings and ruled that the Commissioner of Income-tax was estopped from objecting to the initiation of the settlement proceedings. Held, the doctrine of estoppel could not be attracted; the soul of estoppel is equity, not facility for inequity; nor is it permissible on public policy against statute; the Commissioner of Income-tax cannot enter into a "deal" without betraying his statutory duty; it cannot be accepted that by his conduct and "understandings", he had "irredeemably mortgaged" his statutory power to object, if the case merited objection. Estoppel in such situations is both odious and ominous and discretion, the door to corruption: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1725.

Dissolution of partnership by death of partner—New partnership created by fresh deed of partnership—Income-tax Office accepting the position and registering the new firm—Two separate orders of assessment passed—Held, Revenue having accepted succession could not for first time before Tribunal put up a case of change in constitution of the firm: 1985 Tax.L.R. 811 (Andh. Pra.).

Protective assessment of firm as registered firm—Income-tax Officer assessing different assessee not estopped from treating firm as benami concern: 1985 Tax.L.R. 1404 (Del.).

Notice under S. 34 of the Income-tax Act, 1922—Cannot be waived by assessee: A.I.R. 1961 Assam 35 (F.B.).

Waiver of notice under S. 34, Income-tax Act by Counsel—Client is not bound: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 438.

No objection to competency of assessing authority to assess raised in Income-tax proceedings—This amounts to waiver of objection and it cannot be raised in civil Court challenging authority of Income-tax Officer: I.L.R. 44 Pat. 22: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 305.

Hindu undivided family—Subsequent disruption—Member submitting returns of income as individual—Levy of penalty under S. 28, Income-tax Act—Legality challenged by such member on ground that partition was recorded by Income-tax Officer when passing order under S. 25-A (1), Income-tax Act—Members' conduct could not be attributed to Hindu undivided family who could be taxed as distinct legal entity—There was no estoppel by conduct—[Income-tax Act, 1922, Ss. 25-A and 28]: (1969) 72 I.T.R. 212: (1969) 2 I.T.J. 168 (Mad.).

Where all the heirs of the deceased, as accountable persons agreed to abide by the accounts rendered by one of them and also that estate duty assessment may be made on a company in which the deceased had controlling interest and when such assessment was made no appeal was filed against it by any of the accountable persons, held, having acquiesced wholly and completely in the assessment, the appellant, one of the heirs, could not dispute the quantum of liability or the order of assessment. [(1980) 126 I.T.R. 615 (Mad.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1654.

Where the Revenue Authorities accepted the assessment of disputed land as non-agricultural land, held, they were estopped from contending later on that the disputed land should be treated as agricultural land: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 210: (1985-2) 26 Guj.L.R. 865.

Where in an earlier writ petition the objection was taken that the agricultural lands sought to be assessed under the U.P. Agricultural Income-tax Act, 1949 did not fall within the ambit of the Act and the High Court remanded the case to the assessing authorities to determine the point and no objection was raised that the assessment should have been taken against the firm and not the companies which constituted the firm, held, that objection could not be allowed to be raised before the assessing authorities after the remand: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1104.

Essentials of—Notice issued under S. 25, U.P. Agriculture Income-tax Act, requiring assessee to file return next day—Notice invalid—Assessment consequent to such notice—Validity—Filing of returns if amounts to waiver of right to object to validity of notice: I.L.R. (1964) 1 All. 462.

An assessee under the Mysore Agricultural Income-tax Act cannot take inconsistent positions at different stages of assessment for same year: (1970) 2 Mys.L.J. 76.

Assessment to sales tax—Deductions—Power to decide allowability or otherwise—Delegation by Commissioner of power to Commercial Tax Officer: (1956-57) 61 Cal. W.N. 953.

No estoppel against statute—Sales Tax Authority making consolidated order of assessment for several quarters contrary to provisions of statute—Authority cannot plead that assessee was estopped from challenging validity of assessment on ground that assessee had submitted a consolidated return for those quarters: (1969) 24 S.T.C. 25: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 728.

Orissa Sales Tax Act (XIV of 1947), S. 21 (2)—Proceedings under—Principle of estoppel not applicable: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 575: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 44.

No estoppel without representation. [Case under T.N. General Sales Tax Rules, 1959, R. 18.] See I.L.R. (1979) 2 Mad. 76.

New plea as to—Permissibility—Assessee depositing amounts towards taxes on sales inside State—Sales Tax Authorities appropriating same towards liability under S. 8-A(4) of U.P. Sales Tax Act and making demand for further amounts—Such further amounts paid by assessee—On revision, revising authority holding that assessee was not liable to deposit further amounts and directing refund—Plea that the assessee must be taken to have acquiesced in the appropriation of the sum paid originally as sales tax towards the liability under S. 8-A (4) not raised before the Judge (Revisions)—Plea not arising out of the order of the Judge (Revisions) and requiring an investigation into facts—Plea not permitted to be raised before High Court on reference: (1964) 15 S.T.C. 335 (All.).

Where a notice under S. 21 of the U.P. Sales Tax Act was served on a stranger instead of assessee though under said section issue and service of notice on the assessee was a condition precedent and the assessee participated in the proceedings, held, the assessee was not estopped from challenging the validity of proceedings. [1978 U.P.T.C. 1: 1978 Tax.L.R. (N.O.C.) 24, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1980 All. 198 (F.B.).

Though the requirement of a prior notice for the proposed levy of property tax on a new building under R. 15(2) framed under the Bombay Municipal Corporations Act, 1949 is mandatory, as it is to put the owner on guard and an assessment of such levy in the absence of the notice is liable to be quashed as illegal but if the owner prefers objections without having been served with the notice and the assessment is made, held, it is not liable to be set aside as illegal; the requirement of prior notice is for the benefit of the assessee; having preferred objections without issuance of the notice, he is deemed to have waived the requirement of notice: A.I.R. 1994 Guj. 167 (D.B.).

Where on the Assam Taxation (On Goods Carried by Road or on Inland Waterways) Act, 1954 being declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court, a new Act was enacted with retrospective effect from 24-4-1954 which was struck down by the High Court on 1-8-1963 and the Supreme Court granted interim stay of the High Court's judgment on 28-10-1964, was made absolute on 29-1-1965 but the appeal was eventually allowed by the Supreme Court on 1-4-1968 and it was only on 29-1-1965 that the demand notice under S. 7 (2) of the new Act were issued which was clearly beyond the expiry of two years from the date on which the returns should have been filed, held, the State could not contend that the assessees were estopped from challenging the validity of the notices as the State could not issue the notices within statutory time; merely because the assessees had obtained a stay did not amount to waiver; the State could have sought modification of the stay order; and there could be no waiver of a statutory provision which went to the root of the matter: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2065.

Where the respondents in exercise of powers under the Punjab Municipal Act, 1911 imposed the show tax on establishments who were using video for exhibition of cinema films on commercial basis and the petitioner a licence-holder for exhibition of films of video challenged said order on the ground that he had established the Video Parlour on the implied assurance by the State that on deposit of the entertainment tax, no further tax would be levied by any other authority of the State, but the petitioner failed to point out as to what was the undertaking on the basis of which it acted bonafidely and changed its position and could not be reverted back to its original position, held, principle of estoppel was not applicable. Further, in matters of imposition of tax in exercise of delegated legislative powers, the principle of estoppel cannot be invoked: 1990 Punj.L.J. 282: (1990) 2 Rev.L.R. 387 (D.B.).

Under the provisions of the A.P. Entertainment Tax Act, 1939 and the Rules made thereunder the impressing of the cinema tickets with the official seal of the Entertainment Tax Officer has nothing to do with the correctness of the amount of the entertainment tax and the additional tax, noted on the tickets. The requirement of such impressing the tickets with the seal is for the purposes of verification of the return. Thus, where the licencing authority raised a demand of additional tax more than what was specified on sealed cinema tickets and the appellant invoked doctrine of promissory estoppel on the ground that break-up of the figures on the ticket duly stamped constituted a representation either by the licensing authority or by the Entertainment Tax Officer, held, as the impressing the seal of the Entertainment Tax Officer was not by way of certifying the correctness of the entertainment tax and the additional tax on the tickets, but for purposes of returns and as neither the authorities were obliged to make any representation to determine the tax component in the maximum rate of payment for admission, nor did the authorities make any such representation, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1993 Andh. Pra. 137: (1993) 1 An.L.T. 188: (1992) 2 An.W.R. 573 (F.B.).

Fees on sale of cattle is tax—Procedure for impost of fees not applicable—Levy of fees is illegal—Right to collect fees transferred—Agreement is illegal and cannot be enforced—Return of benefit—No specific plea—Effect—Benefit received under illegal impost—Party is not estopped: 1963 M.P.L.J. 261: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 240.

Provisional assessment to duty—Effect: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 207: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 122.

52. No estoppel against recovery of excess duty or price paid.—Where excise duty is voluntarily paid in excess by mistake of law and such excise duty is collected by the State without any authority of law, held, it is the duty of the State to refund the tax. The plea of estoppel does not apply to duty or tax which is collected without the authority of law. The excess amount of duty is, thus, required to be refunded: (1987) 3 Bom.C.R. 231; (1977) 1 Cut.W.R. 440 (D.B.).

Where the price of levy rice paid in the crop year 1975-76 under the A.P. Rice Procurement (Ex-Mill) Prices Order, 1975 to the rice millers was by notification extended to the next crop year and it was found that the extension order was invalid for contravention of S. 3 (3-B) and (5-A) of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 and the Government sought to recover the excess price so paid in the crop years 1976-77, held, since the excess price paid was clearly the result of a mistake of law, the rice millers could not invoke the rule of estoppel to resist recovery of the excess price: A.I.R. 1981 Andh. Pra. 350: (1981) 2 An.W.R. 228: (1981) 2 An.L.T. 359 (D.B.).

53. Estoppel in land acquisition matters.—Petitioner who has made application for reference claiming increased compensation cannot be permitted to challenge acquisition of land itself: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 118.

Who can apply—Right to challenge proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act—Acceptance of award no bar to obtain relief under Art. 226: (1962-63) 67 Cal.W.N. 647.

Where petitioner-land owners accepted compensation on account of land acquisition without protest but later on they claimed higher compensation and the competent authority pleaded estoppel, held, as the objector raised protest within three months of the payment and subsequently carried on the objection in the appropriate forum without any delay, no question of estoppel arose: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 118: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 17: (1975) 2 Cut.W.R. 899 (D.B.).

Where a landowner in response to a notice under S. 9(3) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 had preferred claim for compensation, and dissatisfied with the quantum of compensation sought a reference and got the compensation enhanced in the reference under S. 18 of that Act, and preferred no appeal against it because of his full satisfaction with the enhanced compensation, held, the landowner was estopped from questioning the award on the ground that the notice under S. 9(3) of the Act being short of 15 days, the award was illegal and void; the estoppel would operate against him even if the 15 days' notice under S. 15 is mandatory: A.I.R. 1982 P.&H. 294: 1981 Punj.L.J. 577 (D.B.).

Where the claimants participated in the acquisition proceedings, filed objections and preferred claim for payment and enhancement of compensation but did not challenge the legality of the notifications by which acquisition was made, before making the award, held, he could not, subsequently, be permitted to question the validity of said notifications: A.I.R. 1995 Del. 102 (D.B.).

Where a claimant of compensation for land acquisition by his representations including indemnity bonds and unilateral agreements in the acquisition proceedings clearly stated that the amount of compensation agreed to by him included statutory 15 per cent and it was on that basis that he was allowed to withdraw the amount allowed, held, even if there was no agreement between him and the authorities as contemplated under Art. 299 of the Constitution of India, he was nevertheless estopped to contend to the contrary after having obtained the benefit under the agreement. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 82, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 325 (D.B.).

Acquisition of excess property—Both owner and Collector waiving illegality of Collector—Acquiescing in acquisition—State estopped from saying that claimant would not be entitled to compensation as prescribed under the Land Acquisition Act: 1979 All.L.J. 1072.

Where an assamidar's (a mere landholder as distinct from a landower's) land was acquired in the nineteenth century which as per the customary law then prevailed extinguished the assamidar's right over the land (by remission of land revenue and payment of compensation for standing crops) which vested in the Maharaja, held, no proceedings for acquisition of that land over 60 years thereafter could be initiated under the J.&K. Land Acquisition Act; the proceedings as well as the award of compensation are a nullity: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1349.

Where the respondents-claimants under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, agreed to reduce the cost of acquisition if payment was made within specified time and they also agreed not to make any further claim regarding compensation, held, the claimants were estopped from claiming any interest on account of delay in payment of compensation: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 969: 1981 U.J. (S.C.) 189: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 221.

Representation—Necessity for raising estoppel—Claim for enhancement of compensation under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act—Claimant accepting portion of compensation pending final award as advance in pursuance of agreement—No representation as to total amount of compensation payable, made by claimant on which Land Acquisition Officer could be said to have acted believing the same to be true—Held, claimant was not estopped from claiming enhancement of compensation: (1969) 18 Law Rep. 467 (Mys.).

Where the petitioner, a rustic villager, accepted the compensation offered to him by the Land Acquisition Collector regarding his land which was acquired by the Officer and thereafter the petitioner sought a reference to the Court but his application was rejected on the ground that the petitioner had received the payment without protest, held, as there was no evidence to establish that the Land Acquisition Collector had explained to him the consequences of his acceptance, if any, of the compensation without protest and there was also no evidence to establish that even otherwise he knew the implications of such acceptance and he still accepted the compensation without any protest. Therefore, the petitioner was not estopped from seeking a reference: 1988 Punj.L.J. 48: A.I.R. 1988 Him. Pra. 39 (D.B.).

Where land belonging to appellant trust was acquired pursuant to an agreement entered into between trust and authority under Land Acquisition Act under which the appellant waived its right to take any steps for claiming anything more than the amount stipulated in the agreement including the right to seek reference to the civil Court but subsequently appellant sought reference to civil Court, held, the right to claim enhanced compensation or for that matter the right to seek reference to the civil Court with a view to get the enhanced compensation is a right intended solely for the benefit of the landholder. There is no prohibition in law against waiving the said right. Further, as the amount as stipulated in the agreement was paid to the appellant and the respondents had acted as per the agreement, the appellant was estopped from making a claim contrary to the terms of the agreement and insist upon the enforcement of the rights that he had waived in law: A.I.R. 1992 Andh. Pra. 130: 1991 An.L.T. 598 (D.B.).

Where the Board of Trustees of a Devasthanam had claimed what the Board comprising of new Trustees considered low compensation for land acquisition without alleging mala fides against the previous Trustees, held, the Board being a continuing body irrespective of changes in its members is not entitled to claim enhanced compensation; no question of estoppel can therefore, arise; succeeding Trustees do not have an individuality of their own as Board members: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 151 (D.B.).

Where landowners sought to estop the Government from acquiring their lands on the ground of a Government promise embodied in its letter of not acquiring their fertile agricultural lands, held, there was no such promise; but even if the promise had been made, the doctrine of equitable estoppel is not attracted; acquisition of land being undoubtedly for public purpose unless shown to be fraudulent it must prevail over private interest: (1990-2) 10 Guj.L.H. 96 (D.B.).

Where upon quashing of a notification under S. 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 the proceedings for acquisition were revived under the Land Acquisition (Amendment and Validation) Act, 1967 and the Government had also issued a fresh notification for acquisition of the same land under S. 4 but the Government represented to the claimant that the compensation would be paid to him under the fresh proceedings whereupon he did not pursue his remedies under the earlier but revived proceedings, held, the Government was estopped from contending that the earlier proceedings were not abandoned or that it had no power to abandon them; the doctrine of promissory estoppel was attracted: A.I.R. 1971 Del. 170.

Once a part of the area notified under S. 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, is not included in the notification under S. 6, it cannot be said that the State Government is estopped from issuing a fresh notification in respect of the land which was initially released from acquisition. Thus, where State Government issued a notification under S. 4 of 1894 Act indicating its intention to acquire land of the petitioners but in the notification issued under S. 6 of said Act the petitioner's land was not included whereafter the petitioner sold said land and purchaser made construction thereupon and it was thereafter that the State Government issued fresh notification acquiring the said land also, held, merely because the petitioners had raised construction on the said land after its release, it could not be said that the State is estopped from acquiring that land subsequently, at the most, the State is bound to pay compensation for the structure also: 1994 Punj.L.J. 141.

Where a manufacturing company having taken a long term lease of land from private co-sharers to set up a factory and the land was acquired and its possession taken by the State under S. 17(1) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, held, it was not open to the State to refuse payment of compensation to the company on the ground that the land had already vested in the State under the W.B. Estates Acquisition Act, 1957; the State was equitably estopped: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 389 (D.B.).

Where the Government acquired certain land for the benefit of a statutory body and the land-owners, not satisfied with the amount of compensation sought for a reference and got it enhanced in the reference Court as well as in the first appeal and in the second appeal before the Supreme Court, the statutory body contended that as the Court of reference as well as the first appellate Court had not issued notice to it, the order of enhancement was not correct, held, as there was material to infer that the statutory body had accepted and was satisfied with the award of the reference Court, though no notice was served on it in those proceedings, it was not open to it to assail the correctness of the enhancement made by the Court of Reference: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1320.

Act conferring jurisdiction—Reference by Land Acquisition Officer under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act incompetent—Land Acquisition Officer not estopped from contending that reference was invalid—Statutory objection to jurisdiction does not admit of waiver—Consent cannot give jurisdiction—Provision of S. 18 not for benefit of Land Acquisition Officer—Interpretation of statutes: (1964) 2 An. W.R. 225: A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 25.

Where on acquisition of a leasehold land the lessee accepted the Land Acquisition Officer's offer of its valuation which was enhanced on the lessor's reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 after the award had been passed, held, the lessee, having accepted the offer and not seeking the reference, could not seek the lessee's share in the enhanced compensation; he had waived his right to do so by his conduct. [A.I.R. 1919 Cal. 524; A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 506, Foll.] : A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 288 (D.B.).

In a land acquisition proceeding, the owner of land received compensation for use of the minerals under his land by the Government for the construction of a bridge. It is no estoppel against the owner suing for declaration of his right to the remaining minerals after the completion of the bridge: I.L.R. 8 Pat. 742: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 112.

Grounds of appeal—New point—Claim for compensation in respect of granite within patta land—Land Acquisition Officer proceeding on basis that there was grant of minerals—Same stand taken before District Judge—Plea that minerals did not pass with grant and that regarding onus of proof of that fact—Land Acquisition Officer not permitted to raise those pleas for first time in appeal: (1967) 1 Mys.L.J. 159.

Where the position of the defendant was altered to his prejudice as possession of his land was taken in 1894 by the plaintiff-Government on a positive promise of giving him suitable lands and to honour the undertaking given in 1894, the Collector acquired the lands treating the defendant to be the owner thereof, despite the fact that the plaintiff was in possession ever since 1894. Held, that in these circumstances the plaintiff was estopped from putting forward its ownership by adverse possession in order to deprive the defendant of the compensation paid to him: 1966 Kash.L.J. 8: A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 45.

Owner not estopped from claiming just compensation under S. 8 of the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952 merely because they have given low figure of annual rent for purposes of taxation. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 908; A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 265; (1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 363; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1030; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1032, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1970 Del. 232.

Where the plaintiff whose property was requisitioned under R. 75-A of the D.I Rules, but on the promise of the plaintiff not to demand any compensation for the period the property was in occupation of the Government after requisition, if the property is released and handed over to the plaintiff and the Government upon this promise derequisitioned the property, the plaintiff is subsequently estopped from demanding compensation: I.L.R. (1961) 2 Punj. 391: (1961) 63 Punj. L.R. 302: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 314.

Displaced person with verified claim praying for cash compensation instead of adjustment of the value of property—Prayer rejected—Does not render such person ineligible for the transfer of acquired property in his name—Treating his application for cash compensation as a sort of estoppel would be taking a much too legalistic view of the matter: I.L.R. (1963) 2 Punj. 685: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 87.

Since it is mandatory under S. 127 of the Maharashtra Regional and Town Planning Act, 1966 that non-acquisition by agreement with the owner or under statute or non-institution of acquisition proceedings of any land reserved, allotted or designated for any purpose specified in a plan under that Act within 10 years of its finalisation and if within 6 months of the service of the owner's notice, no proceedings for acquisition are commenced, the reservation, allotment or designation shall lapse and the land would thereby stand released, held, whether such a notice served was valid or invalid is a mixed question of law; the Municipal Corporation had all the requisite particulars about the lands and their owners, etc., on its own record; it could not, therefore, ask the sender of the notice to furnish particulars of the land or his interest therein and in correspondence between the parties, the six months' time from the service of notice lapsed; it could not be contended that the owners had thereby waived off their rights under the notice; notice of acquisition issued after six months, held, is invalid: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 233.

54. Estoppel in arbitration matters.—If the parties to the reference either, agree beforehand to the method of appointment, or afterwards acquiesce in the appointment made, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, they will be precluded from objecting to such appointment as invalidating subsequent proceedings. Attending and taking part in the proceedings with full knowledge of the relevant fact will amount to such acquiescence. [A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 470; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 230, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 2045.

It is the Court's duty to find out whether there exists an arbitration clause in an agreement or not, which has to be decided with reference to the parties' intention by reading the language of the clause and not on the basis that a party to the agreement by filing petition under Ss. 5, 12 and 20 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, had admitted the existence of the arbitration agreement; mere filing of such petition will not operate as an estoppel against the party: A.I.R. 1995 Del. 111.

Where a party to an arbitration clause providing for the appointment of an officer of the other party as the arbitrator had concurred to his appointment and had also appeared before him and taken part in the proceedings without raising any objection as to his authority or jurisdiction, held, that party is estopped from challenging his appointment on the ground of his being an officer of the other party; his appointment shall be deemed to have been valid and in order: A.I.R. 1994 Him. Pra. 153.

Where the Government as well as the contractor construed the arbitration clause as such and the Government named the arbitrator in terms of the clause to whose jurisdiction both of them submitted, held, notwithstanding the interpretation of the arbitration clause or the impact of A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1522, the Government is estopped from abrogating the arbitrator's appointment or directing him to abstain from proceeding with the reference; the remedy of both the parties lies within the four corners of the Arbitration Act, 1940: A.I.R. 1986 Bom. 76: 1986 Mah.L.J. 401.

Where respondent appointed one of its officer as arbitrator in accordance with the agency agreement and the applicant agreed to it but later he raised the plea for appointment of another arbitrator in terms of S. 9(b) of the Arbitration Act, 1940, held, the applicant was estopped from challenging the appointment of arbitrator made in terms of the agency agreement: A.I.R. 1981 Mad. 367.

Estoppel — Reference to arbitrator — Counter-claim not determined by arbitrator—No separate references can be made: 1966 Cur. L.J. 76 (Punj.).

Where plaintiff filed an application to the Court for referring all disputes between it and the defendant to arbitration and though the defendant did not join in the application nor did he sign the same but he nevertheless participated in the arbitration proceedings, held, the defendant was estopped from challenging the legality of the reference: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 227: (1974-75) 79 Cal.W.N. 349 (D.B.).

Where a party referred a specific question of law to the arbitrator for his decision and also participated in the proceedings, held, the party was estopped from contending that its making of reference to the arbitrator was without prejudice to its right to contend to the contrary: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1072: (1984) 2 S.C.C. 680; 1981 Jab.L.J. (Note) 3.

Where the conduct of the party indicates that he submitted to an adjudication of the dispute by a particular person appointed as arbitrator, he is estopped from challenging the competency of the arbitrator. [A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 415; A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 145; A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 456; A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 150; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 230, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 468; A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1457; A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 488; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 303, Disting.]: (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 232.

Where the plaintiff, on its own accord, willingly accepted a clause regarding the reference of the dispute to a sole arbitrator, who is to be appointed by the defendant and who might even be an employee of the defendant company and thereby obtained the contract, held, the plaintiff was estopped from raising the plea regarding the validity of the clause and the appointment of employee of defendant company as arbitrator; and even otherwise the clause is not unconscionable or void or against public policy: A.I.R. 1992 Raj. 82.

Where the award of arbitrator was accepted by the parties and it was also acted upon in part but subsequently one of the parties filed a suit on same subject-matter, held, he was estopped from doing so. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1077, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 P.&H. 133: (1974) 76 Punj.L.R. 244.

Where a party who had participated in the proceedings before the arbitrator contended that as the contract under the terms of which arbitration was sought was void therefore, the arbitration clause also failed and the other party pleaded estoppel, held, plea of estoppel could not be raised: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 111: I.L.R. (1984) 1 Del. 378 (D.B.).

A party who has gone to arbitration under a contract which was void under some Act cannot plead that his opponent having taken part in arbitration proceedings cannot later repudiate the award as void. [A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 458 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 90, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Cal. 119: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N. 1061.

Where a party participates in arbitration proceedings without protest and fully avails of it but finds the award to have gone against it, held, it is estopped by its conduct from impugning the arbitration proceedings as without jurisdiction or the reference as unilateral: A.I.R. 1989 J.&K. 14: 1989 Kash.L.J. 151 (D.B.).

Where both the parties submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of arbitrator and participated in the proceedings for a long time but thereafter respondent challenged the validity of order of appointment of arbitrator, held, long participation and acquiescence in the proceeding precluded such a party from contending that the proceedings were without jurisdiction. [A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 470, Approved; (1987) 1 Cal.L.J. 207, Reversed; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 230; (1876) 3 Ind. App. 209, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 205: (1987) 4 S.C.C. 217: (1987) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 445.

Where the parties had participated in arbitration proceedings and also jointly applied for extension of time without raising any objection to the arbitrator's jurisdiction on earlier occasions, held, objection to the arbitrator's jurisdiction could not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal. [A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 143; A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 150 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Ori. 166: (1981) 52 Cut. L.T. 63.

Parties agreeing to refer dispute to seven named arbitrators—Only five arbitrators taking part in proceedings and signing the award—Held, as party had taken part in proceedings before five arbitrators, he was estopped from challenging validity of award on ground that all arbitrators had not taken part in the proceedings: 1968 Pat.L.J.R. 218.

Where the original agreement did not provide for filling up the vacancy of the arbitrator contemplated under S. 8(1) of the Arbitration Act, 1940 but subsequently by their conduct they consented to the filling up of the vacancy, its recall and appointment of another arbitrator by the Court, held, the parties were estopped from assailing the appointment of the arbitrator as without jurisdiction; for they had by subsequent conduct, expressed their fresh intention to provide for the filling up of the vacancy by the Court in the original agreement: A.I.R. 1990 Ori. 116 (D.B.).

Where an agreement provided that all disputes and differences arising between the parties shall be referred only to the sole arbitration of the appointee of one of the parties and if for any reason that was not possible, the matter would not be referred to arbitration at all, held, it was clear that even on the concerned party's failure to appoint the arbitrator, the Court had no authority to fill up the vacancy; an arbitrator appointed by Court would have no jurisdiction; a mere appearance before the Court-appointed arbitrator could not estop the concerned party from challenging the award: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 231: I.L.R. (1987) 2 Ker. 321 (D.B.).

Consent of parties to refer dispute as to title of certain properties to arbitrator—Award accepted by parties—Consolidation officer passing an order on the basis of such award—Order operates as estoppel in subsequent litigations between parties: 1968 All.L.J. 123: 1968 All. W.R. (H.C.) 350.

A party applying under S. 33 of the Arbitration Act is not estopped by its conduct in appearing before the arbitrators and in taking part in the proceedings before them from questioning the validity of its award: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1910: (1963) 3 S.C.R. 183. See also I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 278 ; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 143; A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 1.

Acquiescence—Party to arbitration asking arbitrators to decide upon implied term in contract—Other party not objecting—Effect—Decision on point given—Subsequent objection to award—Estoppel: (1959-60) 64 Cal.W.N. 616: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 702.

Omission to object—Arbitration—Clause for reference in voidable contract—Contract treated as valid and reference and award made—Subsequent avoidance of contract—Estoppel: 148 I.C. 372: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 207.

There can be no acquiescence in arbitration proceedings which are clearly beyond the Court's order of reference. A party is not precluded from objecting to the award later, on the ground that the award was in excess of jurisdiction and the entire proceedings were invalidated thereby. Attending and taking part in the proceedings will not cure the defect where the arbitrator lacks inherent jurisdiction. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2014, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 44.

An arbitration agreement under S. 2 (a) of the Arbitration Act, 1940 must be in writing; in the absence of that sine qua non, the arbitrator would have no initial jurisdiction; it cannot be cured by a party's oral acquiescence or admission of liability before the arbitrator; such a party is not estopped from impugning the existence of the arbitration proceedings. [A.I.R. 1925 Sind 144; A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1810, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 72: (1981) 83 Bom.L.R. 307.

Where a reference was made unilaterally by the plaintiff to an arbitrator which is wholly illegal and confers no jurisdiction on the arbitrator, held, merely because the defendant had appeared before the arbitrator at the earlier stages and filed objections against the plaintiff's claim would not operate as estoppel against the defendant; the defendant could raise objection to the arbitrator's jurisdiction even at the stage of revision. [A.I.R. 1963 All. 242; A.I.R. 1931 All. 35 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1810; A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 90; A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 412, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1954 All. 673; A.I.R 1966 S.C. 1652, Disting.] : A.I.R. 1973 All. 49.

Filing of arbitration agreement—Sufficient cause for not filing same—What is—Complete abrogation of arbitration agreement or competent reference under arbitration clause necessary—Invalid reference does not amount to waiver or estoppel—Government party to agreement—Art. 299 to be complied with in matter of alteration of agreement: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 82.

Award under Arbitration Act made beyond time—Applicability of principle of estoppel, waiver or acquiescence: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 150 (F.B.).

Where by the time the State had filed its appeal against the earlier impugned order within statutory time after obtaining its copy the second arbitrator had passed his award within the time granted by the trial Court, held, it could not in any way affect the State's statutory right to go in appeal under S. 39 of the Arbitration Act; there can be no estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1990 Ker. 42: (1989) 1 Ker.L.T. 757 (D.B.).

The arbitrator has no jurisdiction to make an award after the fixed time. As the award made beyond the time is invalid, the parties are not estopped by their conduct from challenging the award on the ground that it was made beyond time merely because of their having participated in the proceedings before the arbitrator after the expiry of the prescribed period: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 920: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 629.

Condition as to time—Waiver—Party taking part in arbitration proceedings after expiry of four months—Principles of waiver and estoppel apply: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 685: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 17.

Where a party to arbitration proceedings continued to participate therein even after the expiration of 4 months and it was only after receiving the award which it found to be not to its liking that it raised the objection that the four months time having been passed, the arbitrators could not proceed and give the award, held, the objecting party had waived its right by its conduct; it was estopped from impugning the award on that score: A.I.R. 1974 All. 296.

A party willingly participating in arbitration proceedings held after the expiration of the statutory period of 4 months is estopped from later on objecting to the award as having been given beyond that period; but the party's mere presence when no steps are taken by the arbitrator of the aggrieved party in the arbitration proceedings cannot be taken to be a willing participant: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 37: 1970 B.L.J.R. 400 (D.B.).

Where though the stipulated period for making an award expired, the petitioner without any objection continued to participate in the proceedings before the arbitrator, held, it must be presumed that the petitioner by his conduct acquiesced in the proceedings before the arbitrator and he, therefore, could not challenge the validity of award later on: A.I.R. 1977 Raj. 233: 1977 Raj.L.W. 136: 1977 W.L.N. 84.

Where in proceedings under S. 20 of the Arbitration Act, 1940 the parties had agreed to refer their disputes to the Managing Director of one of the parties who entered upon the reference and continued to hold arbitration proceedings even after his retirement and the parties also mutually agreed to extend the time for a further period of four months for making the award, held, the parties had acquiesced in his continuing with the arbitration proceedings; they were estopped from challenging his jurisdiction. [A.I.R. 1986 P.&H. 376, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1987 Del. 317; A.I.R. 1989 Del. 270: (1989) 37 Del.L.T. 345: 1989 Rajdhani L.R. 139.

Proceedings under U.P. Co-operative Societies Act before arbitrator—Registrar enlarging time for proceeding for two years without raising plea as to legality of extension of time before the arbitrator or appellate authority—Party is estopped from questioning the award of arbitrator: 1979 All.L.J 1197.

Dispute between Co-operative Society and its member referred to arbitration under Society's bye-law—Bye-law making award final and not open to appeal—Society cannot challenge validity of bye-law and claim right of appeal: (1937) 39 Punj.L.R. 460: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 673.

Where an award for Rs. 1,15,164.13, impugned in appeal to the association, was reduced to Rs. 37,500.00 and interest and the full amount due was sent and received in full settlement by the claimant, held, the claimant is estopped from challenging the award. [Appeal No. 32 of 1952, D/-28-8-1952 (Bom.); 1940 A.C. 412 and (1926) 1 K.B. 348, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 76.

Where arbitration proceedings between the parties were in progress and the respondent wanted inspection of the documents without prejudice to his rights and contentions and immediately on inspection of the documents filed his suit for a declaration that there was no valid contract between the parties and the appellant contended that the petitioner having participated in the arbitration was estopped from contending that there was no valid arbitration agreement, held, the respondent did not file any counter-statement of fact and only asked for inspection of the relevant documents and that too "without prejudice" and, thus, no question of estoppel arose: A.I.R. 1991 Cal. 350: (1991) 2 Cal.L.T. 164 (D.B.).

Under the terms of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants even if the defendants refused to get the matter settled by arbitration, it was open to the plaintiff to have a sole arbitrator appointed and the decisions of that arbitrator would be final and would be binding upon the parties. In the present case the defendants in their reply to the notice given by the plaintiff regarding a reference to arbitration did not in terms refuse arbitration. What they said was that the plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendants which he could take, either in a Court of law or before an arbitrator. In the suit filed by the plaintiff one of the defendants applied for a stay of suit under S. 34, Arbitration Act, whereupon the plaintiff contended that the defendants were estopped from applying. Held, that the defendants were not estopped from asking the Court to grant the relief under S. 34 of the Arbitration Act: A.I.R. 1958 All. 522.

Once a party to the arbitration agreement waives his right to enforce that agreement and takes part in proceedings in suit relating to the matter in dispute between them, it is not open for him to otherwise approach and move a Court for reference to arbitrator. Thus, where the applicants first moved the Court in the pending civil suit for stay of the suit under S. 34 of the Arbitration Act but they withdrew that application and thus consciously abandoned their right to obtain an order staying the suit and, therefore, allowed the suit to continue despite the agreement to get their disputes settled by arbitrator, held, by withdrawing the application under S. 34 filed in the civil suit and having participated in further proceedings in the suit, the applicants had waived their right to get the dispute resolved by arbitrator. [A.I.R. 1957 All. 91, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1991 Madh. Pra. 309: 1991 Jab.L.J. 498.

Application to file award in Revenue Court—Respondent contending that Revenue Court has no jurisdiction—Revenue Court holding that it has no jurisdiction and returning application—Application in civil Court to file award—Respondent is not estopped from pleading that civil Court has no jurisdiction to file award—Arbitration Act, (1940), Ss. 14, 31: A.I.R. 1962 Him. Pra. 10.

Jurisdiction of arbitrator—Failure to object at early stage creates estoppel: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 42.

Where the two arbitrators appointed by the Electricity Board and the contractor did not give the award within the specified time and though the umpire empowered as per R. 4 in the First Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1940 to enter upon the reference was reluctant to do so without Court orders as the parties had already moved the Court for extension of time and the Court, on the parties consent, relieved the two arbitrators who themselves were willing to be relieved and the contractor had expressed his lack of confidence in them, and appointed the umpire a sole arbitrator, and he passed the award after hearing both the parties, held, the award could not be impugned as without jurisdiction; having consented to his appointment, submitted to his authority and participated in the proceedings held by him, they were estopped from challenging his jurisdiction; at any rate, it could not be contended that the consent order of the Court had deprived him of his statutory jurisdiction under the aforesaid R. 4: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 230: (1975) 1 S.C.C. 289.

Appointment of umpire—Defect in—Acquiescence—Estoppel against raising objection to such appointment as invalidating subsequent proceedings. See A.I.R. 1955 Punj. 240.

Where the petitioners had consented not only to the presence of the umpire but also to his participation in the arbitration proceedings and it was with their consent that the proceedings had gone ahead and at no stage had they complained against the umpire's conduct either in or with respect to the said proceedings, held, having, thus, allowed both the arbitrators and the umpire to act without a word of protest, they could not thereafter complain against the agreed procedure when the award had gone against them [A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 205; A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 2045, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1990 Bom. 276: (1989) 2 Bom.C.R. 332 (D.B.).

Where though a clause in the agreement provided that before entering into reference the two arbitrators shall nominate an umpire but the arbitrators entered into the reference without first appointing an umpire and one of the parties continued to participate in the arbitration proceedings without raising such an objection and it was only when the award was unfavourable that it raised the technical objection of the prior non-appointment of the umpire as a ground to set aside the award, held, having waived his right by conduct to raise the objection, the objector was estopped from raising the same: A.I.R. 1977 Guj. 183: (1977) 18 Guj.L.R. 342 (D.B.).

55. Estoppel in recruitment/appointment matters.—Pre-recruitment formalities such as medical examination, direction to deposit security, etc., do not amount to a promise to appoint a candidate. Mere expectancy of being taken in service or the pre-recruitment formalities being gone through does not necessarily create a promise which the employer would be estopped from ignoring or refusing to act upon. It is true that in public service, a candidate who is otherwise fit, able, and appropriate person for appointment, cannot be ignored on any extraneous consideration, but at the same time every applicant or every person who is being considered for appointment cannot claim that he or she is, as a matter of right, entitled to be appointed on the post for which he or she is a candidate just because he or she has gone through some pre-recruitment formalities. It is upto the employer to keep the question of suitability of the would-be employee open up to the last moment before the appointment. A candidate may be dropped from being considered for being appointed on the ground of unsuitability at any stage before appointment: (1984) 2 L.L.J. 375 (P.&H.); (1984-1) 25 Guj.L.R. 383. See also 1992 Lab.I.C. 1539 (Cal.).

Where the petitioner who was shown as having first rank in the list of selected candidates was advised for appointment by the Service Commission but the advice memo specifically provided that any advice made by Commission was liable to cancellation if it was subsequently found to be mistaken and thereafter Commission issued a memo to the petitioner whereunder it was stated that she infact ranked second in selected list but was shown as having first rank by mistake and, therefore, advice of her name for recruitment was wrong, and thus, said advice was cancelled, held, petitioner knew that her advice was subject to cancellation if it was found to be mistaken later. Being so, and since the advice by the Commission was subject to this condition, petitioner could not take advantage of the advice, without the burden of the condition and contend that her advice and appointment should remain despite the mistake committed by the Commission. No question of promissory estoppel arose, when the petitioner had been told and she had understood the possibility of cancellation of the advice when advice memo was issued to her: (1993) 1 Ker.L.J. 632.

Where the petitioner, who was taken in service on the implied promise that he would be absorbed permanently and was never told that his appointment was subject to the approval of the Public Service Commission, applied to the Commission in compliance with the orders of his superiors, and was not selected by it, the petitioner did not relinquish or waive all his rights, if any, and accept the position that his service was purely temporary. He was, therefore, not estopped from asserting his previous rights, if any: A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 28.

The authority cannot take a different stand when the appointment was offered to an individual subject to verification of antecedents and the verification when favourable to that individual: (1991) 1 Cal.H.N. 104.

Where the petitioner was selected for the post of part time lecturer applications for which were invited in 1980 but the University enforcing for the first time resolution of 1972 and U.G.C. Guidelines, 1978 withdrew selection of the petitioner, held, University was estopped from enforcing resolution and guideline after the selection of the petitioner. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1021; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 376, Rel. on]: (1981) 1 Serv.L.J. 482: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 116 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where the petitioners after a successful written test and interview were put on the selected panel for the post of Junior Electrical Engineers but as vacancies were less they could not be appointed on that post and instead they were offered a lower job which was duly accepted by the petitioners with a specific undertaking that they would not claim for the post for which they had qualified earlier, held, such undertaking could not estop the petitioners from being considered for the future vacancies of Junior Electrical Engineers: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1348.

Where gram sewaks under the Rules of their appointment were required to appear for a qualifying written test before they could be called for interview for selection, held, the selection list prepared without the qualifying written test, even if there were no separate marks assigned for it, was illegal; there is no estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 183: (1982-2) 23 Guj.L.R. 22.

Recruitment of Forest Guard—Petitioner over 25 years of age on date of passing selection test appointed to post—Petitioner being backward class candidate and no other suitable candidate within age limit being available, as several candidates failed—Held, appointing authority should be deemed to have relaxed age limit in petitioner's favour—Government on principle of promissory estoppel is barred from terminating his services on ground of his being over-aged on date of appointment: 1985 Lab.I.C. 1355 (Guj.).

Negligence of Government in matter of appointing petitioner—Discharge of petitioner—Petitioner becoming over-age at time of discharge—Estoppel—Discharge held illegal: (1965) 2 An. W.R. 437: A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 59.

Where the State Government abruptly changed the selection criteria but even then the petitioner-candidate appeared in the qualifying examination and subjected herself to the selection process but subsequently she challenged said criteria on the ground that it was violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution and the State pleaded estoppel, held, merely because the petitioner subjected herself to the selection process, it did not mean that she was debarred from challenging the legality of the same. Moreover, if any process, criteria or rule offends ones constitutional rights, he cannot be prevented from challenging the same: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 313 (J.&K.).

Where the appellant knew all the relevant facts and neither before the interview nor at the time of the interview he raised any objection against the constitution of the Selection Committee and he voluntarily appeared before the Committee but when he was not selected he challenged the constitution of the Committee, held, he was estopped from questioning the constitution of the Selection Committee. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 425, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2428: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 701: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 585.

Where the petitioner had appeared before the Ad hoc Managing Committee as a candidate for the post of the Head Master of the School and seconded the election of respondents as Secretary and President, respectively, held, it was not open to him to say that the said Managing Committee was not duly constituted; he was estopped from making such assertion: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 58 (D.B.).

A person who acquiesced in Rr. 4 and 5 of the Karnataka General Services (Revenue Subordinate Branch) Village Accountants (Recruitment) Rules, 1970 by applying for the post, twice appearing before the Recruitment Committee for interview and taking a chance of being selected, held, is estopped from impugning the validity of the Rules by way of a writ petition: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 28.

Simply because the petitioner came to be regarded as a member of the Scheduled Tribe when he was first appointed in the railway service and continued to be regarded as such till the deletion of his name from the panel selected for promotion on detecting an obvious mistake in treating him as such, that cannot create an estoppel against the Railway Authorities if subsequently, it is found that the petitioner could not be regarded as a member of the Scheduled Tribes. It is a matter of status granted by the President's Order as such and such a status cannot be created by any admission or acquiescence on the part of the Authorities, however wrong or erroneous that might be: 1974 Lab.I.C. 141 (D.B.). See also 1985 Lab.I.C. 1481 (Bom.).

Manager of educational agency overlooking respondent's claim to reappointment under R. 5 of Kerala Education Rules, 1959, while making appointment an Educational Officer approving it—Respondent not estopped from putting forward such right in future proceedings in absence of some positive action on his part giving rise to bar of estoppel: I.L.R. (1970) 2 Ker. 24.

Where the notice inviting applications for appointment as a Gynaecologist contained no promise for allowing private practice outside the Hospital and it was only the Director of the Hospital who is claimed to have said so and the Board confirmed it in the interview, held, it could not amount to an assurance on behalf of the body corporate; the Director and the Board had no power under the Rules to give such an assurance; thus, where on taking over the Hospital, the Government abolished private practice in lieu of non-practising allowance, it did so in public interest; the rule of estoppel was not invoked: 1980 Lab.I.C. 1140.

R. 8(3) of the Central Health Service Rules, 1963 as amended in 1966 provides for filling in posts of supergrade II by promotion as well as by direct recruitment in the ratio of 1:1 and it could not be gainsaid that whenever an unspecified specialists' post is converted into a specified post assigned to a speciality it can be filled by promotion or direct recruitment as aforesaid, held, merely because the Government had understood and acted that it could be filled up only by promotion as admitted in the Government's affidavit, the Government was not estopped from acting on and implementing R. 8(3) in its true construction. [(1971) 2 Serv.L.R. 111 (Del.); A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2164, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1255: (1980) 3 S.C.C. 29.

Where a Nationalised Bank gave concession, in the matter of appointment to posts of clerks, to the children of its employees in respect of qualifications, etc., held, the Bank is not estopped from withdrawing said concession: 1982 Lab.I.C. 1571: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 823: (1982) 2 L.L.J. 177: (1982) 2 Serv.L.J. 418.

Applications called for by Reserve Bank of India from every citizen of India for Class III posts in Branch at Bangalore—Held, Bank is not estopped from selecting candidates passing from a particular University. [A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 538, Rel. on]: 1977 Lab.I.C. 773: (1976) 1 Kam.L.J. 391: (1976) 2 Serv.L.R. 215: (1977) 1 L.L.J. 121.

56. Estoppel in service matters.—Rules requiring particular educational qualification for a post has to be applied while recruiting and not when a person has been made permanent after treating him as qualified for the post—Principle of equitable estoppel is applicable in such a case: (1979) 1 M.L.J. 221: (1979) 1 Serv.L.R. 818.

Where a municipal overseer appointed on a temporary post on its conversion to a permanent post was appointed on that post with the requisite approval of the State Government and four years thereafter in his annual report by competent authority he was found to be qualified under the rules to hold the post, held, he could not be terminated after another four years for not possessing the requisite qualification, when persons of his qualifications were serving the State Government in similar or higher posts; at the time of appointment he was 25 years old and could get, if not given the job, another job but not at the age of 34 years. Though estoppel, it is well settled, is a rule of evidence which can be invoked in certain circumstances and it does not create a substantive right nor confers a cause of action, it is capable of being viewed as a substantive rule of law in so far as it helps to create or defeat a right: A.I.R. 1973 Ori. 186 (D.B.).

Where a Field Surveyor on promotion after 20 years' service as a Deputy Surveyor was found not to possess the requisite minimum educational qualifications for initial appointment under R. 12 of the General Rules for State and Subordinate Service was reverted but allowed to continue as a Field Surveyor, held, as the Rules allowed relaxation of qualifications, there was no absolute prohibition to his employment; his initial appointment was not ultra vires; the authorities because of their inaction or silence for long years after his induction in service were estopped from reverting him for lack of qualifications; however, in case of absolute prohibition in the Rules against appointment for want of the minimum qualifications, the rule of estoppel would not be attracted: (1973) 2 M.L.J. 181: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 483.

Where a lower division clerk applied for sitting in the examination for appointment as an accounts clerk and for promotion as an accountant without any mis-statement in his applications which were accompanied by copies of the diploma and certificates issued to him and he had succeeded in both the examinations and was duly posted and promoted but on discovering several years thereafter that it had mistakenly taken the diploma as a degree, the Electricity Board reverted him which would naturally be to the post of a lower devision clerk resulting in his loss of seniority and his passing the examinations all over again as diploma holders were qualified to appear after 5 years of service; he would, thus, suffer an irreparable loss for no fault on his part; the Board was estopped from reverting him: (1990) 1 Raj.L.R. 181 (Raj.).

Where petitioner, after being appointed as ad hoc lecturer, continued as that for a period of seven years whereafter his request for regularisation was rejected on the ground that he did not posses the minimum requisite qualification for appointment as a lecturer in English on the date of appointment, held, the authorities expected to have acted in accordance with law, must have scrutinised all the application forms and the requisite qualification and if there was lacuna, the authorities acquiesced to it and appointed petitioner as a lecturer. The principle of promissory estoppel would apply and authorities were estopped from raising an objection on that point after seven years: 1992 All.L.J. 1258: 1992 Lab.I.C. 2446.

Though the provisions of the Apprentices Act, 1961 and the Apprenticeship Rules, 1991 show that the apprentices are paid stipend, imparted rather exhaustive and elaborate training, subjected to conduct and discipline applicable to the employees of the corresponding category in the training establishment, and treated as akin to other employees in the matter of accidents, leave and hours of work, yet S. 22 of the Apprentices Act does not contemplate making of it obligatory on the employer to offer employment to the trainees at the completion of the apprenticeship unless there is a condition to the contrary in the apprenticeship contract; no promise of employment can, thus, be read in the Government's Circular dated 21 December, 1977 as also in the Memo, dated 21 September, 1977, of Directorate of Training and Employment; they merely state that full efforts should be made to provide employment to the trainees; not being a clear and unequivocal promise to give employment, it does not provide any base for promissory estoppel; but the nation which has spent time, money and energy would be well recompensed—and the legislative object would also be served—if the trained apprentices are given preference to non-trained direct candidates: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1115.

It is not permissible to antedate the appointment of an employee by ten years and stepping up his seniority by the same period merely because he had been wrongly held earlier to be lacking in the requisite educational qualification which he had then in fact possessed: 1993 Supp. (2) S.C.C. 262: 1993 S.C.C. (L.&S.) 436: (1993) 24 A.T.C. 255.

Where the appellant was appointed as a clerk in the Punjab Public Service Commission though she did not possess minimum qualification for that post and later on was promoted as assistant and as the appellant did not possess the requisite qualification as required under Regn. 7 of the Punjab Public Service Commission (State Service Class III) Regulations, 1967, the Commission recommended to the Government that the qualification required under Regn. 7 of the Regulations might be relaxed in the case of the appellant but the Government declined to accede to the request, held, as the initial appointment was against Regn. 7, no question of estoppel could ever arise: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 277.

Where an Assistant Professor's claim of possessing a B.Sc. (Hons.) degree was found after his promotion from the post of Senior Instructor on a purely temporary basis to be incorrect, held, the State was not estopped from reverting him to his original post; it was not the State but the employee himself who had made the representation; the employee had not acted to his detriment but had actually obtained a benefit; he must have, besides, known that the degree he possessed was not a B.Sc. (Hons.) degree; the State owed a public duty that the post of Assistant Professor was occupied by a properly qualified incumbent: (1978) 1 M.L.J. 517 (D.B.). See also (1987) 2 Cal.L.J. 47 [Where the fact in issue is whether or not a candidate had B.Ed. degree and the State omits to file counter-affidavit challenging the assertion of that candidate that he had such degree, held, the State is estopped from challenging it further.]

Where the State Government in a petition regarding constitutional validity of the A.P. Abolition of Posts of Part-time Village Officers Ordinance, 1984 assured the Supreme Court that all erstwhile Village Officers possessing the minimum general qualification as required under the Abolition Act and irrespective of their age would be appointed to the new posts if found suitable but thereafter the Government amended the Ad hoc Rules and prescribed a maximum age limit for the absorption of erstwhile Village Officers as Village Assistants in breach of undertaking given to the Supreme Court, held, the Government could not be allowed to get round the undertaking given to the Supreme Court by purporting to prescribe a maximum age limit which would have the effect of eliminating the majority of the erstwhile Village Officers: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1467: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 5: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 711.

Confirmation only after passing examination—Confirmed packer officiating as clerk but not passing confirmation examination—His reversion unquestionable: 1982 Lab.I.C. (N.O.C.) 15 (All.).

Petitioners were promoted on purely ad-hoc basis to officiate as Assistants Grade I in accordance with quota rule—After availing the benefit, petitioner challenged the quota rule in the writ petition—Petitioners are not estopped from challenging the same: (1983) 2 Serv.L.J. 462.

Appointment to post in quasi-permanent capacity—Reduction in post—Temporary appointment to another post—Allegation of violation of constitutional guarantee under Art. 311(2) of the Constitution—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 419.

Seniority list—Preparation of—List prepared without following R. 7 of Goa Government (Seniority) Rule (1967)—Fresh list according to R. 7—Preparation of subsequent list valid—Government not estopped from making a fresh list in accordance with Seniority Rules: 1984 Lab.I.C. 328: 1983 Mah. L.J. 593.

Employee of State Road Transport Corporation—Right to seniority and promotion—Cannot be whittled away by any law or contract forced upon him—Transfer on request of employee with allowance to protect seniority—Corporation is bound by it on principle of estoppel: (1979) 2 An.W.R. 338.

Where the petitioners who were diploma holders in Engineering were promoted from Class III to Class II service but further avenues of promotion were barred because the State Government constructed the relevant Service Rules to mean that without a degree in Engineering, a Class II officer could not be promoted to Class I service but the Supreme Court in case of some other employees disapproved the said interpretation of the Rules and relying upon that judgment, the petitioners sought promotional benefits from back dates, held, as the petitioners had acquiesced in the interpretation of the Rules by the State Government all along and it was only after the Supreme Court's decision that they chose to move the Court under Art. 32 of the Constitution to seek promotional benefits. Having remained complacent for a long number of years, the petitioner could not now turn round and say that notwithstanding their inaction, they should be granted promotion from deemed dates on the basis of seniority: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 2082: 1989 Lab.I.C. 2001.

Employee consenting to receive a lower pay scale was not barred from claiming statutory scale: 1985 Lab.I.C. (N.O.C.) 18 (Del.).

After interpretations of Rr. 22 and 30 of U.P. Fundamental Rules in favour of certain promoted head clerks, their salary was fixed at Rs. 150—Notification about their fixation of pay and recovery of excess amount paid—Writ petition by one such clerk—State Government agreeing with other such clerks not to recover the excess amount, if the writ petition was allowed — Writ petition was allowed and State's appeal therefrom was dismissed — It was not open to the State Government to recover the excess amount—Excess amount, if recovered, must be refunded: 1979 All.L.J. 1184 (D.B.).

Petitioner in permanent service of integrating State declared surplus to requirement by new Government—Subsequent absorption of petitioner in permanent service on condition that period of discontinuance could be treated as of leave without pay—Petitioner accepting offer—Petitioner taking full benefit under order of absorption if can subsequently claim salary for the period of discontinuance. See A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 100.

Where upon abolition of the temporary post of the State Vigilance Commissioner, its incumbent was terminated, held, the retention or abolition of posts is a matter of policy; that is a duty which the State has to perform in public interest; otherwise the State might be rendered helpless to assert its powers in Government; as a general rule, estoppel is not applied against the State in its Government, public or sovereign capacity except where it is necessary to prevent fraud or manifest injustice: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2641: (1973) 2 S.C.C. 650.

Absence of any evidence that the Railway ever induced the employee to occupy Railway quarters that he would not be charged any rent, the Railway is not estopped from recovering the rent of the quarter occupied by him: 1974 Lab.I.C. 604: 1974 Raj.L.W. 13.

Where an arbitration clause in the agreement of service of the plaintiff with the defendant-College stipulates the composition of the Arbitration Tribunal but a dispute between them is decided in favour of the plaintiff by a Tribunal with different composition and no objection is taken by the defendant as to the competency of that Tribunal to adjudicate, the defendant is estopped from challenging the jurisdiction of that Tribunal later: 1969 W.L.N. 177: 1969 Raj.L.W. 430.

A plea of estoppel is applicable where a party by his conduct led another party to act to his disadvantage or has gained advantage not due to him. Thus, where the petitioner, who was a lower division clerk, was declared surplus and when notice of termination of his service was served it was challenged as illegal and, therefore, without determining his service, he was deputed on temporary service to another department and he joined there but was declared surplus there also and his earlier department also refused to take back him whereupon he filed a writ petition, held, by joining the other department, the petitioner did not draw a higher salary. By obeying the order, he therefore, could not be said to have derived any advantage nor did he put the State to any disadvantage. Ordinarily, a State servant can be sent to another department on deputation. Here, the petitioner was being shifted from one wing to another in the same department of education, therefore, the main relief asked for by the petitioner could not be refused on the ground of estoppel: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 61: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 238.

Person asserting particular date as his date of birth—Cannot later on claim that his date of birth was wrongly recorded: 1983 Lab.I.C. 162: 1982 B.L.J.R. 490.

Where the date of birth given by the plaintiff at the time of his joining service was different than the one claimed thereafter and the difference was of thirteen years and the mistake was not clerical, held, the plaintiff was estopped from suing on the basis of second date of birth: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 223 (P.&H.).

Servant with war service to his credit—Final decision of Government to grant full benefits to servant—Government cannot refuse to implement decision because it is wrong or because decision of High Court in respect of claims of other servants with war service to credit, is awaited: 1968 Serv.L.R. 503 (Punj.).

Where the State Government had on enquiry reduced the age of an Assistant Director by about 3 years which was quashed by the High Court and while seeking leave from the High Court to appeal to the Supreme Court, it was stated for the purpose of evaluating the jurisdictional value of the appeal that the incumbent would continue in employment till 58th year but upon dismissal of the appeal the State Government retired the incumbent on three months notice on completion of 55 years age, held, the rule of estoppel was not attracted; the State Government has obtained no advantage by its statement as its appeal was dismissed. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 170: (1970) 1 Cut.W.R. 287 (D.B.).

Compulsory retirement — Payment of three months' pay in lieu of notice period salary must be simultaneous—Employees receiving such pay afterwards—They are not estopped from challenging validity of order—There cannot be estoppel against statute: 1982 Lab.I.C. 1523: (1983) 1 Serv.L.J. 45 (Andh. Pra.).

Government servant exercising option to retire—Grant of superannuation leave—He cannot revoke option: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 130 (D.B.).

Conditional voluntary retirement by Principal of School—Condition not accepted before proposed date of retirement—Principal getting cleared from Education Officer that his offer having not been accepted he can continue in service—Subsequently, Education Department cannot turn round and say that Principal was retired voluntarily: (1983) 2 Serv.L.J. 332: 1983 Lab.I.C. 1662 (Del.).

Employee of dispensary run by Zilla Parishad—Granted extension for 2 years on attaining age of superannuation—Dispensary taken over by State—Services of employee accepted by State till expiry of period of extension—Effect—Held, in circumstances, State was estopped from challenging legality of extension: 1982 Lab.I.C. 1893 (All.) (D.B.).

Where the adverse entries for several years contained in service record of the appellant were communicated to him with inordinate delay and his representation against said entries was rejected on the ground that it was barred by time and relying on those appellant was prematurely retired from his service, held, representation made by the appellant against said entries could not be rejected on the alleged ground of delay as the Government itself was guilty of inordinate delay in communicating the adverse remarks to the appellant: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 2218.

Where in proceedings against dismissal of petitioner-employee, the Supreme Court with the consent of the State Government directed that pension would be paid by the State to the petitioner as due from the date when the impugned dismissal order was passed but the State Government disputed its liability to pay pension to the petitioner on the ground that no pension was payable to the petitioner in terms of Bihar Pension Rules, held, when the Court used the word "due", it clearly did not intend that the pension would be paid only if due according to the Bihar Pension Rules. Therefore, the State Government was liable to pay pension to the petitioner: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 578: (1982) 2 S.C.C. 497: 1982 U.J. (S.C.) 592.

Exemption from holding inquiry and giving opportunity under Art. 311 (2)—Government not estopped from claiming such exemption even after inquiry. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 619, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 384: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 627: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1225.

Where prayer of the employee to the employer after termination of his service for arrears and allowance for suspension period after termination was accepted, held, the employee was estopped by his conduct from claiming continuance of his service after termination: 1977 Lab.I.C. 1179: (1977) 2 Serv.L.R. 575 (Assam) (D.B.).

Merely because a bank employee drew pay and allowances offered to him by cheque together with the dismissal order, held, the employee is not thereby estopped from impugning his dismissal as contravening Arts. 14 and 16 of the Constitution of India; it could not be said that the bank had thereby suffered any prejudice: 1986 Raj.L.W. 349 (D.B.).

57. Estoppel in labour matters.—Suit for declaration that dismissal of employee from service is illegal—His plea that he is Government servant not disputed by defendant-Corporation—On the other hand defendant admitting that plaintiff was Government employee—It was not open to defendant to revise plea subsequently that plaintiff was workman: 1981 Lab.I.C. (N.O.C.) 171 (All.).

Where services of an employee were terminated but he was, subsequently, appointed afresh for one month, held, his working for one month in compliance with said order of fresh appointment did not create any estoppel against him and he was not estopped from challenging the earlier order terminating his services: (1989) 1 Raj.L.R. 644 (Raj.).

Where an employer dismissed a workman after a domestic enquiry and sought approval from the Industrial Tribunal under S. 33(2)(b) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 wherein the workman, claiming to be a protected workman, impugned his dismissal as illegal for want of the Tribunal's prior permission under S. 33(3) thereof, but the Tribunal dismissed his objection and approved his dismissal; meanwhile, upon his appeal under S. 41(2) of the T.N. Shops and Establishments Act, the Commissioner had set aside his dismissal which was impugned by the employer on the ground that the proper course for the workman was to move the Industrial Tribunal under S. 33-A of the Industrial Disputes Act for violation of S. 33 thereof and having chosen a wrong forum, he was precluded from challenging the order of dismissal before the Commissioner, held, having got the workman's claim of being a protected workman rejected by the Tribunal, the employer could not raise the plea of ouster of the Commissioner's jurisdiction; besides, he had also submitted to the Commissioner's jurisdiction without objection; he could not be allowed subsequently to raise objection to the Commissioner's jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1915.

Where by a settlement between the employer and its recognised union it was agreed that the field staff would be deemed to be workmen and treated as a single entity on all India level and it is only at the national level that they would raise any dispute or demand on their behalf with the result that no reference could be made to adjudication in case a demand is raised at regional level, held, the employer was thereby not estopped from contending in a dispute raised in terms of the settlement regarding the dismissal of two field staff personnel, that they were not workmen as defined under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 and, therefore, the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to determine the suit; there can be no estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 516: (1984) 1 S.C.C. 728: 1984 U.J. (S.C.) 281.

Principle of estoppel or waiver cannot be rigorously applied against workman during proceeding under S. 33-C(2) of the Industrial Disputes Act: 1969 Lab.I.C. 1424 (Pat.).

Where the dismissal of a workman during conciliation proceedings was referred to the "formal arbitration" of the Labour Commissioner or his nominee and the award made thereunder was made a rule by the civil Court which as per (1977) 1 L.L.J. 382 (Mad.) (F.B.) had no jurisdiction which exclusively lay with the Labour Court under S. 33-C(2) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the civil Court's decree was liable to be set aside; merely because the employer had himself filed the award in the civil Court, he was not estopped to impugn the civil Court's jurisdiction; estoppel cannot confer jurisdiction which does not inheir in an authority; and there is no estoppel against statute. [(1977) 1 L.L.J. 312 (F.B.), Rel. on]: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 665.

Adjudication of Industrial Dispute—Recourse to legalistic principles like estoppel not wise: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 967.

Employee discharged from service after enquiry—Objection as to the Officer in superintendence over the employee being a witness as well as the Enquiry Officer, not taken by employee at the enquiry—Employee must be held to have waived it: 1968 Lab.I.C. 1275: A.I.R. 1968 Manipur 68.

Dispute between management and workman—Conciliation proceedings commenced —Works-manager representing case on behalf of management—Agreement signed by workman and Works-manager—Management contending that settlement signed by Works-manager not binding on management as he was not authorised to do so—Held, it was a case of estoppel because of conduct altering situation and rights of parties and therefore, the management could not resile: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 211: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 491: 1970 Lab.I.C. 334.

Notice under S. 19(2) of the Industrial Disputes Act—Charter of demands alone presented—No compliance of S. 19(2)—Settlement existing between employer and workmen—Charter of demands, including subjects covered by such settlement, given—Employer neither in conciliation proceedings nor before Tribunal treating such settlement to be binding—Employer also making offers for settlement of dispute—Notice under S. 19 (2) waived by employer: (1962) 2 L.L.J. 85: (1961) 3 Fac. L.R. 261: 1969 Lab.I.C. 1158 (Cal.).

Lock-out due to workmen's illegal activities — Conciliation proceedings — Suggestions of Labour Commissioner in favour of workmen except that lock out would be treated on no work no pay basis — Representation by State Government that if Management accepted Labour Commissioner's suggestions and lifted lock out, State Government would take no further steps under Act —Management accepting Labour

Commissioner's terms but not workmen who resorted to strike—Consequent reference by Government under S. 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 as to whether workmen were entitled to wages for period of lock-out and strike—Held, not barred by representation made by Government to Management: 1985 Lab.I.C. (N.O.C.) 5 (Cal.).

Insured filing application for commutation of periodical payments of permanent disablement benefit under Regn. 76-B framed under the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948—Insured dissatisfied with assessment of permanent disablement made by Medical Board—Preferring appeal to Medical Tribunal—Appeal, held, was not barred by principles of estoppel or waiver: 1984 Lab.I.C. 397: (1983) 24 Guj.L.R. 1260: (1983) 3 Guj.L.H. 934.

Master and servant—Wrongful termination of service of employee—Submission to termination order and acceptance of dues—No waiver of right to recover damages: 1979 Lab.I.C. 506 (Cal.).

Master and servant—State servant discharged from service under retrenchment scheme, availing himself of benefit under scheme—Benefits fully enjoyed—He is estopped from challenging the order of discharge: 1954 All.L.J. 515.

Acceptance of benefit—Estoppel—Industrial dispute—Technical plea of estoppel is out of place in industrial dispute—Payment of retrenchment compensation after retrenchment—Employees are not estopped from questioning validity of retrenchment: 1970 Lab.I.C. 629 (Pat.).

Agreement between workman and employer as to compensation for permanent partial disablement registered under S. 28 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923—Workman later declared unfit for service—Workman not disentitled from claiming compensation on the basis of permanent total disablement: I.L.R. (1966) 2 Mad. 402.

Where an employee, on termination of his service, passes a receipt saying that he had no further claim against his employer and it is found that the receipt was executed, without reference to bonus which was not, and could not then have been, in the contemplation of both parties, it does not constitute an estoppel against the employee's subsequent demand for the bonus declared afterwards in respect of the period during which he was in service: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 16: 1957 Ker.L.T. 44 I.L.R. (1957) Ker. 26.

Where the Labour Court by its award set aside the dismissal of the workman but allowed him only compensation and not reinstatement and the workman accepted the cheque for the amount of compensation under "protest" and "without prejudice", held, the workman was not estopped from impugning the award and claiming reinstatement from the writ Court; the acceptance of the cheque in the circumstances did not amount to accord and satisfaction. [Case law extensively considered]: (1987) 1 M.L.J. 269: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 166 (D.B.).

Though what was paid by the management to the various workers under a comprise by way of bonus could not be got back by them, that does not estop the workers from claiming that the industrial dispute should be settled in accordance with law, particularly when they had received the payment of bonus without prejudice to their rights: (1960) 2 L.L.J. 556: (1961) 1 M.L.J. 393: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 212. See also (1984) 1 Serv.L.J. 457.

The employees who are pitched against the management, are not in an equal position in bargaining. It is, therefore, open to the Union, who takes up the cause of the employees to raise the dispute by way of collective bargaining on their behalf. No question of estoppel arises in a case of this description. Therefore, an employee of a company having once accepted the pension cannot be estopped from questioning the same before the Court through the Union: 1968 Lab.I.C. 1386: A.I.R. 1968 Assam 39.

Retrenchment of workers—Union representing the workers raised industrial dispute challenging retrenchment — Individual workmen accepting retrenchment benefit subsequently—Union not estopped from challenging the retrenchment—Applicability to industrial disputes—Technical plea of estoppel is not applicable in all cases of industrial disputes—Retrenched workmen in starving condition forced to accept retrenchment benefit—Workmen not estopped from challenging the legality of the retrenchment: (1967) 1 L.L.J. 108: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 12.

Where a settlement regarding certain demands was arrived at between employer and recognised majority Union and benefits flowing from said settlement were accepted even by workmen who were not signatories to the settlement, held, it would not operate as estoppel against minority Union from raising same demands which were subject-matter of settlement; the employer could not avail of the benefit of theory of implied agreement by acquiescence: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 828: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 42: (1978) 3 S.C.R. 535.

The person who caused the delay, or took part in the enquiry without protest even after the statutory period ran out, is not entitled to challenge the award on the ground of delay. Thus, an employer who participated in the enquiry before the Agricultural Tribunal under the Kerala Agricultural Workers Act, 1974 without protest even after the expiry of the statutory period for passing the award, held, is estopped from challenging the award of the Tribunal on the ground that it was time-barred. [A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 150 (F.B.), Foll.]: A.I.R. 1980 Ker. 156: 1980 Ker.L.T. 39.

58. Estoppel in matter of family arrangement.—A plea of estoppel can be invoked only in support of or to maintain a family arrangement where the Court finds that the parties should not be allowed to resile from a particular arrangement under which they have taken some benefit. If for some grounds which are not "frivolous or untenable", the Court finds that a party is entitled to re-open the arrangement or establishes that the continued enforcement of the family arrangement is wholly impracticable, unnecessary and unjust in the changed circumstances of the case, there is no question of applying the equitable principle of estoppel and holding any of the parties to such restrictive provisions in a family arrangement. This is especially so in the case of family arrangements intended to have application only for a limited time or purpose in contrast to family arrangements entered into for the purpose of effecting out and out partition, gift etc. In any case, the Courts will not accept such a plea of estoppel put forward in defence by a party who has himself gone against the very same provisions which he wants the Court to enforce strictly against the other party or parties. Thus, where defendants knowingly violated certain specific terms of a family arrangement regarding enjoyment of the impugned property, held, they could not contend that the provisions in that clause had to be enforced strictly against the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-interest: A.I.R. 1994 Ker. 36; 1978 Punj.L.J. 370 (D.B.).

A family arrangement as also the recitals therein is an agreement between members of the family, generally and reasonably for the benefit of the family either by compromising doubtful or disputed rights or for preserving family property or peace or for avoiding litigation or saving its honour; thus, once a family arrangement has been entered into none of its members can be allowed to repudiate the arrangement; a family arrangement stands on a different footing from an ordinary contract and binds on all the parties; it operates as an estoppel and prevents family members from resiling from or revoking the arrangement after having taken its benefit: A.I.R. 1990 Ker. 226: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 235 (D.B.).

Once it is found that the family settlement was voluntary and bona fide, the same would be binding on the parties and it would operate as an estoppel preventing the parties after having taken advantage under the arrangement to resile from the same or to revoke it. Where pursuant to a family settlement the parties entered into respective possession of the parts of land allotted to them and they raised construction thereon and the partition of joint land was effected and the factum of partition was incorporated in jamabandi for the relevant year but thereafter the respondent filed a suit for separate possession by partition of the suit land against the appellants, held, the respondent was estopped from claiming partition: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 52: 1991 Punj.L.J. 190.

Where a family settlement, not required to be registered, did not contravene any law and was legally binding, held, it would operate as an estoppel against any of the parties thereto which flowed from their conduct of having taken the benefit thereunder for (in this case) full seven years and then try to resile therefrom; the position would be the same even if it was complusorily registerable but was not registered. [A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 79 and A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 62, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 807: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 119: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 202.

The principle of estoppel mentioned in S. 115 will apply if relinquishment was made by one of the parties of his right to inherit in future for a consideration. Thus, where in pursuance of a family arrangement mother of the plaintiff absolutely settled her properties in his favour only for the consideration that the plaintiff relinquished his right to future share in the properties left by her, held, the plaintiff having accepted said family arrangement could not be allowed later to turn round and say that he would only receive the benefits given under the document and that he was entitled to discard the disabilities incurred by virtue of that document: A.I.R. 1992 Ker. 397: I.L.R. (1992) 2 Ker. 105.

Where a family arrangement was entered into with the object of restoring family peace and amity and the question of succession to the shares allotted to the parties was not and could not be, in their contemplation, held, the parties thereto are not estopped from claiming a different mode of partition of the property as and when the occasion arises; the parties having not given up their right to partition the property differently from that of family arrangement, the rule of estoppel is not attracted, founded as it is upon the doctrine that it would be most inequitous and unjust if a person having made a representation as such or by conduct induces the other person to act in a manner which the other person would not have otherwise done should not be allowed to repudiate the effect of his representation to the loss and injury to the other person: A.I.R. 1979 All. 379 (D.B.).

Where by a deed of settlement which was not registered, the deceased had settled his properties on the plaintiffs and defendants and there was no case of any dispute between the parties regarding the properties of the deceased and, therefore, there was no question of settling the dispute by family arrangement, held, as the division of properties was very unfair, the plaintiffs were not estopped from claiming partition and separate possession of their share in the suit properties: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 246 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Where on the death of a Hindu coparcener governed by Mitakshra law his undivided share in the Hindu joint family properties was divided but his widow and two married daughters who were entitled to their respective shares in consequence of proviso to S. 6 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 were kept out and no shares were allotted to them and upon their suit to re-open the partition it was contended that being present at the partition, they had raised no objection and acquiesced, held, in the absence of reliable evidence of their presence at the impugned partition, they could not be said to have acquiesced; besides, mere presence cannot connote acquiescence which is an aspect of the rule of estoppel; it implies knowledge of the subject and there is no evidence to show that they knew that the partition was being made without allotting any shares to them: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 376 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Where a document merely recorded a family arrangement previously arrived at with the good offices of the panchayat to whose terms and conditions the parties had agreed and subscribed their signatures, held, one of the parties thereto who had kept quiet for so long and herself produced the document in Court is estopped from contending that the document is inadmissible for want of registration: (1988-2) 102 Mad.L.W. 491 (D.B.).

Party taking advantage under partition estopped from setting up plea of impartibility: 118 I.C. 342: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 577.

Where, during the lifetime of the mother, the daughters who were in possession effected a partition of certain properties and the parties enjoyed the properties in pursuance of that arrangement but its validity was sought to be questioned after the death of the mother by the executants themselves, held, that they were estopped from doing so: I.L.R. 52 All. 716: A.I.R. 1930 All. 687: 1930 All.L.J. 688.

Where karta converted his separate property to joint Hindu family property and in the impugned document which described joint family, plaintiff and his sister being children from first wife of the karta were left out and subsequently they filed a suit for partition, held, such a suit was not maintainable in view of the fact that in reference proceedings before the Income-tax Authorities, none of them contended that said document was bad on account of their non-inclusion in it, i.e., they had accepted that they were not members of joint family: A.I.R. 1993 Cal. 118: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 322: (1993) 1 Cal.L.J. 1.

Though the principle is that if the transaction is not valid under the personal law of the parties, the transferor will not be estopped from contending that the transaction is invalid, still, so long as the personal law contemplated a possibility of the transaction being valid and so long as there is no other infirmity in the transaction, a transaction in the nature of release or renunciation should be considered to be invalid. A Hindu father or other managing member has no power to make gift except within reasonable limits of ancestral immovable properties and that too only for pious purposes. According to the Mitakshara law, as applied in all States, no coparcener can dispose of his undivided interest in the coparcenary property by gift. Such transaction being void altogether there is no estoppel or other kind of personal bar which precludes the donor from asserting his right to recover the transferred property: 1980 Hindu L.R. 780 (Mad.).

Members of joint Hindu family—Business carried on in partnership with other persons—No presumption that it is family business—Profits from partnership assessed for some years as family income—Members not estopped from pleading separate interest: 1961 B.L.J.R. 501.

Where in the earlier partition suit filed by two brothers A and B against their eldest brother C, the business was admitted to be a joint family business and in the insolvency proceedings the business was also admitted by C, to be joint family business, held, B and C were now estopped from urging that the business was carried on in partnership: A.I.R. 1980 Cal. 230.

59. Estoppel between vendor and vendee.—The doctrine of "caveat emptor" is also applicable under Portuguese system of law. If the buyer does not avail himself of the knowledge or means of knowledge open to him or his agents, he cannot be heard to say that he was deceived by the vendor's misrepresentations as the knowledge of his agent is as binding on him as his own knowledge: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 98.

It is manifestly clear that where a vendor voluntarily executed a contract of sale, put the vendee in possession and received the entire consideration, there is no special equity in his favour; he cannot after a long lapse of time be allowed to turn and claim the property merely because its market price had meanwhile shot up; he is estopped from repudiating his fiduciary obligation; the Court cannot extend any aid to him: A.I.R. 1973 J.&K. 11: 1972 Kash.L.J. 107 (F.B.).

Where a registered sale deed of land was executed and immediately thereafter another agreement between the parties in violation of S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act and S. 23 of the Contract Act was entered into whereby the vendee and his heirs were prohibited to alienate or fitter away the land so purchased, held, once a sale is completed, it clothes the vendee with beneficial ownership; the right to alienate the property is incidental to, and inseparable from, such ownership; an absolute restraint on such right is repugnant to the concept of sale; and subsequent agreement is inadmissible: A.I.R. 1989 Him. Pra. 11: (1988) 2 Sim.L.C. 126.

Where sale deeds were executed, consideration was received from the vendees and other properties were purchased therewith in the vendor's name who eventually impugned the sale deeds as null and void on the ground that their execution was procured by him when he was still a minor, held, merely because he had purchased properties in his own and his brother's names from the sale proceeds, which after attaining majority got partitioned and sold his share did not amount to a representation on which the plea of estoppel could be based against him: A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 267: 1973 Ker.L.J. 944 (D.B.).

Where the vendee accepted the refund amount knowing full well that the vendor had cancelled the contract for sale and, thus, acquiesced in the breach of the contract committed by the vendor, held, the vendee waived his right to enforce the contract and his right could not be preserved merely because he had accepted the amount "without prejudice" to his right. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1067, Dist.; (1824) 1 Car and P. 347, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 Mad. 169: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. 88: (1983) 1 M.L.J. 467 (D.B.).

Where a clause in an agreement of sale expressly provided that in case the property is requisitioned, the vendor would refund the earnest money with interest to the vendee, held, it implicitly creates a corresponding right in the vendee to demand the refund and rescind the contract; the clause being clearly for the exclusive benefit of the vendee, not of the vendor, creates no liability against the vendee who can waive it unilaterally. [A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 182; (1892) 3 Ch. 359; (1913) 2 Ch. 648, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 559: (1972) 2 S.C.C. 757.

Under an agreement of reconveyance, the vendee agreed to resell the property to the vendor till a certain date and the vendor, dissuading the vendee to obtain loan on unconscionable terms to pay the consideration, extended the time of purchase by two months. But when the vendee arranged money and called upon the vendor to execute the sale, the vendor declined on the ground that the time was already over. In the suit for specific performance, the vendor pleaded that the oral agreement to extend the time could not be proved because of the bar of S. 92 while the vendee pleaded waiver giving rise to the plea of estoppel. Held, the proof of waiver giving rise to estoppel is not barred by S. 92; it is open to the parties to waive their contractual rights embodied in a document and, if on that representation, the other party does something to its own prejudice, the party waiving its rights is not entitled to strict performance according to the original contract; it is estopped from doing so: 1972 M.P.L.J. 122.

Common passage over adjoining property not belonging to vendor—Passage mentioned in conveyance law—No grant of right of way: A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 110.

Registered agreement to sell—Earnest money made charge on property—Vendor found not to have title—Agreement repudiated—Subsequent sale to another on vendor acquiring title—Subsequent purchaser is not bound by charge created by agreement which was repudiated—Contract Act, 1872, S. 19: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 12 (D.B.).

Execution of promissory note by purchaser for amount due to vendor—Execution does not extinguish vendor's lien under S. 55—Such execution does not estop vendor from an action on such lien: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 127.

Upon the death of his father in 1951, the entire property left behind was mutated in revenue and municipal records in the name of the son who also remained in its possession and acted as karta of the joint family comprising himself, his mother and his sons. In 1961 and 1962 he built a single storey building on a plot in Lucknow. On 14-2-1964, he sold the western portion of a property to a stranger "as exclusive and complete owner" "in possession and occupation.....with powers of transfer of all kinds" as he needed to construct the upper portion of the single storeyed house. Seven months thereafter, his widowed mother and sons sued him and the vendee on the ground that she owned half the property as inherited from her husband, that she and the vendor formed a joint family to which the property belonged, that the vendor's sons had interest therein by birth and that the sale was without legal necessity. Held, since the widow raised no objection to the property being mutated exclusively in the name of her son who was managing it and also realising rents from the tenants in his own right and evidence also showed that the widow in the presence of the vendor consented to the sale, coupled with the fact of the widow and her son not appearing in the witness box, she was estopped from impugning the sale in respect of her half share: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2128: 1982 Hindu L.R. 10: 1981 All.L.J. 1172.

Where a legatee under the Will of her father by a deed of warranty assured the vendee that the property being sold by her brother, another legatee, was fully under his ownership, promised to indemnify the vendee if that title was found to be defective, attested the sale deed, and applied for mutation of the vendee's name in municipal records, held, her heirs were estopped from contending that the vendor has only a limited estate under the Will. [A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 20, Foll.; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 228 (All.) (D.B.). See also (1991) 43 Del.L.T. 113: A.I.R. 1991 Del. 178 (D.B.).

There can be no waiver of right of pre-emption by minor: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 691.

Though pre-emption is a statutory personal right incapable of being transferred, yet it is open to the pre-emptor to pay the consideration from his own sources or by arrangements with a third party. Besides, pre-emption contemplates the right of substitution, it is not open to the vendor to pre-empt the sale in the garb of a benamidar. But merely because the pre-emptors happen to be the vendors' sons and are pre-empting the sale with the financial assistance from their father is by itself no ground to defeat their right of pre-emption; the pre-empted property would vest in the sons, not in the father; it would not amount to "collusion" in the wider sense either; the rule of estoppel is not attracted. [(1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 253, Affirm.]: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1158.

Where the real purchaser of land was the pre-emptee's son and had averred in his notice under S. 5(4) of the W.B. Land Reforms Act that it was agricultural land, held, he was estopped from contending to the contrary; he was also estopped from contending that he was a co-sharer of land by a previous purchase: (1984) 2 Cal.L.J. 275.

Co-sharer intending to sell share—Other co-sharer refusing to purchase—Right of pre-emption not affected—Vendee induced to purchase—Failure to give notice under S. 14, Agra Pre-emption Act—Other co-sharer is estopped: A.I.R. 1929 All. 531 ; I.L.R. 51 All. 820. See also 27 All.L.J. 528: A.I.R. 1929 All. 453.

Waiver means an intentional relinquishment of a known right. If the right of pre-emption under Partition Act arises only after a suit for partition is filed by the stranger-purchaser, it cannot be said to have been waived after the sale of a share to a purchaser who is a stranger to the undivided family. Further, mere facts of dis-inclination to purchase the share of a co-sharer or non-objection to the possession of a party of the property, which were earlier to the filing of the partition suit by the stranger purchaser, do not amount to a waiver of the right of pre-emption by the co-sharers. [A.I.R. 1977 Madh. Pra. 40, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 554; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1066; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1205, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 406 (D.B.).

There must be a concrete offer to purchase to the pre-emptor before a definite contract for sale has been concluded with another person. Thus, where the vendor was not produced and no witness stated that the vendor had made any offer to the pre-emptors to purchase the land before the contract of sale was concluded with the vendees and no question was put to the pre-emptor when he appeared in the witness box about his presence at the time of negotiations or at the time of sale to the vendees, held, it could not be said that the pre-emptor had waived his right to pre-emption: A.I.R. 1977 P.&H. 178: 1977 Punj.L.J. 273.

A general notice issued by the husband of the vendee in a newspaper signifying his intention to purchase the property and inviting objections, if any, does not cast any duty on the pre-emptor to give any response to such a notice and put forth his preferential right to purchase the property and negotiate with the purchaser to purchase the property. The failure on the part of the pre-emptor, to pay any heed to such a general notice issued by the husband of the vendee therefore, does not tantamount to waiver of the right of pre-emption on the part of the pre-emptor. Where there was no reliable evidence to prove that after the agreement for sale between the vendor and the vendee was concluded and the price was fixed between them, an approach was made to the pre-emptor to purchase the property in dispute for the price settled between the vendor and the vendee, held, it could not be said that the pre-emptor waived his right of pre-emption in favour of the defendant-vendee. [1975 W.L.N. (U.C.) 360 (Raj.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1977 Raj. 203: 1977 Raj.L.W. 301: 1977 W.L.N. 302.

The right of pre-emption is lost by estoppel and acquiescence. Thus, where vendor was required under the statute to serve the notice of sale on persons having right of pre-emption and he failed to give such notice but the pre-emptor not only came to know of the sale immediately but he also assisted the purchaser in raising construction, held, pre-emptor was estopped from challenging the sale as void: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1055: (1990) 4 S.C.C. 668.

The law of pre-emption applicable to Ajmer—Marwara embodied in Ch. II of the Ajmer Laws Regulation III, 1877, does not override S. 115; thus, a pre-emptor on notice of intended sale refusing to purchase the property, held, is deemed to have acquiesced in the sale and thereby lost the right to pre-empt. [A.I.R. 1947 Oudh 81; A.I.R. 1925 All. 645, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1952 Ajmer 26.

In a suit for pre-emption, it was found proved on evidence that the plaintiff had declined to purchase the land when it was offered to him by the vendors, had refused to sign the notice issued by the Collector before he sanctioned the sale inviting objections to the sale in favour of vendees who were non-khewardars, having come to know of the sale kept quiet for a period of four months, allowed the vendees to spend money in sinking a well and constructing a compound wall. Held, that the plaintiff had waived the

The interest in the joint Hindu family property is created in favour of the coparcener by virtue of his birth in the family and, therefore, it cannot be said that a coparcener acquires his right through his father. Where plaintiff co-sharer filed a suit for pre-emption and it was contended that notice of sale was given to his father and uncle who refused to purchase the property, held, waiver of the right to pre-empt by father could not disentitle the son to bring a suit for pre-emption. [A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 68, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 95: 1975 Raj.L.W. 269: 1975 W.L.N. 332.

In a given case, the vendees who challenged the pre-emption decree in appeal, may not have the requisite knowledge or information as regards the less deposit of the pre-emption amount or the deposit having been made beyond the time permitted. It cannot, therefore, be held as a matter of law that if the objection is not taken in the appeal as regards the less deposit or the deposit having been made after the time allowed, said objection cannot be taken at the stage of execution. No question of waiver arises in such a case. [A.I.R. 1970 Punj. 559, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1977 P.&H. 294: (1977) 79 Punj.L.R. 417: 1977 Punj.L.J 349: 1977 Rev.L.R. 318 (F.B.).

Where in a suit to pre-empt the sale of a house between Muslim parties, the plaintiff pleaded no specific custom but alleged that the requisite demands, talab-i-mowasibat and talab-i-ishhad, under Muslim law were made on the vendor and both the Courts below found against him, held, he could not be permitted in the second appeal to contend, after having proceeded in the plaint on the basis that they were necessary, that such demands were not necessary: A.I.R. 1982 All. 98.

Person seeking to enforce option of repurchase—Estoppel: 1957 M.P.L.J. 742.

61. Estoppel between mortgagor and mortgagee.—A usufructuary mortgagee cannot deny the title of the mortgagor and set up adverse possession unless he actually leaves the holding and enters under a different status: 119 I.C. 568: A.I.R. 1929 All. 305. Usufructuary mortgage—Change in nature of possession by act of parties—Effect—Adverse possession—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 502.

A muafidar who has mortgaged his muafi plots cannot assert against the mortgagee his own want of title: A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 336. A person creating a charge or a mortgage is estopped from saying that he is not entitled to create the charge or mortgage on the property: (1929) 31 Bom. L.R. 439: 119 I.C. 186: A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 277.

Once the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee is found to have been created or to be existing, the said relationship cannot be altered or put an end to except by act of the parties or in accordance with the provisions of law. It is equally well-settled that a mortgagee is estopped from denying the title of the mortgagor to the mortgaged property: 37 Cut.L.T. 1257: (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 733.

A mortgagee who has been put in possession by the mortgagor pursuant to a mortgage is estopped, so long as the relationship between them continues, from denying the mortgagor's title to the property. But it is only where the mortgagors title is in doubt that there is any scope at all for invoking the aid of the rule of estoppel. The Courts cannot avoid application of the rule by going into the very question and finding that the mortgagor had no title on the date of the execution of the mortgage: (1962) 1 M.L.J. 229: (1962) 75 Mad.L.W. 236: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 395.

It is not permissible to a mortgagee or a transferee of his rights to impeach the title of the mortgagors to the mortgaged property when possession of the properties has been obtained from them. A mortgagee cannot resist a claim for redemption on the ground that the mortgagor has no title to the property. Ordinarily, mortgagee is presumed to satisfy himself about the security being acceptable from the person who offers it when the money is lent. In the absence of special circumstances he cannot again seek investigation of this. That would, unnecessarily enlarge the scope of a suit for redemption and raise needless complications: I.L.R. (1955) Mys. 562: A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 14; (1990) 1 Karn.L.J. 134.

A mortgagee is estopped from denying the title of the mortgagor to the mortgaged property at the time of the mortgage. The principle underlying this rule of estoppel extend to licensees as well. The estoppel does not prevent either a mortgagee or a licensee from proving that subsequent to the mortgage or the licence the mortgagor or the licensor lost his title to the property to which the mortgage or the licence related, so far, therefore, a mortgagee and a licensee stand on the same footing. But the estoppel operating against a mortgagee and the estoppel operating against a licensee are not identical in nature or co-extensive in scope. A mortgagee cannot, by repudiation of the mortgage convert his possession under the mortgage into one adverse to the mortgagor. He is not permitted by his own unilateral act to bring about an extinction of that legal relationship which was created by the mortgage or reduce the period of limitation prescribed for the redemption of the mortgage. During the period available to the mortgagor for redemption the possession of the mortgagee will always be attributed to the mortgagor despite any assertion by him of a claim hostile to the mortgagor. A licensee, however, is not precluded from setting up a claim of adverse possession even though he has not surrendered possession to the licensor provided that he has, to the knowledge of the licensor, expressly and openly denied the permissive nature of his possession and asserted a claim hostile to the licensor. Thus, in this respect a licensee differs not only from a mortgagee but also from a tenant. Therefore, it is open to a person who entered into possession of a property as a licensee to resist the claim of his licensor to possession on the ground that subsequent to the licence he had been ousted from possession by a person exercising a paramount right and that his possession was no longer under the licence but under a fresh title derived from the person who had ousted him: A.I.R. 1965 All. 309.

Mortgagee denying mortgagor's title and setting up adverse possession—Mortgagee cannot do so unless he actually leaves land and re-enters under different status and title: A.I.R. 1965 All. 223.

Mortgagee not to question mortgagor's title—Hindu widow effecting mortgage for 99 years—Same cannot be impugned by mortgagee—Widow to be presumed to deal with property as owner: A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 380.

Ordinarily, neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee, can deny the title of the other at the time of the mortgage. But where the mortgagor in a suit for redemption has not only had no title on the date of the mortgage but he admits that he had no title and tried to acquire the same from a third person in whom the title vested, this rule of estoppel does not apply: (1955) 3 M.L.J. 14.

Though a mortgagee is precluded from denying, during the pendency of the mortgage, the mortgagor's title to mortgage the property, held, this rule is inapplicable where the mortgagee in possession is evicted by a party having paramount title: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 28: (1973) 1 Mys.L.J. 186.

Mortgagor and mortgagee—Lease by mortgagor without authority—Estoppel—Validity as between mortgagee and lessee: (1956) 3 All E.R. 373.

Void alienation of khoti land to mortgagee—Mortgagor can resile from sale: I.L.R. 53 Bom. 676: (1929) 31 Bom.L.R. 778: A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 135.

Where a person admits his character as mortgagee in a civil suit, he cannot subsequently in a revenue suit plead that he was not a mortgagee but a proprietor: 15 R.D. 94. See also 14 Law Rep. 281 (Rev.) ; 17 R.D. 404.

In suit for eviction under Rent Act, mortgagor-lessee asserting that there was no independent lease but the lease was concomitant part of mortgage-transaction for assuring usufructuary mortgagee payment of interest on mortgage-money—Mortgagor securing order in his favour that there could be no order of eviction—In subsequent suit by mortgagee's legal representatives mortgagor cannot be allowed to contend that they should institute a separate suit for recovery of rent and that they could not claim interest on principal sum due under mortgage: (1965) 2 Mys.L.J. 792: 5 Law Rep. 486: A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 41.

Where a mortgagor refused possession when according to the terms of the contract he was bound to give possession, the mortgagor is precluded from asserting that the property is not liable to sale in satisfaction of the mortgage debt: 116 I.C. 214: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 289. See also I.L.R. 41 Mad. 259: 33 M.L.J. 623 (F.B.).

Mortgagee parting with title deeds knowing that they are required for effecting a sale, no estoppel against mortgagee, in favour of a purchaser, arises: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 195. See also I.L.R. 20 Cal. 286 (P.C.); I.L.R. 50 All. 885: A.I.R. 1928 All. 459; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 558 ; 1937 O.W.N. 237 ; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 272.

Estoppel by conduct—Mortgage amount tendered by purchaser of equity of redemption—Refusal to accept—Interest ceasing to run—Claim to recover interest—Maintainability: I.L.R. 52 Mad. 322: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 230: 56 M.L.J. 255.

A mortgagee bidding at an auction-sale of the property mortgaged to him is not estopped from enforcing his mortgage although he had not disclosed his mortgage at the time when he bid at the auction. Unlike an execution creditor, he was under no obligation to disclose his mortgage, and his bid did not amount to any representation that there was no mortgage in his favour: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 133.

A held two mortgages against the same property. He obtained a decree for the sale of mortgaged property in a suit brought on the second mortgage, discharging the prior mortgage. In the meantime, the mortgagor sold the property to B privately and free from incumbrances and the decretal amount was deposited in Court. Held, that as A had disclosed the existence of prior mortgage and as he did not know that the property was sold privately to B free from incumbrances he was not estopped from suing on the prior mortgage: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 1020. See also (1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 470.

Mortgagee accepting money deposited under S. 83 of the T.P. Act, 1882—He cannot later claim damages on ground that he was not given possession of the mortgaged property: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 324.

Irrespective of the defect, if any, of the title in the mortgagor when a mortgagee has accepted the security for the advance made by him, it is not open to him to disclaim the right which he has taken as security and refuse to allow redemption when the money advanced is tendered or paid to him. [A.I.R. 1965 All. 309; A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 395 and A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 14, Rel. on]: (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 733.

Where plaintiff co-mortgagees who were in possession of disputed land for over a period of 60 years sought a declaration to the effect that they were the owners but the defendant opposed the suit and pleaded that the plaintiffs were estopped by their act and conduct as they represented to the mortgagors that in case the latter paid Rs. 99 the entire mortgage would be redeemed and on that representation the defendant did pay Rs. 99 to the plaintiffs, held, as there was no consent of the other co-mortgagees, there could not be a valid redemption. Thus, it was wrong to say that the plaintiffs were estopped from pleading that no redemption had been effected: A.I.R. 1974 Him. Pra. 11.

Suit on mortgage—Defence that plaintiff has agreed to receive lesser amount than under mortgage, by oral agreement—Held, oral agreement was inadmissible in evidence and therefore, plaintiff was not estopped from claiming whole amount under mortgage—Passing of receipt by plaintiff for part payment of amount agreed also did not estop him from claiming whole: (1966) 2 An. L.T. 198.

In a suit by a member of a tarward to set aside a deed of gift by another member on the ground that the property gifted belonged to the tarward, an alienee from the donee is not estopped from impeaching the plaintiffs' title by reason of the fact that he had taken a hypothecation of the property from the donor: A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 266.

Hindu joint family—Mortgage by father or manager—Co-parcener signing mortgage-deed—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 355.

62. Estoppel in case of principal and agent.—Commission payable if binding contract entered into—Contract induced by agent's misrepresentation—Estoppel: (1956) 3 All E.R. 207.

Under terms of lease, lessor or his representative was only entitled to supervise the operations of the Tea Estate (property leased) with a view to safeguard the lessor's interest—Superintendent so appointed having no right to interfere with the management of the Tea Estate—Held, that the responsibility for the proper management of the Tea Estate was with the lessee and the right of the lessor to re-enter the property on the breach of the conditions of lease on ground of mismanagement was not taken away by merely appointing the lessor to supervise the operation of the Tea Estate, and question of estoppel did not arise—Even if the lessor was appointed as Superintendent, he was the agent of the lessee and if any mismanagement was committed by him it would be the mismanagement of the lessee: I.L.R. (1961) 13 Assam 101: A.I.R. 1961 Assam 70.

63. Estoppel in case of consignor and consignee.—Where the appellant declared the value of consigned goods as Rs. 25,000 but at the time of claiming damages he enhanced the actual value of the consigned goods, held, the appellant should not be permitted to change the value of the consigned goods at his convenience and to his advantage. He was, thus, estopped from contending that actual value of the goods was more than what was declared by him initially: (1991-1) 107 Mad.L.W. 13 (D.B.).

64. Estoppel in case of partnership.—Whether it is case of retirement of a partner from a partnership or its dissolution, public notice is intended only to serve the purpose of bringing home to the persons concerned the factum of retirement or dissolution. So far as third parties entering into some dealings are concerned, that purpose will be undoubtedly served better by personal or actual service of notice. In the absence of compliance of the provision for notice third parties may deal with the firm of partners to their disadvantage on the belief that the firm or all the partners continue. But when third parties know well by individual notice what the real position is, there is no question of themselves being led into wrong belief and acting to their detriment. If so, in such cases there is no question of application of the rule of estoppel to make the retired partners or the partners of a dissolved firm liable: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 239: 1987 Ker.L.J. 205.

Where in pursuance of a suit for dissolution of partnership, a compromise was entered into wherein the plaintiff partner stated that he had nothing to do with the partnership properties without specifying such properties, held, he was not estopped from filing a suit for partition of partnership properties later on: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 305 (Del.).

65. Estoppel in bank cases.—(See also Note 28, supra). Where holder of a saving bank account had made nomination in favour of his two wives while depositing a huge amount, held, when subsequently, after the depositor's death, his said two wives sought to withdraw said amount, the bank could not refuse it on the ground that said nomination was irregular and unenforceable; having accepted the nomination, the bank could not be permitted to take advantage of its own mistake: A.I.R. 1988 Andh. Pra. 289.

Where by an arrangement between them the bank was to sell to the customer demand drafts on concessional rates only on the customer keeping a time deposit with the bank, held, when the bank's representation was not for all times to come and the sale of demand drafts was not its statutory obligation but only an ancillary service, the customer could not claim the facility as of right; the doctrine of promissory estoppel could not be invoked: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 88 (D.B.).

Where an amount borrowed from the bank was found to have been utilised not for the purposes of business but charity (donation to an Engineering College) and interest was paid to the bank on the overdrafts thereby occasioned, held, the payment of interest was purely a personal and not a business obligation; the contention that the assessee having promised to the College to pay the donation was estopped from retracting from the promise and it was, therefore, its business liability has no basis for nothing on record indicated that the College had actually incurred any expenditure acting on the basis of the promised donation. [1971 U.P.T.C. 588, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1291.

Where a person mortgaged two different properties in favour of the bank under two different transactions and on his failure to repay the loan in respect of one of those properties, a suit was filed whereunder a consent decree was passed whereafter he requested the bank to credit the rental income of the other property, in possession of the bank, towards the suit property's loan account and the bank acted accordingly, held, he was estopped from challenging later on said appropriation made by the bank. Further, as the rule of estoppel must prevail against a pure rule of procedure contained in S. 92, he could not fall back upon S. 92 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1974 Madh. Pra. 193: 1974 M.P.L.J. 329: 1974 Jab.L.J. 476 (D.B.).

Where, in the course of recovery of the loan, the Branch Manager takes part and represent to the debtors that their liability by sale of the hypothecated properties can be transferred to the third party and by that they will be discharged from their liability, and he becomes instrumental for sale of the properties which are hypothecated to the bank for the loan advanced and the parties act upon such assurance given by the Branch Manager that they would be discharged of their liability, and accordingly they proceed to execute the sale deed, and transfer the assets alongwith the liabilities to the third party and the bank keeps quiet for a long period of two years and no record is produced to show that the head office of the bank had not approved, held, it will not be open to the bank to turn round and claim that the liability of the debtors had not been discharged since the bank is estopped from making any claim against the vendor-debtors: A.I.R. 1992 Karn. 146 (D.B.).

Banker's right of set-off—Bank receiving notice of assignment of fixed deposit receipt but falling to intimate its right of set-off—Bank subsequently adjusting amount of receipt—Bank has no right to set-off and is estopped by conduct from claiming it: (1979) 1 Ren. C.J. 643: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Del. 121.

Where the instruction was to furnish a mobilisation guarantee but the bank issued a mobilisation advance-cum-performance guarantee in favour of the creditor and the debtor, not being a party thereto, could not detect the banker's mistake and the guarantee was accepted by the creditor, obviously with ulterior and mala fide motive, to saddle the debtor with additional liability absolutely beyond the scope of the contract, held, the creditor could not invoke the guarantee to recover loss and damages; it could not say that the debtor is estopped from contending that the guarantee was not a mobilisation advance-cum-performance guarantee, the creditor had full knowledge of the correct legal position regarding the guarantee, it was the creditor's duty to point out the mistake and not to accept the guarantee. A special equity had, therefore, arisen in favour of the debtor; he was entitled to prevent the creditor from enforcing the guarantee and to seek the Court's protection: A.I.R. 1989 Cal. 184: (1988) 2 Cal.L.J. 257.

The plaintiff, holder of a promissory note, endorsed it in favour of a bank and delivered it to them. The plaintiff wrote a letter to the bank asking them to encash the note and hand over the amount to the defendant, and saying that he had no right, title or interest in the note. The letter was taken to the bank by the defendant, who asked them for money due on the note or an advance against the note. The bank advanced the sum to the defendant and debited him with the amount in an account opened on that day. Subsequently, the plaintiff wrote to the bank cancelling his previous instruction. Thereafter the bank realized the sum due upon the promissory note and adjusted it to the account of the defendant. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit for recovery of the amount due on the note. Held, (Per Khosla, J.) that the plaintiff by issuing first instruction to the bank gave the bank authority to realize the sum due on the promissory-note and pay it to the defendant. The defendant and bank agreed among themselves and privity of contract between the bank and the defendant was thus established. The plaintiff in his letter had clearly stated that he thereafter held no right, title or interest in the promissory-note and he, therefore, was transferring or assigning all rights held by him in the note to the bank for a certain purpose. The plaintiff, thereafter, could not be said to have any interest in the money due on the promissory-note. On the other hand, the bank, undertook to pay the money to the defendant and the latter accepted this undertaking. This contract between the bank and the defendant could not be revoked by the plaintiff. Per Khosla and Kapur, JJ.—It may be said that the plaintiff was estopped from claiming any interest in the promissory note because upon his instructions and representations the bank acted to its detriment and made payment in full to defendant or undertook an obligation which could be legally enforced. The plaintiff, therefore, could not subsequently revoke his instructions and could not be allowed to deny the position which he himself brought about: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 78: I.L.R. (1955) Punj. 200.

Where the daughter wrote a letter to the Bank, a third party, that having joined a Nunnery she had no claim to her paternal properties but later on she sued for claiming her legitimate share in the paternal property, held, it was not open to her contesting brother to plead estoppel based on her letter to the bank; she could not be taken to have surrendered her share in the properties without a valid deed of relinquishment: A.I.R. 1985 Karn. 231: (1985) 2 Karn.L.J. 61: I.L.R. (1985) Karn. 1645 (D.B.).

66. Estoppel in matrimonial matters.—Where two persons not eligible for marriage live as husband and wife, the marriage not being valid cannot be supported by an estoppel: 46 P.R. 1912: 13 I.C. 482.

Husband and wife—Party once affirming marriage cannot subsequently object to it: (1928) 30 Bom.L.R. 523: A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 279.

Where a husband pleaded that his wife's earlier marriage had not been validly determined and the couple had for long been living and recognised as husband and wife and having begotten several children, held, the husband is estopped to raise the plea even if the wife is unable to establish the custom whereunder she claimed to have been divorced by her earlier husband: 1981 Hindu L.R. 211: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 887 (D.B.).

Where in a title suit the defendant, in his written statement, admitted that his father was married to plaintiff's mother in accordance with "Henga" form of marriage, held, even though he did not come to the witness box in support of his said averment, he could not be allowed to say that there was no marriage between the above mentioned parties according to "Henga" custom of marriage: A.I.R. 1981 Gau. 42 (D.B.).

A party describing a wedded wife as concubine, held, is not estopped from proving her status as wedded wife; her description as concubine does not change her status: 1982 M.P.W.N. 53.

Where the respondent-husband sought a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and the appellant wife contended that she was not legally wedded wife of respondent and she was still wife of one "H" as there was no legal and valid divorce between them and the respondent himself had led evidence to prove that before he contracted marriage with the appellant she had been divorced by "H" and the parties were minors at that time, held, the fact that appellant-wife failed to take a specific plea in her reply to the notice sent by the respondent to the effect that she was a minor at the time of divorce with "H" would not be fatal to her case: A.I.R. 1971 Him. Pra. 27: 1971 Sim.L.J. 216.

Dismissal of earlier petition for restitution of conjugal right filed by the husband under S. 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 on the ground that his wife had shown reasonable excuse for withdrawal from his society, held, would operate as estoppel for subsequent petition filed by him for dissolution of marriage on the ground of desertion under S. 13(1) (ib) of the 1955 Act: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 330 (Bom.).

Estoppel per rem judicatam—Husband's petition for nullity on ground of non-consummation of marriage—Allegation denied and cross-prayer for divorce on ground of cruelty—Both, petition and cross-prayer dismissed—Subsequent petition by husband for divorce on ground of wife's desertion—Wife praying for divorce on ground of constructive desertion—Wife is not estopped from repeating cruelty allegations: (1959) 3 W.L.R. 471.

Marriage void under S. 11 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955—Decree of nullity cannot be passed after death of one of the spouses: (1962) 75 Mad.L.W. 559: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 510.

If an obedient son, who is in good terms with his father, authorises his father to negotiate for and settle his marriage including the selection of the bride, and the father selects a bride after full knowledge about her physical defects and the son marries that bride, the son cannot thereafter be allowed to turn round and to have the marriage annulled on the ground that he would not have consented if the defects were made known to him: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 210: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 709 (D.B.).

Where the bride and her father agreed to her marriage to a fickleminded groom on the prior assurance of his father evidenced by a memorandum of settlement and a power-of-attorney granted by the groom's father to secure the benefit of the bride, held, the bride and her father having changed their position to their detriment by solemnisation of such marriage, the groom's father thereafter became more smart and sold the properties, by associating the groom with the transaction, the Supreme Court by invoking Art. 142 of the Constitution of India granted the relief to the wife and her daughter on the ground of promissory estoppel, equity and fair play by directing that out of the consideration, Rs. 60,000 be paid by the purchaser to the wife and her minor daughter: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1624.

To be entitled to get maintenance under S. 125, Cr.P.Code, the wife must be a legally wedded wife. The marriage of a woman with a man having a living spouse is a complete nullity in the eye of law and she is, therefore, not entitled to the benefit of S. 125. The fact that she was not informed about the man's marriage when she married him, who treated her as his wife, was of no effect. She could not rely on the principle of estoppel as to defeat the provisions of the Act. [1983 Cr.L.J. 259 (Bom.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 644: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 375: 1988 Cr.L.J. 793.

The doctrine of estoppel cannot be invoked against a wife to defeat her claim to a higher rate of maintenance allowance even though on an earlier occasion a maintenance decree had been passed and a certain rate of maintenance had been fixed thereunder. [A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 539; A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 150, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1991 All. 255: (1991) 17 All.L.R. 67 (D.B.).

67. Estoppel in respect of burden of proof.—Where the plaintiff accepted the burden of proof pertaining to the execution of the mortgage deed by the defendants, held, he was estopped from contending later on that the burden of proof was wrongly placed on him: A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 124: 1971 Raj.L.W. 122.

68. Estoppel in case of benami transaction.—Benami transactions — Estoppel against real owner. See A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 48.

Where a benamidar executed a Will wherein he described himself as real owner and said Will was executed by the real owner but there was no evidence to prove that the Will was executed at real owner's instance or that the real owner had knowledge about the contents of the Will, held, the heirs of the real owner, were not estopped from bringing a suit against the benamidar even though the real owner failed to take any action against the benamidar: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 101 (All.) (D.B.).

Where the father acquired a property in the name of but not for the benefit of his minor sons who were then possessed of no means and the consideration therefor was paid by the father out of his own funds, held, the property undoubtedly belonged to the father; upon his death it devolved on his legal heirs; any promises made by or conduct of his widow and sons do not make any change in the legal position; they cannot operate as estoppels in the partition suit unless all its ingredients are established: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 375 (D.B.).

Where the purported transferor had sold his property to another but without intending the title to pass to the other which continues to vest in the transferor to the knowledge of both the parties and in the suit for partition by the transferee impleading the transferor as a party, non-raising the plea of benami by the transferor in the suit, held, cannot operate as estoppel against the transferor in his subsequent suit for declaration of his title to the property: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 80: 1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 66.

Where in a suit for ejectment and arrears of rent by the benami owner, the tenants were barred from denying the title of the benami owner who had inducted them into the premises and a compromise was arrived at, held, the tenants were not barred by the doctrine of estoppel from suing the real owner of the promises for specific performance of the contract for purchase of the demised premises entered into by them with the real owner; the compromise did not amount to a representation by the tenants that the premises belonged to the wife, i.e., the benami owner: 1984 Raj.L.W. 321.

69. Estoppel against minor.—It is true that the doctrine of estoppel does not apply to minors and still less the Court will hold a minor estopped by the acts and omissions of others. There is, however, another principle that a minor is not entitled to repudiate an agreement and yet retain the advantage derived by him under it. General principles of equity seem incompatible with such a position. Thus, where the respondent on attaining majority repudiated a particular part of the agreement entered into by his guardian regarding sale of impugned house which was not beneficial to him and accepted the other part which was for his benefit, held, minor could not challenge the sale: 1974 Raj.L.W. 156.

No estoppel against infants: I.L.R. 25 Cal. 616 ; I.L.R. 26 Cal. 381. Major allowing decree to be passed as minor—Estoppel to question decree in subsequent suit: I.L.R. 48 All. 661: A.I.R. 1926 All. 673.

Even if, in S. 115, the word "person" includes minors, the general intention of adjective law of the Legislature as to the rule of evidence in this section must give way to the particular intention of substantive law in S. 11 of the Contract Act. A deed executed by a minor is a nullity according to Indian Law and it cannot be the subject of a plea of estoppel as against the executant: (1929) 31 Bom. L.R. 340: A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 201: I.L.R. 55 Bom. 741. See also (1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 906.

Minor executing sale deed representing himself as major—No estoppel to plead invalidity of sale: 23 Mad.L.W. 521: A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 607 ; A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 560: 67 M.L.J. 257 (case of pronote executed by minor) ; I.L.R. 20 Pat. 1130: A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 433 ; 139 I.C. 718: A.I.R. 1932 All. 710. See also A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 491 ; I.L.R. 9 Lah. 701: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 609 (F.B.) ; A.I.R. 1928 All. 626; A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 567.

Respondent (minor) and his mother becoming entitled to land — Lease in favour of petitioner by minor respondent — Petitioner's right to challenge right of respondent alone to terminate — Estoppel: 1959 Nag.L.J. (Notes) 66.

Representations by persons legally competent to bind minors—Minors are estopped from challenging them—Compromise by karta on behalf of himself and minor member of family—Minors not entitled to dispute—Permission of Court not necessary—C.P. Code, 1908, O. 32, R. 7: 1961 Jab.L.J. 395.

Vendee not using due diligence in ascertaining minor vendor's age. Held, that the vendor was not estopped from pleading minority at the time of the transaction impeached: 150 I.C. 968: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 304 (1). The mere fact that the purchaser from the guardian of a minor properties belonging to the minor took a letter from the minor stating that there was necessity for the alienation does not estop the minor from impeaching the sale, so long as it is not shown that the minor caused or permitted the vendee to believe that necessity existed: 115 I.C. 175 (2): A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 221. Admissions by guardian-ad-litem—When estops minor. See A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 32.

As a general proposition the position of law is that a representation made by a minor would not operate as estoppel. But where a guardian or a person legally competent to bind the minor makes a representation on behalf of such minor and himself and then both the minor and such person legally competent to bind him are estopped from challenging the representation.

The plaintiff filed a suit for redemption of certain ornaments alleged to have been pawned by their father with the defendant. The defendant pleaded bar of estoppel. He had earlier filed a suit against the plaintiff who was minor then and his other major brothers, for recovery of his amount by sale of pawned articles and that a compromise was arrived at between the karta and himself whereby the defendant was allowed to keep the articles in lieu of his dues including interest. No decree was, however, passed in terms of the compromise and the Court dismissed the suit as having been compromised out of the Court. Held, that the agreement having been made by the karta of the joint Hindu family on behalf of the family was binding on the minor members also and the plaintiffs were estopped from challenging the same: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 289: 1961 Jab.L.J. 395.

Appointment of guardian in proceedings under S. 27 of U.P. Tenancy Act, 1947—Appointment not challenged as irregular on ground that minor had attained age of majority or on any other ground by the said minor or by proposed guardian. Held, said minor and proposed guardian were estopped from challenging the appointment: 1966 All.L.J. 607.

Where a de facto guardian of a minor-debtor executes an acknowledgment on behalf of the latter for purposes of extending limitation under S. 19 of the Limitation Act, and the debtor after attaining majority subsequently executes another acknowledgment, the subsequent acknowledgment, does not estop him from questioning the authority of the de facto guardian, as it clearly could not have misled the creditor in receiving the prior acknowledgment: A.I.R.1948 Nag. 293: I.L.R. (1947) Nag. 710: 1947 Nag. L.J. 405.

Though by reason of having accepted certain benefits under an ekrarnama wrongfully disposing of properties belonging to a wakf, a minor may be estopped from questioning the validity of the ekrarnama in his personal capacity, it does not preclude him in the capacity of mutawalli to sue for the recovery of the properties of the endowment wrongfully disposed of under the ekrarnama: (1931-32) 36 Cal.W.N. 972.

Where expense incurred on the marriage of a male was justified as a legal necessity in the plaint on the ground that he was a major and no plea of the mortgage being of non-binding nature was raised therein either, held, the settled law is that the plaintiff cannot be allowed to succeed against his own pleadings and adopt a contrary plea for the first time in second appeal from a favourable averment elicited from a witness, not a family member, in cross-examination that the groom was then a minor when no relevant issues were raised or tried: A.I.R. 1972 All. 357: 1972 All.L.J. 351.

Where persons to be sued are majors, a suit brought without their knowledge against them on the footing that they are minors is wrong, and the guardian ad litem appointed to represent them has no legal standing to act for them and his admission of liability is not binding on them. Such persons are not estopped from contesting the validity of the decree even if they became aware of the execution proceedings and did not come forward to prosecute their claims then: A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 468.

70. Estoppel against reversioners.—There are three classes of estoppel which may arise where a reversioner impugns an alienation made by a widow: (i) as embodied in S. 115; (ii) election in its strict term whereby the person electing is benefited under the transaction; and (iii) later on agrees to abide by the transaction. A presumptive reversioner becoming an actual reversioner when succession opens is precluded from impugning the transaction; however, if he had taken the benefit while he was a minor, another rule would apply because a minor, obviously, cannot be compelled to accept the benefit if on opening of the succession he would stand deprived of his legal rights; but he can, on attaining majority, certainly ratify the transaction and be bound by it or repudiate the transaction and disgorge the benefit. [(1954) 2 M.L.J. 162, Approved: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2069.

Surrender by widow—Consent by reversioner not necessary—Neither reversioner nor person claiming through him can be stopped from challenging surrender, if it was void or voidable in law: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 47.

Reversioner enjoying benefit under it for several years—Arrangement not challenged even after widow's death—Arrangement is binding and cannot be challenged: (1961) 3 Ori.J.D. 201.

Reversioners cultivating under the alienees from the widow and getting contribution from them for building a common well while widow is living, insufficient to establish admission of alienees' title: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 6.

The facts that the reversioner to the estate of a widow's husband had received some items of property from the widow in consideration of relinquishing his reversionary right to the remainder and that his son, himself inherited those items which the father had received, could not operate as estoppel against the son from questioning the subsequent alienation by the widow in favour of others: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 637: 65 M.L.J. 282.

Where the ancestor of a reversioner had admitted the execution of a sale deed by a Hindu widow who was a pardanashin lady but her knowledge and understanding of the document was nowhere admitted, the reversioner was not estopped from pleading want of proper understanding of the transaction by the executant: 10 O.W.N. 147: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 170 (2).

Where a Hindu widow, the next reversioner and the remote reversioners were all parties to a family settlement entered into to bring harmony in the family and the avoidance of disputes and litigation, and the remote reversioners were greatly benefited by the compromise, after the death of the next reversioner, the remote reversioner to whom the estate had opened under Hindu law, could not be permitted to say that at the time of the settlement, they had no title and could not enter into a compromise with the next reversioner and others. The principle of estoppel was clearly applicable under the circumstances: 1959 All.W.R. (H.C.) 85: A.I.R. 1959 All. 473.

Deed of surrender by widow in favour of next reversioner and alienations in favour of others—Latter conveying portion to sister to last male holder—Her sons who had become presumptive reversioners enjoying properties and disposing of portions—If precluded from challenging alienation by widow: 1956 An.W.R. 1125: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 846.

Alienation by Hindu widow—Deed of alienation signed by next reversioner with full knowledge of contents—Estoppel—Right to challenge the alienation subsequently: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 564.

Alienation by Hindu widow with daughter's consent—Daughter and reversioners through her cannot impeach alienation: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 325: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 317.

Where a widow was granted life estate in lieu of her maintenance, an admission by a reversioner that her daughter was also entitled to the property, held, would not estop him after the widow's death that her daughter had no title to the properties; S. 14(1) of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 is not attracted: A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 64: (1976) 89 Mad.L.W. 628: (1976) 2 M.L.J. 205.

Hindu widow—Compromise by—Reversioner enjoying benefit under compromise by widow for a long time—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 447: (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 209.

Obiter—In order to constitute election or ratification it is not essential that a reversioner should assent to the transaction impeached only when he is in titulo. The ratification can be effected even during the lifetime of the widow and before the reversion falls. There is no justification for limiting this doctrine to cases of alienation by Hindu widows. It applies to awards as well: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 222: (1960) 1 An. W.R. 340: I.L.R. (1959) Andh. Pra. 951.

Where a suit for possession challenging the adoption made by the last male holder, the other reversioner impleaded as a defendant supported the adoption, disclaimed any share in the suit property but was resisted by the widows of the adopted son and the adopted grandson of the last male holder, was decreed on first appeal and in the second appeal, the first defendant remained ex parte and the second appeal was compromised by the plaintiff and the widows, without pressing the appeal against the first defendant, held, the first defendant by his plea and conduct had waived his right to the suit properties; he was estopped from impugning the compromise and claiming his share in the suit property as a reversioner. [A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 555; A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 576, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 96.

If a person having full knowledge of his rights as a possible reversioner enters into a transaction which settles his claim as well as the claim of the opponent at the relevant time, he cannot be permitted to go back on that arrangement when reversion actually opens: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 797: (1961) 3 S.C.R. 624; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1041: (1971) 1 S.C.W.R. 614.

71. Estoppel in case of adoption.—Adoption—Applicability of rule of estoppel: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 103.

Adoption—Giving and taking not proved—Party acknowledging adoption is not estopped from disputing its validity. See A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 129.

The presence of a person at an adoption or his subsequent acquiescence in the adoption cannot estop him from challenging the validity of the adoption. He cannot dispute the fact of the adoption, but its legality cannot be established by mere estoppel: I.L.R. (1943) Bom. 706: (1943) 45 Bom.L.R. 992: A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 40.

A mere presence at an adoption or a mere acquiescence in an adoption does not create an estoppel so as to preclude the person from challenging the adoption afterwards, when there is no representation made as to any matter of fact on the strength of which the act of adoption can be said to be made: (1937) 39 Bom.L.R. 599: A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 20.

The principle underlying S. 115 is that estoppel may be described as a rule by which a person, in some cases will not be allowed to plead the contrary of a fact or state of things which he has formerly asserted by words or conduct. Estoppel thus operates merely as a personal disqualification and does not bind any one who claims by an independent title. A person may be so estopped although he was acting in good faith or without full knowledge of the circumstances or under a mistake or misapprehension. The misrepresentation to operate as an estoppel must be of a matter of fact. An erroneous expression of opinion that an adoption was valid in law cannot lead to an estoppel. Mere acquiescence in an adoption or mere presence at an adoption does not create an estoppel or even subsequent conduct recognising the adoption.

A Hindu widow whose power to take a son in adoption to her deceased husband had exhausted due to the presence of her widowed daughter-in-law, adopted X and induced the daughter-in-law to change her status of her being a legal heir on the date of the adoption, by marrying the adopted son X. The arrangement of marriage was settled before the adoption. The adoption being void the daughter-in-law by marrying X had caused her own civil death and had lost the status of a legal heir. This was the result of the representation made by the widow that the adoption was valid and would enable X, the husband of the daughter-in-law to succeed. Held, that the widow was estopped by her conduct both before and after the adoption from changing her ground and challenging the adoption by her of X: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 242.

The doctrine of estoppel cannot confer on a person the status which an adoption alone can give him. But the doctrine, can be invoked to prevent a challenge to the adoption by one who has induced the adopted boy to change his position so irrevocably as to render it impossible for him to revert to his original position in his natural family: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 241: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 656.

The belief induced in the person who sets up an estoppel under S. 115 must be one in a fact, not in a proposition of law. Hence, a Hindu widow's conduct in adopting a boy without the authority of her husband does not estop her from challenging the validity of the adoption on the ground of the absence of her husband's authority: I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 678: A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 62.

Estoppel does not confer any status and father was not estopped from challenging validity of adoption: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 970: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 96.

Adoption—Plea of estoppel by conduct raised by adoptive son—Sustainability: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 504.

Widow acting in pursuance of power contained in Will and adopting boy—Will construed as conferring no such power—Widow if estopped from questioning validity of adoption: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 187: (1939) 1 M.L.J. 75.

Conduct—Adoption made under settlement deed—Validity of adoption—Party bringing about settlement and adoption, if can question: 153 I.C. 102: A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 141.

Adoption by widow challenged by suit after 15 years by reversioner, who all the while has not been accepting the adoption and challenging authority of widow—He is not precluded by any rule of law from questioning the adoption: (1965) 1 S.C.W.R. 947: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1549.

72. Estoppel by record.—See A.I.R. 1969 All. 342: 1967 All.W.R. (H.C.). 731: 1968 All.L.J. 144 (F.B.).

Entries in revenue records—Presumption—Finality—Entry of persons being adopted son—Failure to get it corrected—Recital is not binding on rightful holder. See A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 319: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 692.

In order that estoppel by record may arise out of a judgment or order, the Court which pronounced the judgment or order must have had inherent jurisdiction to do so. Lack of inherent jurisdiction deprives the judgment or order of any effect. Such a judgment or order cannot operate as an estoppel even against the person who sought the assistance of the Court whose jurisdiction is impugned. Therefore, an order passed by a Revenue Officer deciding a question of title to property or transferring title being wholly devoid of jurisdiction, a plea of estoppel by record cannot be founded on an order so wholly devoid of inherent jurisdiction. Mere consent of a party to the making of the order in question by the Revenue Officer will not give that order legal force and validity: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 15.

Estoppel by record—Not applicable to taxation matters: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 575: (1965) 16 S.T.C. 271: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 44.

Mere non-action against an incorrect settlement entry is not such an act or omission as will, without more, be sufficient in law to induce or mislead another person to act upon the same and so to act to his prejudice: (1958-59) 63 Cal. W.N. 689.

Entries made in mutation proceedings are presumed to be correct but they are nevertheless rebuttable; they cannot, therefore, amount to estoppel by record: A.I.R. 1972 Him. Pra. 20: (1971) 1 Sim.L.J. 1 (D.B.).

Mutuation proceeding—Officer to be bound by oath—Decree passed on basis of oath—Re-opening of matter in civil Court: 1934 All.L.J. 92: A.I.R. 1934 All. 300.

Where deceased's estate was mutated equally in favour of his three sons and a daughter each getting one-fourth share and said mutation was relied upon by the plaintiff sons in proceedings before Special Collector, Surplus Area, to claim that they had succeeded to one-fourth share to the estate of their father, held, the plaintiff-sons would be estopped from contending subsequently that their sister was only entitled to one-sixteenth share is the estate of their father: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 238: 1985 Rev.L.R. 277.

Where the plaintiff's father admitted the right of the defendant's predecessor-in-interest and thereafter of the defendant herself to the suit land inherited from a common ancestor and allowed its mutation to be entered in the names of that predecessor and thereafter of the defendant, held, the plaintiff was, because of his own and his father's conduct, estopped from changing his position and deny the defendant's title to the suit property: A.I.R. 1973 P.&H. 126 (D.B.).

Where upon the death of the father who owned a house under a co-operative society, his son nominated in the records of the society, moved an application to the Calcutta Municipal Corporation for mutation of the house in his own and his other brother's name in the municipal records when under the W.B. Co-operative Societies Act, 1983 it was only the nominee named by the deceased in the society's record who alone could inherit the house, held, the application for mutation in the name of both the brothers having been made in ignorance of his rights under the law, would not estop the nominee son to contend to the contrary. [A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 921 and A.I.R. 1967 All. 405, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1991 Cal. 181: (1989) 1 Cal.L.J. 373.

Where, the defendant held possession as a tenant under his paternal uncle and thereafter under his uncle's widow during their life times and upon her death, the defendant surrendered three-fourth of the demised property to the plaintiffs, the two surviving brothers and a surviving sister of his deceased uncle, and the plaintiffs admitting the defendant's right to the remaining one-fourth share, the property was mutated in the revenue records by consent of all the parties, held, the plaintiffs were estopped from impugning the defendant's right to his one-fourth share after many (9) years. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1055; A.I.R. 1973 P.&H. 126, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1979 P.&H. 12.

73. Estoppel in election matters.—(See also Note 24, supra). Where the election of a candidate from a constituency reserved for Scheduled Castes, was challenged on the ground that having embraced and professed Buddhism, the elected candidate was not entitled to contest from the reserved constituency, held, though legally there is no bar in raising said question in the election petition, the petitioner's allegation that the elected candidate was not member of the Scheduled Caste would be considerably weakened because of his failure to object at the time of the scrutiny of the nomination papers: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 420: (1975) 1 S.C.C. 589.

Where a defeated candidate challenged the election of the returned candidate and claimed the seat for himself on the ground of improper reception and rejection of votes which attracts S. 97 of the Representation of People Act, 1951 requiring the successful candidate, in case he desires to contest the petitioner's claim to the seat, to prefer a recrimination as well as to deposit costs in favour of the Election Commission, held, the returned candidate's failure to comply with the requirement would disentitle him to rely on the petitioner's concession on scrutiny of ballots regarding validity of the returned candidate's rejected ballots; a concession is tantamount to an admission and, therefore, evidence; the Election Tribunal would have no jurisdiction to use the petitioner's concession in favour of the returned candidate; on facts, the petitioner's contention as having been duly elected upheld. [(1972) 2 M.L.J. 118, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2077: (1973) 2 S.C.C. 170.

Estoppel—Elections—Petitioners taking part in—Having full knowledge of illegality in "voters" list—Is estopped from challenging the validity of election on his defeat: 1961 B.L.J.R. 14.

In a election petition alleging corrupt practices on the basis of speeches made in the election meetings, held, the Court could draw an adverse inference against the authenticity of the gist of the speeches since published in the newspapers for non-production of the notings made at the spot by the reporters: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1836.

Election dispute—No estoppel against applying for setting aside on ground that electoral rolls were defective. See A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 49: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 875 (F.B.); I.L.R. (1959) 9 Raj. 1084: A.I.R. 1960 Raj. 152.

Where the election petitioner in the wake of the impending general election impugned the electoral rolls as containing a large number of bogus voters and the writ petition was disposed of on the assurance of the electoral officers that they would in the short time available scrutinise the rolls and rectify the rolls and an election petition was, thereafter, instituted against the returned candidate on the ground, inter alia, of entry of bogus voters on the rolls and the returned candidate plead estoppel on the ground that the previous writ petition had already settled the point of bogus voters, held, the previous writ petition could not operate as res judicata as it did not decide any point; the returned legislator was already a candidate and he could not claim to have joined the electoral contest on any representation said to have been made in the previous writ petition; estoppel was not attracted: (1991) 4 Bom.C.R. 156.

Where a defeated candidate after taking part in the election challenges it there can be no question of any estoppel because it cannot be said that the position of the other side was in any way altered by reason of something done or not done by the defeated candidates: I.L.R. (1959) 9 Raj. 1084: A.I.R. 1960 Raj. 152.

Writ petition to set aside elections—Petitioner fighting election in spite of alleged defects—Does not operate as estoppel—Writ petition not barred: 1962 Raj.L.W. 57.

Candidate to election admitting disqualification during scrutiny of nomination paper—Voter not present there not estopped by admission: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 251.

Return of election expenses—Candidate is not estopped from contending that particular expenditure is not expenditure in eye of law: 1970 Jab.L.J. 342.

Where nomination form of the petitioner, who was sole contestant of a seat reserved for women, was rejected on the ground that she had not mentioned her number in the voters' list and the petitioner challenged the same by filing a writ petition and at the time of admission of the petition, the State Government failed to raise a contention regarding non-maintainability of petition on the ground of available alternative remedy under R. 11(4) of the Election Rules, held, the State Government must be deemed to have waived this objection at that stage: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 281: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 617: (1982-2) 23 Guj.L.R. 397.

The petitioner who had taken part in the election, contested for the office of President of Municipal Committee but defeated, held, is estopped from contending that proper notice had not been given to him for election: 1988 Punj.L.J. 46 (D.B.).

Where the Bar Council fixed last date for filing of nomination papers as 30-9-1973 but extended it before expiry of said date, held, the petitioners who had filed their nomination papers after 30-9-1973, on being declared unsuccessful could not challenge the right of the Bar Council to postpone the date of filing nomination papers: A.I.R. 1975 All. 190 (D.B.).

Election of office-bearers of Gram Panchayat—Party participating in election—Party was estopped from challenging validity of election: 1965 B.L.J.R. 397.

Panchayats—Rajasthan Panchayat Samities and Zilla Parishads Act (XXXVII of 1959), Ss. 14, 20(10), 20(11)—Standing Committees formed under S. 20 (10)—Term of—Dissolution can be by expiry of term or resignation by all members—Resolution purporting to dissolve them before the term is invalid—Members party to such resolution not estopped from challenging it—Subsequent bye-laws fixing number of Committees does not apply to them: 1962 Raj.L.W. 634.

Where on a candidate's objection to the nomination papers of his only rival for the election of the Mukhia which were rejected whereby he was declared elected unopposed but subsequently the rejection of nomination papers and consequently the unopposed election was set aside and fresh election was held, wherein the candidate whose unopposed election was set aside had also participated, held, he was estopped from challenging the validity of the election on the ground of illegalities committed therein. [A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 7, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 439 (D.B.).

Where the defeated candidate in the election for the office of Mukhia had participated in the election with the full knowledge that 179 electors had been illegally included in the voters list in between the dates of nomination and polling, held, he will be deemed to have acquiesced or concurred in the election and is estopped from challenging the same after having taken his chance and losing in the election; he could not maintain a writ petition when his election petition was still pending before the Election Tribunal. [A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 147, Dissent.]: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 283: 1972 B.L.J.R. 288: 1972 Pat.L.J.R. 360.

Where the Counsel for the returned Sarpanch in the election petition under the A.P. Gram Panchayat (Conduct of Election) Rules expressly stated that he had no objection to the recounting of votes and the recounting disclosed that though he had won by 22 votes, 29 invalid votes had been cast in his favour, held, it was not open to the returned Sarpanch to contend in the writ Court that the recounting ought not to have been ordered when there was in fact material on record warranting recounting: A.I.R. 1984 Andh. Pra. 298 (D.B.).

Where the election of a Mukhiya was set aside by the Election Tribunal for corrupt practices after trial who impugned the same in the High Court on the ground that the election petition should have been summarily dismissed for non-compliance with the mandatory requirement of R. 75 as laid down in R. 77 of the Bihar Panchayat Election Rules, 1959 and it was contended by the opposite party that having participated in the trial of the election petition on merits, the Mukhiya was estopped from pressing the objection, held, it was the duty of the Election Tribunal to summarily dismiss the election petition as it stood; the rule of waiver or estoppel was not attracted: A.I.R. 1973 Pat. 389: 1973 B.L.J.R. 580.

Where the petitioner actually participated in the no-confidence meeting and took a chance of succeeding at the voting by show of hands without raising any objection to such a procedure being followed, held, he was estopped from contending that the impugned meeting was not proper and legal. [1975 Punj.L.J. 4, Foll.; 1973 Punj.L.J. 90; A.I.R. 1975 P.&H. 33, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1976 P.&H. 122: 1975 Punj.L.J. 449: (1976) 78 Punj.L.R. 170: 1976 Rev.L.R. 185 (D.B.).

Co-operative Society—Election of Chairman—Previous approval of Registrar for electing non-official Chairman—Election of official as Chairman—Challenge to validity—Estoppel: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 154.

Where under the Rules and the established practice the Secretary of a society was elected by its general body meeting (its supreme authority) and not by the Managing Committee which alone was empowered to convene the extraordinary general body meetings and such a meeting was called, without requisition, by the Secretary himself elected by the Managing Committee where the Managing Committee was elected, held, both the general body meeting as well as the elections are illegal; when some of the Managing Committee members sued for a declaration of their having been validly elected, other members of the Committee were not estopped from contending that the general body meeting as well as the elections held there were against law: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 97: (1984) 2 Karn.L.J. 407.

74. Estoppel in case of easement.—Imposition of easements—Grant of easement by person with no title—Estoppel: 1967 Ker.L.J. 105.

Easementary right of plaintiff declared by decree of Court—Defendant raising new construction and obstructing plaintiff's right—Failure by plaintiff to raise objection at the time of construction—Lapse of ten years—Effect—Held, that a subsequent suit for demolition of such construction would be barred by acquiescence and also laches: 1981 All.L.J. 1345.

Extinguishment of right of easement—Non-user of easement for over fifteen years—Non-user will not amount to implied release—But equitable release of right of easement is still possible—When it can be so presumed—Easements Act, 1882, Ss. 38, 46: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 536: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 158.

75. Estoppel by deed.—Suit by beneficiary to follow trust properties—Held, on facts, that since plaintiff's father had settled dispute and received his share of sale-proceeds of trust-property sold by Trustee, plaintiff could not charge Trustee for committing breach of trust nor could follow alleged trust properties—(Trust Act, 1882, Ss. 63 and 23): I.L.R. (1966) 2 Mad. 385: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 161.

Where joint purchasers of a property by an unregistered partition deed gave exclusive ownership and possession of the passage therein to one of them, in his suit for declaration of his title to the passage based not on adverse possession but the partition deed, held, the suit could not be decreed on the unregistered deed which is not legal or admissible evidence; merely because the deed had been acted upon and possession delivered was of no avail: A.I.R. 1988 Del. 13 (D.B.).

Interpretation of document is question of law and there can be no estoppel in such matters: I.L.R. (1968) 18 Raj. 540: 1968 Raj.L.W. 332: A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 22.

An estoppel does not arise against the maker of a promissory note, by the mere fact that after discharge, it is left with the payee and he passes it off on others as if it was still a negotiable instrument: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 300: 64 M.L.J. 241.

Promissory note by elder brother in Hindu joint family—Debt borrowed for private purpose—Endorsement of payment signed by executant and by younger brother —Liability of latter—Estoppel against denial does not arise: I.L.R. (1943) Mad. 717: (1943) 1 M.L.J. 104.

A brought a suit against B and C and claimed a decree against the former as the executant of the suit pronote. As against C it was claimed in the alternative that A handed over the pronote to him for collection and that if he had collected the amount from B the decree should be passed against him for the amount. Both B and C set up the plea that A was a benamidar and not real owner of the note and that since payment was made to C who was the beneficial owner thereof the suit should be dismissed. Held, that although it was not open to the promisor of a note to contend that someone other than the payee on the face of a pronote is the real owner of the note the question as to who is entitled to the moneys could be gone into when there is a contest between the beneficial owner under the note and the ostensible payee. Therefore, in the case before the Court although it would have been held that B was precluded from contending that A was not the owner of the money in question yet in view of the fact that C had been impleaded as a party to the suit and in view of the reliefs claimed against both B and C in the plaint as framed the Court decided the dispute on merits and did not wish to rest its decision on the question of law alone: (1957) 70 Mad.L.W. 361: (1957) 2 M.L.J. 154: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 573.

Suit against firm for recovery of amount based on pronote—Copy of trial balance-sheet enclosed with income-tax return sent by manager of firm and given to plaintiff by partner of firm, filed by plaintiff in suit to prove subsisting liability of firm and marked with consent—Effect: (1968) 2 An.W.R. 567: 74 I.T.R. 224.

76. Estoppel by recital in deed.—Recital of receipt of consideration in deed does not operate as estoppel: I.L.R. 49 All. 708. See also A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 471.

When a recital is intended to be a statement which all the parties to the deed have mutually agreed to admit as true it is an estoppel upon all. But, when it is intended to be the statement of one party only the estoppel is confined to that party and the intention is to be gathered from construing the instrument. The recital, however, cannot operate as against a third party: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 708. See also 19 Pat.L.T. 421: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 431.

A recital in a deed or other instrument is in some cases evidence against the party who makes it, but it is no more evidence as against other persons than any other statement would be: 1953 Ker.L.T. 254: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 417.

When a deed confers on a person certain benefits burdened with certain obligations, the law does not permit him to retain the benefits and to repudiate the burden: (1952) 65 Mad.L.W. 231: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 19.

Party executing a document—Document proved to be fictitious—Parties to document not bound by contents thereof: 1964 Kash.L.J. 222: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 11.

No express or implied contract to pay sales tax on or above price—Sale tax included in bills submitted—Purchaser not estopped from repudiating or disputing liability: A.I.R. 1966 All. 422.

Where a person was taken as an illatom son-in-law by his father-in-law under a settlement-cum-will which contained a mention of an agreement between his father and father-in-law whereby the son-in-law was to give up his rights in his natural family and to get his in-laws' properties and upon his suing for partition of his natural joint family properties, the agreement between his natural father and father-in-law was set up as an estoppel in defence, held, there was no evidence that the plaintiff after his marriage was excluded from enjoyment of the joint family properties and had ceased to be its member and even otherwise in law an illatom son-in-law does not cease to belong to the natural family and does not become a member of his father-in-law's family; as long as he did not relinquish his right by an appropriate deed, a mere recital in the settlement-cum-will of his father-in-law was not sufficient to estop the plaintiff from claiming his share in his natural family; it was no representation from the plaintiff to the members of his joint family: A.I.R. 1993 Karn. 24: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 305: (1992) 2 Karn.L.J. 527 (D.B.).

77. Estoppel in case of acknowledgment of settlement of account.—It is always open to a person to recover his legal dues unless he has, by some action, legally bound himself not do so. If not, it does not matter whether he has not exercised his rights, or whether he has recovered his dues only partially, provided he sues within limitation. Estoppel is a ground on which he might be precluded from claiming ; express waiver is another and so forth. But the mere fact that he accepts a part of the money tendered does not estop him from claiming the rest unless his hands are tied by something more: I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 392: 1946 Nag.L.J. 358: A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 153.

Where a contract entered into between the Railways and a contractor for executing certain construction work was terminated after Railways fulfilled certain conditions put forth by the contractor and he issued a "no-claim certificate" and received the payment, but thereafter he sought a reference to arbitrator on the ground that the Railways had committed breach of contract and he was, therefore, entitled to damages, held, having received the payment and having put the Railways in a position by which the Railways changed its position to its own detriment, it was not open to the contractor to say that the dispute had not been settled and it still existed with regard to the alleged damages sustained by him. The plaintiff was estopped from raising the dispute by his own conduct in as much as on account of its conduct the Railways has changed its position. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 158, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Guj. 41: (1983) 3 Guj.L.H. 748: (1983-2) 24 Guj.L.R. 1347.

For the work done by the plaintiff under a contract entered into with the defendant, the latter sent a sum by cheque to the former requesting him to accept the same in full and final settlement of all the plaintiff's claim against the defendant and to return the enclosed receipt duly signed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff received the payment but did not return the receipt as required by the defendant but on the contrary before encashing the cheque sent a letter to the defendant through a pleader informing him that he was entitled to something more. Held, that the acceptance of the payment by the plaintiff in the circumstances was not in full and final settlement of his claim and did not amount to accord and satisfaction but was in partial satisfaction of his claim and the plaintiff was not estopped from claiming the balance alleged to be due to him: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 37 (D.B.).

Claim for damages—Acceptance and encashment of cheque for sum less than claimed—Party if estopped from claiming balance: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 30.

Where the petitioner, an advocate, accepted payment towards his professional fees from State Government in full settlement of all his claims and acknowledged it without any protest, held, he could not subsequently claim interest on account of undue delay caused in payment of his fees: A.I.R. 1990 Andh. Pra. 76: (1989) 2 An.L.T. 470.

78. Estoppel when transferor of property acquires title subsequent to transfer or when he had limited interest.—See (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 285.

Sale of estate comprising interests of lunatic and non-lunatic—Non-lunatic consenting for sale—Manager and Court acting upon such consent—Sale is good or bad in its entirety—Non-lunatic cannot resile from its position and extricate its interest: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 89.

Where property of a lunatic was alienated by his wife and the lunatic brought a suit against his wife and the transferee wherein the transferee pleaded that the sale was saved by S. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 as wife subsequently acquired estate after lunatic's death and was bound to perform her contract and that the principle of "feeding the estoppel" wholly applied in the case, held, the fact that the deceased was a lunatic and that the property in question was owned and possessed by him and was his estate was well known to the purchaser and, thus, he would not get any relief by applying the principle laid down under S. 43 of the 1882 Act, as the sale was void from its inception. Further, it is also settled that no estoppel can be pleaded against a statute so as to prejudice a minor or a lunatic who enjoys the protection of law. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 847; A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 694, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1991 Madh. Pra. 340: 1991 M.P.L.J. 217.

Where an absolute settlement of property in favour of a minor with the minor's mother as his guardian was made with the condition that the mother should hand over the possession to the beneficiary on his attaining majority with the stipulation that if the minor's life span was short and he were to die suddenly, the mother shall become absolute owner of the property; after attaining majority the beneficiary sold the property wherein the minor's parents represented and declared that the property absolutely belonged to the vendor who, however, shortly after his marriage died; the mother claimed the property sold on the ground of herself having become its absolute owner on the death of her son, held, the defeasance clause would have applied only on the beneficiary's death during his minority; the mother was, therefore, estopped from impugning the sale in view of her assurance and declaration that the property belonged absolutely to her son: (1981) 1 Karn.L.J. 487.

79. Estoppel in case of trust.—Where the defendant not only agreed to become a trustee but he discharged some functions in that capacity and with the intention of gaining two valuable houses in the municipal town entered into an exchange deed thereby getting at the trust properties, held, he could not thereafter turn round and say that there was no valid trust: A.I.R. 1975 Andh. Pra. 97: (1975) 1 An.W.R. 113: 1975 An.L.T. 1 (D.B.).

Trust—Cypres application—Power of Court to make scheme—Necessary condition—Trusts created by deed of grant—Trustees if can deny trusts: (1956) 2 All E.R. 881.

Charitable scheme—Scheme erroneous—Amendment—Attorney-General if estopped from raising validity of trusts declared by scheme: (1956) 3 All E.R. 14.

Suit against Mahant—Statement that loan was given to Mahant in personal capacity—Plaintiff cannot urge that Mahant was sued as such. See A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 264.

Estoppel against a Mahant whether can be got rid of by a suit brought by him formally in the name of idol: I.L.R. 56 Cal. 894: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 65: 56 M.L.J. 636 (P.C.).

80. Estoppel against insurer.—Where in a motor-accident claim case, the owner of vehicle who himself gave the particulars of the insurance policy and did not raise any objection when a copy of the insurance policy was tendered and admitted in evidence, and who also failed to produce the original policy himself or making any effort in refuting the correctness of the copy, held, he could not raise the objection that the same could not be read in evidence in deciding the question regarding compensation: A.I.R. 1994 Him. Pra. 21 (D.B.).

Suit for damages against owner of vehicle and the insurer—Plaintiff dropping the later upon the owner endorsing that he has no claims against insurer—Endorsement, held, could not estop the owner to implead the insurer as a third party under O. 8-A of the C.P. Code—C.P. Code, 1908, O. 8-A: (1968) 38 Comp. Cas. 19: 1967 Comp. L.J. 235: (1967) 2 M.L.J. 446: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 362.

Insurance policy—Award made condition precedent for right of action—Waiver of condition, what amounts to: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 270: I.L.R. (1963) 1 Ker. 545: (1963) 1 Comp. L.J. 329. See also A.I.R. 1989 Pat. 269; A.I.R. 1979 Pat. 124, cited in Note 40, infra.

Where in a motor accident case under S. 110-D of the Motor Vehicle Act, 1939 the insurance company failed to plead that the deceased was a gratuitous passenger in the truck either in the written statement or before the Tribunal, held, the insurance company had clearly waived its right to deny its liability on that ground: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 136: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 207: (1982-1) 23 Guj.L.R. 572.

81. Plea of estoppel in appeal.—The case of waiver and implied agreement involves questions of law and fact and in the absence of specific pleading and specific issue such pleas cannot be allowed to be raised in appeal: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 146 ; A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 226.

Plea of estoppel cannot be allowed to be raised first time in appeal: (1983) 2 Serv.L.J. 418: 1984 Lab.I.C. (N.O.C.) 167: I.L.R. (1984) 1 Del. 163. See also (1978) 1 M.P.W.N. 260.

Failure to take plea of 'autrefois acquit' in lower Court—Plea can be taken in appeal for first time: 1969 Cr.L.J. 844 (Manipur).

Where in a suit for ouster of an encroacher, the defendant remained absent on the date the local Commissioner appointed by the Court submitted his report as also on the subsequent date and his subsequent application seeking time to file objections was rejected, held, the defendant was estopped from raising in appeal the plea of non-affording of opportunity to file objections to the report: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 77 (Gau.).

Where respondent-bank held four mortgages in respect of same property and instituted four separate suits for recovery of amounts by sale of mortgaged property and the appellants judgment-debtors submitted to passing of decrees in all the suits and put forth no contentions regarding violation of S. 67-A of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 as all claims had not been consolidated in one suit when suits were pending before civil Judge or after the initiation of execution proceedings before the trial Court, held, the appellants by their conduct were estopped from taking a defence in appeal regarding violation of S. 67-A of 1882 Act: A.I.R. 1993 Karn. 279: (1993) 1 Karn.L.J. 519.

New plea of estoppel must be specifically pleaded—Whether can be taken for the first time in second appeal: A.I.R. 1957 Tripura 11.

Where no foundation in the plaint was laid for the plea of estoppel nor any issue in respect thereof was raised in the trial Court, held, the plaintiff could not be allowed to canvas the same for the first time in second appeal: A.I.R. 1973 All. 89: 1972 All.L.J. 912.

New point—Estoppel not pleaded in lower Courts—New point cannot be allowed to be set up in second appeal when it is one of fact: 1962 M.P.L.J. 290.

In order to raise the plea of estoppel, the facts on which it is based must be pleaded. Thus, where landlord contended that inasmuch as the tenant was a party to the compromise, he was estopped from challenging the validity of the order made by the Rent Controller on the basis of that compromise but said point was not taken before the lower Court and was raised for the first time in second appeal, held, plea of estoppel could not be raised in second appeal. [A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 462; A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 326, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 260: (1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 434.

Where the Court's power to direct the tenant to deposit arrears of rent for the pre-suit period under S. 11-A of the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1947 was not impugned in the grounds of first appeal, held, the appellant was not precluded from urging that point as a ground in the second appeal: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 36: 1981 Pat.L.J.R. 1: 1980 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 665 (F.B.).

Where in an appeal before the Supreme Court, the appellant raised a totally new plea regarding promissory estoppel though necessary facts to find any such promissory estoppel had not been put forward or considered by any of the assessing or appellate authorities, held, such a plea could not be raised before the Supreme Court for the first time: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2256.

Where the High Court hearing an appeal under Cl. 15 of the letters patent granted amendment of pleadings and examined witnesses and recorded findings of fact on appreciation of evidence in respect of amended pleadings, held, the fact that appellant never objected to the appellate Bench examining witnesses and recording findings of fact on appreciation of evidence could not estop him from raising that objection in Supreme Court as the appellate Bench lacked inherent jurisdiction to record fresh evidence and no amount of consent could confer jurisdiction. [A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 136, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1062: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 224: (1978) 2 S.C.C. 559.

An agreement entered into between the then Ruler of Kota in 1945 with a quarrying company granting monopoly rights for 15 years alongwith exemptions from taxes, etc. was sought by the company to be enforced against the Union of India and the State of Rajasthan. On conclusion of arguments, the parties agreed that if the agreement was found to be void, Ss. 65 and 70 of the Contract Act, 1872 would become applicable whereafter evidence was adduced by the parties but the State raised the objection that neither in the plaint nor in the notice under S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure was there any mention of the relief under S. 65 of the Contract Act, which, therefore, could not be granted. Held, merely because the State had adduced evidence in the Court and obtained adjournments therefor is not sufficient to estop the State from raising the plea which was purely legal: A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 128: 1971 Raj.L.W. 334 (D.B.).

Agreement between Administrator appointed under S. 260 of the J.&K. Municipal Act, 1951 after dissolution of a Municipal Council and third party—Agreement neither signed by Secretary nor bearing seal of the Municipality as required by S. 56 thereof—Agreement is unenforceable—Plea as to unenforceability of agreement being one of law could be raised even though not raised in the trial Court: 1979 Kash.L.J. 413.

Where both the parties had preferred objections to the report about the quantum of damages determined by the special referee appointed by their consent but the Court allowed the plaintiff's objections but dismissed the defendant's objections who preferred no appeal, held, in his appeal against the decree, the defendant was precluded from challenging the trial Court's order dismissing his objections: A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 119: (1988) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 136 (D.B.).

82. Miscellaneous.—Estoppel in cases of void transactions: 1965 B.L.J.R. 242: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 144.

Estoppel against public bodies: (1970) 2 S.C.J. 689.

Where the Madras University launched its programme of recognising "autonomous Colleges" from year to year basis, invited applications and one of the applicants, a College for women, was recommended by the University Inspection Committee for grant of such status but without any such promise or assurance by the University, held, the College could not invoke the rule of estoppel on the ground that it had altered its situation by prescribing its own syllabus when the University did not confer the "autonomous status" on the College under the University Grants Commission's direction; the College had altered its position without having any power to do so as the syllabus could be devised only by the statutory Board of Studies which had not even been constituted: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 32.

Where no promise or representation was held out by the respondent-company to the petitioner-firm to continue the supply of the lube products to it indefinitely and uninterruptedly and the supply was made on the basis of ad hoc arrangement or Indent to Indent or Invoice to Invoice basis or Product Indent-cum-Delivery Order and on cessation of supply by company as a result of change of policy, the aggrieved firm pleaded estoppel, held, as no legal relationship had been created between the firm and the company for supply of products in future, the promissory estoppel could not be invoked. In fact no right arose out of the dealings by the firm with the company and, therefore, the doctrine of promissory estoppel was wholly inapplicable: A.I.R. 1989 Del. 315 (D.B.).

Where the plaintiff-company purchased scrap copper from the defendant on the basis of sale price represented to them by it but thereafter the plaintiffs were asked to pay additional amount on the ground that the fact of revision of rates for relevant period by MMTC was not in the knowledge of the defendant at the time of fixing of price and it was alleged that according to the terms and conditions of the contract, the price payable by the plaintiffs was based on the prevalent MMTC rate of copper ingot/bar as on the date on which it was actually lifted by the plaintiffs, and thus, the plaintiffs were required to pay according to revised price, held, defendant could not take shelter under said condition of agreement to force upon the plaintiff a higher rate of sale price than the one represented by them earlier. Once the selling price had been declared, defendants bound themselves to the said declaration; even if there was a mistake, they were to blame themselves. They could not, for their omission, be allowed to put any burden on the plaintiffs, saying that there was mistake in quoting the sale price: (1991-2) 108 Mad.L.W. 147 (D.B.).

Where the petitioner took possession in execution of eviction order but the appellate authority ordered re-delivery of possession on deposit of certain amount with the petitioner and the respondent so deposited the amount, held, that would not estop the petitioner from challenging the order of re-delivery: 1978 M.P.L.J. 863: 1978 Jab.L.J. 645.

Where a tenant put in appearance on service of notice of the application for attachment before judgment sought time for filing of objections and the Court in his and his Counsel's presence fixed date for his written statement and for final hearing of the suit without ever complaining during the trial of the suit that not being aware of the date fixed in the suit he could not deposit the rent on that date but, in fact, on several dates he applied for time before ultimately filing his written statement, and subsequently, he contended that the summons of the suit not having been issued to him, he was denied the benefit of S. 20(4) of the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Act by depositing the requisite money on or before the first date of hearing, held, his conduct throughout the trial shows that he never felt the necessity of the service of summons; he never raised any objection or protest against non-service in the trial Court; having so forfeited his right to the summons, he could not be allowed to take shelter behind the stale plea of the summons not having been served on him: A.I.R. 1981 All. 400.

Where adjournment was granted on certain condition on the asking of a party, whether said party is entitled to challenge the condition imposed. See (1981) 1 M.P. W.N. 138.

The filing of an incompetent appeal on the mistaken advice of a lawyer and the withdrawal of the same do not prejudice the right to file a proper appeal and cannot be held to constitute such conduct on the part of an appellant as to deprive him of his right to file a valid appeal: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 786: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 75.

Where a single Judge on pronouncement of judgment allowed the defendant to pay the decretal amount in instalments and the defendant impugned only the order of instalments in the Letters Patent Appeal without annexing a certified copy of the decree which at admission was withdrawn by the defendant's Counsel, held, since it was not a valid appeal in the eyes of law, its withdrawal could not estop the defendant from preferring an appeal against the entire judgment and decree unless his right of appeal had been lost by limitation or otherwise; the withdrawal of appeal in the circumstances did not amount to estoppel or waiver: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 85 (S.C.).

Where the defendant sought impleadment of a third party under O. 1, R. 10(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure because the plaintiff in replication had denied the defendant's counter-claim based on the issuance of the credit note to a third party at the plaintiff's suggestion, and had suggested that it was for the defendant to seek impleadment of the third party as a co-defendant, held, since the claim against the third party had already become time-barred, the doctrine of estoppel could not be invoked against the plaintiff and the defendant's application was rightly disallowed in terms of the settled proposition of law; promissory estoppel cannot bind other person or saddle liability on him because of a third person's statement: A.I.R. 1995 All. 19.

Where plaintiffs filed an application for amendment of plaint and the lower Court adjudicating upon the merits of the amendment rejected the plea of amendment, held, the fact that the plaintiffs were parties to the process adopted by the lower Court and they placed evidence in support of their case would not estop them from assailing the validity of said order of lower Court: A.I.R. 1984 Mad. 19: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. 560: (1984) 2 M.L.J. 547.

Abatement of suit—Death of one of several defendants—Interest of deceased defendant not shown to be separable—Even if defendants assert that deceased was not necessary party, it is open to them to plead that on plaintiff's own case entire suit has abated. 1966 Cr.L.J. 1098 (Pat.).

Ex parte decree in favour of a party claiming sirdari rights over disputed property—Appellate and revisional consolidation authorities while negativing claim of the party would bear in mind that ex parte decree works as an estoppel against whom it has been passed: 1983 All.L.J. 462.

Where during the pendency of a revision against an order for setting aside ex parte decree, the parties went to trial for obtaining a contested decree, held, they must be deemed to have relinquished their right of maintaining the ex parte decree: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 57: (1984) 32 B.L.J.R. 50.

Demand on appellant for further process fee and filing of summonses for service of notice of appeal on respondents—Appellant submitting to order without claiming exemption under High Court Rules and allowing appeal to be dismissed for non-prosecution—Order for fresh Talbana held could not be attacked as erroneous: I.L.R. Where the suit is one on behalf of the community and the plaintiff does not claim any title or set up any personal right in him, no estoppel can be pleaded against him in his representative capacity by reason of any individual act he might have committed: 1959 Ker.L.J. 932.

Where the defendant not only failed to invoke the doctrine of estoppel based on a representation of his being a North Indian Brahman in recitals of an agreement but also that issue was raised, evidence was recorded and adverse finding was given, held, the defendant could not be allowed to plead estoppel against the plaintiff thereafter: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 268: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 14.

Where during the pendency of the tenant's appeal against a decree of eviction and recovery of rent one of the appellants expired and on his appeal having abated, the remaining appellant's application for setting aside the abatement and bringing on record the deceased's legal representatives was also dismissed, held, it was not open to the applicants thereafter to contend that one of the surviving appellants, as per their written statement, was the karta and as such represented the entire family of the appellants and there was, thus, no abatement, for the appellate Court for purposes of abatement was not concerned with the pleadings but it was concerned with the findings of the Court below which found the deceased to be a co-tenant. Though where a person who ex hypothesis has no title at all went into possession for a life-estate under a Will, he might be estopped from denying the remainder men's title; his son who enters into possession after his father's death without any title, his father having had nothing to pass to him cannot be affected by his father's estoppel. The mere fact that he would have succeeded as heir to his father if his father had left an heritable estate does make him a privy of his father for the purposes of the rule of estoppel: A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 172: 1932 All.L.J. 691: 59 I.A. 268: 56 Cal.L.J. 36: (1932) 34 Bom.L.R. 1299 (P.C.). See also 1932 All.L.J. 971: 63 M.L.J. 418 (P.C.).

1. Scope and applicability.—See also Note 47 under S. 115. Scope and principle of section. See I.L.R. 19 Mad. 200; I.L.R. 37 All. 557: 29 M.L.J. 335 (P.C.); I.L.R. 44 Cal. 771; 35 Cal.L.J. 146: A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 237; 10 O.W.N. 48: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 129; A.I.R. 1958 All. 54.

S. 116 of the Evidence Act lays down that no tenant of immovable property (or person claiming through him) shall during the continuance of the tenancy be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant had at the beginning of the tenancy, a title to such immovable property: (1972) 74 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 14: (1972) 8 Del.L.T. 36.

Under S. 116, a tenant of immovable property cannot during the continuance of his tenancy deny his landlord's title to the property at the commencement of the tenancy: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 60.

S. 116 does not furnish a ground for eviction. It merely enumerates the principle of estoppel which is merely an extension of the principle that no person is allowed to approbate and reprobate at the same time. The principle laid down in this section is that having become a tenant and holding on to the property on the basis of the landlord's title, the tenant is not entitled to repudiate or dispute the title of the landlord. This does not mean that if he does so by way of a defence in a suit falling within the purview of the Rent Act, there should be a decree forthwith for eviction. This rule of estoppel only means that a defence of such nature ought to be shut out and rejected by the Court: A.I.R. 1992 Bom. 93: (1991) 93 Bom.L.R. 175: 1991 Mah.L.J. 761.

The provisions of S. 116 are in two parts and operate against all persons who enter upon the property as tenants or as licensees of the persons in possession thereof. The later part of that section says that the person who enters upon any immovable property by the licence of the person in possession thereof, is not to be permitted to deny that such person had a title to such possession at the time when such licence was given. A person while in possession should on considerations of policy and principle be always estopped from denying the title of the person who let him into that possession: A.I.R. 1973 Bom. 168: 1973 Mah.L.J. 233.

A denial of the landlord's title to the demised property by the tenant, in order to attract S. 116, must be in clear and unmistakable terms. [A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 1, Rel. on]: (1979) 1 Ren.C.R. 626: (1979) 2 Ren.C.J. 30: (1979) 2 Ren.L.R. 12 (Raj.).

Provisions of the section do not deal with all kinds of estoppel or occasions of estoppel which may arise between landlord and tenant—Various categories of persons mentioned in the section are precluded from denying that the lessor had a title at the date of the lease and there is no exception even in respect of a case where the lease itself discloses defect of title: 33 Cut.L.T. 72: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 887: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 92.

S. 116 deals with one cardinal and simple estoppel between landlord and tenant and between licensor and licensee, a distinction which corresponds to that between the parties to an action for rent and the parties to an action for use and occupation. The section postulates that there is a tenancy still continuing, that it had its beginning at a given date from a given landlord. It provides that neither a tenant nor any one claiming through a tenant shall be heard to deny that particular landlord had at that date a title to the property. In the ordinary case of a lease intended as a present demise, the section applies against the lessee, any assignee of the term and any sub-lessee or licensee. What all such persons are precluded from denying is that the lessor had a title at the date of the lease and there is no exception even for the case where the lease itself discloses the defect or title. The principle does not apply to disentitle a tenant to dispute the derivative title of one who claims to have since became entitled to the reversion, though in such cases there may be other grounds of estoppel, e.g., by attornment, acceptance of rent, etc. In this sense it is true that the principle only applies to the landlord who "let the tenant in" as distinct from any other person claiming to be reversioner. Nor does the principle apply to prevent a tenant from pleading that the title of the original lessor has since come to an end. There is in English case-law some authority for the view that a tenant is only estopped from denying his landlord's title if at the time when he took his lease he was not already in possession of the land. But in S. 116 the Indian Legislature has formulated no such condition: 64 I.A. 311: I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 1: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 251: (1937) 2 M.L.J. 236 (P.C.), followed in A.I.R. 1957 Assam 188.

Ss. 115 and 116 are not exhaustive; there may be rules of estoppel applicable in India other than those contained in these sections; a man may be estopped not only from giving a particular evidence under the Act but also from doing any act or relying upon any particular argument or contention which the rules of justice, equity and good conscience prevent him from using as against his opponent. [A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 96, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 364: 1974 B.L.J.R. 388 (D.B.).

S. 116 is not exhaustive and does not contain the whole law of estoppel governing a landlord and a tenant: A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 77: I.L.R. 22 Pat. 513; (1927-28) 32 Cal.W.N. 867: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 546; A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 234. The section in terms applies only to cases where the tenancy continues. A similar estoppel exists in the case of a tenant holding over and the tenant cannot deny his landlord's title while he continues in possession. He must either give up possession or must have been evicted by title paramount: I.L.R. 22 Pat. 513: A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 77. See also (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 97.

The rule of estoppel between landlord and tenant is also extended under S. 116, in terms to licensee and, for the matter of that, to a person in permissive occupation of immovable property. Where in a suit, filed by the plaintiff seeking the recovery of suit land on which the defendant had a cowshed, the fact of defendant being in permissive occupation of that land was established in the favour of plaintiff, held, the defendant was estopped from denying the title of the plaintiff in view of the above finding: A.I.R. 1971 Assam 143 (D.B.).

S. 116 applies to the cases where the tenancy is either admitted or is not in controversy. This does not mean that a defendant who is alleged to be a tenant cannot deny that he is in fact not a tenant: 1959 Jab.L.J. 591: 1960 M.P.C. 96: 1961 M.P.L.J. 388.

The provisions regarding estoppel contained in Ss. 115 to 117 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 are a mere shadow of what the modern principles of promissory estoppel have come to be. The greatest development in this area is that an independent action can now be found on the principle of promissory estoppel and it is no longer a principle available only as a shield. It can be used as weapon of offence. Gradually, the modern doctrine of promissory estoppel has developed to an extent that it is no longer necessary that the party seeking to enforce the said principle must have suffered a detriment. It is enough if the promisee has altered his position on the faith of the representation: A.I.R. 1992 Del. 28 (D.B.).

S. 116 does not require that the landlord, pleading estoppel, should show that the tenant, against whom estoppel is set up, was let into possession of the disputed property by him (the landlord). The section applies irrespective of the fact that tenant at the time of creation of the tenancy was or was not in possession of the demised property: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 128; A.I.R. 1957 Assam 188.

Since the doctrine of tenant's estoppel embodied in S. 116 estops even a person already in possession as a tenant under one landlord from denying the title of his subsequent landlord once he was acknowledged by the tenant as his landlord by attornment or conduct, held, it is not incumbent on the landlord seeking the tenant's eviction under S. 23-A(b) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961 to plead in the eviction petition of his being owner of the accommodation and to establish the same by evidence aliunde: (1995-1) 115 Mad.L.W. 178 (S.C.).

There is no warrant for holding that the estoppel under S. 116 only arises in favour of landlord who puts the tenant into possession. It is wide enough to cover any case of a grantee who occupies and enjoys under a grant disputing the grantor's title: I.L.R. (1945) Bom. 343: (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 209: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 399.

Principle of estoppel embodied in S. 116 applies also to cases under the House Rent Control Acts. Thus, in those cases also the tenant must first vacate the premises and then only they can question the title of the landlord and not when continuing in the house. [A.I.R. 1952 Ori. 95, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 101 (D.B.).

It is well settled that, in a suit for ejectment and arrears of rent, the basis of the claim is the contract of tenancy. That being so, when, the suit is between the original parties to that contract and there has been no transfer of title of the lessor, the question of title of the landlord is outside the scope of the suit, though evidence about title of the lessor is a relevant fact for proof or disproof of the disputed contract of tenancy: A.I.R. 1971 Madh. Pra. 172: 1971 M.P.L.J. 438 (D.B.).

It cannot be said that even though the relationship of landlord and tenant is proved, it is still open to the tenant-defendant to raise the question of title and insist on the suit being converted into a title suit as distinguished from a suit by a landlord against his tenant. [A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 415 (F.B.) and (1903) I.L.R. 25 All. 498 (F.B.), Disting.]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 195.

S. 116 bars a tenant to question the title of his landlord on the ground that at the time when he granted the lease to him the landlord had no title in him: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 595.

The section embodies the principle of estoppel arising from the contract of tenancy It is based upon a healthy and salutary principle of law and justice that a tenant who could not have got possession but for his contract of tenancy admitting the right of the landlord, should not be allowed to launch his landlord in inequitable situation taking undue advantage of the possession that he got and any probable defect in the title of his landlord. Of course, he can deny his title after he gives up the possession having thus restored status quo ante. All that is necessary for the application of the above principle is that there was a contract of tenancy and that the tenant took possession of the land under the title or with the permission of the landlord or the person then in possession. Possession and permission being established estoppel would bind the tenant during the continuance of the tenancy and until he surrenders his possession. Evidently both the landlord and the persons in possession at the time of the contract are within the protection of the provision. A person in possession within the meaning of the section need not to be a full owner; he may be a mortgagee, lessee or any other person having right to or is in actual possession. However defective the title of such a person or even the landlord may be at the time of the creation of the tenancy, the person inducted under the term of the contract cannot be permitted to rely on that defect to his advantage or to perpetuate his possession or to act in detriment to the landlord's right: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 92: 1959 An.W.R. 148.

During the continuance of the tenancy, a tenant will not be permitted to deny the title of the landlord at the beginning of the tenancy. Further, during the continuance of the tenancy, the tenant cannot acquire by prescription a permanent right of occupancy in derogation of the landlord's title by mere assertion of such a right to the knowledge of the landlord: (1966) 1 S.C.W.R. 309: (1966) 1 S.C.A. 323: 1966 S.C.D. 903: (1966) 2 An.L.T. 291: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 629. See also (1979) 2 Ren.C.J. 310: (1979) 2 Ren.C.R. 423 (Raj.).

A tenant is estopped under S. 116, Evidence Act from challenging the landlord's title to demised property during the currency of lease. A tenant may, however, question derivative title of successor of the landlord ordinarily but when the title in the demised property devolves on a person by virtue of a lawful decree against the landlord, such derivation of title cannot be questioned by the lessee so long as that decree stands as a valid decree: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 102 (D.B.).

It is true that once a valid and subsisting lease is established between the parties, the lessee may be bound by the principle of estoppel and may be debarred from disputing the question of title of the lessor, but that does not prevent the alleged lessee to deny the lease and to deny his own status as a lessee. He is bound by the rule of estoppel only when he acts as a lessee and in that capacity, tries to refuse the title of his own lessor. That well-established principle of estoppel as between lessor and lessee as enacted in S. 116 of the Evidence Act does not prevent any defendant to make out the case that he has never been a lessee, and the lease deed purporting to make him a lessee was never a valid document, and in that behalf, to plead such circumstances as may invalidate the lease or otherwise make it null and void: 12 B.R. 389: 223 I.C. 303: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 45.

To invoke S. 116, a landlord need not have inducted his tenant into actual possession by execution of the lease deed; the section would be attracted even if the tenant was already in possession; however, such a tenant can avoid the lease on the ground of fraud, coercion, etc. without actually surrendering possession of the land; the rule of approbation and reprobation is not attracted: A.I.R. 1960 J.&K. 132.

Once it is held, that the defendant was allowed by the plaintiff to continue in possession of a portion of the suit house under his occupation as tenant, the defendant is then estopped from challenging the title of the plaintiff in a suit for possession as long as the defendant continued to be in possession of the house: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 207: 1961 Jab.L.J. 1292; A.I.R. 1978 Pat. 82: 1978 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 15: 1978 Pat.L.J.R. 226 (D.B.); (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 1197.

Where the defendant had admitted before the municipal authorities that he was a tenant and the trust was the owner of the property, held, in a suit for possession, he was estopped from denying title of the trust by operation of S. 116: (1994) 3 Cur.Civ.Cas. 639 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where the tenants who were admittedly inducted on to the plot by and had accepted the plaintiff's paramount title and executed a kirayanama in his favour and paid rent to him, held, the tenants were estopped from defeating the landlord's title on the ground that his title had since after commencement of the tenancy been terminated by the operation of law under Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950, and the entire proprietary interest had vested in the State of Bihar: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 116: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 250: 1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 153 (D.B.).

Tenant cannot deny title of the landlord at the beginning of tenancy and he cannot acquire ownership by adverse possession merely because of entries in record-of-rights: 1983 Punj.L.J. 247.

Even a trespasser can create a tenancy in favour of another person; thus, if a trespasser inducts a genuine person as a tenant, the relationship between the two would be of "landlord" and "tenant", by virtue of S. 116, the tenant would be estopped from denying the landlord's title at the commencement of the tenancy even though the landlord is none other than a rank trespasser; against the real owner, the "landlord" will have no title to the land; he will have no defence in a suit for possession by the owner but vis-a-vis his own tenant, S. 116 confers upon the trespasser a complete title. His own tenant cannot question his title even after the formal termination of his tenancy unless and until he has surrendered possession to the "landlord": A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 142: (1987) 1 Bom.C.R. 547.

The bar of estoppel under the section continues until the tenant actually goes out of occupation by handing over possession. The protection given to the landlord does not come to an end by reason of his having given a registered notice to quit: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 92: (1959) 1 An.W.R. 148.

S. 116 presupposes that the person affected by the estoppel is a tenant. Estoppel under the section arises therefore only when or after the tenancy is admitted or proved: I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 340: A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 265. See also 1944 All.L.J. (Supp.) 15; 1942 Nag.L.J. 136.

The tenant is precluded from filing a suit for a declaration of his title if a suit is filed against him for ejectment during the continuance of the tenancy and is decreed against him: A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 162. If a tenant has been let into possession by a landlord he cannot deny and set up adverse title: (1915-16) 20 Cal.W.N. 1335; I.L.R. 34 Bom. 329; I.L.R. 28 Mad. 526; I.L.R. 51 Bom. 43: A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 129; 103 I.C. 421: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 626.

If a tenant desires to challenge the title of the landlord, he must quit the land: A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 162.

A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. Even if the tenant was already in possession and was not let into possession by the landlord the estoppel under S. 116 applies: 1961 M.P.C. 136: 1961 Jab.L.J. 230.

The consensus of judicial opinion both in India and in England is that before surrendering or solemnly renouncing possession the tenant shall not be permitted to set up a title in a third person or jus tertii; it has been repeatedly held that possession must be surrendered before any defect in the lessor's title is allowed to be proved. This rule is, however, subject to exceptions: (i) where a plaintiff or a defendant does not seek either to evict or to defend his title as a landlord on the strength of a tenancy but on the strength of his title and the erstwhile tenant having acquired an indefeasible right in himself is opposing the stand on the strength of a title in himself, say, as a vendee; (ii) where a tenant has been evicted by the holder of a paramount title; (iii) where under a threat or compulsion of being evicted by the true owner or holder of better title, the tenant attorns to such third person with notice to his original lessor. In either of these cases, the tenant need not give up his possession before challenging the original lessor's title; it would be deemed to have been surrendered and a new title created. [A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 96, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 364: 1974 B.L.J.R. 338 (D.B.).

Tenant can set up his own title against third person though not against landlord: I.L.R. 52 All. 464: A.I.R. 1930 All. 299.

Where admittedly the lease deed was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant and the latter was paying rent to the former and he was accepting it, held, in a suit for eviction by the plaintiff, the defendant could not challenge his title: A.I.R. 1994 Del. 255; (1991) 2 M.L.J. 134; (1990) 2 M.L.J. 140: (1990-2) 106 Mad.L.W. 332: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 229; A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 189: (1975-76) 80 Cal.W.N. 193; 1975 B.L.J.R. 227: 1975 B.B.C.J. 90 .

Suit for rent and eviction—Relationship of landlord and tenant admitted by defendant—He cannot dispute landlord's title—Court would be justified in declining to decide question of title raised by defendant: A.I.R. 1955 Him. Pra. 44.

A tenant cannot be permitted to show that in granting him the lease, the landlord acted as agent of another person who was the real owner, and that the liability to pay rent to the lessor cannot be discharged by payment to that alleged owner: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 607: (1941) 1 M.L.J. 554.

Once a complete relationship of landlord and tenant is established, the rule of estoppel comes into operation and prevents the tenant from denying the authority and title which he admitted to rest in the landlord who inducted him into possession of the land: 73 Cal.L.J. 281: A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 408. See also 46 Mys.H.C.R. 547; 49 Mys.H.C.R. 287.

Section is applicable to the case of immovable property only: I.L.R. 4 Rang. 503: A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 94.

Tenant when may dispute tenancy under a leased deed. See (1978) 1 M.P.W.N. 243.

S. 116, Evidence Act, estops a tenant from disputing the title of the landlord at the date of lease but it presupposes that the person affected by the estoppel is a tenant. Where the defendant does not accept the position that he was a tenant and to neutralise the effect of the admission made by him in the lease, he relies on the recitals of another document of sale of the same date and he contends that the lease does not embody the whole of the agreement between parties and the lease was only a part of an agreement, the nature of which can be discovered only by the construction of the sale deed, the section will not come into play: A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 18.

A tenant is only estopped from denying the subsistence and validity of an estate in the landlord sufficient to warrant the demise; he is not further estopped, as, for example, from denying the landlord's right to alienate the property: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 34.

Landlord and tenant—Denial of title—Estoppel: (1970) 2 M.L.J. 562.

It is not only an owner but also any other person having a transferable interest in the property, who is competent to grant a licence. The tenancy rights as such are transferable though if they are transferred without landlord's consent in writing, the tenant may incur a liability under the relevant Rent Control Acts; but the person to whom the licence is granted cannot deny the tenant's right to grant it. [1969 Cur.L.J. 589 (Punj.), Rel. on]; it is not open to the licensee to contend that the grantor, being a statutory tenant, was not competent to grant the licence. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 414, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1982 P.&H. 542.

When the plaintiff files the suit expressly proceeding on the basis that the defendant is a tenant under him and wants the relief of possession alleging that the tenancy has been validly determined and pays the Court-fee on that basis, the plaintiff could get the relief of possession only if he proves the tenancy. If on a plea by the defendant a question of title arises, it can be gone into only for the purpose of determining as to whether the relationship of tenancy subsisted between the plaintiff and the defendant. If it is to be found that the relationship of tenancy between the plaintiff and the defendant does not subsist, the plaintiff must fail in the suit as instituted by him and the suit cannot be converted into a suit for declaration of title and for recovery of possession on the basis of the title. [(1914) 1 Mad.L.W. 641; (1930) I.L.R. 67 Cal. 349, Foll.]: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 502.

Person in possession of property in fiduciary capacity—Is estopped from questioning title of person from whom he got possession: A.I.R. 1968 Madh. Pra. 81.

Once it is found by Courts of fact that the defendant had been inducted into the disputed house as a tenant by the plaintiff represented by marfatdars under S. 116 of the Evidence Act, the defendant-tenant would be estopped and not entitled to challenge the plaintiff's status of landlord: (1970) 1 Cut.W.R. 454.

Where in an eviction suit, the defendant pleaded that as he was heavily indebted to several creditors, a sale deed and a rent note were executed in collusion with the plaintiff to defraud the creditors, held, in the instant case, it was open to the tenant to prove that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not subsist between him and the plaintiff at any time, in view of the pleadings of the defendant that the said documents were executed to defraud the creditors of the latter, the defendant was not estopped from leading evidence in that respect. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 370, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 56: 1972 W.L.N. 451: 1972 Raj.L.W. 469.

Tenant is not estopped from denying the title of his landlord when his prior admission of title in favour of his landlord is found to have been obtained by misrepresentation by the landlord: 1962 Nag. L.J. (Notes) 47.

Tenant denying the title of landlord—Permissible limits—If denial is in permissible limits, estoppel cannot be applied to tenant—Penalty of forfeiture when applies: A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 32.

Lessors also are estopped from denying validity of lease: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 882: 94 I.C. 661. Verbal lease for more than one year—Tenants in possession—Liability for rent—Invalidity of lease—Effect of: 148 I.C. 684: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 369.

A tenant is not estopped merely because, by the tenancy he acknowledges the title of his landlord. He may always explain and thereby render inconclusive acts done through mistake or misapprehension. It is permissible to a tenant to deny his lessor's title if it is shown that he executed the lease in ignorance: 177 I.C. 599: A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 227. See 1972 M.P.L.J. 164.

A tenant who has executed a lease but had not been let into possession by the lessor is estopped from denying the lessor's title, except on proof of ignorance of the lessor's title, or fraud, misrepresentation or any matter which rendered the contract voidable: A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 16 (2).

Where a person in possession of land executes a kabuliyat, he is bound by the kabuliyat and estopped from challenging the title of his landlord unless he can prove fraud, misrepresentation, coercion or mistake. [1935 O.W.N. 449, Foll.]: 1937 O.W.N. 1030: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 505.

Defendant executing kabuliyat in favour of plaintiff—Defendant is estopped under S. 116 from challenging that plaintiff is his landholder entitled to receive rent from him: 1952 R.D. (B.R.) 372: 1952 All.L.J. (Rev.) 329.

Where the tenant had accepted relationship of landlord and tenant in the original written statement, held, he cannot be allowed to amend the written statement to contend that no such relationship existed between them: 1981 B.B.C.J. 472.

If the tenant takes possession of the premises as such, he is bound to return possession to his landlord and cannot be allowed to set up a title in himself or in a third person. Thus, where the tenant in execution of the decree for ejectment obtained against him by the landlord, contended that the order of ejectment was not executable as allotment of the suit property in favour of the landlord was cancelled by an order of Chief Settlement Commissioner, held, once the tenant took the premises on rent from landlord, then clearly there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and by virtue of S. 116, the tenant was estopped from disputing the ownership of his landlord: (1993-2) 104 Punj.L.R. 483.

Where the petitioner, who had taken land on lease from the Gram Panchayat, challenged the title of the Gram Panchayat claiming its ownership in himself on the ground that the land in question was part of the area reserved by Consolidation Authorities for income of Gram Panchayat without awarding compensation to the proprietors of the village on whose holdings cut was imposed for providing that area and thus, the Panchayat was not entitled to lease it out, held, as the petitioner got into possession of the land, as a successful bidder, in the auction for lease, he could not turn round to challenge the title of the Gram Panchayat in regard to its right to possess the land and could not stop it from re-auctioning the land in question: 1987 Punj.L.J. 614 (D.B.).

If a kanomdar attempts to resist a suit for redemption on the ground that his landlord has lost his title by reason of a Court sale of his interest in the property, it is not enough for the kanomdar, who is in the position of a lessee and a mortgagee to show that a third party had become the purchaser of the plaintiff's interest in the property. He must go further and prove that as the result of his purchase, there was an eviction of him by title paramount or any equivalent of some such eviction and that he attorned to the holder of the title paramount. If he does not prove these facts he still continues under the original tenancy and the bar imposed by S. 116, Evidence Act, operates during the continuance of the tenancy which is not determined automatically by the Court sale. He would be estopped under S. 116, until there is eviction by superior title or until he surrenders possession: (1945) 58 Mad.L.W. 167 (1): (1945) 1 M.L.J. 269.

Where a third person, inducted in a flat on the basis of leave and licence by a member of the co-operative society in breach of the bye-laws, was sued by the society for recovery of possession and he assailed the eviction decree obtained by the society on the ground that the member was a tenant under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1973, and such decree passed by the civil Court was without jurisdiction, held, the member was not a tenant under the society and as such the Rent Controller had no jurisdiction to try the suit; the licensee was estopped from denying the title of the member-his licensor; the decree was not without jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1980 Bom. 374: 1980 Mah.L.J. 539: 1980 Bom.C.R. 493 (D.B.).

There is a presumption in law that the tenant continues to hold over till by some tangible act he asserts his title and that is permissible only when he surrenders his right as a tenant and alleges hostile title to the knowledge of the lessor. Where the plaintiff-tenant itself took the impugned property on lease from the Municipal Committee and continued to pay rent to it and never surrendered the possession to the lessor-Municipal Committee but, subsequently, asserted its title as an owner, held, the plaintiff-tenant could not be allowed to urge that the Municipal Committee was not the owner of the suit-property, specially when in an earlier litigation the Municipal Committee took a positive stand that it was the owner and its claim was not disputed and was not put in issue by the plaintiff-tenant: (1990) 2 Rev.L.R. 352.

In view of S. 116, the tenant cannot deny right of a person to be a landlord with whose consent he had entered into the premises. Thus, where the landlord sought ejectment of the tenant on the ground of non-payment of rent and the tenant denied the relationship of landlord and tenant and alleged that rent note, execution of which was proved, was void as it had been tampered with, held, the landlord might not be able to enforce his rights under the rent note, but the same was certainly admissible to show the nature of tenant's possession and it showed, that the respondents had entered into possession of the demised premises as tenants. Their possession of the demised premises as tenants continued to be so unless and until they surrendered the possession to the landlord, which had not been done yet. So the tenants, once they accepted their status as such, were estopped from denying the same: (1990-1) 97 Punj.L.R. 206.

The plaintiffs, who were the tenants of a land agreed with defendant 3 to buy the lands and obtained an extension of time to pay the price and also applied to him to continue them as tenants of the land. Defendant 3 acted in all this as an agent of the heirs of the landlord and all the negotiations took place before the defendants 1 to 5 purchased the land. Held, that the acts of the plaintiffs could not amount to an admission of the title of the defendants 1 to 5 and neither did they prove the presence of the ingredients necessary to bring S. 115 into play and, therefore, there could be no waiver or estoppel: A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 25.

Mere deposit of rent under S. 17(1) of the W.B. Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 cannot estop the tenant from raising a dispute that there is no relationship of tenant and landlord. [(1960-61) 65 Cal.W.N. 149 and I.L.R. (1967) Cal. 449, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Cal. 446: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 397.

Irrespective of the operation of S. 116 of the Evidence Act which is a branch of adjective law, the landlord, in order to get a decree for eviction on the ground mentioned in S. 13(1) (ff) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956, has to prove that he is the owner of the suit premises. [(1972-73) 77 Cal.W.N. 817, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1984 Cal. 392: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 367.

Bar under S. 116 is not applicable to the question of bona fide need in a suit for eviction on that ground: (1994) 2 S.C.C. (Supp.) 638.

Where a lessee encroaches upon the lessor's land adjoining the leasehold land, held, the lessee is estopped from denying the lessor's title on the encroached land; S. 116 is attracted: 1982 All.L.J. 245.

Where in a suit for ejectment by the landlord, the claim for possession is in substance founded on an allegation of tenancy and the refusal of the tenant to vacate after the determination of the tenancy and not on the deed of sale since, held, the defendant cannot raise a question of title; reference by the plaintiff to his ownership under a deed of sale is wholly unnecessary: 1955 Nag. L.J. 314: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 234.

A person admitting in the cross-objections and also admitting before Municipal Authorities under a document, to be a tenant, held, is estopped from claiming to be owner of the property against the lessor-trust even if he had a registered sale deed which had been validly executed by the alleged Managing Trustee in his favour: 1994 (Supp.) 3 S.C.C. 746; 1981 B.L.J.R. 653: 1981 B.L.J. 584: 1981 B.B.C.J. 373.

2. "During continuance of tenancy"—Meaning of.—The expression "during the continuance of the tenancy" in S. 116, Evidence Act, means "during the continuance of the possession" that was received by or under the tenancy in question. Where the tenancy has long ago ceased to exist and the tenant does not continue in possession on the strength or in pursuance of the tenancy, he is not debarred from raising the question of competence and validity of the title of the lessor. The rule of estoppel contained in S. 116 will not apply in such a case: A.I.R 1952 Ori. 95.

3. "Landlord"—Meaning of.—In law even assuming that a third party has title to any extent in the suit property, where the contract is one entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant and actual possession was given by the plaintiff to the defendant in his own right; the plaintiff and not the third party must be regarded as the landlord of the defendant for the purpose of S. 116. [I.L.R. 31 Mad. 461 and A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 48 (1): 26 M.L.J. 597, Dist.; (1941) 1 M.L.J. 554: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 607, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 92: (1959) 1 An.W.R. 148.

The granting of receipts in the ordinary course of business by a landlord to his tenant is not an admission of such a formal and deliberate character as to prevent the former from denying the relationship of tenancy: L.R. 4 All. 174 (Rev.).

Where before conveyance deed could be granted in favour of an allottee of evacuee/ rehabilitation property, the allottee gave vacant possession of the property in dispute to a tenant, held, the relationship of landlord and tenant came into being between the parties and the tenant was estopped from disputing the title of the landlord: A.I.R. 1982 P.&H. 251: (1982) 84 Punj.L.R. 118.

4. Benamidar as landlord.—If a tenant is inducted on a land by a person, the tenant cannot question the title of that person who has so inducted him on the land. The tenant is, thus, estopped from raising the question that person letting him into possession is merely a benamidar: 63 I.C. 763: (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 460: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 93. See also I.L.R. 40 Mad. 561; I.L.R. 24 Cal. 711; 26 M.L.J. 587: I.L.R. 58 Cal. 1371: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 167; (1934) 36 Bom.L.R. 1074: A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 144.

A alleged that B as the benamidar of C who was the tenant of the disputed premises under the superior landlord D was A's ostensible landlord and A was really a tenant under C. Held, that the bar of estoppel under S. 116 would apply against A only if B was A's landlord and inducting landlord and estoppel under S. 116 could not be extended beyond that: (1959-60) 64 Cal.W.N. 199.

5. "At the beginning of tenancy"—Meaning of.—See 15 Pat.L.T. 519: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 555. See also 1939 All.L.J. 913: A.I.R. 1939 All. 670.

The words "at the beginning of tenancy" in S. 116, Evidence Act do not give a ground for the contention that when a person already in possession of land, becomes tenant to another, there is no estoppel against his denying his landlords' title. It is, therefore, too much to contend that a tenant in possession, if he has in fact attorned to a landlord, would still be entitled to challenge his derivative title, because at the beginning of the tenancy he was not let into occupation by the landlord in question. The beginning of the tenancy in such a case would refer to the beginning of the new tenancy between the tenant and the landlord by virtue of the attornment, and the tenant's occupation of the land thence forward would be referable to that attornment: A.I.R. 1957 Assam 188.

6. "Immovable property"—What is.—A "coal land" possesses all the essential attributes of immovable property and, therefore, mining leases would not be outside the normal concept of a lease and would come well within the Transfer of Property Act and, accordingly a lessee of a mining lease becomes the tenant of the landlord and the first part of S. 116 would be attracted. Even assuming that the case would not come under the first part of S. 116, the case would attract the second part of the section if it is found that the lessee was put in possession of the land by the landlord. The position would undoubtedly be different if the lessee succeeds in showing that there has been eviction by title paramount or something equivalent to it or even if there has been really any effective breach on landlord's part of his covenant of quiet enjoyment so as to disentitle him (the landlord) to raise the plea of estoppel: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 128.

7. No estoppel if possession is under illegal or void contract.—The rule of estoppel enunciated in S. 116 is subject to the general proposition that it will not avail against any statute. Therefore, if the estoppel pleaded can be proved to contravene the law, e.g., the Law of Contracts, the plea of estoppel will not avail. And it will be open to the tenant to avoid the contract of tenancy if it is subject to any of the infirmities enumerated in Ss. 13 to 20 of the Contract Act. So also, the tenant can urge the provisions of S. 11 of J.&K. Common Lands Regulation Act as a bar to the title of landlord: A.I.R. 1960 J.&K. 132.

In order to invoke the principle of estoppel embodied in S. 116, the real question to be decided is not whether the tenant was let into possession by the landlord but whether a valid tenancy has arisen. The tenant may show that no valid tenancy has been created between the landlord and himself because the lease was executed under a mistake or in consequence of a fraud, misrepresentation or coercion practised on him by the landlord. But in the absence of any such circumstance as would avoid a contract, the execution of a lease or a verbal agreement to hold as a tenant would constitute a valid tenancy and bring in the estoppel: I.L.R. (1953) Hyd. 288: A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 241.

Where lease was executed through ignorance or fraud, there is no estoppel: 91 I.C. 669: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 720.

Where a lessor sued the lessee on a lease which was void under S. 156 of the U.P. Zamindari Abolition Act, 1951, held, the rule of estoppel was not attracted; the lessee was well within his right to assail the lessor's title: 1981 All.L.J. 839.

8. Estoppel where title is lost subsequent to commencement of tenancy.—The estoppel contemplated by S. 116 is confined to the time when the tenancy commenced, a tenant can always plead that the landlord who had originally title to the property had lost such title by any act of his or by operation of any law: A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 148.

S. 116 only precludes a tenant from denying his landlord's title at the time of the creation of the tenancy, but does not debar the tenant from pleading that subsequent to the creation of the tenancy, the landlord's title has been lost or defeated. It does not prevent the tenant from pleading that the title of the landlord has terminated or come to an end by act of parties or by operation of law: A.I.R. 1950 Mys. 9; 1939 All.L.J. 913: A.I.R. 1939 All. 670.

The words "during the continuance of tenancy" and the words "at the beginning of the tenancy" in S. 116 make it clear that estoppel operates only during the continuance of the tenancy and is confined to the landlord's title at the beginning of the tenancy. The section does not prevent a tenant from setting up an adverse title at some subsequent date: A.I.R. 1950 Ajmer 53.

S. 116 only precludes a tenant from denying his landlord's title at the beginning of the tenancy and not at any subsequent point of time. Where on account of the happening of subsequent events, the landlord comes to be deprived of his title, it will be open to the tenant to plead the subsequent loss of title on the part of the landlord, and S. 116 does not bar such a plea: A.I.R. 1960 J.&.K. 132; (1984) 1 Cal.L.J. 393.

The estoppel contemplated by S. 116 is restricted by the denial of title at the commencement of the tenancy and by implication it follows that a tenant is not estopped from contending that the title of the lessor had since come to an end: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1656: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 694: (1987) 4 S.C.C. 319; (1984) 2 Cal.H.N. 170.

Though S. 116 absolutely forbids a tenant from denying his landlord's title to the immovable property at the commencement of the tenancy but there is also a countervailing doctrine evolved by law to protect the tenant from the duel liability to pay rent to the real title holder as well as to the person who granted him the lease; in such a circumstance, he can show, though strictly speaking not under S. 116, that by subsequent development the lessor's title stood terminated and vested in the holder of the paramount title; however, the tenant could not raise such a plea where the loss of the lessor's title had occurred by a decree negativing the lessor's right as a trustee over the immovable property passed prior to the creation of the lease: (1988) 1 An.W.R. 47.

It is well settled that the word "at the beginning of tenancy" in S. 116 of the Evidence Act do not prohibit the tenant from raising a contention that subsequent to the date of the tenancy, the landlord has lost his title to the property. Thus, where the Kuthakapattom grant in respect of the lands was cancelled subsequent to the sub-lease, held, in such a case the tenant was entitled to put forward the contention that the landlord had lost his title to the property subsequent to the date of the lease by reason of the cancellation of the Kuthakapattom grant by the Government: (1974) 1 Ker.L.J. 13 (D.B.).

Estoppel contemplated by S. 116 is restricted to the denial to title of the landlord at the commencement of the tenancy and by implication it follows that a tenant is not estopped from contending that the landlord had no title before the tenancy commenced or the title of the landlord has since come to an end. Found on facts, the tenant's averments did not amount to denial of the landlord's title: (1979) 1 Ren.C.R. 626: (1979) 2 Ren.C.J. 30: (1979) 2 Ren.L.R. 12 (Raj.).

The estoppel contemplated by S. 116 of the Evidence Act is restricted to the denial of title at the commencement of the tenancy and by implication, it follows that a tenant is not estopped from contending that the landlord had no title before the tenancy commenced or that the title of the lessor has since come to an end. Where the tenant did not deny the Inamdar's title at the grant of the lease but contended that his title stood extinguished by the subsequently enacted Madras Minor Inams (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1963 and a notification thereunder, held, the tenant was not estopped from so denying the landlord's title without first restoring possession to the Inamdar; S. 116 is not attracted: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 396: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 716.

S. 116 prohibits a tenant from challenging the validity of the landlord's title at the beginning of the tenancy. In other words, the estoppel in S. 116 refers to the title at the beginning of the tenancy. Where a permanent lease granted to the tenant by a mutwali of the Bihar Suba Sunni Majlish-e-Wakf was declared by competent Courts that the grant was void, held, S. 116 was not attracted; the tenant could certainly challenge the title of the mutwali at the time of the commencement of the tenancy; S. 115 places no bar on the tenant: A.I.R. 1977 Pat. 247.

Claim for possession and rent—Tenant is not estopped from pleading subsequent loss of title by lessor and his consequent loss of right to the reliefs. See A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 574.

S. 116 only estops a tenant from pleading that at the time of leasing the land, his lessor had no title; if the lessor loses possession and the tenant becomes liable to another for the rent, he is not estopped from disputing his lessor's claim: 1936 R.D 384. See also 186 I.C. 274; 1940 All.W.R. (B.R.) 171.

Neither S. 116 of the Evidence Act nor any analogous principle of estoppel stands in the way of the tenant to take up the plea that subsequent to the commencement of the tenancy, there has been extinction of the title of the landlord. Where the title of the plaintiff has been extinguished by resumption on part of Government subsequent to the commencement of the tenancy, the result is that the plaintiff has no title to disputed property, nor is the defendant debarred by principle of estoppel in questioning the existence of title. Therefore, the plaintiff's suit either for eviction or for realisation of rent must fail. It is not necessary that the tenant must surrender possession before resorting to the plea of extinction of title subsequent to the commencement of the tenancy: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 580.

S. 116 prohibits the tenant of immovable property from denying the title of his landlord to such immovable property at the beginning of the tenancy. That section imposes no bar on a tenant where he seeks to question the title of his landlord on the ground that after the tenancy had begun, it had come to an end on account of certain events which had happened subsequent to the establishment of the tenancy. It must follow as a corollary that where the tenant does succeed in showing that the landlord's title has in fact come to an end, the plaintiff's suit for recovery of rent based on the relationship of landlord and tenant is bound to be dismissed.

Thus, where a tenant is inducted on the premises purchased by the decree-holder in execution of his decree against the judgment-debtor, in a suit brought for ejectment and rent by the purchaser against the tenant, the tenant can prove that the execution sale in favour of the decree-holder is declared void ab initio by reason of his non-compliance with the requirement of O. 21, R. 85, C.P. Code. As such a challange to the title of the purchaser is based on events which have happened subsequent to the sale. S. 116 of the Evidence Act does not come in the way of the tenant so as to prevent him from showing that the purchaser had no title in question or that it had come to an end: 1963 Raj.L.W. 355: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 881: A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 209.

It is open to the tenant even without surrendering possession to show that since the date of the tenancy, the title of the landlord came to an end or that he was evicted by a paramount title-holder or that even though there was no actual eviction or dispossession from the property, under a threat of eviction he had attorned to the paramount title-holder.

The defendant executed a kadapa in favour of the plaintiff on the 31st of August, 1947. On the date when the kadapa was executed , the land was situated in the 'estate'. Subsequently, the estate was taken over by the Government under the provisions of the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act (XXVI of 1948), sometime in September, 1949. On the 24th August, 1950, the Supervising Tahsildar issued a notice, both to the 1st plaintiff as well as to the defendant under S. 7 of the Madras Land Encroachment Act (III of 1905), calling upon both the first plaintiff and the defendant to show cause why action under S. 5 or S. 6 of the Act should not be taken. The first plaintiff submitted a statement where in she claimed that her predecessors-in-title had been in possession of the property and this property was sold to her under a sale deed of the year 1915. This claim of the plaintiff was accepted by the Supervising Deputy Tahsildar. As a result of this order passed by the Supervising Tahsildar, not only was there no eviction of the plaintiff but her title to the land in dispute was affirmed while the claim of the defendant to the land was rejected. Held, that the defendant was estopped from denying the title of the plaintiff under S. 116, Evidence Act. The effect of the order of the Supervising Tahsildar was that the notice of eviction issued under S. 7 never took effect so that the principle stated above was not applicable to the case: 1956 An.W.R. 1090: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 961. See also A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 357.

The principle of S. 116 does not apply to prevent a tenant from pleading that the title of the original lessor has since come to an end. Thus, where the proprietor of the village leased out an abadi site to the defendant but the disputed site was thereafter transferred by him to his wife without any consideration and subsequently the plaintiffs as successors-in-interest of the transferee-wife brought a suit for possession against the defendant-tenants and the defendants challenged the title of transferee eventhough they had paid rent to her on earlier occasion, held, the defendant-tenant could question the capacity of the proprietor to make the transfer of property to his wife and estoppel under S. 116 would not operate against him. Further, even if it was assumed that principle of S. 116 was applicable still the wife of the proprietor or her successors-in-interest were not entitled to recover possession of disputed site as the abadi sites vested in State by virtue of provisions of the M.P. Abolition of Proprietory Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act, 1951: A.I.R. 1971 Madh. Pra. 142 (D.B.).

Where on dissolution of a firm, the premises belonging to the firm fell to the share of the continuing partner but subsequently the retiring partner inducted tenants in a portion of the premises to whom the tenants paid rent but subsequently faced with criminal prosecution and on the basis of the dissolution deed, they executed a rent note in favour of the continuing partner on enhanced rate of rent, held, the tenants were not estopped from denying the retiring partner's title to the demised premises; the estoppel contemplated by S. 116 is restricted to the denial of title at the commencement of the tenancy; it follows by implication that the tenant is not estopped from contending that their lessor's title had since come to an end: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1656: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 694: (1987) 4 S.C.C. 319.

9. Estoppel in case of person claiming derivative title.—S. 116 does not estop a tenant from denying the right, as his landlord, of a person who claims to have succeeded to the landlord who put the tenant in possession :(1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 346: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 49. See also A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 341; (1978) 1 M.P.W.N. 143.

S. 116 does not prevent the tenant from showing that the landlord who claims a derivative title and who did not himself induct the tenant into the land, has no title: A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 25. If once the relation of landlord and tenant is established between the parties, the tenant would be estopped from disputing the landlord's title. There are no words in S. 116 to show that the tenant must have been put into possession by the landlord in order to estop the tenant from disputing the landlord's title: (1928) 30 Bom.L.R. 741: A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 265; (1934) 36 Bom.L.R. 1074: A.I.R. 1935 Bom.144. See also 139 I.C. 46: (1931) 33 Punj.L.R. 799.

There is nothing in S. 116 which extends the rule of estoppel enacted in that section to a person who claims to be the representative of the landlord by assignment. By merely purchasing the landlord's interest, the purchaser does not, ipso facto, become a landlord entitled to the benefit of S. 116. A landlord-tenant relationship will have to be established between the purchaser and the tenant before S. 116 can successfully be called in aid. If the tenant attorns to the purchaser, thereby recognizing him as his landlord, the provisions of S. 116 would unquestionably come into play: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 34.

The doctrine of estoppel under S. 116 of the Evidence Act applies where the tenant has been let into possession by the landlord. But where the landlord himself did not induct the tenant into property but claims his position under a derivative title, such as assignee, donee, lessee, heir, etc., there is no estoppel against tenant. So a tenant already in possession is entitled to show that the plaintiff does not possess the derivative title he claims, but it is in some other person: 1979 Ren.C.J. 27: 1979 M.P.L.J. 155: 1979 Jab.L.J. 126: (1979) 1 Ren.C.R. 508: (1979) 2 Ren.L.R. 640 (D.B.).

S. 116 does not apply where a landlord has transferred his property, in which there is a tenant, to another person. Therefore, tenant is not estopped from denying title of purchaser from original landlord: (1978) 4 All.L.R. 96: (1978) 1 Ren.C.J. 434: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 153.

The doctrine of estoppel ordinarily applies where the lessor had himself inducted the tenant into the immovable property; but where the lessor's rights are founded on a derivative title as that of an assignee, donee, vendee, heir, etc., the tenant already in possession can challenge the derivative title by showing that the real owner is somebody else, subject, however, to the rule of S. 116. The section does not permit the tenant, during the continuance of the tenancy, to deny his landlord's title at the beginning of the tenancy; a transferee from such a landlord also can invoke S. 116 in so far it relates to the title of the original landlord who had inducted the tenant. But the tenant is entitled to show that the claimant had not in fact secured title from the original landlord or that the transfer was ineffective for some other valid reason. Further, the impediment in the way of the tenant is confined to the stage when the tenancy commenced; he is not forbidden to plead that the landlord has lost the title subsequently. Thus, where in an eviction suit the tenant did not challenge the derivative title of the transferee-plaintiff but challenged the title of the transferor-landlord, held, the tenant was estopped under S. 116. [A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2192, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 636: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 865.

The policy of S. 116 is that if person brought into possession as a tenant by the landlord, is permitted to question the title of the landlord at the time of the settlement, then extreme confusion will result in the matter of relationship of the landlord and tenant. Therefore, the equitable principle of estoppel is incorporated in S. 116. However, when the tenant in his reply to the quit notice of the donee of the landlord does not set up his own title, rather asserts the donor as the landlord and questions the genuineness of the gift, he does not deny the relationship of landlord and tenant to entail forfeiture or estoppel. He is, thus, entitled to raise the plea of non-service of a valid notice under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act in an eviction suit: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 257.

The estoppel of tenant is limited to the landlord's title at the commencement and during the subsistence of tenancy and the law is not applicable when there is a cesser of the landlord's title and a new landlord steps in. Where in an eviction suit, the defendant-tenant in cross-examination admitted that the plaintiff became landlord by purchase of the suit-property but plaintiff-landlord failed to establish either his title and ownership over the suit property or the relationship of landlord and tenant with respect to the defendant and the defendant had never paid any amount as rent to the plaintiff, held, the admission of tenant in cross-examination, would not operate as estoppel under S. 116: (1984) 1 Cal.L.J. 393: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 227.

Where the rent suit is brought by the daughters claiming to be heirs to the leasehold rights alleged to be the stridhan of their mother, though the tenants cannot dispute the title of their mother at the commencement of the lease they can dispute the derivative title of the plaintiffs. It is in such a case incumbent upon the plaintiffs to prove that the leasehold rights in question were the stridhan of their mother and they are entitled to inherit the said rights according to Hindu law: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 341.

S. 109 of the Transfer of Property Act does not say anything about the estoppel of the tenant from denying the title of the assignee: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 215.

Tenant can challenge derivative title of his landlord but is estopped from challenging title of the landlord who let him out: (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 74.

Landlord filing a suit on the basis of derivative title—What are the possible limits to challenge such title. See (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 189.

Principle of estoppel does not apply where tenant claims to be landlord on basis of derivative title, but it will be attracted if tenant has attorned to new owner of premises: (1988) 2 Raj.L.R. 633 (Raj.).

10. Estoppel in case of attornment.—Person attorning to lessors as tenant cannot question title of lessors: 100 I.C. 93: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 941. See also A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 505; A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 607: (1941) 1 M.L.J. 554; 26 All.L.J. 1255: A.I.R. 1928 All. 650.

In a suit for eviction by landlord, the tenant is estopped from questioning the title of the landlord because of S. 116. That section applies and estops even a person already in possession as tenant under one landlord from denying the title of his subsequent landlord when once he acknowledges him as his landlord by attronment or conduct. Therefore, a tenant of immovable property under landlord who becomes a tenant under another landlord by accepting him to be the owner who had derived title from the former landlord, cannot be permitted to deny the latter's title, even when he is sought to be evicted by the latter on a permitted ground: (1994) 4 S.C.C. 250; (1995-1) 115 Mad.L.W. 178 (D.B.).

Mere attornment after previous possession as proprietor would not raise estoppel: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 284: 113 I.C. 703.

It cannot be said that the principle of estoppel embodied in S. 116 is limited in its application only to the state of things when the property is first let out by the original landlord. There is no warrant for construing the words, "at the beginning of the tenancy", occurring in said section as implying only the point of time when the tenant was first let into the property. These words, do not exclude from their purview cases of attornment. In relation to the successors-in-interest of the original landlord equally the provisions of S. 116 are available if the tenant attorns to the successors-in-interest. Qua such successors the words "at the beginning of the tenancy" must be deemed to refer to the relationship of landlord and tenant which was established between the tenant and the successors-in-interest upon the latter's acquiring the interest of the original landlord. Thus, where defendant tenant attorned to one "GN" and treated him as his sole landlord, held, the defendant was estopped from contending that the plaintiff who only stepped into the shoes of "GN" was not the sole landlord. [A.I.R. 1923 All. 53; A.I.R. 1957 Assam 188, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 All. 320, affirmed in A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1413: (1989-1) 9 Guj.L.H. 229; A.I.R. 1990 Pat. 26: (1989) 2 B.L.J. 587.

In spite of the fact of payment of rent by tenants to the person claiming to be landlords on the strength of title derived from the original landlord, it is open to the tenants to show that such payment was made in ignorance of the correct position in law and in fact the persons claiming title have not derived the title claimed by them. But where there has been payment of rent and no case of fraud or misrepresentation is made out, the fact of payment of rent is prima facie evidence to show that the title was actually derived. When that is the position, the onus shifts to the tenants to prove that in fact title has not been derived: 1958 Cal.L.J. 265.

A tenant, who is inducted by a person as such, cannot challenge the successor's title if he attorns to the status of the successor-in-interest as landlord. Payment of rent without objection estops the tenant from challenging the title of the landlord. [(1986)1 All.R.C. 173; (1986) 2 All.R.C. 315, Rel. on]: (1992) 20 All.L.R. 911; A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 81: 1982 M.P.L.J. 645; 1983 M.P.L.J. 350: 1983 Jab.L.J. 342.

Although a tenant may have been put in possession by one lessor and there is a transfer of that interest to another person, if the tenant in possession attorns to the new transferee as a person entitled to receive rent from him, the principle of estoppel will apply and the tenant will not have the right to question the title of such a plaintiff-lessor to whom he was attorned: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 195; (1902-3) 7 Cal.W.N. 596.

Where the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest had inducted the tenant in the suit-premises and after the execution of the sale deed by which the plaintiff became the owner of that property, the rent was being paid to him, held, on filing of the eviction suit, the tenant could not challenge the title of the plaintiff, as by payment of rent to him the tenant had accepted the plaintiff as his landlord. [(1988) 3 S.C.C. 137, Rel. on]: (1989-2) 37 B.L.J.R. 316; (1972-73) 77 Cal.W.N. 817.

S. 116 does not deal or profess to deal with all kinds of estoppel which may arise between landlord and tenant. Where original landlord sold the suit premises to the plaintiff and gave a notice of such sale to his statutory tenant and the tenant attorned in favour of the plaintiff-transferee by paying rents to him and always showed his willingness to pay the rent and to execute a fresh rent note in plaintiff's favour, but in a suit for ejectment by the plaintiff, the defendant denied plaintiff's title to the suit premises, held, as the tenant attorned to the plaintiff and thereby recognised him as his landlord, he could not challenge the title of the plaintiff to the suit property. [A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 865, Disting.; A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 34 and A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 209, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 55: 1970 Raj.L.W. 250; (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 888 (D.B.).

Where on sale of the suit premises the tenant started paying rent to the vendee (new landlord) regularly but on re-sale of the said premises, he challenged the title of the Ist vendee also, held, the tenant had not only admitted the sale in favour of the Ist vendee but also had attorned to him and started paying rent to him. Thus, the tenant having attorned to the Ist vendee, was estopped from denying his title: 1983 M.P.L.J. 350; A.I.R. 1978 Karn. 13: (1977) 1 Karn.L.J. 429.

Where S. 116 of the Evidence Act would not apply in terms because the landlord who has sued for ejectment is not the original landlord who let in the tenant, but is one who has derived his title from such landlord, the tenant may not be estopped from disputing his title. But where there has been attornment to such a landlord, the tenant's right to dispute his title would be subject to his proving that such attornment was due to mistake, misrepresentation, fraud or ignorance: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 392: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 956; A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 81 : 1982 M.P.L.J. 645.

A written rent-note or a fresh leasing out is not an essential requirement of attornment which may come into being by payment of rent or by recognition of a person as one's landlord. Thus, where after the death of original landlord, the rent was being paid by the tenant to one of the co-owners-heirs of the property who was issuing the rent receipts in his name after the demise of original landlord, held, though no fresh tenancy had been created between that co-owner of the property and the tenant and the existing lease was continued the tenant had attorned in the favour of the plaintiff-co-owner by consistently paying rent to him and therefore, the tenant was now estopped from challenging his position as landlord: 1975 Raj.L.W. 96.

If a person attorns in favour of a stranger, from that time onwards the stranger would be entitled to claim the benefit of the provisions of S. 116 on the ground that he himself had become landlord from such date. [A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 251, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 145 (D.B.).

Where in an eviction suit, the tenant who was paying the rent to the plaintiff, adoptive son of the deceased-landlord, and accepting from him duly signed receipts of rent, disputed the plaintiff's title, held, a person receiving rent is to be regarded as a landlord. Thus, when the tenant paid rent to the plaintiff he accepted his title as a landlord of the premises occupied by him. Therefore, he was estopped from denying his title: 1985 M.P.L.J. 459; 1977 Mah.L.J. (Note) 18.

Where the defendant's father who held a shop as a tenant under the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff fell in arrears of rent, and the defendant undertook to pay the arrears and to execute a sarkhat, it must be deemed that there was surrender by the father of the defendant followed by the defendant being let into possession under the lease executed by him in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant, in such circumstances, is estopped from denying the title of the lessor: I.L.R. 13 Luck. 76: 1937 O.W.N. 49: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 113. See also (1937-38) 42 Cal.W.N. 1022.

Where A, the tenant of B, after B's death, executed a rent deed in favour of C, the beneficiary under the Will executed by B, A is estopped from denying the title of C: 1969 Ren. C.R. 791: 1969 Ker.L.R. 423.

Where the tenant was in occupation of the demised premises admittedly under the donor and paying rent to him and after the gift of the premises she was paying rent to the donee and there was no evidence that the tenant had paid the rent to the donee under some mis-apprehension or mistake and even had called upon the donee to satisfy about the gift, held, the payment of rent by, and conduct of, the tenant to the donee clearly raises the inference of attornment in favour of the donee; the tenant is estopped by act, conduct and acquiescence from challenging the donee's title: A.I.R. 1975 Raj. 32: 1974 Raj.L.W. 200.

A joint family property was let out to the tenant by the father of the two plaintiffs-brothers. The plaintiffs acquired the said property after their father had effected a partition in his family. The tenant of that property was informed about the said partition and he attorning in the favour of both the landlords started paying rent to both of them according to their respective shares. But on filing of an eviction suit, the tenant took the plea that the said partition was sham and further challenged the title of the father of the plaintiffs as well, held, the tenant could not deny the title of father after he had once accepted him as the owner and had taken the house from him. Similarly, after attornment and apportioning the rent as per partition deed he became the tenant of the plaintiff in relation to their own share in the tenanted premises. The relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, therefore, became direct and hence the tenant would be subjected to the same limitations as in relation to title of original landlord. Therefore, the tenant was not entitled to challenge the ownership of the plaintiffs, after having acted upon the partition and dividing the tenancy: A.I.R. 1993 Madh. Pra. 46: 1993 M.P.L.J. 260.

Suit for rent by a proprietor not registered as such under S. 78 of the Bengal Land Registration Act—Maintainability—Estoppel—Defendant having once paid rent and accepted such proprietor as landlord is estopped from challenging the right of the landlord: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 550.

Where an evacuee property on lease with a tenant was sold by the custodian to third parties who in their turn sold it to the plaintiff and the tenant had attorned to the plaintiff, held, S. 116 would be attracted; the tenant is estopped from contending that the plaintiff was not his landlord and that the vendees from the custodian were co-sharers of the property: 1972 M.P.L.J. 187.

Where a lease deed clearly stated HUF to be owner of the premises which was let out by karta of HUF and there was no subsequent change in the status of parties and subsequently tenant challenged the ownership of the HUF, held, the tenant was estopped from taking up said contention: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 297 (Del.).

11. Attornment under mistake, etc.—Where a tenant being already in possession has made an attornment or acknowledgment of the tenancy he may show that he did so through ignorance, mistake or the like: 112 I.C 382; 150 I.C. 898: A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 139; A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 27; 167 I.C. 141: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 505: 1937 O.W.N. 1030 or that the contract of tenancy is void: (1928) 30 Bom.L.R. 7411: A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 265.

Such a tenant may set up adverse possession against new landlord without surrendering possession to him: 167 I.C. 141: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 27.

Doctrine of estoppel by attornment can be shown not to have come into operation by pleading and proving such facts which have vitiating effect on contracts, for example, misrepresentation, coercion, fraud, mistake, etc.: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 81: 1982 M.P.L.J. 645.

Where the person receiving the payment was not the person who let the payer into possession, but some one who is claiming title by succession, the mere act of payment as and for rent, without more, is not conclusive and does not estop the payer from afterwards repudiating the payee's title if he can explain away the payment by showing that he made it in mistake, ignorance or incomplete knowledge of the circumstances of payee's title or of other material facts: A.I.R. 1981 Cal. 413: (1980) 2 Cal.L.J. 518 (D.B.).

Even a mere attornment creates an estoppel against the tenant but such estoppel is not the same as the statutory estoppel under S. 116. There are other kinds of estoppel between tenant and landlord falling outside the scope of S. 116. Such an estoppel would not prevent the tenant from showing that he attorned in ignorance of the fact that the person to whom he attorned had no title. A mere attornment does not create a new tenancy. The only effect of a mere attornment is the substitution of a new landlord in place of the old and the tenancy continues on the same terms: I.L.R. (1945) Bom. 343: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 399; 1959 B.L.J.R. 376: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 562.

12. Eviction by title paramount.—Eviction by title paramount meant an eviction due to the fact that the lessor had no title to grant the lease, and the paramount title is the title paramount to the lessor which destroys the effect of the grant and with it corresponding liability for payment of rent, so that mere eviction from, or a deprivation of the use and enjoyment of the demised premises, or part of them, whether such eviction be lawful or unlawful, is insufficient, where the lessors' title is not affected or called in question. When there has been eviction by title paramount, the lessee is not estopped from denying the title of his lessor. However, in order to claim any relief on the ground of eviction by paramount title, the tenant must establish that the person who wanted to evict him had a better title than his lessor. If there is nothing to show that the evictor had any better title, nor is there anything to show that the tenant gave as required by S. 108 (n), T.P. Act, any notice to the lessor about the claim put forward by the evictor so as to enable him to protect his own interest or that the tenant made any enquiry as to the title of the two rival claimants, the applicability of the doctrine of estoppel cannot be challenged by the tenant on the ground of eviction by title paramount: 1959 B.L.J.R. 376: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 562.

Title paramount cannot be rested on a fact other than the one which had come into existence subsequent to the creation of tenancy.

Strictly speaking S. 116 cannot be described as being subject to the rule of title paramount, because while S. 116, deals with a situation that was obtaining at the beginning of the lease, the title paramount is concerned with the situation that has subsequently developed by reason of the termination of a lessor's title: (1981) 1 An.W.R. 47.

A tenant cannot escape estoppel merely by saying that his tenancy under the landlord was terminated either by delivery of possession under a decree for possession or by the landlord's own act in determining the tenancy and bringing the suit for ejectment. Nor can he escape it merely by saying that he came to an arrangement with a third person claiming a paramount title and attorned to him. The estoppel, however, disappears if the landlord's title is extinguished subsequent to the inception of the tenancy, or if there is eviction by title paramount. No physical dispossession by the person claiming paramount title is necessary, if the true owner as named is armed with a legal process of eviction which cannot be lawfully resisted, even though the tenant is put out of possession, the threat to put him out of possession amounts in law to eviction. If, under such circumstances, the tenant, openly and to the knowledge of his landlord, attorns to the true owners, the estoppel is gone. The attornment, however, must be under compulsion, and the party evicting, must have a good title and the tenant must have quitted against his will: I.L.R. 22 Pat. 513: A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 77. See also (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 780: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 564.

The principle of estoppel laid down in S. 116 of the Evidence Act does not extend to the derivative title of the persons claiming through the landlord. Though the section restricts the estoppel to the period during which the tenancy continues, the duration to the estoppel continues so long as the tenant has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. But the estoppel is restricted to the denial of the title of the landlord at the commencement of the tenancy. It is, therefore, open to a tenant even without surrendering possession to show that since the date of the tenancy, the title of the landlord came to an end or that he was evicted by a paramount title holder or that even though there was no actual eviction or dispossession from the property, under a threat of eviction he had attorned to the paramount title holder, and he can set up such threat of eviction by way of defence either to an action for rent or to a suit in ejectment. In a suit for possession of property with arrears of rent, the defendant relied upon the sale deeds each for one half of the property by reason of which he becomes the purchaser of the property and therefore, contended that the relationship of lessor and lessee between him and the plaintiff was determined and the suit based on tenancy could not be decreed. Held, (i) with respect to one half of the property, the transaction of sale in favour of the defendant was a mere voluntary act on the part of the defendant as there was no assertion of title by a paramount title holder and a consequent threat of eviction. (ii) but as regards the other half, the defendant was faced with the situation that after the expiry of the term fixed under the lease deed and before he became a tenant holding over there was a suit filed by the sons of the purchaser of this half portion claiming partition and separate possession in which the defendant was impleaded as a party. The purchase by the defendant from the plaintiffs in that suit was after the suit was filed and it was only thereafter that the suit was reported settled. There was, therefore, a serious threat of eviction by the paramount title holder and the defendant was, therefore, obliged, in order to avert eviction, to purchase the property. If the property was not purchased by the defendant, the suit would have proceeded to trial and the defendant would have been evicted from a half portion of the house, the plaintiffs in that suit having a prima facie proof of title to the property. The purchase is not, therefore, a voluntary act on the part of the defendant and he can rely on it as a defence in the suit. (iii) The plaintiff, however, cannot get possession of the other half share as it is not possible to partition and deliver a half share in a suit based on tenancy. In such a case the whole of the rent is not suspended but has to be apportioned. But as there is no continuance of the tenancy, the plaintiff is not entitled to rent but only to damages for use and occupation and as this was not the basis of the suit no relief can be given to the plaintiff: I.L.R. (1954) Mad. 341: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 402: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 511, followed in 1956 An.W.R. 1090.

Where the tenancy has been determined by eviction by title paramount, no question of estoppel arises under S. 116: A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 124: (1948-49) 53 Cal.W.N. 883. But see infra. A tenant cannot plead eviction by title paramount and escape the estoppel under S. 116 by pleading that he has attorned to another when it is voluntary: 1946 Nag.L.J. 609: I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 991: 229 I.C. 138: A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 188.

Threat of eviction by title paramount—Defence to action for rent—Conditions, see (1950) 2 M.L.J. 605.

A tenant may dispute his landlord's title if he has been evicted by title paramount or if under threat of eviction by a party having a title paramount he has attorned as tenant. But if the tenant was attorned voluntarily, he is estopped from denying the landlord's title: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 197: 66 M.L.J. 355; (1982) 2 M.L.J. 282.

It is only so long as the tenancy is subsisting and the tenant is in possession, that a tenant cannot set up the title of a third person. Where, before the lease is to take effect the lessee discovers that the lessor had no title and takes a new lease from the real owner and enters into possession thereunder, he is not estopped from denying the first lessor's title: (1937) 1 M.L.J. 679: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 882: I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 638 (F.B.). See also 17 Mys.L.J. 310.

No estoppel in case of tenant evicted actually or constructively by true owner: 23 Mad.L.W. 296: A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 187.

The estoppel under S. 116 is restricted to the denial of title at the tenancy's commencement; thus, it follows that the tenant even without surrendering possession can show that the landlord's title thereafter came to an end or that he had been evicted by the holder of a paramount title or that without actual eviction or dispossession, he had under the threat, attorned to the paramount title-holder. Eviction by title paramount does not necessarily require the tenant's dispossession or a suit therefor; it is enough if there was a threat of eviction which made the tenant attorn to the real owner; such defence is permissible both in action for rent as well as for ejectment. But if the tenant had given up possession voluntarily to the paramount title-holder, he is not entitled to invoke this rule. [1986 L.S. (Andh. Pra.) 286, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2192: (1987) 4 S.C.C. 424.

When there is an actual threat of eviction or an imminent danger of eviction, if a person denies the title of the landlord, it will constitute an exception of S. 116. Thus, where the tenant was inducted in the suit premises by the plaintiff claiming to be the owner of the suit property and the tenant had been paying rent to the petitioner continuously but when he received a notice under S. 7 of the Tamil Nadu Land Encroachment Act, 1905 from the Government he stopped payment of rent to the plaintiff and when an eviction suit was filed he denied the plaintiff's title, held, as the said notice clearly referred to superstructure as an unauthorised construction, it was clear that it was only on threat of eviction that the tenant was obliged to deny the title of the landlord. Thus, the tenant's conduct was clearly bona fide. [(1950) 2 M.L.J. 605 at 606, Rel. on]: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 678.

An eviction order against the lessee by itself does not determine the lessee's title to realise rent from the sub-lessee; such an order before its execution does not amount to an eviction by title paramount. Though a lessee under S. 116 is precluded from disputing his lessor's title on the date of the lease, he can plead the lessor's subsequent loss of title as a result of eviction by title paramount. But a mere decree or order for possession by itself cannot constitute eviction by title paramount unless there was delivery of actual or symbolic dispossession consequent upon the decree or order for possession. Thus, to overcome the bar of estoppel it is always necessary for the lessee or the sub-lessee as in this case, to establish as a fact that his relationship with his immediate landlord had been disrupted not only de jure but also de facto. Therefore, where a lessee allowed time to vacate the premises had let it out to a sub-lessee, held, the sub-lessee was estopped till the expiry of time so granted from disputing the lessee's title. [(1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 192; A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 124 and A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 297, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 37: (1984) 2 Cal.H.N. 170: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 938 (D.B.).

A tenant under threat of eviction from the paramount title holder, can certainly set up title in that paramount title-holder; thus, where a tenant was served notice under S. 7 of the Land Encroachment Act by the Government as the true owner, the plea of estoppel under S. 116 will not be available to the landlord. But where the lease agreement was entered after the service of such a notice, held, the lessee could not raise the plea of paramount title. [(1937) 2 M.L.J. 286; A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 251, Rel. on]: (1987) 1 M.L.J. 357: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 929.

Where the lessor and the lessee received notice from the true owner that the usufructuary mortgage under which the lessor was in possession had been declared invalid by a Court, the plea of estoppel under S. 116 of the Evidence Act would not enure after such notice. But the lessee would be liable to pay the rent to the lessor till they receive the notice from the true owner: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 406: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 518. In the absence of any circumstances as would avoid a contract, the execution of a lease to hold as a tenant brings in the estoppel mentioned in S. 116. Further, the principle of estoppel applicable is the same whether a man is let into possession or whether he has continued in such possession by specific agreement between himself and his landlord: A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 53; I.L.R. (1952) Raj. 58: A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 115.

Where lands belonging to the Government were leased by a Panchayat to a number of tenants under a specified authority given by the Government to the Panchayat for a specified period, the Panchayat will have no right over the land or claim arrears of rent from the occupants after the expiry of the authority given to it by the Government in that regard. If after the expiry of the period for which the Panchayat was empowered to lease the land and collect rent, the Government issues notices to the occupants under the Land Encroachment Act and collects kist from them, it is apparent that the Government as the true owner has evicted the tenants let into possession by the Panchayat. In such circumstances the tenants will not be estopped from contending that the Panchayat is no longer entitled to collect rent from them. The rule of estoppel laid down under S. 116 of the Evidence Act is not absolute. It is well settled that where the true owner evicts the tenant let into possession by another, the tenant could attorn to the true owner and set up his title in answer to a suit filed by the landlord who let him in possession. The only limitation is that so long as the tenancy is subsisting, the tenant is not entitled to set up a jus tertii in a third person. A notice under S. 7 of the Land Encroachment Act by the Government amounts in law to eviction and payment of kist by the persons in possession to the Government would be sufficient to entitle them to plead jus tertii, though they might have been let into possession by someone else and though there may not be the relationship of landlord and tenant between them and the Government. Held, on the facts of the case, that the persons originally let into possession by the Panchayat were not estopped from setting up title in the Government: (1970) 1 M.L.J. 444: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 683.

Where the suit premises, which originally belonged to the Government, being a road poromboke, came to be assigned in favour of the Municipality and the defendant who had encroached upon the said property let it out to the plaintiff and when he filed an eviction suit, the plaintiff-tenant contended that it was well open to him to set up title in the paramount title holder, viz., the Municipality, held, as a title suit between the defendant and the Municipality was still pending, the plaintiff could not deny the defendant's title.[A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 402; (1970) 1 M.L.J. 444, Disting.] : A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 138: (1976) 2 M.L.J. 393.

Where in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent filed by the plaintiff-lessee against his tenant, the tenant pleaded that as the true owner of the impugned premises had obtained an order for eviction against him from Rent Controller, he was not liable to pay any rent to the plaintiff thereafter, held, in the circumstances the tenant was entitled to take up said plea and the plaintiff, as landlord, could not rely on the law of estoppel incorporated in S. 116 as operating against the tenant. [A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 187; (1958) 1 M.L.J. 406, Foll.]: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 504: (1978) 2 M.L.J. 185.

Where a patta originally granted by the Board of Revenue, subsequently cancelled by the Government, which cancellation was set aside by the High Court with directions to the settlement authorities which would decide whether the land leased to the Panchayat for a bus stand by a private person vested in the Government under the T.N. Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1948 and that decision was still pending, held, whether the Panchayat could impugn the private landlord's title to the land would depend on the decision as and when made; case remanded: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 800.

13. Eviction by equitable owner.—Where a vendor purchasing a freehold industrial estate by payment of full consideration but without execution of the sale deed in order to save stamp duty leased it out to the tenant and in the landlord's suit for damages for breach of covenant, the tenant challenged the maintainability of the suit on the plea that the landlord had no title, held, the landlord having become equitable owner, the tenant was estopped from challenging his equitable title; this rule of estoppel continued to operate after the expiry of the lease unless, after the termination of the lessee's possession, a claim was made against him by holder of a title paramount in respect of some part of the period of the lease: (1977) 1 Q.B. 580: (1977) 2 All E.R. 293 (C.A.). A valid contract of tenancy having been created, the tenant would be estopped under the contract even though some other person, for example, the reminderman or a mortgagee might be able to assert a title paramount against the tenant who had been given, as between himself and his landlord, a perfectly valid tenancy: (1958) 1 Q.B. 107. The principle of equitable estoppel is wider than that governed by the ambit of S. 116 of the Evidence Act and the absence of a registered lease deed for the renewed period would make no difference as regards the bar of estoppel against the lessee: A.I.R. 1986 Bom. 359: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 788 (D.B.).

14. Plea of adverse possession.—Once the person enters into premises as tenant, he cannot set up adverse possession against the landlord or against any person claiming through landlord unless he has firstly surrendered the possession: 1988 Mah.L.J. 250; (1991) 1 Ker.L.T. (S.N.) 47 (Case No. 66). But when he is asserting his ownership by adverse possession over portions other than the portions which form a part of his tenanted accommodation, held, provisions of S. 116 are not attracted: (1994) 54 Del.L.T. 552.

Adverse possession cannot be set up by the tenant against the landlord: 45 I.C. 656; 30 I.C. 218.

Where a lessee enters into possession under a lease, he cannot acquire any title by adverse possession against his lessor pending the term of the lease unless he distinctly asserts such a title to his knowledge and gives him notice that he asserted such a title. A failure to pay rent to the lessor during the period of the lease does not alone operate to create in favour of the lessee a title by adverse possession. If a lessee holds over after the expiry of the lease and if no subsequent arrangement is arrived at between him and his lessor by which a new tenancy is created, time begins to run under Art. 139, Sch. II of the Limitation Act, against the lessor from the date of the expiry of the lease: 1959 B.L.J.R. 244: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 500.

Adverse possession if can be set up by tenant: A.I.R. 1957 All. 346.

A tenant in order to claim title in himself by adverse possession must first establish that he surrendered the tenancy to the landlord. Without establishing the fact of surrender, it is not open to him to deny the landlord's title and claim an adverse title from the mere fact of his continuing in possession. [A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 96 and A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 629, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 305: (1973) 1 M.L.J. 248: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 740.

S. 116 only estops a tenant from disputing his landlord's title during the continuance of the tenancy. Where the tenancy originated in a lease, the estoppel continues even after the expiration of the period of the lease, unless the tenant has openly surrendered possession or has at least given notice to his landlord that he claims under his own title. But in the absence of evidence to prove that the tenant paid rent to the landlord after the expiry of lease, or that the landlord assented to the possession of the tenant after the determination of the lease, or that the tenant accepted the title of the landlord after that it cannot be inferred that the relationship of landlord and tenant continued after such determination and Art. 139 of the Limitation Act bars any suit to recover possession from the tenant after the expiry of twelve years from the date when the tenancy was determined. When the tenant has proved that the tenancy has been determined by efflux of time, it is for the landlord to prove that any tenancy was created or arose after such date: 176 I.C. 84: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 73.

No question of estoppel arises when the tenant continuing in possession after expiry of lease, claims title by adverse possession against the plaintiff landlord in a suit for ejectment, since there is no denial on the part of the defendant of the plaintiff's title when the settlement was made: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 156.

Where in a suit for possession based on title by the vendee, the defendants in occupation of the premises pleaded adverse possession and it was shown that in an earlier suit between the vendor and the defendants, the latter were held to be licensees of the vendor, held, the earlier finding being res judicata, the defendants were estopped from denying the plaintiff's title whose purchase of the premises from the original owner was proved: A.I.R. 1980 All. 210.

15. Third party's title.—Plea of title in third person, see 7 Cal.W.N. 596: 15 M.L.J. 368. In a suit in ejectment where the defendant relies on the title of a third party having no other title to rely on, it is always open to the plaintiff to displace the title of the person so set up by showing that he was party to the litigation which has negatived that title. Whatever would estop or bar the person whose title is set up must also bar the person pleading jus tertii where the estoppel is by record, deed or in pais: 1937 Mad.W.N. 299: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 544.

In cases where there is a contractual relationship of landlord and tenant and the defendant has been inducted into possession of the suit property as tenant by the plaintiff and the rule of estoppel contained in S. 116, Evidence Act operates against the tenant no question of impleading a third person as a party setting up title to the suit property can arise because any enquiry about the title of a third party would be completely shut out by reason of the rule of estoppel and in such cases the third person would not be a proper party within the meaning of O. 1, R. 10(2). However, in cases where the plaintiff claims title to the suit property on the basis of inheritance, assignment etc., and the tenant has not attorned to him and the rule of estoppel does not operate against him, enabling himself to set up the title of a third person, such third person in appropriate cases can be regarded as proper party whose presence before the Court will be necessary to enable the Court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. In such cases there would be no question of converting a simple suit into a suit of title and no controversy beyond the scope of the suit would be introduced as after his joinder the main evidence in the suit and the main enquiry will remain the same as before his addition. In such cases the Court would not be exercising its discretion improperly to implead him as a party as he would be a proper party: I.L.R. (1969) 19 Raj. 515: 1969 Raj.L.W. 121: A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 131.

Merely, because a third party seeks to raise some controversy about the licensor's title could not entitle a licensee who has been inducted by a licensor to question the title of the licensor. Thus, where in a suit for eviction the Courts below had found that it was the plaintiff who had inducted the defendant as a licensee, held, merely because brother of the plaintiff had appeared as a witness in the case and raised some dispute about the title of the suit property, the defendant could not take advantage of the situation and deny the title of the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1977 All. 458: (1977) 3 All.L.R. 292.

Where in a suit, filed by the tenant to restrain the landlord from taking possession of the premises otherwise than in due course of law and from causing obstruction in enjoyment of property, the tenant had applied for the addition of another person as second defendant without seeking any relief against him who was disputing title of the landlord, held, the tenant, by his application for impleading such a third party could not introduce the said dispute in the suit filed by him against a person whom he had specifically called as his landlord, since that third party was not a necessary party and, thus, his application for addition of party was not

16. Estoppel after termination of tenancy.—The tenant's estoppel operates even after the termination of the tenancy and even though the defendant is sued as a trespasser: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 499.

The fact that the tenancy came to an end by reason of forfeiture and the landlord served a notice asking the tenant to vacate the house does not make any difference to the applicability of the rule of estoppel which is grounded on the tenant being still on the premises which he had obtained from the landlord. The estoppel continues so long as the tenant does not surrender possession to the landlord: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 234: 1955 Nag. L.J. 314.

Where in a suit for eviction, the tenant contended that his tenancy having been determined by a notice to quit under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, he was no longer a tenant, had no estate or interest in the premises occupied by him, and he could therefore, deny the landlord's title, held, the tenant had become a "statutory tenant"; he is still precluded from denying the plaintiff's title at the beginning of the tenancy, to the property let out; S. 116 is attracted. [A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 251, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2526, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1975 Pat. 177: 1975 B.L.J.R. 227.

Where landlord filed a suit for possession against tenant on expiry of lease and the tenant challenged the title of the landlord, held, as the tenant was still in occupation of the demised premises, it could not challenge landlord's title to the premises though lease had expired. [A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 499; A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 96 and A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 101, Expl.; A.I.R. 1952 Ori. 95, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 209.

A tenant inducted into possession by the landlord is not permitted to deny the landlord's title till even after the determination of his tenancy by efflux of time so long as he does not restore possession to the landlord; the lessee is under obligation by virtue of S. 108 (q) of the Transfer of Property Act to put the landlord back into possession of the demised property upon his ceasing to be the tenant. [A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 234; 1961 Jab.L.J. 1292; A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 101, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1992 Madh. Pra. 303: 1993 M.P.L.J. 550.

However defective it may be, tenant holding over is in no better position: I.L.R. 6 Rang. 657: A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 15. See also (1927-28) 32 Cal.W.N. 867: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 546.

Lease—Tenant holding over—is a tenant at sufferance and not a trespasser—Tenant stopping to pay rent and paying certain taxes as an owner—Effect—Nature of possession of tenant—No adverse possession—Adverse possession starts only after lease is determined by handing over possession of premises to landlord—Tenancy continues—Tenant estopped from denying the title of the landlord while tenancy is subsisting: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 8.

A tenant in possession cannot even after the expiration of his lease deny his landlord's title without actually and openly surrendering possession to him: (1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 192; A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 562. Tenant cannot deny landlord's title until and only until he surrenders possession: 101 I.C. 771: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 544; 97 I.C. 992 (N.) See also 1938 Nag.L.J. 317: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 506: 104 I.C. 892; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 58; I.L.R. 55 Mad. 601: A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 298: 62 M.L.J. 313; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 445.

The scope of a suit by a landlord for possession from his tenant, including a tenant holding over, after the determination of the lease envisaged by S. 7 (ix)(cc) of the Court-fees Act is limited and the Court will not go into the question of the title of the landlord as on the date of the contract of tenancy, though that question may be considered incidentally for determining, if disputed, whether the contract was made. Even apart from the restricted scope of this suit, it is not open to the defendant to deny that the plaintiff had title to the house on the date on which the contract of tenancy was made: 1961 M.P.C. 136: 1961 Jab.L.J. 230.

17. Estoppel when only contract of tenancy is denied.—S. 116 presupposes provable contract of tenancy. When there is no denial of the landlord's title but only a denial of a contract of tenancy, the section is not a bar. There can be no estoppel on a matter of law: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 174. See also 1944 R.D. 377: 1944 All.W.R. (Rev.) 200.

18. Applicability to person claiming under lessee or sub-lessee.—The representatives-in-interest of the lessee are estopped from questioning the title of the lessor, even if the lessee had not been inducted on the land by the lessor: (1937-38) 42 Cal.W.N. 1032.

When a tenant cannot deny the tenancy and cannot set up adverse title in himself, a person claiming under him or functioning as his agent or representative cannot also do so: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 145 (D.B.).

The principle of S. 116 can also be applied to sub-tenants vis-a-vis their principles (tenant), but the words "during the continuance of the tenancy" are of great significance and make it clear that where there is no legal tenancy or sub-tenancy, the provisions of the section shall be inapplicable. The relationship as between tenant and sub-tenant can be created only by contract valid according to the law in force at the time of execution of such contract, or can be created or continued by operation of law. The existence of such relationship can also be implied from the act of the parties so long as the implied contract is not invalid that is, not against the law. Where the agreement leading to the execution of the sub-lease is void and unenforceable being a contract against the law, it is not valid and cannot make the sub-tenant a sub-tenant of the tenant. For this reason the subsequent conduct of the sub-tenant cannot be used against him. To put it differently, there is no legal sub-tenancy, and there can be no question of the continuance of sub-tenancy, and the so called sub-tenant cannot be deemed to be estopped from challenging the status of the so-called tenant for so long as he is in possession of the premises in question: A.I.R. 1964 All. 395.

Disclaimer by sub-tenant resulting in forfeiture bringing about termination of tenancy—He cannot claim to hold land as sub-lessee: 1963 Jab.L.J. 358.

In view of S. 116, it is not open to sub-tenant who has executed a kabuliyat to deny the title and rights of the original tenants to lease land: 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 381: 1942 R.D. 470.

The plaintiff filed a suit for eviction against the tenant and a sub-tenant, who had been inducted by the tenant and though the tenant admitted that the plaintiff was the landlord, but the sub-tenant contended that a third party was the landlord of the tenant, held, the position relating to the persons claiming through the tenant is not better than the tenant himself because the right of the sub-lessee or inducted person cannot be better than the person through whom he claims. Thus, the sub-tenant was estopped from challenging the plaintiff's title in view of S. 116: A.I.R. 1973 Bom. 168: 1973 Mah.L.J 233.

Where the plaintiffs admitted that they got the suit-property under a lease from the tenants of that property, held, they could not later on set up a case of acquisition of title by adverse possession against the landlord because a lessee cannot be permitted to deny his lessor's title. [A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 96 and A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 59, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1972 Ori. 134: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 1197.

19. Estoppel when title is claimed not on relationship of landlord and tenant, but as vendor and vendee.—S. 116 cannot be pleaded as a bar to the tenant purchasing, by paying consideration, the share of the co-sharer of the landlord. If the vendor of the tenant had a share in the property, there is no bar to his purchasing the share of his vendor and, thus, claiming title of a part of the property. It does not constitute a denial of the title of the landlord on the date of the tenancy: I.L.R. (1962) 14 Assam 453: A.I.R 1962 Assam. 137.

The rule of estoppel embodied in S. 116 of the Evidence Act only applies to the denial of the title of the landiord at the beginning of the tenancy. The doctrine which operates between landlord and tenant has no application to the same parties even while the tenancy exists when the question of title arose between them not in the relationship of landlord and tenant, but of vendor and purchaser: A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 321: (1945) 1 M.L.J. 475. See also I.L.R. (1946) Mad. 44; (1980) 93 Mad.L.W. 854 (D.B.).

A tenant may resist eviction sought to be enforced by his landlord in a suit instituted for the purpose by raising a plea that his landlord's title has come to an end or been extinguished subsequent to the commencement of his tenancy, notwithstanding S. 116. The extinction of the landlord's title may come about either by voluntary or involuntary transfer of the title of the landlord or by operation of any law for the time being in force. It is obvious that there will be no difference in the legal effect of the extinguishment of the landlord's title even though such title vests in the tenant by the very mode which puts an end to it in the landlord. Thus, where in a suit for eviction and realisation of arrears of rent, the tenant pleaded acquisition of paramount title to the suit house subsequent to his alleged tenancy, held, such a plea does not fall within the bar contemplated by S. 116. [A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 251, Rel. on; (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 580; A.I.R. 1952 Ori. 95; A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 209, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Ori. 44.

Where the tenant, not denying the title of the landlord in respect of those portions which form part of the tenanted accommodation, asserts his ownership by adverse possession over portions other than the portions which form a part of his tenanted accommodation, held, the provisions of S. 116 would not be available to the landlord. [A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 67, Rel. on]: (1994-2) 107 Punj.L.R. 50 (Del.).

Where defendants became vendees of the portion of the property which was let out to them under a sale deed registered prior in time to the sale deed registered in favour of plaintiff though it was executed prior to that executed in defendant's favour, held, the defendants could not be denied of their tenancy rights on the portion of the property which they were occupying as tenants prior to the sale in favour of the plaintiff, merely on the ground that they had taken a plea that they had become owners of the property in dispute under a sale deed and were not tenants under the plaintiff. The defendants might have been under a bona fide belief that since their sale deed was registered earlier in point of time than to that of the plaintiff, they had become the owners: A.I.R. 1991 P.&H. 291: 1991 Punj.L.J. 286: (1991-1) 99 Punj.L.R. 615.

20. Joining of co-sharer, etc.—Where a lessee from one of the joint sir holders is sued by the sir holder, he is estopped from contending that all the sir holders should have been joined as plaintiffs: 1949 R.D. 193.

Where in an eviction suit, the tenant took the plea that the landlord being only a co-sharer owner of the suit-property was not entitled to a decree for eviction, held, the tenant in such a suit cannot deny that the landlord had title to the premises at the commencement of the tenancy because under the general law in a suit between landlord and tenant, the question of title to the leased property is irrelevant and therefore, on the plea of non-impleading of other co-owners, the eviction suit could not be dismissed. [(1975) 1 Cal.L.J. 413, Affirm.]: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2335: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 184: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 899.

Where defendant-tenant executed a kerayanama in favour of plaintiff-landlord acknowledging him as his sole landlord, held, tenant was estopped from contending subsequently that suit for eviction filed by plaintiff-landlord was bad on the ground that plaintiff alone was not the sole landlord and he must have impleaded other sharers also in the suit: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 275.

Where respondent, one of the co-owners of the disputed premises, filed an eviction suit against appellant-tenant and the tenant contended that suit was incompetent in absence of other co-owner though the co-owner did not object to said claim of the respondent, held, the tenant was estopped from putting forth such a plea as rent had all along been collected by the respondent-landlord who filed the eviction suit: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 758: (1989) 1 S.C.C. 494: (1989) 37 Del.L.T. 305.

Where a tenant inducted his brother in his business in the demised premises as a partner and on partition of business between the two brothers, the tenancy fell in the share of the newly inducted partner who in his turn sold the business all with the tenancy to a third party, held, S. 116 would be attracted against all the three of them; none of them can deny the title of the landlord who had created the tenancy in the first instance. [A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 92, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 P.&H. 408: 1972 Cur.L.J. 543.

Two brothers, partners of plaintiff-firm, were joint tenants of the premises in question. One of them in his capacity as partner of the plaintiff-firm executed agreements of tenancy in favour of defendant. The conduct of the defendant throughout had been that it purported to take the tenancy not from the two brothers in their individual capacity but from the plaintiff-firm. When the plaintiff firm terminated the tenancy of the defendant, it contended that it was not the firm but the two brothers in their individual capacity who were the joint landlords of the defendant and quit notice given by the firm was not valid. Held, the defendant was estopped from denying the title of the plaintiff-firm in the impugned premises: A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 142: (1987) 1 Bom.C.R. 547.

Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (XXI of 1950), S. 44—Land leased by family of two brothers—Subsequently brothers dividing estate—One brother who had leased land cannot ask for resumption of total of whole land—Tenant not estopped

21. What amounts to disclaimer.—Denial of a mere derivative title does not amount to disclaimer of title: 1979 M.P.L.J. 155; 1991 M.P.L.R. 123; 1989 M.P.R.C.J. 164; 1982 M.P.R.C.J. (Note) 136. The law is that to amount to "disclaimer of title", so as to attract the penalty of forfeiture of lease also providing a ground for ejectment within the meaning of S. 12(1)(c) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, the tenant's act must take one of the two shapes; (i) the tenant may assert title in the suit premises in himself; (ii) the tenant may set up title in a third person. In both the cases, the act of the tenant would manifest denial of the title of his landlord in the suit property. The denial if clear and unequivocal and not vague would indubitably affect the interest of the landlord adversely and substantially. The tenant merely denying the landlord's title bonafidely with the object of seeking information of such title or with the object of having such title established before a Court of law so as to protect himself would not attract the charge of disclaimer of title: A.I.R. 1992 Madh. Pra. 115.

22. Construction of building by tenant.—(See also S. 115, Note 12, supra). Where a tenant constructed a building and continued to occupy when the owner was divested of his right over the land by a statutory notification but even thereafter the tenant by mistake continued to execute rent chits in favour of his erstwhile landlord, held, S. 116 was not attracted; the tenant was not estopped from contending that his erstwhile landlord has no title in the building and there was no relationship of landlord and tenant as between them: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Mad. 624.

23. Estoppel between mortgagor and mortgagee.—(See also Note 61 under S. 115). The principle of estoppel under S. 116 which applies to the case of a landlord and tenant apply equally to the case of a mortgagor and mortgagee in possession; a mortgagee is precluded from denying the title of the mortgagor during the pendency of the mortgage. This principle, however, will not apply when there is an eviction by title paramount. To constitute an eviction by a person claiming under a paramount title, it is not necessary that the tenant should be put out of possession or ejectment should be brought about. Threat of eviction is sufficient: 54 Mys H.C.R. 114.

A mortgagee cannot deny the title of his mortgagor on the date of the mortgage. It is, however, open to him to assert that on the death of the mortgagor, persons who are his heirs under the Hindu law did not succeed to his occupancy rights in accordance with the special rules laid down in Act XII of 1881: 122 I.C. 414: A.I.R. 1930 All. 108. See also 38 Mad.L.W. 266: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 635; (1940) 53 Mad.L.W. 492: (1941) 1 M.L.J. 554. It is not open to a mortgagor or to his successors in interest to deny his mortgagee's title A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 81: 1949 Nag.L.J. 212: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 290.

It is well-established that a mortgagee who has been put in possession by the mortgagor pursuant to a mortgage is estopped so long as that relationship continues between them from denying the mortgagor's title to the property. That rule prevents the mortgagee from disputing the title of the mortgagor and its application cannot be avoided by going into the very question and finding that the mortgagor had no title on the date of the execution of the mortgage: (1962) 1 M.L.J. 229: (1962) 75 Mad.L.W. 236: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 395.

The rule of estoppel that a mortgagee is not entitled to dispute the title of the mortgagor cannot be invoked in a case where the mortgagor's suit for possession is not based on the mortgage but is one in repudiation of the mortgage. [(1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 470; A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 431, Rel. on]: 1970 Raj.L.W. 115: 1969 W.L.N. 597.

A shop was rented out to the respondent on a rent of Rs. 5 per month by the petitioner. That shop had been usufructuarily mortgaged to the petitioner by the Jeer of the Manavala Mamuni Mutt of Srivilliputtur for a period of five years from 23rd May, 1941, for a sum of Rs. 550, without however, obtaining the sanction under S. 76 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act. On that ground, the usufructuary mortgage in favour of the petitioner was held to be void, on 31st March, 1945, by the Sub-Court of Ramanathapuram at Madurai, and this was confirmed by the High Court on 6th October, 1950. On 9th August, 1945, notice was given to both the petitioner and the respondent by the Mutt. The respondent attorned to the Mutt on or about 12th August, 1945. The petitioner did not reply to the Mutt's notice and kept quiet. The petitioner filed a suit for arrears of rent against the respondent on the ground that the respondent having accepted the lease from him and treated him as landlord, was estopped from denying his title till he had surrendered possession of the shop to him, or till he was actually evicted therefrom in due course of law by the rightful owner, the Mutt or was deemed to have been so evicted. Held, that a lease by an unauthorised person of properties over which he has no title to another, will not entitle him to receive the rent stipulated under the lease for all time to come, till 12th August, 1945, the respondent was bound to pay the rent to the petitioner who had given the lease to him, as he had not received any notice from the true owner, and had not also surrendered his possession and had, of course, not been evicted. The respondent really feared eviction by the true owner if he did not attorn to him after he had received the notice on 12th August, 1945. A real threat of eviction believed in by the respondent would be enough justification for the respondent's attornment, and would make it not a voluntary act on his part but an act necessitated by the exigencies of circumstances: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 406: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 518.

24. Estoppel between licensor and licensee.—The rule that tenant cannot deny his landlord's title extends to the case of a person coming in by permission as licensee: (1958) 60 Bom.L.R. 1150: I.L.R. (1958) Bom. 1356: A.I.R. 1960 Bom. 238. S. 116 merely states that the licensee ought not to deny the title of the licensor. It does not state that every licence is revocable at the instance of the lessor. Consequently, the licensee is not prevented from asserting that he must not be turned out: I.L.R. 7 Rang. 617: A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 29. As to licensee's estoppel, see I.L.R. 39 Cal. 439; I.L.R. 42 Cal. 262. See also 60 I.A. 297: I.L.R. 60 Cal. 980: 64 M.L.J. 103 (P.C.).

In an action for use and occupation, the tenant who occupies land by the licences of another ought not to be allowed to call upon the other to show title under which he let the land. This is not a mere technical rule, but is founded on public convenience and policy: A.I.R. 1959 Manipur 27.

Restoration of property to evacuee—Effect on right of lessee recognised as such by Custodian before restoration—Licensee of lessee—Another lease created in favour of licensee after restoration by person to whom property is restored—Right of former and subsisting lessee not affected by fresh lease—Protection of former lessee's rights under S. 48, T.P. Act—Extension of principle of estoppel to licensee—Former lessor is entitled to obtain possession of premises from his licensee: (1962) 64 Punj.L.R. 680.

25. Illustrative cases—(a) Where section 116 held to be applicable.—Where the plaintiff's suit for ejectment and possession was founded on the allegation of tenancy and refusal of the defendants to vacate after the determination of the tenancy and not on the basis of title, held, in such a case, the defendants were estopped from raising a question of title and the fact that the plaintiff had paid ad valorem Court-fees on the market value of the premises could not preclude him from invoking the rule of estoppel against the defendants. [A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 234, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 Madh. Pra. 117.

(b). Where section 116 is held to be not applicable.—Where the plaintiffs were neither original owners who put the defendant in possession nor were purchasers from the person who inducted the defendant in the suit property and the defendant tenant had not clearly expressly and unequivocally denied the title of the plaintiffs-landlord but had merely called upon the plaintiffs to prove their title and ownership, held, it could not be said that the defendant had incurred liability of eviction under S. 116 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1994 Guj. 18.

Eviction of tenant on ground of disclaimer of title—Real owner transferring rent premises under sham and bogus sale deed—Neither S. 109, T.P. Act nor S. 116, Evidence Act attracted—Suit for eviction dismissed: (1979) 1 Ren.C.J. 27 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where tenant was not inducted by the landlord and neither the rent receipts nor the contract of tenancy was proved, held, rule of estoppel was not applicable: 1983 M.P.W.N. 84.

Where in a suit for eviction the defendant admitted to be a tenant in disputed property with a further saying that he has never paid rent to plaintiff, held, relationship not established; such admission is of no consequence and does not operate as estoppel: 1982 M.P.W.N. 472.

Tenant of service land attached to a post—Person holding post ceasing to hold the same—Tenant is not precluded from saying that such person is not a landlord: A.I.R. 1964 Manipur 33.

26. Miscellaneous.—Ejectment suit by landlord—Adverse rights claimed by tenant—Independent suit is the remedy: (1927-28) 32 Cal.W.N. 867: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 546; (1930-31) 35 Cal.W.N. 652. Suit for ejectment—Plaintiff paying Court-fee under S. 7 (v), Court-fees Act and not under S. 7(ix) (cc)—Fact does not preclude plaintiff from invoking rule of estoppel: 1955 Nag. L.J. 314: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 234.

Party acquiring by adverse possession—Permissive possession after, no estoppel: A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 170. A lessee of land is under an obligation to surrender possession of the premises to his lessor from whom he derived possession; and until he fulfils that obligation, he is bound to pay his lessor either rent or damages for use and occupation. It is no doubt open to the sub-lessee to show that his title having expired he has surrendered possession to the original landlord from whom his lessor derived possession or to a person claiming by title paramount. In such cases no question of estoppel would arise; but when he is unable to plead a valid defence to his obligation to surrender possession, it would not be open to him to resist his lessor's demand for damages for the use and occupation during the period he has been in possession until he surrenders possession to the lessor. Even though therefore, the original lessee's title may have expired, by the expiration of the term of his lease, until the sub-lessee shows that he has renounced the obligation of surrendering possession to him by commencing to hold under some other person either the landlord of the original lessee (i.e., his lessor) or a person claiming by title paramount or by delivering possession to him, the mere fact that the original lessee's title has expired is no defence to a suit by him against the sub-lessee for arrears of rent or damages for use and occupation: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 478: (1937) 1 M.L.J. 566.

Estoppel between landlord and tenant—Previous denial of landlord's title in rent suit—Subsequent suit for eviction—By previous denial tenant is deemed to have waived his right to notice to quit: 1969 Ren. C.R. 791: 1969 Ker.L.R. 423.

Disclaimer by sub-tenant resulting in forfeiture bringing about termination of tenancy—He cannot claim to hold land as sub-lessee: 1963 Jab.L.J. 358.

Where in a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India, a new plea was raised by the petitioner-tenant that the suit-property was held by him in his own right, held, as said plea was neither raised earlier before Estate Officer of Cantonment Board nor in appeal, it could not be raised by the petitioner for the first time in writ petition. Further, as the petitioner himself had claimed to have occupied the suit-property as lessee, he could not question the title of Cantonment Board in view of S. 116: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 64 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

After accepting a person as his landlord, the tenant cannot question the title of such person during the continuance of tenancy. Where the disputed premises were under lease with the landlord and the tenancy started long after expiry of lease and thereafter the landlord obtained order of eviction against tenant but in revision the tenant pleaded for the first time that the landlord had no title to the premises at the commencement of the tenancy, held, the tenant could have taken said plea on the very date when the petition for eviction was filed by the landlord or at the earlier stage. The plea could not be agitated for the first time in revision: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 216: (1977) 1 Karn.L.J. 5.

Where the documents relating to leases and kabuliatnamas were inter-parties, held, any recitals therein describing the managers of the inam as owners could not be decisive of the nature of the property. Further, for, exercising rights under a lease, the lessor need not be the owner and a non-owner like a manager, a mortgagee with possession and any other person with possession even without title can lease out the properties and for that reason, he cannot be treated as the owner. At the best, the recitals in the lease-deeds and kabuliatnamas raise an estoppel against the tenant under S. 116, but do not operate as estoppel against any other person: (1993) 3 An.L.T. 56: (1993) 3 A.P.L.J. 169 (D.B.).

As a general rule, a suit based on tenancy and relationship of landlord and tenant should be decided on that basis alone; it should not be converted into a title suit. But where the tenant herself sets up a title adverse to the landlord, does not object to the framing of the issue of title, knowingly leads

117. Estoppel of acceptor of bill of exchange, bailee or licensee.—No acceptor of a bill of exchange shall be permitted to deny that the drawer had authority to draw such bill or to endorse it; nor shall any bailee or licensee be permitted to deny that his bailor or licensor had, at the time when the bailment or licence commenced, authority to make such bailment or grant such licence.

Explanation (1).—The acceptor of a bill of exchange may deny that the bill was really drawn by the person by whom it purports to have been drawn.

Explanation (2).—If a bailee delivers the goods bailed to a person other than the bailor, he may prove that such person had a right to them as against the bailor.

evidence thereon and gets an adverse finding from the trial Court, held, he cannot be permitted to contend in appeal or revision that no decree for possession could be granted: A.I.R. 1986 Raj. 187: 1986 Raj.L.R. 623 (F.B.).

Where the tenant in an eviction suit denied the relationship of the tenant and landlord as also the landlord's title to the property and both the pleas were found on evidence to be in the plaintiff's favour, held, the tenant was estopped from denying the plaintiff's title; decree of possession granted. [1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 498, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 Pat. 126.

Where the predecessor-in-interest of the respondents was admittedly a lessee under the petitioner as per revenue records and in consequence of S. 5 or S. 7 of the Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950 as amended in 1959, the petitioner became a statutory tenant under the State of Bihar, an inference which could not be disputed by any decision under the Bihar Land Reforms Act, held, it was not open to the respondents to deny the title of the petitioner to the lands on the basis of the decision to the contrary under the Bihar Municipal Survey Act; the petitioner's status as a statutory tenant under the State of Bihar could be changed only under the Bihar Land Reforms Act: (1991-1) 39 B.L.J.R. 428.

Suit by lessee—Estoppel—Lessee can sue provided claim of party other than lessor is consistent with the title of the lessor at the commencement of lease: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 965.

Suit for a declaration that tenancy of plaintiffs in certain premises subsists and that creation of tenancy in favour of second defendant by landlord, i.e., first defendant, in breach of terms of partnership between plaintiffs and second defendant is nullity—One K being joint tenant with the plaintiffs in the tenancy in their favour—K is necessary party to the suit—Second defendant not being trespasser or tenant on sufferance under plaintiffs and K—Plaintiffs cannot sue in their own name alone—Though a lessee inducted by a lessor cannot challenge his grantor's title, the frame of the suit being driving away a partner for breaking the terms of partnership that point did not arise—The well-settled practice in Calcutta High Court was to give a decree for joint possession together with the trespasser and leaving it to the plaintiff to work out his further rights by a suit for partition: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786.

S purchasing land at auction sale in name of his son—Land let out by S to predecessor-in-interest of defendants—Plaintiffs, deriving their title through S, bringing suit against defendants for assessment of fair and equitable rent—Defendants, held, were estopped from challenging title of S under S. 116, Evidence Act—Plea of bar under S. 66, C.P. Code, held, could not be entertained at instance of defendants and suit could not be defeated as not maintainable under that section: A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 151.

Section 117—Notes.

The provisions regarding estoppel contained in Ss. 115 to 117 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 are a mere shadow of what the modern principles of promissory estoppel have come to be. The greatest development in this area is that an independent action can now be found on the principle of promissory estoppel and it is no longer a principle available only as a shield. It can be used as weapon of offence. Gradually the modern doctrine of promissory estoppel has developed to an extent that it is no longer necessary that the party seeking to enforce the said principle must have suffered a detriment. It is enough if the promisee has altered his position on the faith of the representation: A.I.R. 1992 Del. 28 (D.B.).

CHAPTER IX

OF WITNESSES

118. Who may testify.—All persons shall be competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions, by tender years, extreme old age, disease, whether of body or mind, or any other cause of the same kind.

Explanation.—A lunatic is not incompetent to testify, unless he is prevented by his lunacy from understanding the questions put to him and giving rational answers to them.

See I.L.R. 36 Bom. 455: 12 I.C. 257 (estoppel between banker and customer). It is not open to the defendant to show that the signatory was in reality acting for an undisclosed principal, whether the defendant is a drawer or an acceptor: 23 Sind L.R. 478: A.I.R. 1929 Sind 172 (1).

Bailor and bailee—Automobile garage receiving car for repair—Garage owner is estopped from challenging title of person from whom car was received: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 554: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 374.

Possession of a person in fiduciary capacity—Is that of either a licensee or bailee: A.I.R. 1968 Madh. Pra. 81.

Defendant in its proposal form dated 23rd March, 1960 stating that Telco with which there was a hire-purchase agreement of truck had released it—Accepting proposal form hire-purchase agreement was entered into on the same day—Under conditions of agreement defendant admitted plaintiff to be owner of truck, characterising himself as a bailee of vehicle—Release of truck could only be obtained from Telco when payment, which was arranged to be paid through plaintiff, was made—Truck was released either on 25th March or 30th March, 1960—Held, that the defendant could and did transfer ownership of vehicle to plaintiff on or before 23rd March, 1960 although technically and in law he became its owner a few days later—He could not deny either the transfer of ownership or fact that plaintiff was owner of vehicle on the day when he entered into hire-purchase agreement—Facts in proposal form and agreement, held, indicated that ownership had been transferred by defendant by necessary implication and implied contract to plaintiff: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 7 (D.B.).

1. Scope and applicability.—S. 118, suggests that in India the rule generally is in favour of the admission of all the evidence of doubtful character though the weight to be attached will be a matter for the Court's discretion: 34 I.C. 976: (1916) 18 Bom.L.R. 266.

S. 118 provides that all persons shall be competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions, by reason of tender years, extreme old age, disease, whether of body or mind, or of any other cause of the same kind: 1992 Cal.Cr.L.R. 5: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2493: (1991) 2 Crimes 671 (D.B.).

According to the provisions of S. 118, if a witness is declared incapable of giving evidence due to insanity or any other reason, it is the duty of the Court to record its finding that the witness is incompetent to give his or her statement, and is also incapable of giving answers put to him or her. The fact that the witness has become incompetent to testify and so incapable of giving evidence, must be proved strictly: 1988 Rec.Cr.C. 198 (Raj.).

"Witness"—Meaning of: A.I.R. 1957 All. 396.

A general power-of-attorney holder of a party, cannot be said to be in the category of persons who are incapable of being witnesses as provided by S. 118, only on the ground that he holds the power-of-attorney; he is quite competent to depose before a Tribunal or a Court: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 711: (1982-2) 23 Guj.L.R. 337: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 108.

2. Competency of child witness.—Evidence substantially true not infrequently assumes too perfect a form and witnesses, such as children, not infrequently get a story by heart which is nonetheless a true story. The real tests are how consistent the story is with itself, how it stands the test of cross-examination and how far it fits in with the rest of the evidence and the circumstances of the case: 52 Cr.L.J. 917: A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 399.

The Act does not prescribe any particular age as a demarcating line for treating a witness incompetent to testify by reason of his or her tender years. The intellectual capacity of a child to understand questions and to give rational answers thereto is the sole test of testimonial competency: 1992 Cal.Cr.L.R. 5: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2493: (1991) 2 Crimes 671 (D.B.). See also 1993 (Supp.) 1 S.C.C. 78; 1993 (Supp.) 3 S.C.C. 667.

The competence of a child witness depends not so much on its years but its ability to understand the importance of taking an oath and the consequences of making a false statement; there is no precise age to determine competence of a witness; it depends on its capacity and intelligence to differentiate between the truth and falsehood as also the duty to speak the truth as assessed by the trial Judge; some of these methods cannot be photographed into the record: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252: I.L.R. (1979) 29 Raj. 992 (D.B.).

A child is always to be regarded as a dangerous witness because he may not understand the sanctity of oath and comprehend the danger and impiety of falsehood and also because he can easily be taught to relate a situation with the conviction that he has in fact seen it. Each cannot be laid down as an infallible rule that in no case the evidence of a child below a particular age should be accepted or acted upon; every case must depend on its own facts. If in a particular case the possibility of the witness having been tutored can with certainty be excluded and his evidence is free from any defect, is fairly impressive and can safely be regarded as true disclosure of the facts as they occurred, it ought not to be rejected simply because it has come from the mouth of a boy or a girl of tender age. The competency of a child to give evidence is not regulated by the age but by the degree of understanding he appears to possess, and no fixed rule can be laid down as to the credit that should be assigned to his testimony. Obviously the question depends upon a number of circumstances, such as the possibility of tutoring, the consistency of the evidence, how far has it stood the test of cross-examination and how far it fits in with the rest of the evidence: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1835: A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 193; I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 1274: 1971 Raj.L.W. 589.

It is well settled that the evidence of children is notoriously dangerous unless immediately available and unless received before the possibility of coaching is eliminated. There should be closer scrutiny of the evidence of child witnesses before the same is accepted by a Court of law. If a child, which has itself seen something of the occurrence, hears the conversation of other persons they become deeply engraved on its own mind and ultimately it believes it has itself seen what the others have related: I.L.R. 32 Pat. 217: A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 246; I.L.R. (1954) Trav.-Co. 1200: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 6. See also 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 418: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 153; I.L.R. (1955) Andhra 203.

The evidence of child witnesses is dangerous in the extreme and they live not unoften in a climate of make believe so that if they are inducted into the belief that a certain event or events has or have happened in a certain manner whether they have themselves seen the same or not then they easily mistake what they had been asked to believe for what they may not have seen themselves and are persuaded to testify to or speak of such things as if they have seen them for themselves while what has really happened is that they have been made or coached to think that things did happen or must have happened in a given manner. Therefore, the evidence of a child should be accepted with great caution. Where the evidence of the two children witnesses of tender age who were alleged to be the eye-witnesses was contradictory and their evidence and conduct was of such nature which lead to conclusion that they were not the eye-witnesses to the occurrence and were couched up to say certain things irrespective of whether they saw or not; their evidence could be of no use to prosecution and no unhesitating reliance could be placed upon such evidence: I.L.R. (1966) 16 Raj. 252: 1966 Raj.L.W. 382.

There is a general belief that a child is artless, innocent and uncrafty. But at the same time, a child is susceptible to external influences and can be easily tutored as what he is to speak in a Court. Once the child has been influenced and tutored to give a particular statement, he fails to distinguish between what he has seen and what he has been tutored due to his raw understanding and softness of brain. Therefore, while assessing and evaluating the testimony of a child witness, the possibility of his being tutored and influenced, especially when there is an opportunity for doing so, will have to be consistently kept in view. If after carefully scrutinizing the testimony of a child witness, it appears pure, serene and unpolluted from external influences, it is entitled to the highest credit. But S. 118 makes the understanding as the sole test of competency of a witness. Therefore, the competency of a child to give evidence depends not on his age but the degree of his understanding. The section lays emphasis on the understanding and not on the age of a witness: 1985 Raj.L.W. 601: (1985) 1 W.L.N. 581: 1985 Cr.L.R. 428 (D.B.).

Although the unsworn testimony of a child is admissible, it must be received with great caution. Children of tender age, generally speaking are pliable and their evidence can easily be shaped and moulded. They can be made to repeat glibly a story put into their mind. They do not possess the discretion to distinguish between what they witnessed and what they have heard. It is, therefore, desirable that absolute reliance should not be placed on the evidence of a solitary child witness. If, after carefully scrutinising the evidence, the Court comes to the conclusion that there is a great impress to truth in it, there is no bar in law in the way of accepting the evidence of a child witness. The Court should look for corroboration as a matter of caution and not as a rule of law. Thus, where there was sufficient corroboration to the evidence of the child witness and his evidence gave the impression of truth, held, it could not be said that simply because he was a child witness his evidence could not be looked into: (1994) 2 An.L.T. 261: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3496 (D.B.).

A child is not an incompetent witness whose evidence may have to be discarded always. They are generally considered to be prone to tutoring, and when something is repeated to them by their elders, they begin to imagining them and really feel them to be the truth. Their innocent brains are like blank papers and can retain anything written over them by repeated communication. But that does not mean that they cannot remember anything. The memories of children are also better and what they see specially when under strain, they seldom forget for a long time unless it is overwritten by some effort. It is not that what they state is always result of imagination but the same may sometimes be an effect of imagination created by others. And for that, one needs another to cast that imagination and then lastly the duty of Court would be to work out the portions improved and deel with them according to law: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3709 (All.) (D.B.).

Though no precise criteria for appraising the evidence of a child witness can be laid down, yet one broad test is whether there was possibility of any tutoring. If this test is found in the positive, the Court will not, as a rule of prudence, convict the accused on a murder charge on the basis of child evidence unless it is corroborated to material extent in material particulars, directly connecting the accused with the crime. At the same time, if otherwise the testimony of a child witness is not shown to be tainted with any such infirmities, it calls for due credence. A child in the innocent purity of its mind and unsophistication is more likely to come forth with version which is unbiased, unsoiled, natural and forthright. It is less prone to manipulation, motivation and spirit of vendetta. It can as well be spontaneous and inspiring, once the child is enabled to over-come the initial shock and awe, and ensured protection, security, compassion, and given confidence to come out with what was seen.

Further, some of the children are fairly intelligent, truthful and straight forward, and there is no reason to start with a presumption of untrustworthiness in the assessment of their evidence. The merit of evidence has to be judged on the touchstone of its own inherent intrinsic worth. Courts should also, while permitting full scope for cross-examination of such witnesses, be careful to see that they are not subjected to unnecessary confusion, harassment or unduly made conscious of the awe of formal Court atmosphere and the public gaze: (1981) 20 Del.L.T. (S.N.) 55 (D.B.).

The Court is at liberty to test the capacity of a witness to depose by putting proper questions. It has to ascertain in the best way it can whether from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding he is able to give a rational account of what he has seen or heard on a particular occasion. If a person of tender years can satisfy those requirements, his competency as a witness is established. The question whether a witness has intelligence enough to understand the import and significance of questions or to give rational answers is not the same as the competency to testify. The Court has a discretion to form its own opinion whether a child witness has sufficient understanding to be qualified to be a witness. The question of the capacity of the witness to testify is a question for the Judge himself to decide and not for the jury although after he has decided in favour of the competency of the witness, it is for the jury to determine the amount of credit to be given to the statements made by such a witness: 1988 Rec.Cr.C. 198 (Raj.).

Child witnesses are easily susceptible to tutoring and to telling imaginative stories and their evidence must, therefore, be scrutinised with extreme care and caution before being acted upon as true and dependable. For appraising the evidence of a child witness, the first test is whether there is any evidence of tutoring. If this test is found to be positive, the Court should not convict an accused on a serious charge like murder, relying solely upon the evidence of a child witness, unless it is corroborated in material particulars connecting the accused with the crime. This precaution should be taken even if there is no infirmity in the evidence of a child witness: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1301 (Cal.) (D.B.).

It is judicially recognised that a child witness is often times a dangerous witness. Any mistake and discrepancy in the statement of a child witness is ascribed to innocence or failure to understand by the child and undue weight is given to what may merely be a well taught lesson. Hence, it is a rule of caution to accept the evidence of child witness only when satisfaction is reached that it is free from tutoring and upon close scrutiny it is found to bear the stamp of naturalness and truth. But where there was no scope of tutoring the child witness because of the check furnished by the F.I.R. in which information given by child witness to her father about the occurrence was recorded and said child witness had exhibited a lot of understanding and maturity in her evidence, held, her evidence did not suffer from infirmity usually attached to the evidence of a child witness. [A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 406, Rel. on]: 1992 M.P.L.J. 512 (D.B.).

A child's evidence is not inadmissible merely because no oath was administered to it. The only test of competency is capacity to understand questions and to give rational answers: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 491: (1974) 1 Cut.W.R. 428 (D.B.).

A witness aged 11 years is a child witness, but is nonetheless a competent witness. The Court has to ascertain, in the best way it could, whether from the extent of her intellectual capacity and understanding, the witness was able to give a rational account of what the witness had seen, heard of what was done at the particular occasion. The only test of competency is the capacity to understand the questions put and to give rational answers. The decision on that question primarily rests on the trial Judge who sees the witness, notices the manner and the apparent intelligence or lack of intelligence of the witness, and can also resort, to any examination which will tend to disclose her capacity and intelligence, as well as his/her understanding of the obligation of oath. In short, he has to formulate his opinion as to whether the witness understood the duty of speaking the truth, although he or she might not understand the nature of the oath or affirmation.

If the finding of the trial Judge is to the effect that the witness had the capacity to understand the questions and to answer them in a rational manner, the competency under the law is fully established. But the question of credibility, of course, still remains to be satisfied. For this corroboration is required about the statements made by the witness: (1977) 2 Kam.L.J. 341.

In a case where from the answers given by the child witness to some questions put to him, it was clear that he did not understand them and from other questions and answers it appeared that the statement of the child witness could not safely be relied on as a piece of evidence, he was not a competent witness within the meaning of S. 118 and his statement could not be deemed to be admissible evidence in the case. The question whether the trial Judge's conclusion regarding the competency or otherwise of a child-witness can be considered by the appellate Court also and it is, therefore, very desirable that the trial Judge in such a case should preserve on the record apart from the child witness's evidence in the case, some other questions and answers which could help the Court of appeal to come to the conclusion whether or not the trial Judge's decision in regard to the competency of the child witness was right or erroneous: A.I.R. 1968 All. 58.

As pointed out in A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 291 minor discrepancies in testimony of the child witnesses are proof of its truth rather than a badge of falsehood: A.I.R. 1971 Him. Pra. 17: 1971 Sim.L.J. 211: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1750.

The evidence of a child witness should be accepted with great caution: 1959 All.W.R. (H.C.) 602: 1959 All.Cr.R. 503: 1959 All.L.J. 736.

It cannot be said that each and every child witness must without distinction be described as untrustworthy. The real test for either accepting or rejecting the testimony of a child is to see how consistent the story spoken to by it is, how the evidence stands the test of cross-examination and how far it fits in with the rest of the evidence and the circumstances of the case: 1960 Ker.L.T. 435: 1960 Ker.L.J. 377

The test for accepting the testimony of a child witness is whether the child is of sufficient understanding and intellectual capacity to relate what the child has seen or heard at a particular time. If the child can satisfy this condition, the competency of the child as a witness is established; the mere circumstance that the child is unable to comprehend either the spiritual or the legal implications of an oath or a solemn affirmation in consequence of tender age would not render the child incompetent to give evidence of facts within the child's personal knowledge. The inability of the child or omission to explain the difference between truth and falsehood which are abstract notions is not a proper or sufficient ground by itself to disqualify the child from being a witness: 55 Mys.H.C.R. 134.

Though the evidence of a child witness can be relied upon, Courts must be careful to examine the evidence to exclude the possibility of any tutoring: 1959 An.L.T. 851: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1302: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 490.

There are exceptions to the general rule that it is dangerous to place implicit reliance on the evidence of a child witness. The Court should consider the evidence regard being had to the facts of the given case, because the question if what the child witness stated was a truthful version of the occurrence and not a tutored one had to be decided on the fact of the particular case. Much depends on the age, understanding of the child, opportunity to witness, the occurrence and the time that elapsed between the occurrence and the version thereof related by him: 1982 Ker.L.T. 692.

Evidence of child witness—Admissibility—Factors to be considered. See 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 140 (Cal.).

It is a matter of common knowledge that most of the girls in Orissa attain puberty in between 12th and 13th years. Ordinarily, at that age, girls have full power of understanding and to give rational answers: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 726: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 294: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 144.

Where the only eye-witness was a teenager girl, held, her evidence has to be scrutinised with care and caution: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 55: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 219.

Evidence of a child witness cannot corroborate another child witness: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 43.

When testimony of a child witness is natural, it can certainly be relied upon: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 139.

3. Necessity of corroboration of evidence of child witness.—The tender years of the child, coupled with other circumstances appearing in the case such as its demeanour, unlikelihood of tutoring and so forth, may render corroboration unnecessary, but this is a question of fact in every case. Corroboration is not a rule of practice but of practice. The Court should not lightly rely upon an uncorroborated evidence of child witness unless after adopting all precautions it is considered reliable. The statement of a child witness should be scrutinized with "extreme care and caution" when he is the only eye-witness. [A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 3, Rel. on]: 1983 Raj.L.W. 80; 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 39 (Gau.).

The evidence of a child witness should be accepted with great caution. Where the evidence of child witness is not corroborated by any other independent evidence, it will not be safe to rely on such evidence. [A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 406; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 135, Rel. on]: 1982 M.P.L.J. 772 (D.B.).

The evidence of children is notoriously dangerous unless immediately available. There should be a closer scrutiny of the evidence of child witness than the evidence of other witnesses, before the same is accepted by a Court of law. Where there are major discrepancies in their evidence and their conduct in the circumstances of the case was also extraordinary, in the absence of any independent corroboration of their evidence, it is unsafe to base a conviction on it: 27 Cut.L.T. 169.

Per P.B. Mukerji, J.—A child witness is a competent witness under the law unless the Court considers that by reason of tender years such witness is prevented from understanding the questions or from giving rational answers to such questions. A Judge should warn the jury that it is unsafe to act entirely on the uncorroborated evidence of a child witness. But this again is not a rule of law and it is proper and competent in a Court of law for the Judge or the jury to be so satisfied even after bearing the caution in mind that the child witness is a witness of truth and of facts and in that case to accept such testimony: I.L.R. (1953) 1 Cal. 330.

With regard to a child witness, the rule of prudence is well established that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction. This rule, which according to the cases has hardened into one of law, is not that corroboration is essential, but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge and the jury, in jury cases, and it must find place in the charge, before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained. The tender years of the child, coupled with other circumstances appearing in the case, such, for example, as its demeanour, unlikelihood of tutoring and so forth, may render corroboration unnecessary but that is a question of fact in every case. The only rule of law is that this rule of prudence must be present to the mind of the Judge or the jury as the case may be and be understood and appreciated by him or them. There is no rule of practice that there must, in every case, be corroboration before a conviction can be allowed to stand. Thus, where there were serious infirmities in the testimony of the girl child of 16 years, held, her testimony could not be believed without corroboration. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54, Rel. on]: 1979 Bom.C.R. 6 (D.B.).

A child is a competent witness and although legally there is no bar to accepting the uncorroborated testimony of a child witness, yet prudence requires that Courts should not act on the uncorroborated evidence of a child whether sworn or unsworn. It would therefore, be a matter of enquiry for the Court to ascertain as to whether the testimony of the child witness can be absolutely relied upon. For this, certain precautions have been prescribed and the trial Judge is expected to observe such precautions so that not only he is satisfied as to the veracity of the witness, but the Court before which the case goes in appeal is also in a position to ascertain the merit of evidence in order to uphold or reject the opinion thus formulated by the trial Judge: (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 216 (D.B.).

It is a sound rule in practice not to act on the uncorroborated evidence of a child whether sworn or unsworn but this is a rule of prudence and not of law: I.L.R. (1954) Trav.-Co. 1200: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 6; 1959 All.L.J. 239: A.I.R. 1959 All. 409. Held, that the witness aged about 4 years and 3 months was prevented from understanding the questions put to him, and that it was not safe to act on his evidence without corroboration since there was likelihood of his being tutored: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 282: I.L.R. (1955) Punj. 369. The unsworn testimony of a child is not adequately corroborated by similar evidence of other children: I.L.R. (1956) Andhra 203.

There is no bar legally to accept even the uncorroborated testimony of child witness and only prudence requires that the Court should not act on the uncorroborated evidence of a child.

It is very desirable that a trial Judge should preserve on record, apart from the evidence of the child witness in the case, the questions he put to the witness in the preliminary examination and the answers, which would help the appellate Court to come to the conclusion whether or not the trial Judge's decision in regard to the competency of the child witness was right or wrong: 1960 Ker.L.T. 430: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1213: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 301.

The weight to be attached to the evidence of a child-witness will depend on the circumstances of each case. It cannot be held that the unsworn testimony of a child witness must always be corroborated by some sworn testimony. Such corroboration can be by the unsworn testimony of another child witness. However, the evidence of both the child witnesses is to be looked at with care and acted upon with caution: 1968 Raj.L.W. 1: 1968 Cr.L.J. 270.

Normally, evidence of child witnesses should not be accepted as it is notoriously dangerous unless immediately available and unless narrated before any possibility of coaching is eliminated; there should be closer scrutiny of the evidence of child witness before the same is accepted by a Court of law. In the Indian Evidence Act, the evidence of a child witness is made admissible whether corroborated or not. It is a sound rule in practice not to act on the uncorroborated evidence of a child, whether sworn or unsworn, but this is a rule of prudence and not of law: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 726: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 294: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 144; I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 505.

The rule of corroboration of the statement of a child witness is not a rule of practice but it is rather a rule of prudence. That rule has been crystallized with the experience of Judges who very often find such witnesses under influence and their testimony tainted by extraneous circumstances. If the statement of a child witness inspires confidence and there is unlikelihood of tutoring and his demeanour is found straight forward by the trial Judge, no corroboration would be required of his statement. The tender years of the child which is the victim of the sexual offence coupled with the other circumstances rather render corroboration unnecessary, which, of course, is a question of fact in every case: A.I.R. 1971 Him. Pra. 17: 1971 Sim.L.J. 211: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1750.

There is no rule of law that evidence of a child witness cannot in any circumstances be acted upon without any corroboration of direct nature, but corroboration of proved circumstantial evidence or a confession, would be enough to base a conviction. Child of 12 years of age can be a competent witness with intellectual capacity and capability of giving rational account of what he has seen or heard. Where a child witness was capable of giving reasonable account as found from his straight forward deposition and his version was found consistent at the investigation stage as well as at the trial, held, his evidence could be relied upon: 1992 Cr.L.J. 733: (1992) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 29 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Generally speaking, the evidence of a child witness requires corroboration in some material particulars implicating the accused. In the Indian Evidence Act, there is no such provision and the evidence is made admissible whether corroborated or not. Once there is admissible evidence, a Court can act upon it; corroboration unless required by law, goes only to add to the weight and value of the evidence. It is a sound rule of practice not to act on the uncorroborated evidence of a child, whether sworn or unsworn, but this is a rule of prudence and not of law: (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 183 (D.B.).

Even if there are no infirmities in the evidence of a young boy, it is desirable to seek corroboration of his evidence in view of his tender age. There are many circumstances and situations in which it is unwise to found settled conclusions on the testimony of one person alone. The reasons are diverse. The central principle of criminal law is that a person should only be convicted of a crime if those in whose hands the decision rests are sure that his guilt has been established. It is, therefore, dangerous to convict a person for an offence of murder on the uncorroborated evidence of a child of tender age, more so when he improves his statement before the Sessions Judge, on his statement before the

Where the conviction of accused under S. 302, I.P. Code was based on the sole evidence of a child eye-witness of tender age and it appeared that the child did not disclose the identity of accused soon enough till she was examined by Police many days after the occurrence though she had many opportunities and there were many infirmities in her evidence, which was uncorroborated as regards the identification of the accused, held, that it was unsafe to convict the accused on the uncorroborated evidence of the child: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 505.

Conviction on evidence of sole testimony of child witness, held, is not impermissible: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1515 (Gau.). See also (1979) 16 Del.L.T. 122 (S.C.).

Where an offence was committed during night and the entire case rested on a child witness who stated that she saw the accused in the lantern's light but fact of the lantern burning was not stated nor the accused were named to the Police and there were also other contradictions in her evidence, held, the accused could not be convicted on her evidence: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1131: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1426: 1993 S.C.C. (Cr.) 209.

4. Preliminary enquiry to test competency of child witness.—The Court should satisfy itself before recording his statement that he understands what is meant by truth and also whether he is intelligent to answer questions and remember what has taken place: 1952 Raj.L.W. 20.

It is necessary for a Court before examining a child of tender years, as witness to satisfy itself that the child is sufficiently intellectually developed to comprehend what he has seen and to give an intelligent account of it to the Court. It is the duty of the Court to ascertain before recording his statement that he understood questions put to him and was capable of giving rational answers: A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 153: I.L.R. (1951) Raj. 844.

S. 118 vests in the Court the discretion to decide whether an infant is or is not disqualified to be a witness by reason of understanding or lack of understanding; but this discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner. No doubt, the proposition that the competency of the witness to understand and give rational answers should be tested by Court by interrogating him before his examination is commenced, is not quite justified by the provisions of the section. But such a course should be pursued where the circumstance of the case make it plainly desirable: I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 569: (1938-39) 43 Cal.W.N. 117: A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 182.

All persons shall be competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them or from giving rational answers to those questions. The inability could be due to tender age, extreme old age or other reasons. The wholesome procedure of putting preliminary questions to test the capacity is not the best test to ascertain that capacity. The best test is the evidence itself and the manner in which it is given. In testing the capacity of child witnesses to testify if questions are put, they must be proper questions. The questions must be to ascertain in the best way whether from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding he is able to give rational account of what he has seen or heard on a particular occasion. A person of tender age if satisfies the above requirements, his capacity is established: (1991) 2 Ker.L.J. 838: (1991) 2 Ker.L.T. 838.

Though ordinarily a preliminary examination as to competency of a child witness is to be made to see whether it is capable of understanding questions and giving rational answers, it cannot be held that without such preliminary examination, its statement is inadmissible. Thus, when a child witness is not expressly held to be competent and has not been preliminarily examined but it gives rational answers to questions, its statement cannot be rejected on the ground that it is not a competent witness: 1968 Raj.L.W. 1: 1968 Cr.L.J. 270.

The omission to question such a witness before he is examined or the failure to record the opinion of the Judge as to whether the witness understood the duty of speaking the truth may not by itself vitiate the judgment. The credibility of the witness has to be judged in the light of the circumstances in each case: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 81: 1954 Ker.L.T. 758: 1955 Cr.L.J. 842. See also I.L.R. 41 Cal. 406 [Absence of such examination does not invalidate trial.]

Under S. 118 of the Evidence Act, it is imperative that the Court should test the competency of a child witness before examining him. It should test his intellectual capacity by putting a few simple and ordinary questions and also judge the competency of the witness during the course of his examination and say something to that effect after the statement is over so that the appellate Court may feel satisfied as to the capacity of the child to give evidence: 1950 Raj.L.W. 357: A.I.R. 1951 Raj. 37.

S. 118 has been worded negatively. If the Court would consider that a particular witness does not understand the question put to him and fails to give rational answers to those questions, the Court would not proceed to take evidence of that witness. Where there is no record of the Court's opinion that the child understands the questions put to him but yet the Court proceeds to record the evidence, it must be taken that the Court considered the witness as competent to testify. There is no provision in law to ask preliminary questions to test the capacity of a child witness to testify, though it is always a wholesome course to be adopted. If in fact the child is examined as a witness, the best test of his capacity to testify is the evidence itself and the manner in which it is given. There is nothing illegal in the procedure if the Court satisfies itself by recording the evidence straightway without resorting to preliminary questions. The failure to record the opinion as to the competency of the child-witness alone will not be the reason to treat the evidence inadmissible: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 422: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 100; 1971 All.W.R. 61 (D.B.).

Where a young child is called as a witness, the first step for the Judge or Magistrate to take is to satisfy himself by questioning the child that it is a competent witness within the meaning of S. 118: 1940 Rang.L.R. 104: A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 402; (1918) 20 Bom.L.R. 365. See also 15 Mys.L.J. 217: 42 Mys.H.C.R. 295.

It is very desirable that a trial Judge, who has a child witness before him should preserve on the record, apart from the child witness evidence in the case, some other questions and answers which could help the Court of Appeal to come to the conclusion whether or not the trial Judge's decision in regard to the competency of the child witness was right or erroneous: 1959 All.L.J. 239: 1959 Cr.L.J. 796: A.I.R. 1959 All. 409; 1982 Ker.L.T. 692 (D.B.).

It is a rule of prudence, though there is no legal requirement, that not only it is desirable that a preliminary examination of a child witness should be made by the Court but that a formal record of such examination should also be maintained. In a criminal prosecution, where the fate of the accused depends on the testimony of such a witness, the imperative necessity of voir dire has been underlined with greater emphasis for obvious reasons. It may be that the incompetence of such a witness to depose to the res gestae or his ignorance about the duty to speak the truth may often come out during the examination of the witness. However, it is always desirable to resort to a preliminary examination which will tend to disclose his capacity and intelligence, for, such an examination may expose even a witness who has been fully tutored and who, on that amount, might be able to stand the test of cross-examination. The record of such preliminary examination, if maintained, will enable the appellate Court which does not have the opportunity to watch the demeanour of the witness, to apply its own mind and to review the decision of the trial Court Judge, if need arises on these matters. It is for these reasons that voir dire and the maintenance of its formal record have been accepted as an established rule of practice in our Courts.

Judges and Magistrates should, therefore, always resort to voir dire and maintain its record and also record their opinion that the child understands the duty of speaking the truth and state why they think that, otherwise the credibility of the witness may be seriously affected, so much so, that in some cases it may be necessary to reject the evidence altogether. Even if it is not rejected outright, the appellate Court might experience a handicap in the process of assessment of the evidence of such witness: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 254.

Where in order to ascertain the level of understanding of child witness the trial Judge conducted a preliminary examination but it omitted to record questions put to her in said examination and only answers were recorded, held, such an omission would not make evidence of child witness unworthy of acceptance: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1432 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where there is no record of the Court's opinion that the child understands the questions put to him but yet the Court proceeds to record the evidence, it must be taken that the Court considered the witness as competent to testify. There is no provision in law to ask preliminary questions to test the capacity of a child witness to testify, though it is always a wholesome course to be adopted. The object of such preliminary questioning is not to legalise the evidence but only to save time of the Court not to further progress in the examination of such witness if it is satisfied that the child is not a competent witness. If in fact the child is examined as a witness, the best test of his capacity to testify is the evidence itself and the manner in which it is given. [A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 100, Rel. on]: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 765.

The omission of the trial Judge to put questions to a child witness, unconnected with the case to satisfy himself whether the witness is able to understand the questions and to return coherent answers, and to incorporate the preliminary examination in the record, would not render the evidence of child witness inadmissible or unreliable. The competency of the child witness can be ascertained even at the appellate stage by going through the statement of the witness: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1466.

It is necessary for a Court before examining a child of tender years as witness to satisfy itself that the child is sufficiently intellectually developed to comprehend what he or she has seen and to give an intelligent account of it to the Court. If the Court is of the opinion that by reason of tender years and defective or immature understanding the child could not have perceived the particular incident to prove which he or she is produced as a witness, the Court should not only refrain from administering the oath to him or her but should also decline to examine him or her as a witness: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252: I.L.R. (1979) 29 Raj. 992 (D.B.).

When a witness is a person of tender years or extreme old age or a person who suffers from disease or other abnormality of the body or mind, the Court is alerted to test his competency. Similarly, where a witness is a child, the Court is alerted on the need to decide whether oath can be administered. Ordinarily, this satisfaction is to be arrived at by preliminary examination of the witness by the Court. This does not mean that in the absence of preliminary examination the evidence becomes inadmissible since the general rule is in favour of the competency and satisfaction, if necessary, can be arrived in the course of the evidence. However, trial Courts would do well to conduct preliminary examination to satisfy themselves in regard to the competency under S. 118 as well as under the proviso to S. 4(1) of the Oaths Act. It is highly desirable to bring on record the questions and answers put to the witness and to make a record of the satisfaction of the Court. Even in the absence of specific record of preliminary questions or the satisfaction the appellate Court could examine the nature and tenor of the evidence recorded, the manner in which the witness faced in cross-examination and satisfy itself about the competency under both the provisions: 1994 Cr.L.J. 432 (Gau.) (D.B.).

While it is desirable that Judges and Magistrates should always record their opinion that the child understands the duty of speaking the truth, such an opinion of the Magistrate or Judge can also be gathered from the circumstances even when there is no such formal certificate. In the present case, though the actual questions put by the Sessions Judge have not been recorded, it is clear from the note made by him before examining this witness that he had questioned her for the purpose of ascertaining whether she knew the nature of the oath, the child witness appears to have stated before the Judge that she had come to speak about what she saw and that if she should tell a lie, God would punish her. The Judge had taken her evidence after solemn affirmation. Having regard to these circumstances and also from the way she has given evidence, it is clear that she was a competent witness and that there is no valid ground against the admissibility of her evidence: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 986: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 48: 1960 Cr.L.J. 373.

When young children of about 13 or 14 years of age are produced in law Courts as witnesses, it is the duty of the Presiding Officers to ascertain whether they are competent witnesses before they are examined and this can be done by putting a few questions to them in order to find out whether they are intelligent enough to understand what they had seen and afterwards inform the Court thereof. In the case of village boys, it is all the more necessary on account of their low intelligence and power of perception: A.I.R. 1952 Bhopal 25: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1366.

The Evidence Act does not prescribe any particular age as a demarcating line for treating a witness incompetent to testify by reason of his or her tender years. The intellectual capacity of a child to understand questions and to give rational answers thereto is the sole test of testimonial competency. The provisions of S. 4 of the Oaths Act read with

S. 118 of the Evidence Act rather indicate that a child aged 12 years or above is normally expected to have attained a minimum faculty of understanding so as to engender a prima facie presumption of his testimonial competency. Normally, when a child below 12 years of age appears before a Court as a witness, the Court should before administering oath or affirmation to him satisfy itself by putting appropriate questions that he can understand ordinary questions and give intelligible and rational answers thereto. Where, however, the witness appears to be aged 12 years or more such examination on the voir dire, i.e., preliminary examination by the Judge before administering oath, may not be necessary except where the Judge has reason to doubt his testimonial competency or where an objection is raised at the very beginning about such competency of the witness. Such objection may, however, be taken also during the continuance of the examination of the witness. Where in a murder case, no objection regarding the testimonial competency of child witness, aged 12/13 years was at all taken at any stage in the trial Court, and the trial Judge also never doubted the testimonial competency of the witness and her evidence read as a whole did not militate against such competency of her and her evidence was also corroborated by other eye-witnesses as well as by circumstances including prompt reporting of the culprit's name to the Police, held, her evidence was clearly admissible: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2493: 1992 Cal.Cr.L.R. 5: (1991) 2 Crimes 671 (D.B.).

Though the Judge should always, when dispensing with an oath, make a clear record that he was satisfied that the child understands the duty to speak the truth and should also state his reason for thinking so. But the evidence of a child witness recorded without putting a few preliminary questions to satisfy as to his competency cannot, as a matter of law, be treated as washed off the record altogether. Thus, where on a careful examination of the answers given by the child witness in his cross-examination it was found that he was in a position to understand the questions put to him and that he was in a position to understand the distinction between truth and untruth and that he was able to give coherent answers, held, the omission of the trial Judge to put preliminary questions to the child witness to satisfy himself whether the witness was able to understand the questions and give coherent answers and his failure to incorporate the preliminary questions and answers in the deposition did not render the evidence of the child witness either inadmissible of unreliable. [1972 A.P. High Court Notes 266; 1973 Cr.L.J. 1466 (All.); 1983 Cr.L.J. 773 (Cal.), Rel. on]: (1994) 2 An.L.T. 261: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3496 (D.B.); 1977 Raj.L.W. 146.

The failure of the Judge to record the questions put by him to a child witness to elicit his competency to depose and the answers given by him to such questions is not a serious irregularity especially when the Judge has made a note that as a result of questioning the witness he was satisfied that he could understand the question put to him and that he was competent to give evidence. Though it may be desirable to make a record of such questions and answers the failure to record the same is not fatal. The decision primarily rests with the trial Judge: I.L.R. (1954) Trav.-Co. 1200: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 6.

When a Court has got to deal with a child witness, before deciding that the witness is a competent witness, Court must come to the conclusion that, by reason of his age, the child is not intellectually deficient. The law does not cast a duty upon a Judge, to ascertain by way of voir dire, the competency of a person to be a witness. In a large majority of cases, the presumption would be that the person is a competent witness. But, when the Court has got to deal with a child witness who is only five years old, it would not be proper to rely on any such presumption. In such a case it is desirable that the Judge should undertake a voir dire with a view to satisfy himself that the witness is a competent witness. Of course, the view which the Judge would form at the preliminary enquiry would not be the final view and the Judge might have to change that view if the examination and the cross-examination reveals his incompetency: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 57: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 11.

Although there is no provision, to have a preliminary examination of a child witness, such a course is desirable and should be resorted to, because it offers an opportunity to the Court to asses the mental capacity of the child witness. Failure to do this in a particular case, however, does not vitiate the proceedings. Although legally there is no bar in accepting the uncorroborated testimony of a child witness yet prudence requires that Courts should not act on the uncorroborated evidence of a child whether sworn or unsworn: (1960) 1 Ker.L.R. 95: 1960 Ker.L.J. 137: 1960 Ker.L.T. 80: I.L.R. (1960) Ker. 256.

While it is desirable that Judges and Magistrates should always record their opinion that the child understands the duty of speaking the truth, such an opinion of the Magistrate or Judge can also be gathered from the circumstances even when there is no such formal certificate: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 986: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 48.

In order to be satisfied with the credentiality of a child witness, the Court is required to take safeguard as a necessary condition precedent so as to be satisfied about a child being conscious of the difference between right and wrong, truth and untruth and the sanctity of an oath administered to him. The Judge or Magistrate must record an opinion that the child understands the duty of speaking the truth.

In order to make the former statement admissible under S. 157 it is not necessary that the witness to be corroborated must also, besides making the former statement at or about the time the fact took place, say in Court in his testimony that he had made the former statement: 1992 Cal.Cr.L.R. 106.

It is Court's duty to first ascertain the intellectual capacity and capability of the child witness of giving rational answers: 1982 M.P.W.N. 452.

Failure of Judge to certify that child understood duty of speaking truth—Evidence will still be admissible: 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 39 (Gau.).

Where there is no preliminary examination, it is the recorded statement of a child, which ordinarily furnishes sufficient material to judge the competency of that witness. If the recorded statement of a child witness shows that he or she has a rational understanding, it cannot be wiped off merely on account of the absence of voir dire. Thus, where though no preliminary examination was made by the trial Court to ascertain the competency of the victim-child witness, to testify as to whether she understood the sanctity of oath and yet she was examined as witness after administration of the oath and she had given rational answers, held, the absence of voir dire did not render ipso facto her statement inadmissible: 1984 Raj.L.W. 10.

The Court has a discretion to form its own opinion whether a child witness has sufficient understanding to be qualified to be a witness. The question of the capacity of the witness to testify is a question for the Judge himself to decide and not for the Jury, although after he has decided in favour of the competency of the witness, it is for the Jury to determine the amount of credit to be given to the statements made by such a witness: 1959 Cr.L.J. 584: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 306.

5. Administering oath to a child witness.—As to competency to testify of a person who is unable to understand oath and its significance, see 10 O.C. 337: 7 Cr.L.J. 89; (1918) 20 Bom.L.R. 305.

Child witness—Omission to administer oath—Effect—Court should accept it with caution and should require substantial corroboration before acting upon it: 35 Cut.L.T. 18: 1969 Cr.L.J. 626: I.L.R. (1969) Cut. 66: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 105.

Notwithstanding S. 5 of the Oaths Act, a child's evidence is not inadmissible merely on the ground that no oath was administered to him. S. 13 of the Oaths Act governs such cases: 22 I.C. 737: I.L.R. 38 Mad. 550.

S. 5 of the Indian Oaths Act mandates that oath or affirmation shall be made, among others, by all witnesses who are examined by a Court. The proviso to the section lays down so far as relevant, that where the witness is a child under twelve years of age and the Court is of opinion that though he understands the duty of speaking the truth he does not understand the nature of an oath or affirmation, the foregoing provisions of S. 5 and the provisions of S. 6 which permit, in certain circumstances, an affirmation instead of an oath, shall not apply to such a witness, but the absence of an oath or affirmation shall not render inadmissible his evidence. Thus, where the trial Judge's note only indicated at the best that he tested the competency of the witness to testify but not his understanding of the oath or affirmation, held, the two are different and not synonymous. Without testing this latter understanding the learned Judge administered oath. This is an irregular procedure even though it will not affect the validity of the testimony. [1960 Ker.L.T. 430, Rel. on]: 1983 Ker.L.T. 594. See also 1979 B.B.C.J. 701 (D.B.).

It is settled law that competency of a child witness depends on the capacity of understanding and consistency of the witness. It is also to be seen how far it fits with the rest of the evidence and it is a matter of prudence to weigh the evidence of a child witness to be accepted by the Judge. Further, administering or not administering an oath to a child witness does not effect the admissibility and competency of a child witness. Thus, where from her demeanours and deposition on record and from the extent of her intellectual capacity and understanding, child witness, aged 9 years, was found able to give rational account of what she had seen at the time of occurrence and she gave rational answers to the questions put to her in her cross-examination and her evidence was corroborated by another eye-witness in giving true account of occurrence, held, the trial Court was competent to administer oath to such a witness and her evidence could be relied upon to bring home the conviction of the accused. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54, Rel. on]: 1991 Cr.L.J. 278 (Gau.) (D.B.).

6. Illustrative cases—(a) Where child witness's evidence was accepted.—Where evidence of a child witness of the tender age of 9 years, who was daughter of the accused and deceased, was trustworthy and consistent and on preliminary examination she had been found to be competent to testify, held, there being no reason that she would falsely depose against her own father, her evidence could certainly be relied on: 1984 Raj.L.W. 619 (D.B.).

The mere fact that a witness is of tender age or of old age is hardly sufficient to conclude that he has no testimonial competence. Where a child of ten years was the sole witness to an act of uxoricide committed by her father and her testimony was corroborated by evidence of witnesses who rushed to the place of occurrence on hearing hue and cry made by child witness and got a brief account of occurrence from the child which was consistent with child witness's testimony in Court, held, the testimony of child witness could be relied upon: (1993) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 666 (D.B.).

Where a child witness who was daughter of the deceased and the accused-wife and was examined soon after the incident had categorically stated what she had heard from her father who was at the threshold of death and she had also described in detail the role played by both the accused, i.e., her mother and another accused, while causing death of the deceased and there was no material discrepancy therein, held, evidence of said witness being clear, cogent and worthy of credence, it could certainly be relied on: 1994 Cr.L.J. 197 (Ori.) (D.B.).

A witness who, by reason of his immature understanding, was not administered oath and who was privileged, by reason of his years, not to make his answers in an intelligible and coherent manner is unsafe to be trusted whole-sole. Where it was found that a child aged 5 years, who happened to witness murder of his mother and an infant brother was a witness of truth and not a witness of imagination and not only did the conduct of the accused corroborate the evidence of the child witness but the very pattern of the crime corroborated that it was the accused who committed it, held, accused could be convicted on basis of child witness's evidence. But as child witness answered many vital questions with a nod of head and his statement was recorded 20 days after the incident and accused had already been in jail for last 10 years, sentence of death was altered to imprisonment for life. [(1978) 5 U.P. Cr.C. (All.) 17, Affirm.]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1122: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 569: 1981 Cr.L.J. 746.

Where, it was found that the child witness had developed sufficient understanding, i.e., after witnessing the occurrence, he described it and understood the questions and answers and had given a vivid account of the occurrence and was cross-examined at length by putting to him varied and diverse questions and his answers seemed to have been given on his own, held, he himself having been attacked and injured during the course of the occurrence, he was definitely in a position to watch and thereafter narrate the happenings, and when his testimony got corroboration from other evidence, it could certainly be relied: 1990 Cr.L.J. 111 (All.) (D.B.).

Where though all the eye-witnesses were children but as they had truely stated the sequence of events as were seen by them and their testimony was corroborated by other circumstances, held, reliance could be placed on their testimony: 1994 Cr.L.R. 247 (Raj.).

Where evidence of the eye-witnesses, who were children in the age group of 6 to 11 years, regarding murder committed during school hours, was consistent in respect of time and place of occurrence and killing by gun-shots, held, though they were related to the deceased, their evidence was clearly admissible: 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 23 (Pat.) (D.B.).

Where deceased's younger brother had an occasion to witness the murder of his brother, held, simply because the witness was a boy of 14 years it would not be proper to assume that he was likely to be tutored: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 65: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3703.

Where child witness of 8 years was found by the Court to be a person of maturity and understanding and there was no contradiction with reference to his earlier statement to the Police, held, his evidence was acceptable: 1994 Cr.L.J. 432 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where in a murder case, the sole testimony was of the minor son of one of the deceased, who had described as to how and where the gun-shot injuries were received by the deceased persons and his evidence was corroborated by medical evidence, held, in absence of any material infirmity in his evidence, his testimony was clearly admissible. [1976 Cr.L.J. 1031 (S.C.); 1973 Cr.L.J. 159 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 407 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where version of the incident by a child witness was truthful, held, the Court is justified in relying on his evidence: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1173: 1979 Cr.L.J. 700: 1979 Cr.L.R. (S.C.) 81: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 334: (1979) 4 S.C.C. 332: 1979 S.C.C. (Cr.) 968; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 144 ; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 205; (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 17.

Child witness aged about 8 or 9 years—Sessions Judge observing that the witness had given his evidence in a straight forward manner—Held, in view of the observations of Sessions Judge who had opportunity to see and watch demeanour of witness, his evidence should not be discarded on ground of a danger of his being tutored: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1282 (Del.).

Where testimony of a child witness was found to be natural and straight forward, held, in absence of any material showing that he was tutored or influenced by any person, his testimony should be accepted: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 527: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 31. See also 1993 Cr.L.J. 772 (Pat.) (D.B.).

In a murder trial the evidence of the child witness aged about 8 years who was an eye-witness to the occurrence was recorded by the trial Court in a narrative form carefully in a clear and cogent manner, held, merely because the evidence was not recorded in the form of questions and answers did not impair its value: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1349 (Gau.) (D.B.).

(b). Where child witness's evidence was not accepted.—Where there were several contradictions in the statement of the child witness, in a murder case, coupled with the fact that the first information report was not lodged for about four months, though he was said to have told about the occurrence to two other witnesses, held, implicit reliance could not be placed on his testimony. [A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 3, Rel. on]: 1983 Raj.L.W. 80; 1983 M.P.W.N. 2. Where name of accused not furnished for 5 or 6 days though known, held, it is not safe to rely upon the evidence of such child witness: 1982 M.P.W.N. 392; 1983 Jab.L.J. (Note) 35.

It will be most unsafe to rely on the testimony of a child witness who has made contradictory statements too often in the case: 1992 M.P.L.J. 267 (D.B.).

While a child with an age of 9 to 15 years can often be expected to give out a true version because of his innocence but there is always the danger in accepting the evidence of such a witness that under influence he might have been coached to give out a version by persons who may have influence on him. Hence, for relying on such child witnesses the evidence given by them must stand the test of judicial scrutiny. When there were a number of circumstances which indicated that it will not be quite safe to rely on their evidence, held, the Court was justified in rejecting their evidence as untrustworthy even though they were the only eye-witness to the murder of their mother: (1979) 81 Punj.L.R. 265: (1979) 6 Cr.L.T. 108: 1979 Chand. Cr.C. 51: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 100 (D.B.).

Competence of a child witness is tested on the basis of an old latin maxim "varitatem dicere a corruption of vior dire" which means that examination of a witness is a series of questions by the Court usually in the nature of an examination as to his competence to give evidence in some other collateral matter prior to his examination-in-chief. Where a child witness of 3-4 years age was found to be not in a position to understand what is truth and what is falsehood and could understand the questions with difficulty and after repetition, held, he could not be said to be a proper witness who could depose correctly or on whose deposition reliance could be placed: 1992 All.L.J. 1182: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3972 (D.B.).

When a child witness of 5 years failed to give proper answers and the manner in which he re-cited the prosecution story gave an impression that he was tutored to give a particular statement and further he could not explain the injuries sustained by accused, held, his testimony could not be accepted: 1984 Raj.L.W. 473 (D.B.); (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 174. Where the child witness was found to be not capable of giving rational replies, and was also found to be tutored by relatives and Police, held, no reliance could be placed on such testimony: 1982 M.P.W.N. 506; 1982 M.P.W.N. 499.

Testimony of a child witness cannot be relied upon if at the time of incident he was only 6/7 years of age and examined as witness during trial after about four years: 1987 Rec.Cr.C. 357 (Raj.).

Where there were several infirmities in the evidence of a child witness of six years age, in a murder case and his evidence also appeared to be tutored, held, in absence of corroboration from any other independent witness, no reliance could be placed on it. [A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 406; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 135, Foll.]: 1982 M.P.L.J. 772 (D.B.); (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 114; 1980 B.B.C.J. 701.

Evidence of a child witness aged only 6 years is to be approached with great caution; where serious infirmities and contradictions were found in his evidence, held, it could not be relied on: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 135: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 707: 1977 Cr.L.J. 167.

Where the prosecution had relied on the testimony of a child eye-witness and oral extra judicial confession of the accused and the circumstances did cast a serious doubt about the child's claim to being an eye-witness, held, it also destroyed the veracity of the extra-judicial confession; no case for conviction was made out: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1621: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 582: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 580.

Where a child witness aged about 12 years at the time of incident and who was related to the deceased as his grand-daughter, stated that she was grazing buffalo in a field near the road when she saw that the deceased was run over by a lorry which was proceeding very fast and it did not stop even after hitting the deceased, held, it was highly improbable for her to notice the driver or other person inside the cabin especially when she herself admitted that she saw the persons in the lorry only at the time of hitting the deceased, therefore, it was highly improbable for the witness to have witnessed the incident and her evidence was not natural and probable. Hence, no reliance could be placed on her testimony: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2574 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where in a case of homicide, the young daughter of the victim was the main occular witness but there were lots of infirmities in her testimony which clearly pointed out to the fact of her being tutored, held, the conviction of the accused on the sole testimony of that child's witness was not maintainable as she did not appear to be a witness of sterling worth, on whose uncorroborated testimony the conviction could be safely maintained. [1983 Raj.L.W. 80, Rel. on]: 1985 Raj.L.W. 601: (1985) 1 W.L.N. 581: 1985 Cr.L.R.428 (D.B.).

7. Evidence of victim of rape.—(See also S. 133, Note 13, infra). Unsworn testimony of prosecutrix—Admissibility: 1960 Cr.L.J. 237: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 59.

The prosecutrix of a sex offence is not at par with an accomplice; in fact, she is a victim; undoubtedly a competent witness, her evidence must receive the same weight as any victim of physical violence; no where does the Act bar its acceptance unless corroborated in material particulars. What is necessary is that the Court must be alive to the fact that she is interested in the outcome of the trial and if the Court feels satisfied about the reliability of her evidence it is not required to look for corroboration. The High Court's view that it is only in the rarest of rare cases if the Court finds that the testimony of the prosecutrix is so trustworthy, truthful and reliable that other corroboration may not be necessary is not correct; the law is otherwise: (1990) 2 Bom.C.R. 630: (1990) 1 Rec.C.R. 411 (S.C.). If for some reason the Court is hesitant to place implicit reliance on the testimony of the prosecutrix, it may look for evidence which may lend assurance to her testimony short of corroboration required in the case of an accomplice. The nature of evidence required to lend assurance to the testimony of the prosecutrix must necessarily depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. But if a prosecutrix is an adult and of full understanding, the Court is entitled to bear a conviction on her evidence, unless the same is shown to be infirm and not trustworthy: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1561 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Prosecutrix of rape is a competent witness under S. 118; if her testimony inspires confidence and is trustworthy then there is no need of corroboration: (1992) 1 Crimes 1140 (Del.).

It is well settled that in sexual offences the need of corroboration of prosecutrix is more a rule of prudence and not one of law. If a Judge of facts is convinced that the testimony of a young victim of sexual offence can be relied on and the witness is one of truth the need for corroboration is rendered unnecessary. Thus, where the young child witness was herself a victim of sexual offence, but oath was not administered to her because the trial Judge was of the opinion that she did not understand the sanctity of oath, held, that did not in any way create a hurdle in the way of her testimony being accepted as the statement of that child witness as a whole clearly showed that she fully understood the questions which were asked of her and she gave a very natural and truthful version of the incident as it occurred. She was cross-examined at length, for two days, but nothing could be brought out to detract from the weight of her testimony and there did not appear any likelihood of her being tutored. Thus, omission to administer oath to her did not render her testimony inadmissible in evidence: 1989 M.P.L.J. 243.

Where the victim of rape, a girl of tender years, narrated true story of rape committed on her which was corroborated by other evidence, held, her statement could certainly be relied on: 1982 M.P.W.N. 149; 1987 Cr.L.R. 91: 1987 Rec.Cr.C. 65 (Raj.).

Where victim of rape, a child of seven years was able to narrate in a consistent manner how she was handled or mishandled on the fateful day and at the end of her cross-examination she was clear enough in telling that she was not deposing at anybody's insistence and that her father had never asked her to depose to the facts in a particular manner or otherwise, held, under such circumstances the irregularity committed by Assistant Sessions Judge in omitting to record a certificate about the intellectual capacity of the child or about the awareness of the duty of the child witness to tell the truth before the Court could not affect the admissibility or the weight of the evidence of the child witness: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1752 (Bom.).

Where in a case of sexual assault, prosecutrix was a child of three and a half years and was incapable of understanding the questions posed to her and give rational replies thereto, held, she could not be a competent witness: 1982 Raj.L.W. 469; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 43.

8. Lunatic witness.—Where a witness is declared incapable of giving evidence owing to insanity it is the duty of the Court to record its finding that the witness is prevented by his lunacy from understanding the questions put to him and giving rational answers to them. The fact that the witness had become incompetent to testify and so incapable of giving evidence must be proved strictly: 1954 Cr.L.J. 6: A.I.R. 1953 Madh. Bh. 262.

9. Leper's evidence.—Contents of document—Proof—Evidence of attesting witness—Non-production on the ground that he was leper—Not proper—Leper held could be examined on commission: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 29.

10. Accused as witness.—The taking of oath or making of an affirmation being an indispensable pre-requisite for any person giving evidence in a Court of a law as a witness, in India excepting under special laws like S. 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act or in proceedings under S. 107, Cr.P.Code or maintenance proceedings under the Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused is not a competent witness: 1955 Cr.L.J. 452: A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 100. [See S. 342-A, Cr.P.Code].

When two persons though accused of complicity in the same offence are tried separately, each is a competent witness at the trial of the other though the case could be different if they are tried together: I.L.R. 45 Cal. 720: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 405.

11. Accomplice's evidence.—(See also Notes under S. 133, infra). Accomplice evidence: 8 P.R. 1904 (Cr.). Evidence of witness illegally pardoned by Police: I.L.R. 16 Bom. 661: Rat. 776. See also I.L.R. 19 Bom. 363.

Accomplice evidence—Taking accomplice evidence outside S. 337, Cr.P. Code by using S. 494 or otherwise—Power to tender self-confessed criminal as witness instead of trying him as accused—No violation of Arts. 14 and 20 of the Constitution: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1124: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 38.

Where a person, who acted as a carrier in a conspiracy to smuggle gold in India, admitted her role in the statements made to the Customs officials investigating the case under the Sea Customs Act but, instead of being included in the array of accused and sent up for trial, was examined as a witness against her former associates. Held that, there could be no doubt, that she was a competent witness. Being self-confessed criminal, her evidence was accomplice evidence and, if subjected to scrutiny and the usual checks for corroboration must be held to be received with due caution. No pardon could be tendered to such a witness because the pertinent provisions of Cr.P.Code did not apply. Nor could she be prevented from making a disclosure, if she was so minded. The prosecution was not bound to prosecute her, if they thought that her evidence was necessary to break a smugglers' ring. She was protected by S. 123 (proviso) of the Evidence Act even if she gave evidence incriminating herself. She was a competent witness although her evidence could only be received with the caution necessary in all accomplice evidence. As the person is tendered as a witness, the bar of S. 5, Oaths Act, does not apply because the person is not an accused person in a criminal proceeding. The exclusionary clause in S. 5 is to be interpreted as a whole and "criminal proceedings" means a criminal inquiry or a trial before a Court and the "accused" means a person actually arranged that is, put on a trial. The investigation was by Customs Officers under the Sea Customs Act and not by the Police under Chapter XIV of the Cr.P. Code. Therefore, no question of the application of Ss. 169 and 170, arose. The competency of an accomplice is not destroyed because he could have been tried jointly with the accused but was not and was instead made to give evidence in the case. S. 5 of the Oaths Act and S. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure do not stand in the way of such a procedure. It is, however, necessary to say that where S. 337 or S. 338 of the Cr.P. Code apply, it is always proper to invoke those sections and follow the procedure there laid down. Where those sections do not apply there is the procedure of withdrawal of the case against an accomplice: (1968) 2 S.C.R. 624: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 938.

12. Credibility of witness—General.—In assessing the credibility of witnesses the test is two-fold. The first is generally about the veracity of the witnesses, viz., whether he has got such regard for truths that generally speaking the Court can accept his statement, subject of course to correction for the vagaries of memory and observation and separable exaggeration and super-additions which do not go to the root of the matter. The second is, specifically whether in regard to each accused he had an opportunity to make the correct observation and a motive to speak the truth. But when the witness does not come up to the mark in his general regard for truth then even if he makes a plausible and consistent allegation in regard to an individual accused, the Court should look for extra guarantee that this is not vitiated by his general indifference to truth: A.I.R. 1955 Vindh. Pra. 36: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1000.

In determining on the credit due to the witnesses regard must be had to the following considerations, namely, their integrity, their ability, their number and consistency with each other the conformity of their testimony with the experience, the conformity of their testimony with collateral circumstances: A.I.R. 1955 All. 328: 1955 Cr.L.J. 892.

Credibility of witness—It is open to Court to look into surrounding circumstances: (1964) 66 Bom.L.R. 486: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 354.

Appreciation of evidence—Evidence of witness—Credibility: (1967) 12 Law Rep. 92 (Mys.), see 1968 Cr.L.J. 270 (Raj.).

The maxim falsus in uno falsus in omnibus is not applicable in India; thus, a witness cannot be branded liar and his evidence discarded on the sole ground that a part of his testimony is not reliable; besides, as held in, A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 120 and A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 114 primacy must be attached to the trial Court's opinion on credibility of a witness; the appellate Court must be very slow in discarding in appeal the evidence of any witness found reliable and accepted by the trial Court: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 244: 1987 Jab.L.J. 462: 1987 M.P.L.J. 719.

Credibility of witness—Consideration—Community of witness—Relevancy: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 407.

Credibility of witness—Absence of inherent vice—Adverse presumption on any matter cannot be drawn in absence of opportunity to explain it: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38: (1969-70) 74 Cal.W.N. 168 (D.B.).

There may be a little difference or distinction or variation in the version of different witnesses before the Court as to timings or sequences. But such witnesses are not unreliable on that ground as it is unrealistic to expect a witness to be human tape recorder since power of observation differs from person to person. On the other hand, when the witness sing the song of accusation in chorus tallying every point of the occurrence as to place, time and manner, the evidence of such witnesses may be considered as unnatural or tutored or regimented and may not inspire confidence in the mind of the Courts: 1991 Cal.Cr.L.R. 61.

Test of competency is that witness should be able to understand questions put to him: 102 I.C. 349: 8 Pat.L.T. 594: A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 406; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 903; A.I.R. 1930 Sind 120 (understanding is the sole test of competency). As to competency to testify, see also I.L.R. 23 All. 90; I.L.R. 11 All. 180.

Testimony of witnesses not wholly reliable—Necessity of corroboration: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 629.

Evidence of husband to disprove access on the question of legitimacy of child born during wedlock. See I.L.R. 38 Mad. 466: 25 M.L.J. 594.

Adoption—Oral evidence—Reliability of witness has to be tested only by surrounding circumstances: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 309.

A plaintiff can examine any witness he so likes—The witness may be a stranger, may be a man of his own party or party himself or may be a defendant or his man. Therefore, if a plaintiff wants to examine a defendant as a witness on his behalf, he cannot be precluded from examining him on the ground that the said defendant has neither appeared in the suit nor upon appearance filed written statement nor prayer for filing written statement has been rejected: A.I.R. 1993 Pat. 122: (1993-2) 41 B.L.J.R. 1445: (1993) 2 Pat.L.J.R. 1: 1993 B.B.C.J. 317 (D.B.).

Defence witnesses are entitled to equal treatment with those of the prosecution. And, Courts ought to overcome their traditional, instinctive disbelief in defence witnesses. Quite often, they tell lies but so do the prosecution witnesses: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 911: 1981 All.W.C. 297: 1981 All.Cr.R. 165: 1981 All.L.J. 228: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 166: 1981 Cr.L.J. 618.

Unless there is something shown against the witness, his evidence should not be discarded merely because he is related to the party when he is a man who prima facie must be regarded as respectable and reliable: 145 I.C. 330: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 162. Ordinarily, a close relative could be the last person to screen the real culprit and falsely implicate an innocent person, and hence the mere fact of relationship far from being the foundation for criticism of the evidence is often a sure guarantee of truth; but no sweeping generalisation can be made: A.I.R. 1955 All. 328: 1955 Cr.L.J. 892.

Where evidence of a witness was straight forward and the Court was satisfied that their evidence was natural and worthy of credit, held, merely because they were related to the party, would not be sufficient to discard their testimony: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 269; (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 470 (D.B.); (1984) 57 Cut.L.T. 81 (D.B.).

The evidence of a witness is not to be rejected merely on the ground of his relationship with the deceased, but such evidence is to be scrutinised with care. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 216; A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1076, Foll.]: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 211.

Evidence of uncles of prosecutrix—There can be no presumption against veracity of a relative when there is no suggestion that they had any ill-will or enmity against accused: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 194 (P.&H.).

Where eye-witnesses, being neighbours, testified that they had, on hearing the shouts of the prosecutrix, reached the place of occurrence and rescued her from the accused who was raping her, and they were neither actuated by malice nor were there any strong reason to disbelieve them, it is not possible to ignore their testimony; more so when their testimony found corroboration in medical evidence. [(1988) 1 Raj.L.W. 278, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 2004: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 615.

Enmity of prosecution witness with accused or distant relationship of two prosecution witnesses (great grandsons of two brothers) are not reasons to disbelieve their testimony: 1953 Raj.L.W. 165. Where one part of a witness's evidence is disbelieved, Judges of fact have the right to act on the rest of his testimony. But it will be so only if the Judge regards the rest of the testimony as reliable. But where out of ten statements made by a witness, nine are decidedly false, there is little guarantee that the tenth statement is true: 1957 M.P.L.J. 852: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 13.

Interested party or relation—Testimony of cannot be fully reliable: 1965 Raj.L.W. 168.

Murder charge — Proof — Eye-witnesses close by related to victim—Not incompetent witnesses—Their evidence cannot be disregarded but must be closely scrutinised: (1968) 1 An.W.R. 178.

The evidence of an interested or partisan witness whose relationship with the accused is inimical cannot be discarded on that ground alone, but should be scrutinised with care and caution before acceptance. If the Court will feel that before acceptance of such evidence there should be corroboration from independent sources, it should not hesitate to insist upon the same. Where there was enmity between the two parties and the evidence of the appellant was not corroborated by independent, natural and neighbouring witnesses, held, evidence of the appellant could not be accepted: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1887 (Ori.).

Relationship of a witness is no ground for not acting on his testimony if it is otherwise reliable in the sense that the witness was otherwise a competent witness who could be expected to be near about the place of occurrence and could have seen what happened: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 303.

Witness—Credibility—Relationship of witness—Relevancy: 1959 Ker.L.T. 1014.

The label "interested witnesses" is frequently used to throw cloud on the evidence. The probation that when eye-witnesses to the occurrence were interested persons, there should be corroboration to their evidence by independent evidence cannot be of universal application. A witness is normally to be considered independent unless he or she springs from sources which are likely to be tainted and that usually means unless the witness has cause, such as enmity against the accused, to wish to implicate him, falsely: 1993 Cr.L.J. 378 (Ori.) (D.B.).

The term "interested" postulates that the person concerned must have some direct interest in seeing that the accused is somehow or other convicted either because he had some grudge against the accused or for some other reason: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 470 (D.B.).

Where accused who was alleged to have committed murder of the deceased admitted the presence of ocular witnesses at the scene and there was no animosity between the witnesses and the accused but the High Court not only discarded the testimony of ocular witnesses but also rejected dying declarations giving importance to some trivial and insignificant contradictions between the evidence of witnesses and dying declaration, held, the High Court was not justified in acquitting the accused and a conviction could safely be recorded by placing reliance on the dying declarations alone: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 475: 1994 Cr.L.J. 145.

Where evidence of a witness was attacked on the ground that she was deceased's sister and, thus, her evidence should be discarded outrightly, held, her evidence could not be rejected on that ground alone: 1989 Cr.L.J. 420 (Ori.) (D.B.).

The evidence of a partisan witness is not to be discarded as such; in a faction ridden locality, the prosecution may not find independent witnesses. But when the interested eye-witnesses did not belong to the locality and other persons, including nearby shopkeepers, belonging to the locality, independent and disinterested, were not examined, it would certainly cast serious reflection on the trial's fairness: 1985 Cr.L.J. 580. See also S. 3, Note 52 for Relations/interested/partisan/inimical witness.

In the case of witnesses in a criminal case who are rustics, their behavioural, pattern and perceptive habits have to be judged as such. Too sophisticated approaches familiar in Courts based on unreal assumptions about human conduct cannot obviously be applied to those given to lethargic ways of villages. When scanning the evidence of various witnesses, the Court has to inform itself that variances on the fringes, discrepancies in details, contradictions in narrations and embellishments in inessential parts cannot militate against the veracity of the core of the testimony, provided there is the impress of truth and conformity to probability in the substantial fabric of the testimony given: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1763 (Bom.) (D.B.).

A person while going on the way may have occasion to see an occurrence which takes place. Different persons react differently when they witness an occurrence and merely because a person does not intervene when he sees an assault, his evidence is not to be discarded: (1984) 57 Cut.L.T. 168.

The evidence of pedestrian and passer-by passing along the nearby street at the time of occurrence cannot be brushed aside or viewed with suspicion on the ground that they are mere chance witness. To discard such evidence on the ground that they are chance witnesses is to abandon good sense and to take too shallow a view of the evidence: 1991 Cal.Cr.L.R. 61. See also S. 3, Note 55 "Chance witness".

In the case of a legitimate trap, the officers taking part in the trap as well as the witnesses to the trap would in no sense be accomplices and their evidence would not require under the law to be corroborated as a condition precedent for conviction though the usual rule of prudence would require the evidence to be scrutinised carefully before being accepted and before an order of conviction is passed: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 372. See also S. 3, Note 54 "Trap witness".

Where the only witnesses supporting the prosecution case were the Police witnesses and the story as put forth by the prosecution was most improbable, unnatural and unbelievable and it was more or less like a drama staged by the Police to involve the accused in case by describing them as dacoits, held, evidence of the Police witnesses could not be believed: 1988 Cr.L.J. 785 (Del.).

Prohibition Sub-Inspectors cannot be called interested witnesses merely because they are carrying out the provisions of the Act and therefore, their evidence should not be disbelieved merely on that ground: (1955) 1 M.L.J. 54. See also S. 3, Note 60.

Section 119—Notes.

See 5 O.C. 246. S. 119 also applies to the case of a witness who has taken a religious vow of silence and gives his evidence in writing to questions put to him. It is not the practice of the Courts to force any man to act contrary to his religious convictions so long as his acts are legal, and thus, if a witness's religion forbids him to speak, the Court will not compel him to speak and he must be deemed "unable to speak" within the meaning of S. 119. The evidence of such a witness given and taken in writing in open Court is properly taken and is not inadmissible: I.L.R. 20 Pat. 898: 23 Pat.L.T. 332: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 183.

When a witness is so deaf, and dumb that it is impossible to make him understand the question put to him, in cross-examination, he cannot be a competent witness and his evidence ought to be struck out and a conviction based solely on his evidence ought to be quashed: 14 I.C. 655: 1912 M.W.N. 100. See also 1979 Ker.L.T. 123.

The Court was not justified in examining a deaf and dumb witness without assistance of expert or person familiar with his mode of conveying ideas of others in day-to-day life: 1982 Cr.L.J. 94 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where the trial Court did not record the signs made by a victim of murderous assault, who lost his power to speak, in answer to several questions put to him but only recorded the interpretation, held, it was not a correct compliance with S. 119; case remanded: 1980 Cur.Civ.Cas. 27 (P.&H.).

Where an eye-witness could not be examined as he had become dumb and could not speak, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for not examining him: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2027 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where evidence of two employees cited as prosecution witnesses against the Company was sought to be shut out as violative of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution of India as it would amount to self-incrimination on the part of the Company, held, a body corporate, since it cannot take or make oath or affirmation, a necessity for witnesses other than children nor can it be deemed a dumb witness under S. 119 because of its incapacity to see or hear or perceive by sense nor can a person summoned to produce documents can become a witness under S. 139, is not contemplated as a person under Art. 20(3) of the Constitution; the Company employees cannot be equated with the Company; there is no bar against their examination as prosecution witnesses: 1991 Cr.L.J. 828 (Cal.) (D.B.).

arrived at a particular decision should be immediately and ruthlessly excluded as undesirable: A.I.R. 1925 All. 203.

Indeed, it will be very embarrassing and, in many cases, objectionable if every quasi-judicial authority or Tribunal were put to the necessity of getting into the witness-box and testify as to what weighed in his mind in reaching his verdict. When an arbitrator has given an award, if grounds justifying his being called as a witness are affirmatively made out, the Court may exercise its power, otherwise not. If arbitrators are summoned mindlessly whenever applications for setting aside the award are enquired into, there will be few to undertake the job. The same principle holds good even if the prayer is for modification or for remission of the award. The short point is that the Court must realise that its process should be used sparingly and after careful deliberation, if the arbitrator should be brought into the witness-box. In no case can he be summoned merely to show how he arrived at the conclusions he did. Of course, if a party has a case of mala fides and makes out prima facie that it is not a frivolous charge or has other reasonably relevant matters to be brought out, the Court may, in given circumstances, exercise its power to summon even an arbitrator, because nobody is beyond the reach of truth or trial by Court: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2445: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 24.

Section 122—Notes.

The protective provision under S. 122, Evidence Act, is based on the wholesome principle of preserving domestic peace and conjugal confidence between the spouse during coverture. The exceptions also are based on common sense: A.I.R. 1951 Cal. 140: I.L.R. (1952) 1 Cal. 239.

S. 122 inhibits disclosure of marital confidence and it cannot be contravened by spouse through medium of a third person—Absence of words "to the Court" in S. 122 which appear in S. 129 signify that S. 122 is of general application and anything done contrary thereto should not be heard or accepted in evidence in Court of law—Accused's wife handing over to her father letters sent to her by accused—Father complaining that certain words in those letters were defamatory—Held, letters could not be proved in Court either by wife herself directly or through her father in whose hands she had voluntarily placed them. Held further that, in view of difference in statutes concerned, English precedents were of no assistance: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Ker. 145: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 184: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 228.

The prohibition enacted by this section rests in no technicality that can be waived at will, but is founded on a principle of high import, which no Court is entitled to relax: (1914) 23 I.C. 511; A.I.R. 1914 Lah. 380; A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 40: 81 I.C. 271.

If the marriage was subsisting at the time when the impugned communications were made by one spouse to another, the bar prescribed by S. 122 will operate. The bar to the admissibility in evidence of communications made during marriage attaches at the time when the communication is made, and its admissibility will be adjudged in the light of the status at that date and not the status at the date when evidence is sought to be given in Court. [A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 228, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1876: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1651: (1969) 2 S.C.R. 692.

There is a prohibition against the disclosure of any communication between spouses made during the subsistence of marriage unless the person who made it or his representative-in-interest consents to the same. The bar is not only against a spouse being compelled to disclose the same but also extends to cases where the spouse may be inclined or willing to disclose the same. In the latter case, the disclosure can be permitted if the other spouse who made the same, agrees to the disclosure. The consent has to be positive and not that it may be imported from mere waiver. There are, of course, exceptions when the spouses are themselves parties arrayed against each other in suits or there are proceedings in which one married person is prosecuted for any crime committed against the other.

The prohibition under S. 122 is based on the ground that the admission of such testimony is likely to disturb the peace of the family and weaken the feeling to mutual confidence. It rests on no technicality that can be waived at will but is found on a principle of high import which no Court is entitled to relax. It is further not confined to cases where communication is of strictly confidential character. In fact, it extends to all communications of whatever nature, which pass between the husband and the wife unless the spouse making the communications consents to the disclosure.

It is also now well settled that if the marriage was subsisting at the time when the communications were made, the bar prescribed by S. 122 will operate even after the wife has obtained decree for nullity of her marriage. The bar to the admissibility in evidence of the communications made during marriage attaches at the time when the communication was made, and its admissibility will be adjudged in the light of the status at that date and not the status at the date when evidence is sought to be given in the Court.

The prohibition being absolute, unless the disclosure was consented to by the accused, the non-raising of any objection by the accused when that evidence was being recorded would not make the same relevant or admissible. The waiver does not come in. The evidence has to be excluded from consideration unless the accused consents to its disclosure or retention on record: (1985) 1 Rec.C.R. 345: 1985 Cr.L.J. 622: (1984) 2 Crimes 668 (Del.).

Communications between the husband and wife during coverture is privileged and its disclosure cannot be enforced. This protective provision is based on the wholesome principle of preserving domestic peace and conjugal confidence between the spouses. But, as observed in Queen v. Donaghue, (1899) I.L.R. 22 Mad. 1 the communication between a husband and his wife is not protected if it can be proved without their assistance, for, in these communications there is no question of any compulsion or permission to the wife or the husband to disclose it. The section protects the individuals and not the communication of it. Thus, marital communications could be proved by the evidence of the over-hearers, even though the wife herself could not have been called to testify to them: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 194: (1971) 2 M.L.J. 53: 1971 Cr.L.J. 615 (D.B.). S. 122 only prevents disclosure of a communication between husband and wife by one of them without other's consent, but such communication is not totally inadmissible; it can be proved by such other means as are available: A.I.R. 1981 Andh. Pra. 58: (1980) 2 An.L.T. 412: (1981) 1 An.W.R. 212: 1981 Hindu L.R. 537.

S. 122 of the Evidence Act only prevents disclosure in giving evidence in Court of the communication made by the husband to the wife. If wife appears in the witness box to give evidence about the communications made to her by her husband, prima facie the communications may not be permitted to be deposed to or disclosed unless husband consents. That does not, however, mean that no other evidence which is not barred under S. 122 of the Evidence Act or other provisions of the Act can be given. [(1962) 3 All E.R. 256, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1876: (1969) 2 S.C.R. 692: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1651.

Where accused husband wrote certain letters to his wife containing defamatory imputations concerning the complainant and in a suit for defamation by the complainant, the husband contended that uttering of a libel by a husband to his wife was not publication and, hence, could not support a charge for defamation, held, the doctrine of the common law of England that a communication by one spouse to another of a matter defamatory of another person does not amount to publication had no application in India, and S. 122 of the Indian Evidence Act did not prohibit proof in the Court by the complainant of the letters written by the accused husband to his wife. [A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 228, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1876: (1969) 2 S.C.R. 692: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1651.

The restriction in S. 122 is not one that can be waived or that a Court can relax, so that disclosure by a widow of certain communications made to her by her husband immediately before his death cannot only be not compelled but should not be permitted at all: 23 I.C. 511: I.L.R. 40 Cal. 891.

Under S. 122, the consent to the evidence being given cannot be implied. It is incumbent upon the Court to ask a party against whom the evidence is to be given whether he or she would consent to the evidence being given and not to admit it unless such consent is given : 38 Cr.L.J. 1089: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 347; 27 P.R. (Cr.) 1913: 19 I.C. 1004.

In a matrimonial dispute the State is also an interested party and is more interested in reconciliation than in divorce. It is with that overriding consideration that in certain circumstances intermediaries and conciliators are persons to whose evidence privilege attaches, one fundamental reason being that if privilege did not attach, those whom they sought to reconcile would tend not to be frank with them and that in itself would be an impediment to reconciliation. In this respect there is no distinction between position of an intermediary if he had been asked by the husband to go to the wife, or his position if he went to the husband and was accepted by him as a conciliator before going on to the wife. In both these cases, privilege attaches to the talk between him and the husband and wife and he cannot be called to depose as to the statement made to him by one of the parties: (1955) 1 All E.R. 590.

Where, in a murder case, the evidence of a female who was found to be the mistress of the accused and not a legally wedded wife, held, her evidence against the accused could be relied upon as S. 122 did not apply in such cases: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3071: (1994) 4 S.C.C. 478: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1252: (1994) 2 Crimes 1: (1994) 2 An.L.T. (Cr.) 429.

No statement of an incriminating nature made by the accused as to her guilt under S. 302 to her husband could be received in evidence. [10 P.R. (Cr.) 1914, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 40. See also 27 I.C. 664: 34 P.R. 1914 (Cr.); 14 Cr.L.J. 273: 19 I.C. 705.

Where there was nothing to show that the husband, who was an accused in a murder case had even consented to the disclosure of the communication allegedly made by him to his wife, held, the trial Court should not have permitted the wife to disclose the communications she received from the accused; such communications under the law may be of any nature and need not necessarily be confessions. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 704, Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 88 (All.) (D.B.).

A woman's confession to her husband is inadmissible in view of S. 122. An offence against a person in the section does not include an offence against a son though it may cause grief to the father: 10 P.R. (Cr.) 1914: 25 I.C. 525.

Communication by an arbitrator to his wife shortly before his death that he accepted bribe from a party can be permitted to be disclosed only if S. 122 is fulfilled: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 218(2).

On a trial for breach of trust by a public servant, a letter of the accused to his wife found by the Police was held admissible against him in evidence: I.L.R. 22 Mad. 1. The statements of the accused to his wife that he would give her jewels and he had gone to the house of the deceased to get them are inadmissible under S. 122. But the wife's statement that the accused was seen in the early hours, while it was dark, coming down the roof of his house, that he went to the bhusa kothri and came out again and had a bath and put on the dhoti again, is not inadmissible under S. 122 as it has reference to acts and conduct of the accused and not to any communication made by him to his wife: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1755: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 704.

1. Scope, object and applicability.—As a result of S. 123, a document which is material and relevant is allowed to be withheld from the Court and that undoubtedly constitutes a very serious departure from the ordinary rules of evidence. The principle on which this departure is justified is the principle of the overriding and paramount character of public interest. A valid claim for privilege made under S. 123 proceeds on the basis of the theory that the production of the document in question would cause injury to public interest. Care has, however, to be taken to see that interests other than the interest of the public do not masquerade in the garb of public interest. Subject to this reservation the maxim salus populi est superma lex, which means that regard for public welfare is the highest law, is the basis of the provisions contained in S. 123: (1961) 2 S.C.R. 371: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493.

According to the law in the United States of America it is within the power of a Court to overrule the claim of privilege on the ground that the disclosure is essential for determination of the defence of the accused and where Government insists on claiming privilege the Court can, if it so deems fit, acquit the accused. The law in this country is contained in Ss. 123, 124 and 162 of the Indian Evidence Act and it does not even suggest that an accused is entitled to acquittal when privilege has been claimed with respect to unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 794: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 215: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 710.

In deciding whether a document is privileged or not it is not of importance whether the party claiming production can avail himself of inferences under S. 114; what is of importance is whether the claim of privilege in the circumstances should be allowed or not: (1979-80) 84 Cal.W.N. 751.

There is nothing sacrosanct about the immunity to documents for belonging to a certain class; class immunity is not absolute or inviolate in all circumstances; it is not a rule of law to be mechanically applied in all cases; the principle of immunity is founded on the principle that it would be contrary to public interest to disclose such documents as it would impair the proper functioning of the public service: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149.

Claim of privilege sustained—Effect on admissibility of documents withheld as privileged: (1970) 1 M.L.J. 300: I.L.R. (1970) 2 Mad. 289.

A person summoned to produce a document must bring it to the Court; it is only then that he may object to its production or admissibility under S. 162; such an objection comprehends all claims of privilege under Ch. XI of Part III of the Act and not merely under S. 123: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 114.

S. 123 relates to the competency of the witness to depose to the matters referred therein. On the other hand, S. 162 regulates the examination of such witness who are required to produce such documents. But even here S. 162 carves out an exception in favour of the documents which refer to matters of State, which are no other than relating to "affairs of State" as mentioned in S. 123: 1986 Rev.L.R. 193.

The foundation of law behind Ss. 123 and 162 is the same as in England; it is the injury to the public interest which is the reason for exclusion from disclosure of documents whose contents, if disclosed, would injure the public and national interest. Public interest which demands that evidence be withheld is to be weighed against the public interest in the administration of justice that the Courts should have the fullest possible access to all relevant materials; when public interest outweighs the latter, the evidence cannot be admitted; the Court will proprio motu exclude evidence the production whereof is contrary to public interest. It is in public interest that confidentiality shall be safeguarded. But confidentiality is not a head of privilege but a consideration to bear in mind.

It is not that the contents contain material which it would be damaging to the national interest to divulge but rather that the documents are of the class which demands protection. Such documents are cabinet papers, Foreign Office dispatches, papers regarding security of the State and high level inter-departmental minutes. [A.I.R. 1974 All. 324, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 428.

It is needless to emphasise that the Court's extraordinary powers under Art. 226 of the Constitution are indeed "very high and transcendent"; the writ should run and reach injustice wherever it is found which is possible only when the records called for by the Court are made available to the Court. Thus, where documents pertain to defence, diplomatic relations, foreign affairs, cabinet minutes, advice tendered by the Council of Ministers to the Governor under Art. 163(3) of the Constitution, secret service, intelligence or policy making decisions and the like matters, held, the concerned Secretary to the Government or the Head of the Department or the Minister can file an affidavit stating the nature of the affairs of the State and expressing his opinion that it will not be in, or will be injurious to, the interest of the State or the services or the public interest to produce them. The Court will then decide whether the privilege be allowed or declined: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra 196: (1970) 2 An.W.R. 323 (D.B.).

It cannot be held that the Crown's ordinary right of withholding disclosure of documents is altogether displaced wherever fraud is alleged or prima facie proved: (1958) 1 W.L.R. 1300.

It is well settled that the privilege cannot be waived: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 782.

Where the State is not a party, the following rules govern the question of production of records, claim of privilege, etc.—(1) All documents called for must be produced. (2) In case of State documents, the privilege should be claimed by the witness who is summoned to produce them. (3) When objection is taken, the Court cannot inspect the document but can take other evidence to determine its nature. (4) Ordinarily, it is enough if the Head of the Department certifies that it refers to an affair of State. (5) The Court need not accept it as final but may require further evidence. (6) If the Court decides that it is not privileged, the document should be tendered in evidence. (7) If the Court considers it a State document, it cannot be admitted in evidence unless with the permission of the Head of the Department: I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 280: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 358.

A non-disclosure of matters involving the secrets of State of Military or International affairs, is a well recognised and a genuine ground for claiming testimonial exemption. Secrecy is legitimately invoked for acts of pending international negotiations or military directions against foreign enemies. The law of evidence considers the rules of privileged testimonial exclusion under four categories, political, judicial, professional and social. The first species of privilege is political, relating to secrets of State such as State papers and communications between Government and its officers and other matters of public policy. S. 123 protects from judicial scrutiny "evidence derived from unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State" except with the permission of the officers at the Head of the Department concerned. Such a privilege is a narrow one and has to be exercised most sparingly. Departmental enquiry papers are not unpublished documents relating to affairs of the State. Consequently, where the probity of the conduct of a public servant is a matter in issue the State cannot screen his conduct from the purview of the Court on the ground that it is an affair of the State and therefore, sacrosanct and consequently needs to be insulated from the reach of the Court as evidence: (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 65: I.L.R. (1968) 2 Punj. 171: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 255.

Application under S. 94, Cr.P.Code for calling for certain document from concerned Department—Even the documents forming part of unpublished official record and relating to any affairs of State can be given in evidence if Head of Department concerned grants permission for it: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 415: A.I.R. 1965 Tripura 33.

The privilege in respect of official and State documents from production in Court is a narrow one, most sparingly to be exercised. Scope of privilege pointed out: A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 254: (1930-31) 35 Cal.W.N. 1121: 61 M.L.J. 943. See also A.I.R. 1944 Sind 145.

disclosure of contents to parties. See (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 339. Claim of privilege without placing documents before the Court for inspection. See (1972) 74 Bom.L.R. 550.

The Public Service Commission is an independent entity under the State Constitution and cannot be said to be the Government or a Department of the Government so as to entitle it to claim privileges under Ss. 123 and 124: 1971 Kash.L.J. 350 (D.B.).

Production of documents—Proceedings before Commission under J. and K. Commission of Inquiry Act (XXXII of 1962)—Commission has unfettered powers in asking for production of documents—Privileges under the section cannot be claimed unless S. 5(2) of J. & K. Act is made applicable: 1965 Kash.L.J. 160: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 212: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 75.

2. "Unpublished official records" — Claim of privilege — Power of Court.—See A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 363 (F.B.).

Only unpublished official records could be withheld on ground of privilege relating to affairs of State: 1969 All.Cr.R. 322: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 494.

Unpublished records of affairs of State may include (1) documents that pass between two States; (2) documents between the State and its own subject; (3) documents between the State and subject of another State; (4) documents between subjects of more than one State; and (5) documents that pass between Heads of Departments or between Ministers of a State: 1954 Cr.L.J. 602: A.I.R. 1954 Bhopal 9. See also I.L.R. (1955) Hyd. 256: A.I.R. 1955 Hyd. 61.

An advice from his Advisor to the Governor during the President's rule is equivalent to a Minister's advice to the Governor under Art. 163(3) of the Constitution of India; it is protected from the purview of the Court; it is hit by the bar contained in Ss. 123 and 124; merely because it had been published in newspapers does not make them anytheless privileged: (1989-2) 96 Punj.L.R. 304: (1989) 2 Rec.C.R. 287.

The Blue Book contains the rules and instructions for the Prime Minister's protection when on tour or travel; even if a paragraph or two thereof have been disclosed, it cannot be said that it is a published document; publication of some innocent part of the book would not render the entire book to be a published document; case remanded. [A.I.R 1974 All. 324, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865 (1975) 4 S.C.C. 428.

The statement of a person recorded under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the course of investigations cannot be deemed to be an unpublished official record and is not subject to the bars of Ss. 123 to 125: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 469.

Where the letters sought to be produced had already been placed on record of another suit, held, they ceased to be unpublished official records or documents within the meaning of S. 123 and, therefore, no privilege could be claimed in respect of those documents: I.L.R. (1974) 2 Del. 15.

Where privilege was claimed against production of a file concerning the grant of a mining lease on the ground that it contained letters written by the Departmental Head to his subordinate officers and vice versa and between that Department and other Departments, held, they were unpublished official records and secrets of the State entitled to the privilege. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 196: 1975 M.P.L.J. 801 (D.B.).

Where it is not the suitor who takes out subpoena for production of documents but the Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution calls for official Government records for scrutiny and perusal by it, held, it does not amount to giving evidence derived from unpublished records relating to affairs of State; ordinarily, no occasion arises in writ proceedings to record evidence unless the Court in the interest of justice summons somebody to give evidence; it is the Court's constitutional right to direct production of records where a citizen seeks certiorari; but even if S. 123 is attracted as writ proceedings are also judicial proceedings, there is no such thing as absolute privilege to every State document; records "relating to affairs of State" do not take in every unpublished document concerning the business of State; only such records are protected whose disclosure would be injurious to the public interest: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 196: (1970) 2 An.W.R. 323 (D.B.).

The question whether the record in question is "an unpublished official record relating to any affair to the State" must be decided first before S. 123, Evidence Act can be availed of by the Head of the Department concerned. That question cannot be decided by the Head of the Department himself. It is the Court which must decide it: 1958 All.L.J. 588: A.I.R. 1959 All. 543.

The well settled practice is that the objection to the production of summoned documents is raised by an affidavit affirmed by the Head of the Department though the Court may also require a Minister to affirm an affidavit in the course of enquiry to determine whether the document should be withheld from disclosure. If the Court is satisfied that the document should be protected in public interest from production, the matter ends there. But if it is not so satisfied, it may inspect the document. However, in case no affidavit is filed or a defective affidavit is filed, the Court may call for an affidavit or a better affidavit, if the Court thinks that the affidavit is not clear in regard to the objection. [A.I.R. 1974 All. 324, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 428.

When privilege is claimed in respect of certain documents, the Court has the power to inspect them to decide whether they are privileged or not: (1979-80) 84 Cal.W.N. 751.

If privilege is claimed under S. 123 of the Evidence Act in respect of a document as an unpublished official record relating to an affair of State, it is for the Court to decide the validity of that claim under the first paragraph of S. 162. The second paragraph of S. 162, no doubt disentitles the Court from inspecting the document in question, but the Court can decide by taking other evidence whether the document is of the nature or kind mentioned in S. 123. Heads of Departments are not expected to act capriciously and ordinarily the Court will accept their statement. If necessary, the Court may call for affidavits from them. If, however, the Court finds that an over-zealous Officer is capriciously putting forward a claim of privilege, the Court will decide as best as it can, by the means available to it, whether the claim is well founded. In many cases the very nature of the documents may be enough to show that it cannot be an unpublished official record relating to any affairs of State: I.L.R. (1944) 1 Cal. 410: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 539; 1975 Pat.L.J.R. 40: 1974 B.L.J.R. 796: 1974 B.B.C.J. 993.

The principles with regard to the privilege under S. 124 are that a person who is summoned to produce the document should bring it into Court even if there is any objection to its production or to its being admitted in evidence under S. 123 or S. 124. The Court will decide on the validity of the objection and he is not entitled to withhold the evidence if the objection is overruled. In enquiring into the validity of the objection, the Court will, of course, bear in mind that it should not exercise its powers, in such a way as to occasion the mischief, which the law providing for the objection is designed to guard against. If it is a claim or privilege under S.124, the Court may inspect the document in its discretion. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the communication in question was made to a public officer in official confidence, it will have to uphold the privilege claimed under S. 124 and leave the public officer concerned to decide whether or not to disclose the communication. The final decision of both the Departmental Head who had been summoned to produce the document as well as the Presiding Judge, should be governed by only one consideration, namely, whether the disclosure would result in any injury being caused to the public interest as the section gives effect to the principle that public interest must be paramount and private interest must give way when there is conflict between public and private interest. Held, that the valuation statement given by the Revenue Inspector on the basis of which the award was passed could not be said to be a communication made in official confidence. The document was not produced before the Court below and without seeing the document it will not be possible to decide whether the whole or any portion of the document will be privileged under S. 124: 1963 Ker.L.T. 107: I.L.R. (1963) 1 Ker. 346: A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 274.

When privilege is claimed, concerning the official notings, etc., the Court has to determine the character or class of the document. If it comes to the conclusion that the document does not relate to affairs of State then it should reject the claim for privilege and direct its production. If it comes to the conclusion that the document relates to affairs of State it should leave it to the Head of the Department to decide whether he should permit its production or not. Where the privilege claimed in case falls within the latter category, it is for the Head of the Department of the State to decide whether disclosure will injure the public interest. It is not for the Court in such a situation to assess whether it will injure the public interest if disclosure is made. Case-law discussed: 1970 Serv.L.R. 223: 1970 Lab.I.C. 593 (Del.).

Though under Ss. 123 and 162 of the Evidence Act, the Court cannot hold an enquiry into the possible injury to public interest which may result from the disclosure of the document in question, that matter being left for the authority concerned to decide, the Court is competent to hold a preliminary enquiry and determine the validity of the objection to its prosecution and that necessarily involves an enquiry into the question as to whether the document relates to affairs of State under S. 123. In view of the fact that S. 123 confers wide powers on the Head of the Department, the Heads of Department should act with scrupulous care in exercising their right under S. 123 and should never claim privilege only, or even mainly on the ground that the disclosure of the document in question may defeat the defence raised by the State. Considerations which are relevant in claiming privilege on the ground that the affairs of State may be prejudiced by disclosure must always be distinguished from considerations of expediency which may persuade the Head of the Department to raise a plea of privilege on the ground that if the document is produced, the document will defeat the defence made by the State: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1658.

Under S. 123 read with S. 162 where privilege is claimed in respect of a document by a Head of a Department on the ground that it relates to affairs of State and objection is raised by him for its production in Court, it is for the Court to determine the validity of the objection. The Court may require him to give an affidavit or make a statement on oath and may put any question to him for satisfying itself that the privilege has been validly claimed. The Court is, however, not entitled to inspect the document nor put such questions to the Head of the Department or any other witness as would directly or indirectly reveal its contents. Once the Court comes to the conclusion that the document relates to affairs of State the decision of the Head of the Department to give or withhold permission to its production must be accepted as final. On this point the Court cannot question the discretion of the Head of the Department: A.I.R. 1950 East Punj. 228: (1950) 52 Punj.L.R. 153 (F.B.).

When privilege is claimed in respect of a document on the ground of public interest, held, the Court is entitled, indeed bound, to insist upon its production and inspection with a view to determine whether it relates to the affairs of the State and whether the disclosure of its contents would be prejudicial to public interest; while so doing, the Court would give due weight to the opinion of the executive on the point—which is, however, not conclusive—but it would strike a balance between the requirements of public which demands on the one hand that evidence should be held back and that, on the other, it should have all relevant material before it to do justice to the case; it is only when the former outweighs the latter that the Court would grant privilege: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 243: I.L.R. (1976) 2 Del. 667.

Where an objection is raised regarding the document being a privileged one under S. 123 of the Evidence Act, the Court has no jurisdiction to inspect the document first and then to determine the question as to whether the document is privileged one or not. The proper course in such matters is to first hold an enquiry and then determine the character, class or the nature of the document concerned and if the Court finds that the document belongs to the noxious class, it may stay its hands and refer the document to the Head of Department and leave it to its discretion to produce the document. If, however, the Court finds that the document is not privileged and does not relate to the affairs to the State, it can direct the document to be tendered in evidence and overrule the objection on that score. Under S. 162, Cr.P.Code a Court has got ample powers to direct a witness to produce a document and once orders for the production of a document are passed, the witness concerned has to bring the document in Court and produce the same subject to objections of the other side. The objections will be considered by the Court and if the objection relates to one under S. 123 of the Evidence Act, then the Court cannot inspect document before determining the question as to whether the document is privileged or not. Thus, it is manifest that this stage will arise only after the document is brought before the Court as directed by the Judge. While determining the question as to the nature of the document, the Court must be mindful of the fact that the privilege which is claimed by the State or by the Head of Department should not be utilised to override the considerations other than those of public interest under the mere garb of affairs of State: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 356: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 20.

The statute does not say that the evidence of the Head of the Department shall be conclusive proof. As the decision on the validity of the claim is that of the Court, it is to be based on the entire evidence available on the question. The affidavit of the Head of the Department is only a piece of such evidence: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 106: I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 174: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 486.

When an objection is raised under S. 123, it is for the Court to decide whether a particular document is, as claimed, an unpublished record relating to any affairs of State, i.e., whether it is a document in respect of which privilege can properly be claimed; but once the Court has decided that the document is one in respect of which privilege may be claimed, the question whether the document should be produced or not is one entirely in the discretion of the Head of the Department concerned, and the Court has no power to inspect the document to determine the question of its admissibility, the Court is not entitled to inspect the document for the purpose of deciding whether it is a privileged document within the meaning of the objection taken in that behalf based on the provisions of S. 123: (1950) 52 Bom.L.R. 231: A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 230.

S. 162, though it gives power to the Court to inspect a document or to take other evidence to enable it to determine its admissibility, precludes the Court from inspecting any document which refers to matters of State under this section. The validity of an objection to the production of a document has to be determined by the Court, and the only limitation on the power of the Court, is that in cases of documents where privilege is claimed under S. 123, the Court may not look at those documents but must determine the validity of the claims of privilege on materials other than the document themselves. But a difficulty arises as to how a Court is to determine whether a document refers to affairs of State as contemplated by S. 123, if the Court is not to look at the document at all and therefore, it must be left to a Minister or a person at the Head of the Department concerned, to look at the document, to consider it, and to decide for himself whether the document falls in the category of documen of State referred to in S. 123. If having consi ered the document, he tells the Court that th document is one relating to affairs of Sta and that its disclosure will be injurious public safety the Court ordinarily will acce this statement, if made on oath. The stat ment must, however, not be of a vague or i definite character. The Court may, in proper case not be satisfied with the oath the deponent and he may be asked to subm himself to cross-examination at the hands the party claiming the disclosure of doc ments. But the Court treats the objection conclusive provided it is validly and pro erly taken and, is based on materials whi the Court considers adequate. The ultima adjudication is always by the Court thoug under the peculiar circumstances of the cas the Court accepts the view of the responsib Officer as conclusive proof provided th necessary conditions are satisfied: (1951) Bom.L.R. 229: A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 72.

It is obligatory for a person who has bee summoned to produce a document in h possession or control, to bring it into Cou even if there is any objection to its produ tion or to its being admitted in evidence under S. 123 or 124 of the Evidence Act. Th Court will decide on the validity of the obje tion and he is not entitled to withhold th evidence if the objection is overruled. Th Court will, of course, bear in mind that should not exercise its powers in such a wa as to occasion the mischief which the la providing for the objection is designed guard against. If the objection is a claim privilege under S. 123, the Court has power to inspect the document, but ma only take other evidence for the purpose deciding on the objection. If it is a claim privilege under S. 124, the Court may inspe the document in its discretion. The criteri for the Head of the Department and the Pu lic Officer is whether or not the disclosu would cause injury to public interest. B they are the sole Judges of the matter and t Court cannot interfere with their discretio once it upholds their claim of privilege eith under S. 123 or 124 of the Evidence Act: I.L. (1957) Andh. Pra. 174: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 1 A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 486.

It is open to the Court to decide wheth the document is or is not a record relating any affairs of State. For this purpose t

Court may take evidence if it requires, and if it is satisfied on that evidence that it is a record of that character, then the Court will refrain under S. 162, from inspecting the document; but if it is not so satisfied, then it is open to the Court to call for further evidence, and if still not satisfied to inspect the document itself: 30 Pat.L.T. 327.

Two points arise for consideration under Ss. 123 and 124, viz. whether the document from which the information is to be given is on a matter relating to affairs of the State and whether the disclosure would be against public interest. It is for the Court to decide if the documents relate to the affairs of the State while it is for the Head of the Department concerned to decide if the disclosure would be against public interest. Ordinarily, a document is bound to be produced in the Court unless it relates to the affairs of the State and even if the latter it must be produced for inspection of the Court and the Court may obtain other evidence, if it relates to the affairs of the State. It is the supreme duty of the Court to protect the privilege when it exists, but in order to determine the validity of the objection, the Court has power to inspect the document in appropriate cases: 1954 Cr.L.J. 602: A.I.R. 1954 Bhopal 9.

O. 11, R. 19(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure must be read as subject to S. 162; thus, where a witness summoned to produce certain documents claims privilege by submitting an affidavit, the Court must determine upon the material before it whether the documents were in fact of the class which related to the affairs of the State in the light of A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 196: 1975 M.P.L.J. 801 (D.B.).

Where documents summoned relate to the security of the State, national defence, foreign relations, cabinet decisions and high national policies and privilege is sought, the Court would treat the executive's opinion as conclusive; the decision be best left to be made by the executive for the Court is not the proper place to adjudicate upon such matters. However, on other confidential documents such as confidential reports, etc., about the Government servants, the Court may decide whether privilege should be allowed or not: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 243: I.L.R. (1976) 2 Del. 667.

Inspection of documents—Power of Court—Privilege claimed not under S. 124 but under S. 123—Court cannot inspect such documents: 1968 Cur.L.J. 990 (Punj.)

Where privilege was claimed in respect of a document produced in the sealed cover, held, the request could not be rejected merely on the ground that a copy thereof had been produced by the opposite party which had rendered the document no longer confidential; the Court has to inspect the document and decide the objection itself whether or not the claim for the privilege is just, proper or bona fide: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 264.

It is now well settled that the Court is not bound by the Minister's or the Head of the Department's affidavit; it retains the power to balance the injury to the State or the public service against the risk of injustice before reaching its decision. The final decision as to the objection raised under S. 123 would always be with the Court by reason of S. 162: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149.

It is well settled that privilege cannot be claimed on apprehension that the document sought to be produced would defeat the State's defence; where privilege is claimed, the Court has to determine the character or class of the document summoned; and if it finds that the document does not relate to the affairs of the State, it should refuse to accord privilege and direct its production: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 114.

Claim in affidavit that documents asked to be produced were unpublished official records relating to affairs of State—Court is bound to consider objectively whether material before it justified inference that questioned documents related to affairs of State—If documents relate to questions of public policy they can be said to relate to affairs of State—But averments that file contained several letters written by Head of Department to his subordinates and vice versa or that they were secrets of State do not constitute material from which it can be inferred that documents referred to affairs of State—Privilege of documents should be claimed generally by Minister or Secretary of concerned Department and if there are series of documents in file it should appear from affidavit that they were individually read and considered: 1967 All.L.J. 469: A.I.R. 1968 All. 42.

The Court is not merely competent, but is also bound to hold an enquiry to determine the validity of the objections to production of document and this necessarily involves the enquiry into the questions whether the evidence relates to an affair of State under S. 123 or not. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the document relates to an affair of State, the Court should leave it to the Head of the Department to decide whether he should permit its production or not.

Officers deputed to transcribe in shorthand the speeches of persons at public meetings, under departmental instructions, should not generally be permitted through the procedure prescribed under statute, to object to the production of the transcript as relating to affairs of State. Every such transcript does not relate to or embody matters connected with affairs of State. The mere fact that the record was made by the Police Officer, and confidentially forwarded to his superior, will not render the document privileged under S. 123 read with S. 162 of the Evidence Act. The documents have to be produced for inspection by the Court, and that disclosure will be ordered, if the Court is satisfied that there is no prejudice to public interest, or, the possibility of such prejudice: 1968 Mad.L.W.(Cr.) 211: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 378.

Where a Public Officer declines to produce a certain document, claiming privilege under Ss. 123 and 124, it is for the Court to satisfy itself that the documents relate to any State affair or that their production will be detrimental to public interests and it is not for the Public Officer to decide whether the documents are privileged. The privilege regarding production of documents is a narrow one and the mere fact that their production is likely to prejudice the Crown's case is no reason for their non-production: 161 I.C. 668: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 25.

Order for production of document—Discretion of Court—Exercise of—Court cannot override provisions of Ss. 123 and 124, Evidence Act—Power of Court is not limited by S. 126, Evidence Act—But ordinarily order for production should not conflict with privilege conferred under S. 126: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 833: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 610: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 290.

Reading Ss. 123 and 162 together, the Court cannot hold an enquiry into the possible injury to public interest which may result from the disclosure of the document in respect of which privilege is claimed under S. 123. The Court is competent and indeed is bound to hold a preliminary enquiry and determine the validity of the objections to its production, and that necessarily involves an enquiry into the questions as to whether the evidence relates to an affair of State under S. 123 or not. In holding an enquiry into the validity of the objection under S. 123, the Court cannot permit any evidence about the contents of the document. [I.L.R. 48 Cal. 304; I.L.R. (1945) Lah. 219, Overruled]: Per Majority in [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493].

For the purpose of S. 123 the Court cannot be invited to discuss the question if a particular document falls within the description of "an unpublished official record". The decision of the Public Officer concerned is final on that question: 8 Mys.L.J. 474.

The question whether a certain document shall be given in evidence or withheld, in a case where objection is taken to its production, must be decided by the Public Officer concerned and not by the Judge: 119 I.C. 718: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 342. See also I.L.R. 14 Luck. 351: A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 65.

The Zaildari book and an application by the Zaildar to the Collector praying for the deletion of certain remarks therein, are not in their very nature unpublished official records and no privilege in respect of these documents can, therefore, be claimed under S. 123. The Head of a Department may be the final Judge as to whether a certain document does or does not relate to matters of State but he cannot be the final Judge as to whether the document has been published or not and whether it is official or not: (1946) 48 Punj. L.R. 41: A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 459.

Power of Court and power of Departmental Head—Decision as to whether claim of privilege in respect of document well founded or not—Ultimate decision must always rest with Court and not with Head of Department to which that register belongs—Power of Court is restricted only if it comes to opinion that particular document relates to affairs of State: 1969 All.Cr.R. 322: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 494.

Defendant State claiming privilege—Court looking at such papers and acting on them—Procedure unwarranted: 1968 Lab. I.C. 302 (All.).

Election petition—Evidence sought to be given derived from unpublished official records relating to affairs of State—Court has jurisdiction to determine whether those documents relate to affairs of State: (1967) 2 An.W.R. 401: 1967 Cr.L.J. 691: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 155.

When a Government Order simply refers to a report from the Chief Engineer to the Secretary, Government, P.W.D. and does not mention its contents and it is not possible to know from the Government Order what the contents of the report are, the mere mention of the report in the Government Order does not amount to the report having been published, inasmuch as the extent to which it is published is not the contents but only that it is a letter and when what is sought to be let in as evidence is not the letter number, but its contents, the contents of the report remain an unpublished record within the meaning of S. 123. The mere fact that the letter is relevant or that it is an important piece of evidence or that it has some bearing on the Government coming to a conclusion in respect of a particular matter, cannot be a ground for deciding the question of allowing or refusing privilege in respect of the document, and if the Government is entitled to privilege on grounds mentioned in Ss. 123, 124, the privilege cannot be refused: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 251.

A Magistrate who came across a document during trial of a criminal case consulted the first Magistrate and declined to allow the document to be produced on ground that it was a document of State. Held, his action was correct: 22 Nag.L.R. 34: A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 304.

3. "Affairs of State".—The expression "affairs of State" in S. 123, is a very wide one. Every communication proceeding from one Officer of the State to another Officer of the State is not necessarily one relating to the affairs of State. Only such documents which relate to the affairs of the State the disclosure of which would be detrimental to the public interest would come within the category of unpublished official records relating to the affairs of the State, entitled to protection under S. 123: (1950) 52 Bom.L.R. 231: A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 230.

Per Majority (Gajendregadkar, J., Sinha, C.J. and Wanchoo, J.): As the Legislature has advisedly refrained from defining the expression "affairs of State" it would be inexpedient for judicial decisions to attempt to put the said expression into a straitjacket of a definition judicially evolved. The question must be determined in each case on the relevant facts and circumstances adduced before the Court.

Per Subba Rao, J.—Subject to the overriding power of the Court to disallow the claim of privilege in exceptional cases, the following provide working rules of guidance for the Courts in the matter of deciding the question of privilege in regard to unpublished documents pertaining to matters of State: (a) "records relating to affairs of State" mean documents of State whose production would endanger the public interest; (b) documents pertaining to public security, defence and foreign relations are documents relating to affairs of State; (c) unpublished documents relating to trading, commercial or contractual activities of the State are not, ordinarily to be considered as documents relating to affairs of State; but in special circumstances they may partake of that character; (d) in case of documents mentioned in (c) supra, it is a question of fact in each case whether they relate to affairs of State or not in the sense that if they are disclosed public interest would suffer: (1961) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 203: (1961) 2 S.C.R. 371: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493.

The expression "affairs of State" used in S. 123 is used in the narrower sense in comparison with its use in Art. 309 of the Constitution of India; it is, thus, of no use for interpreting Art. 309 wherein the expression takes within its sweep all the affairs and activities of the State in modern times: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 273: 1970 Pat.L.J.R. 212: 1970 B.L.J.R. 631 (D.B.).

The expression "affairs of State" as used in S. 123 of the Evidence Act refers to matter of a public nature in which the State is concerned and the disclosure of which will be prejudicial to the public interest or injurious to national defence, or detrimental to good diplomatic relations: (1950) 52 Punj.L.R. 153: A.I.R. 1950 East Punj. 228 (F.B.).

The term "affairs of State" contained in S. 123 is a general one but it cannot include all that is contained in the record. Where an open enquiry is made, statement recorded during the open enquiry cannot be deemed to be confidential and similarly, any application or complaint made by a person cannot be held to relate to the "affairs of State": 1964 All.L.J. 950: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 452: A.I.R. 1965 All. 494.

As the Legislature has refrained from defining the expression "the affairs of the State" occurring in S. 123, it is inexpedient to define this expression. It means matters of a public nature, with which the State is concerned, or the disclosure of which will be prejudicial to the public service, when the State is a party to the litigation and documents relate to commercial or contractual activities of the State, privilege can be claimed in respect of such documents, but privilege should not be claimed unadvisedly, lightly or capriciously. Thus, where the affidavit was submitted by the State claiming privilege in respect of certain unpublished official records, held, the lower Court had committed an error in adjudicating on the merits of the claim of privilege made by the State. [A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Pat. 76.

The words "affairs of State" are not confined only to matters which will be prejudicial to the public interest or injurious to national defence or detrimental to good diplomatic relations. It may cover the case of documents in respect of which the practice of keeping them secret is necessary for the proper functioning of the public service. When a report is made regarding the activities of an individual with a view to enable the State to take action against him under the Preventive Detention Act, such a report does not only relate to the affairs of the individual, but it also relates to the affairs of the individual, so far as they affect the affairs of the State: I.L.R. (1961) 13 Assam 472: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1551: A.I.R. 1960 Assam 210.

When a privilege is claimed with regard to certain documents, the Court without inspecting the documents will determine the validity of objection under S. 123, particularly with regard to the character of the document whether it relates to the "affairs of the State". The Court under S. 162 of the Evidence Act will not inspect the document although it is brought to Court in order to determine whether it relates to the affairs of State. It will, however, have power to determine the point by entertaining collateral evidence or evidence aliunde. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 254, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 131 (D.B.).

A Cabinet decision certainly relates to the affairs of the State; it affects the Cabinet's integrity in laying down and executing public polices; privilege can certainly be claimed for its non-production in the Court: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 114.

Resolutions passed by or other deliberations held at the Council of Ministers or advice finally tendered to the Governor pursuant thereto are privileged communications; they are exempt from production in Courts, irrespective of the Evidence Act. However, it lies in the sole discretion of the Governor to produce the proceedings of the Council of Ministers without objection or claiming privilege; there is no constitutional bar under Art. 163(3) of the Constitution against such production in or perusal by the Court. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 383, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1995 Raj. 69.

Where the President's satisfaction for issuing a proclamation under Art. 356 of the Constitution is based on a report from the Governor of a State and "otherwise", that is, other information received from other sources, held, the Cabinet cannot claim privilege in respect of such other information: A.I.R. 1993 Madh. Pra. 214 (F.B.).

Art. 74(2) of the Constitution merely bars an enquiry into the question whether any, and if so, what advice was tendered by the Cabinet to the President; it does not bar the Court from calling upon the Union of India to disclose the material on which the President felt satisfied; such material is no part of the Cabinet's advice, even if the President had seen, or was shown, it. However, Art. 74(2) of the Constitution and S. 123 of the Evidence Act cover different fields; therefore, while defending the Presidential action, the Minister or the concerned official may claim privilege under S. 123 which the Court will decide as per the provisions of the section. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1361, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1918.

Per Majority Gajendragadkar, J., Sinha C.J. and Wanchoo, J., Kapoor, J., concurring).— Documents which embody the minutes of the meetings of the Council of Ministers and indicate the advice which the Council ultimately gave to the Rajpramkuh, and the document embodying the advice tendered by the Public Service Commission to the Council of Ministers, are protected under S. 123, and if the Head of the Department does not give permission for their production, the Court cannot compel the State to produce them. The advice given by the Cabinet to the Rajpramukh or the Governor is expressly saved by Art. 163(3) of the Constitution. The report received by the Council of Ministers from the Public Service Commission carries on its face, the character of a document the disclosure of which would lead to injury to public interest. It falls in that class of document which on ground of public interest must, as a class, be withheld from production. [A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 407, Reversed].

Per Subba Rao, J.—The claim of privilege in regard to the documents embodying the minutes recorded in the course of Cabinet discussions must be sustained, but the claim of privilege in regard to the report of the Public Service Commission must be rejected: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493.

Even though previously "affairs of State" meant matters of political or administrative character, the present connotation of the expression would comprehend commercial activities, undertaken in pursuit of the State's welfare activities; privilege could, therefore, be extended to such documents as are related to such commercial activities: (1979-80) 84 Cal.W.N. 751.

The document which embodies the minutes of the discussion between private party and State Minister and which indicates the advice given by the Minister is certainly protected under S. 123 of the Evidence Act. In a suit against the State if such a document is not produced and protection under S. 123, Evidence Act, is claimed, the Court cannot compel the State to produce it. At the time when the Evidence Act was enacted the words "affairs of the State" might have had a narrow conception. "Affairs of the State" then might have related to the matters of political or administrative character relating, for instance, to the national defence, public peace, security and good neighbourly relations. But on account of the changed conception of the functions of the State, the State in pursuit of its welfare activities which were in the past treated as purely commercial matters, is apt to claim, the privilege relating to the affairs of the State in accordance with S. 123 of the Evidence Act. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Rel. on]: I.L.R. (1969) 19 Raj. 461: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 118 (D.B.).

One Hari Ram filed a complaint under Ss. 167/217-218, Penal Code, against Sub-Inspector and Head Constable of a Police Station, alleging that they had made interpolations in the surveillance register of the Police station by adding the name of the complainant without any orders from any competent authority and against the statute and the Police Rules. The complainant applied for summoning the register to the Court. The State claimed privilege under S. 123, Evidence Act and the Home Secretary filed an affidavit averring that the register was an unpublished official record relating to the affairs of the State and that its disclosure would be prejudicial to the public interests. The affidavit further stated that there was absolute necessity to keep the register as secret for the proper functioning of the Police Department and its disclosure would frustrate the purpose of secret surveillance of bad characters and criminals. Held, that Rr. 23.4 (1), 23.31 and 27.24(2) of the Punjab Police Rules treated the contents of surveillance register as strictly confidential and since the said register being a document necessarily pertaining to public security or public peace and security would fall within the ambit of the term "affairs of State". This test being satisfied the Courts of law ought not to hold an enquiry into the possible injury to public interest which might result from the disclosure of the document relating to the affairs of the State. This was a matter entirely for the authority concerned and the Head of the Department concerned to decide. In fact such a person would be the sole judge to determine whether the disclosure thereof was or was not in public interest. The privilege was also claimed by the proper authority and in the manner prescribed by law and hence the privilege should be upheld: I.L.R. (1969) 2 Punj. 338.

All the documents relating to deployment of armed forces are unpublished official records and, in the very nature of things, are confidential and secret papers. Except officers dealing with law and order, none has naturally access to such documents. Whenever, it is found necessary by the State to maintain law and order in a particular locality, the armed forces can be deployed at the discretion of the authorities responsible for maintenance of law and order. Therefore, it can be said with no fear of contradiction that all such papers relate to the affairs of the State. Where allegations of arson were made against unnamed armed constables of a Batalian and records of names of constables deputed and the number of guns and ammunition they carried were called for, held, unpublished official records relating to the affairs of the State which by their very nature were confidential and secret, could not be permitted to be produced in Court to be exposed to the public view and even if documents containing the list of names of the armed forces deployed were produced in Court, it would not serve any useful purpose because, none of the forces could possibly be made accused for having committed arson and an accusing finger could not be pointed out to any one. [A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149, Rel. on]: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1570 (Ori.).

"Affairs of State"—Meaning of—State activities of a welfare State like India are fast expanding after independence—Administrative instructions and guidance notes secretly given to various Departments of Government can claim status of being documents relating to affairs of State. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 254, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 131 (D.B.).

Where the appointment of the Chief Secretary of the State Government was impugned on the ground that R. 3(2-A) of the Indian Administrative Service (Pay) Rules, 1954 was not complied with, held, if documentary evidence in the nature of unpublished official records exist dealing with the selection of the Chief Secretary, that cannot be said to be evidence relating to "affairs of the State"; no privilege could be claimed in respect thereof. However, the Cabinet's advice to the Government for the appointment of the incumbent cannot be looked into by the Court under Art. 163 (3) of the Constitution of India and is, therefore, privileged. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1658, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 93: 1971 Pat.L.J.R. 471: 1971 B.L.J.R. 918 (F.B.).

Affidavit—Privilege—Allegation that a person was recommended to the post of a Judge of High Court but the recommendation was turned down on ground that he had no judicial experience—Allegations not denied in counter-affidavit but privilege claimed on ground that it related to affairs of State—Held that there was no duty on Government to claim privilege in case of this kind—They had duty to speak truth. Affidavits are not excepted from scope of this rule: I.L.R. (1961) Mad. 553: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 450.

It is not possible to see how in cases dealing with non-appointment of an Additional High Court Judge for a further term or the transfer of a High Court Judge the disclosure of correspondence exchanged between the Law Minister, the Chief Justice of the High Court, the State Government and the Chief Justice of India and the relevant notings made by them could at all be said to be injurious to public interest. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149.

Character rolls and confidential reports are maintained for the purpose of providing an appraisal of the merit of State servants by their superiors from time to time. They are in the nature of confidential communications from one official to another and are meant to serve as part of the material designed to maintain the efficiency of the public service. The disclosure of the contents of such documents would certainly affect materially the freedom and candour of expression of opinion of those officers whose duty it is to make entries therein. The carrying on of the public administration in a proper manner cannot but be regarded as an "affair of State" and, therefore, documents which are maintained for the purpose of so carrying on the administration would relate to "affairs of State". Therefore, the character rolls and confidential reports are the documents, evidence derived from which cannot be given as per S. 123. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Appl.; 1968 Cur.L.J. 990 (Punj.); A.I.R. 1969 Del. 246, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1950 East Punj. 228 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 387; A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 255 held not good law in view of A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493]: A.I.R. 1975 P.&H. 11.

Letter written by Superintending Engineer to contractor held did not relate to affairs of State—No privilege to be claimed: 31 Cut.L.T. 412: I.L.R. (1965) Cut. 269.

Where a relation of an accused being tried in the Sessions Court lodged a complaint with the Deputy Inspector General of Police that the local Police was colluding with the complainant party and under his instructions witnesses were examined and report was submitted to him, held, neither the complaint nor the statements recorded nor the report submitted related to the affairs of the State nor were they communications made in confidence to a Public Officer; Ss. 123 and 124 were not attracted: 1982 Cr.L.J. 393 (Andh. Pra.).

4. Relative scope of this section and section 124.—S. 123 of the Evidence Act gives effect to the principle that public interests must be paramount and private interests must give way when there is a conflict between public interests and private interests. The privilege under the section only applies to unpublished official records, relating to any affairs of State and before privilege can be claimed there must be an adjudication that the documents in respect of which privilege is claimed are official records relating to affairs of State. The principle is that it is not all records, relating to the affairs of State that are privileged, but only those the disclosure of which would result in an injury being caused to public interests. S. 124 is really supplementary to S. 123: A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 72: (1951) 53 Bom.L.R. 229.

The objections under Ss. 123 and 124 cannot be treated as on at par with each other, without discriminating the one from the other. The considerations which should weigh with the Court in deciding objections under S. 123, ought not to be mixed up with those which should weigh in deciding objection under S. 124. A question arising under S. 123 has therefore, to be considered only with reference to S. 123 divorced from the considerations which may be germane to or relevant under S. 124: (1950) 52 Bom.L.R. 231: A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 230.

The word "unpublished" in S. 123 and the disclosure contemplated in S. 124, relate primarily to the person against whom privilege is claimed under those sections, and if he has been permitted lawfully to see those papers, and also to take copies of the same it will be futile for the authorities to claim privilege under either of those sections. S. 123 by its own terms is limited to unpublished official records and therefore, the privilege can hardly be asserted in relation to documents the contents of which have already been published. The principles dealing with publication applicable to the law of libel do not apply for the construction of S. 123. Prima facie the two differ because in actions for libel it is injury to the reputation of a person, caused by wide dissemination of libellous matter that is involved. But the privilege under S. 123 is claimed against a particular litigant in a case, and if the papers concerned have already been shown to him by the Officer-in-charge of the papers and if in respect of some of the papers, certified copies have also been granted to him, it cannot be said that the document still retained its unpublished character: 29 Cut.L.T. 179: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 213: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 111.

S. 123 of the Evidence Act relates to the evidence as to the affairs of the State, whereas S. 124 pertains to the disclosure of communications made to a Public Officer in official confidence. Although both the sections resemble each other in a number of points, the communication which is made to a Public Officer and which may relate to the affairs of the State would be covered by S. 123 of the Evidence Act. But if the communication is made in official confidence, wherein affairs of the State are not involved, but public interest would otherwise suffer by disclosure under S. 124, the Court can inspect the documents in question and determine the claim of privilege. Thus, returns submitted to Income-tax Officer and statements made to him cannot be said to be made in official confidence within the meaning of S. 124, Evidence Act. [(1909) I.L.R. 32 Mad. 62; (1899) I.L.R. 26 Cal. 281; (1950) 52 Cr.L.J. 161; (1953) 2 All E.R. 149, Foll.]: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1496: 1972 Raj.L.W. 433: 1972 W.L.N. 279.

Reports made by one Public Officer to another in the discharge of his official duties would come both within the ambit of S. 123 and within the scope of S. 124. Apart from such class of documents claiming the status of documents relating to public affairs within the meaning of S. 123 they can also be treated as privileged documents if and when the Public Officer to whom they are sent in official confidence considers that the public interests would suffer by their disclosure if they relate to matters relating not to public policy. The foundation of the claim of privilege under S. 123 is that the document from which evidence is sought to be derived is from any "unpublished official record relating to any affairs of state". Under S. 124, the occasion for claiming privilege arises only when the evidence sought to be given is a communication made to a Public Officer in "official confidence".

In both Ss. 123 and 124, the Court is the Judge as to whether the documents in respect of which privilege is claimed is a State document or whether the communication was made in official confidence. If a document comes within S. 123, the Court cannot inspect it though it can take other evidence to determine the character attributed to the document. If the document falls within S. 124, the Court can inspect it to determine the claim of privilege. But as regards the question whether a disclosure will or will not be prejudicial to public interest the Head of the Department concerned in S. 123 or the Officer concerned in S. 124 is the Judge. The opinion of the Officer concerned is conclusive only when he claims privilege on the ground that the public interests would suffer and not when it is claimed on any other ground: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 280: (1962) 1 An.W.R. 256: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 649.

Document falling within S. 124—Court must inspect the documents and determine whether the communications have been made in official confidence and whether the public interest will suffer by the disclosure of the contents of the documents within the meaning of S. 124—Only where the document comes within S. 123, the Court cannot inspect it, but can take other evidence to determine the character attributed to the document: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 444.

S. 162 deals with the production of documents in answer to summons and it is obligatory on a witness so summoned, to produce the documents called for by the Court, he has no right to determine whether the documents shall be produced. When producing them, it is for him to claim privilege, if the documents are privileged, and it is the duty of the Court to determine whether the documents shall be admitted and exhibited. Ss. 162 and 123 protect the discovery of documents relating to matters of State. There is a difference between a private witness called upon to produce documents and a public officer summoned to produce a public record. S. 124 is more particular and lays down the rule of public policy and the limits within which the production can be withheld, in other words, the character and quality of the privilege. The condition precedent to or the test of privilege under S. 124 is that communication was made to the public officer in official confidence. The question is primarily to be decided by the Court before whom the privilege is claimed. It should be claimed at the earliest opportunity, and it is futile to claim the privilege at a late stage when there has already been a disclosure of the document given in charge of the Court: (1939) 41 Bom.L.R. 391: A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 237. See also I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 280: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 358.

Ss. 123 and 125 cannot be understood as mutually exclusive. They do overlap. The difference between the two is that while S. 123 applies only to evidence derived from unpublished official records relating to any affair of the State, S. 124 applies to all communications made in official confidence, whether such communications are in writing or not and whether they relate to any affairs of State or not. Against S. 123 leaves the discretion of divulging the contents of State documents to the Head of the Department, whereas S. 124 leaves the discretion of disclosing communications made in official confidence to the Public Officer to whom the communication was made, whether or not he is the Head of the Department. Even if a subordinate public officer does not claim any privilege in respect of a document falling under S. 123, such evidence cannot be admitted. But under S. 124 a Public Officer may waive the privilege in his own discretion without any reference to his Head of the Department. A document marked confidential is not by itself the basis of a successful claim of privilege under S. 124. It must be further shown that the public interest would suffer by the disclosure of that document: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 20.

A privilege can be claimed for unpublished official records under S. 123 or official correspondence under S. 124; when privilege is claimed under S. 123, the Court has to hold a preliminary enquiry to ascertain whether or not the document relates to affairs of the State for which purpose the Court should direct the parties to file their affidavits, desirably of the Head of the Department or, may be, even of a Minister, disclosing why the document relates to the affairs of the State. On the Court being satisfied on the point, the document is excluded; otherwise it may itself inspect the document and decide whether to accord or withhold privilege; if the document is partially inoccuous, it may be produced in evidence after sealing other parts of the document. However, for the purposes of S. 124 the objection need not be raised by the Head of the Department; it may well be raised by the Public Officer; the objector must contend that the communication was made in official confidence which is to be determined by the Court, not by the Public Officer. But the Court must decided whether the documents falls within the ambit of S. 123 or S. 124: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 253: 1978 Rajdhani L.R. 345.

5. Privileged documents — Duty of officer of Government.—The Head of the Department must in the first place examine the document and consider whether privilege should or should not be claimed in respect of the document. He may then appear in person, before the Court to raise the objection or he may direct one of his subordinates to do so on his behalf with a certificate signed by him and stating that he has examined the document. But where the latter course is followed, the Head of the Department will not be absolved from the obligation of appearing in person and satisfying the Court that the objection taken by him is valid. The Court may require him to give an affidavit or make a statement on oath and may put any further question to him for satisfying itself that the privilege has been validly claimed. But the Court is not entitled to inspect the document, nor put such questions to the Head of the Department or any other witness, either directly or indirectly to reveal its contents: 1959 B.L.J.R. 658: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 192.

It is clearly essential in the public interest that responsible Government Department should be entitled to claim privilege for documents, the disclosure of which would be against the public interest, and it is clearly right that the decision of the responsible Minister on the question whether privilege should be insisted on or not in respect of any particular document should be final. But in the interests of justice—particularly in a case which concerns a claim of one of subjects against a Government Department—document within the ambit of privilege should be most carefully scrutinised, and the person entrusted with that task should in regard to each document, ask himself whether it is relevant to the plaintiff's case, whether the plaintiff's case will be hampered or impeded if it is not made available and, if so, whether the probability of any harm being done to the public interest by disclosing it is sufficient to outweigh those other considerations. Further in a case where there is a large number of relevant documents within the ambit of privilege which may or may not become of real materiality to the case as it develops, there should be some one on the spot readily available—whether Counsel or Solicitor on the Government side or an official from the Department concerned—invested with authority to consider questions of privilege which may arise in the course of the case, and in his discretion to waive the claim of privilege. That, of course, would not apply to documents which from the outset appear to be such that they should on no account be disclosed for reasons of public interest. But in the case of ordinary documents, the disclosure of which could not, apparently, do any harm to anybody, it should be possible for the question to be disposed of in the course of the trial of an action without the delay imposed by reference back to the Minister: (1933) 2 All E.R. 149.

The Minister is in no way concerned as such with the issues between the parties or the relative importance in an action of the material sought to be disclosed. The Minister should no doubt accept and recognize, that the proper administration of justice may be impeded or may be unattainable if any document or any evidence which the Court would allow to be seen by the parties or which the Court allow to be put or given in evidence is withheld. Nevertheless his sole concern is whether the interests of the State in the sphere for which he is the responsible official would be so affected that the Crown should without documents or evidence from the parties and the Court: (1958) 1 W.L.R. 1300.

The Government should not claim privilege as a routine in every case and thus unnecessarily invite suspicion when, on the other hand, disclosure will be to its benefit. This tendency of secretiveness in matters which concern large numbers of employees is hardly consistent with the open and democratic society that our Constitution is committed to build: I.L.R. (1972) 1 Del. 446 (D.B.).

A privilege under S. 123, Evidence Act, should be rarely claimed, and should only be claimed, after the responsible Minister or the Head of the Department has fully satisfied himself that the document whose disclosure is being resisted is really a document relating to the affairs of the State and whose disclosure will result in injury to public interests. The scales are always weighed against the subject who fights against Government, the Government should be loath to throw against him more weight in the scales by refusing disclosure of documents which are relevant to the issue in the suit. Government should always bear in mind that it is incumbent upon it to see that there is a fair trial between itself and the subject who is fighting the Government; it should also bear in mind that the loyalty of its officers to the cause of Government should not prevail to the extent of injustice being done to the subject. Even if disclosure of a document may result in the subject succeeding or in getting heavy damages or compensation against the Government there is no reason why a material document should not be disclosed. The only loyalty which the section contemplates and which must undoubtedly prevail over private interests is the loyalty to the State in the sense that public interest must prevail over private interest and the disclosure of a particular document, will damnify public interest: (1951) 53 Bom.L.R. 229: A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 72, followed in 1957 Cr.L.J. 134.

The decision taken at the level of the Ministry or by the authorised Secretary at the Secretariat level though expressed in the name of the President is not immuned from judicial scrutiny and is to be produced and inspected by the Court. If public interest immunity under S. 123 of Evidence Act is claimed, the Court would first consider it in camera and decide the issue. The immunity must not be claimed on administrative routine and it must be for valid, relevant and strong grounds or reasons stated in the affidavit filed in that behalf: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1769: (1993) 4 S.C.C. 120.

Under S. 123 when a Government official desires to claim privilege, it is desirable, even if it is not essential, that he should put in a statement stating that he has considered the documents carefully and had come to the conclusion that they cannot be produced without injury to the public interests: 1946 Nag.L.J. 205: I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 385: A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 256. An objection validly taken that it would be injurious to the public interest to produce a document is conclusive. But the mere fact that the Head of the Department does not wish the document to be produced is not an adequate justification for objection to its production. Production should only be withheld when the public interest would otherwise be damnified, as where disclosure would be injurious to national defence or to good diplomatic relations, or where the practice of keeping a class of documents secret is necessary for the proper functioning of the public service: (1950) 52 Bom.L.R. 231: A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 230.

It is true that the Head of a Department has an absolute privilege on the point, it is for him to decide whether the matter is one in which privilege should be claimed or should not be claimed, but it would be good to follow the practice of the English law, namely, that some indication should be given to the Court as to why privilege is claimed or what affairs of State are involved in the matter. Without such indication, there is always a danger that the Court may draw an adverse inference from the non-production of the document: (1940) 42 Punj.L.R. 484: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 217.

The fact that in the first instance, the Government had sent some documents for the inspection of the Court, to satisfy itself on its claim to privilege does not preclude the Government from subsequently claiming privilege against Court's inspection regarding the same documents, if they still remain unopened along with other documents of the same nature: (1959) 1 L.L.J. 539: (1958-59) 15 F.J.R. 297 (Punj.).

The fact that privilege claimed by the State if upheld would defeat a person's interest and would cause great hardship to him, is hardly a ground for denying a valid claim of privilege made by the State. It is settled law that where private interest and public will clash with each other, private interest must make way for the latter. There is no magic incantation or a formula which must necessarily be repeated in the filing of the affidavits for claiming the privilege under Ss. 123 and 162 of the Evidence Act. When it has been expressly averred that the Officer concerned has very carefully considered the document in issue and also given detailed reasons for his conclusion that the disclosure thereof would be against public interest, the mere absence of the word "read" or words "bona fide" would in no way detract from the validity of such an affidavit: I.L.R. (1969) 2 Punj. 338.

Reports made by one Public Officer to another in the discharge of his official duties and notes not minutes made by respective officers of the Government on relevant files come within the ambit of S. 123 and within the scope of S. 124 and are privileged documents. These documents come within the scope of documents which must be treated as confidential in the interests of efficient administration of public affairs and for the proper functioning of public services. Apart from such class of documents claiming the status of documents relating to public affairs within the meaning of S. 123, they can also be treated as privileged documents, if and when the Public Officer to whom they are sent in official confidence, considers that the public interests would suffer by their disclosure, if they relate to matters of public policy. It is a matter for the Head of the Department to consider and decide whether the disclosure of the documents would lead to injury to the public interests and where the Head of the Department files an affidavit averring that the disclosure of the documents would lead to injury to the public interests and it is also his case that because public interests would suffer by the disclosure of the documents, they have the status of documents relating to public affairs, and it is no part of the jurisdiction of the Court to decide whether the disclosure of the given documents would lead to injury to public interest. The jurisdiction of the Court is confined to the narrow limits provided by the second clause of S. 162, viz., it is open to him to take evidence to decide the character of the documents but it cannot inspect and peruse the documents: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 251.

The oath of office of secrecy adumbrated in Art. 75(4) and Schedule III of the Constitution does not absolve the Minister from filing affidavit, either stating the reasons in support of the public interest immunity to produce the State documents or as to how the matter was dealt with or for their production when discovery order nisi or rule nisi was issued on the other hand, it is his due discharge of the duty as a Minister to obey rule nisi or discovery order nisi and act in aid of the Court: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1769: (1993) 4 S.C.C. 120.

Claim of privilege under S. 123—When can be allowed—Claim must strictly fall within four corners of provisions of law because admission of such claim deprives the subject of evidence on matters directly in issue—Copy of document in respect of which privilege claimed by defendant filed by plaintiff—Court cannot without deciding claim of privilege, by calling upon defendant to admit or deny same, have its contents proved indirectly—Privilege claimed in respect of document which contained order of termination of plaintiff on ground that disclosure would affect freedom and candour of expression and endanger proper functioning of public service—Held, as Government servant was entitled to show that order in substance amounted to punishment, claim could not be allowed as document was not shown to be noxious: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 387.

Government employee challenging reversion from officiating post—Consideration by authorities of employer's witness—Employee seeking production of connected files —Permissibility—Non-disclosure of such documents necessary for proper functioning of public service—Their disclosure will affect freedom of public servant and his expression—Injury to public interest will hence result—Production therefore not ordered—(Delhi Administration Subordinate, Ministerial/Executive Service Rules, 1967, Rr. 3 and 5—Constitution of India, Art. 311): 1969 Lab.I.C. 974: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 246.

Privilege cannot be claimed unless production would be injurious to public interest or unless keeping of documents secret is necessary for functioning of public service: 1972 Mah.L.J. 618: (1972) 74 Bom.L.R. 320.

When there was no claim or contention that disclosure would be prejudicial to public interest or to national security, held, the bare plea that the letters in question are "confidential letters" is of no avail: (1992-1) 33 Guj.L.R. 310.

6. Manner in which privilege may be claimed.—There is nothing in O. 11, R. 19, C.P. Code which requires a party to file an affidavit to support the claim of privilege. Judicial decisions however, emphasise that affidavits should be filed when privilege is claimed. The Provincial Government where it is a party has to decide whether it should claim privilege in respect to documents of which inspection or production is sought. It may take the advice of the Head of the Department but the objection has to be raised in the Court by the Provincial Government which is a party to the suit and not by the Head of the Department which is not a party. The Provincial Government in such a case can authorise any of its Officers to swear an affidavit on its behalf. The authority and discretion of the Provincial Government to select one of its Officers to conduct proceedings and act on its behalf in Court cannot be questioned. It is only where the Provincial Government is not a party that the contention may be raised that the privilege should be claimed by the Head of the Department concerned: I.L.R. (1950) Nag. 690.

The difference between S. 94(5), Cr.P. Code, and O. 11, R. 19(2) of the C.P. Code, is that the provisions in the C.P. Code, does not say anything about Ss. 123, 124 and 162, Evidence Act. The prohibition with regard to the inspection of a State document arises out of the privilege of the State, it is not a procedural matter with which alone sub-R. (2) of R. 19 of O. 11, C.P. Code deals. The matter of State privilege is a matter of constitutional law and is dealt with specifically under Ss. 123 and 162, Evidence Act. S. 4, C.P. Code, lays down that nothing in the Code would affect any special or local law in force. Ss. 123 and 162, Evidence Act, being a special law, the general provision of law contained in sub-R. (2) of R. 19 of O. 11, C.P.Code, cannot abrogate the special law: 1957 Cr.L.J. 134; 1959 B.L.J.R. 658: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 192.

The claim of privilege of document under S. 123, Evidence Act should generally be made by the Minister-in-charge who is the Political Head of the Department concerned and the affidavit made in that behalf should show that each document in respect of which the claim is made has been carefully read and considered, and the person making the affidavit is bona fide satisfied that its disclosure would lead to public injury. Held, that in the present case the claim of privilege could be rejected on the preliminary ground that the document signed by the Home Minister and claiming privilege did not satisfy the requirements of affidavit for making such claim: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 107: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1658.

Per Majority (Gajendragadkar, J., Sinha, C.J. and Wanchoo, J.) —The effect of the document on the ultimate course of litigation or its impact on the Head of the Department or the Minister in charge of the Department, or even the Government in power, has no relevance in making a claim for privilege under S. 123. The sole and the only test which should determine the decision of the Head of the Department is injury to public interest and nothing else. The privilege should be claimed generally by the Minister in charge who is the Political Head of the Department concerned; if not the Secretary of the Department who is the Departmental head should make the claim; and the claim should always be made in the form of an affidavit. The affidavit should show that each document in question has been carefully read and considered, and the person making the affidavit is satisfied that its disclosure would lead to public injury. If there are a series of documents included in a file it should appear from the affidavit that each one of the documents, whose disclosure is objected to, has been duly considered by the authority concerned. The affidavit should also indicate briefly within permissible limits the reasons why it is apprehended that their disclosure would lead to injury to public interest. If the affidavit produced in support of the claim for privilege is found to be unsatisfactory a further affidavit may be called, and in a proper case the person making the affidavit whether he is a Minister or the Secretary should be summoned to face cross-examination on the relevant points.

Per Subba Rao, J.—The said claim shall be made by an affidavit filed by the Minister in charge of the Department concerned describing the nature of the document in general and broadly the category of public interest its non-disclosure purports to serve. In exceptional circumstances, when it has reason to believe that there is more than what meets the eye, it can examine the Minister and take other evidence to decide the question of privilege under no circumstances can a Court inspect the document of which privilege is claimed: (1961) 2 S.C.R. 371: (1961) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 203: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493. See also (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 321 (Cal.) (D.B.); 1972 Raj.L.W. 433: 1972 W.L.N. 279: 1972 Cr.L.J 1495.

Affidavit claiming privilege under S. 123 should be by the Head of the Department. Where the suit is against the Union of India as representing North Eastern Railway, the Head of the Personnel Department of the North Eastern Railway is not the Head of the Department of Government.

The affidavit should be by the Railway Minister, being the Political Head of the Department of the Secretary to the Ministry of Railways who is the highest officer and the Head of the Department. It is one of them who can claim this privilege under S. 123 if he so thinks fit. He can call for the papers from the Officer of the Railway Administration concerned and, after examining the papers himself, he has first to decide as to whether the papers called for relate to any affairs of the State; if so, whether their production could cause public injury or impair public interest. It is only when he comes to this conclusion that he can withhold the permission for, or refuse, production of the document in Court. For the grave purpose of S. 123 all those officers mentioned in Annexure 1 as Heads of Departments mentioned in Appendix XXXVIII of the Indian Railway Establishment Code, Vol. II, prepared in pursuance of Rule 2202(9) of the Railway Supplementary Rules, cannot be taken to be the Heads of the Railway Department which is the Department of the Government of India as envisaged in S. 123: 1963 B.L.J.R. 138: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 129.

Government claiming privilege in respect of document—Procedure—Duty of Court: I.L.R. (1961) 13 Assam 472: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1551: A.I.R. 1960 Assam 210.

7. "Head of the Department concerned".—Privilege can be claimed in respect of unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State under S. 123 of the Evidence Act only by the "Head of the Department concerned". The Secretary to the Provincial Government is the Head of the Department concerned and under S. 123 it is either the Minister or the Provincial Head of the Department who has the right to grant or withdraw permission to the production of the documents relating to the affairs of State. The Director of Industries may be called the Head of the Department for other purposes but for purposes of S. 123 of the Evidence Act it is the Secretary of the Department or the Minister in charge of the concerned Department who can file an affidavit giving or withholding the permission contemplated in this Act and therefore, the Director of Industries is not entitled to claim privilege respecting letters in the land acquisition file kept and maintained by him: 1963 Cur.L.J. 130 (Punj.).

For the purpose of claiming privilege under S. 123, the expression "Head of Department" has two distinct meanings. It may be limited to Heads of the various Departments, of the Secretariat, namely, the Secretaries of the Departments, or else it may also include Heads of Departments of attached offices either under the Union Government or under the State Government. The privilege should be claimed generally by the Minister in charge who is the political Head of the Department concerned, if not, the Secretary of the Department who is the Departmental Head. The reason for thus limiting the expression to the highest officials in the State is that privilege under S. 123, is only claimed in respect of "affairs of State" and it is ordinarily expected that neither the Minister concerned nor the Secretary of the Department would lightly make such a claim whereas the Heads of Departments of subordinates offices may not be fully alive to their responsibility in this matter, and interests other than public interest may masquerade in the garb of public interest and take undue advantage of the provisions of S. 123: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 111: 29 Cut.L.T. 179: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 213.

The expression "Head of the Department" in S. 123 must be confined to the Minister who is the Political Head of the Department and, in special circumstances, the Secretary of the Department and none else. In the context of Rules framed under Art. 166 of the Constitution, Inspector-General of Police cannot be the Head of the Department for purposes of S. 123: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 363: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 661.

Under S. 123 of the Evidence Act, the officer at the Head of the Department concerned is the authority to decide whether to permit or to withhold the evidence. The question as to who is the Head of the Department depends on the particular facts. The English decisions according to which the privilege has to be claimed in the form of an affidavit either by the Minister or the Secretary of State in charge of the Department are on the other hand based on common law in the absence of any statutory provisions similar to S. 123 of the Indian Evidence Act. They proceed on the principle that the best evidence which the Court could safely accept without question should be adduced: That under Act VI of 1932, the State Government has revisional power over the Registrar of Co-operative Societies does not mean that Registrar is not the highest executive authority in the State for the Department. The State Government is necessarily the highest executive authority in a State and S. 123 of the Evidence Act does not mention the State Government as the authority to give or withhold permission. It mentions only the Head of the Department concerned and the Government may designate any Officer as the Head of the Department for the purpose: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 486: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 106: I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 174.

Ordinarily, the Head of the Department will mean the officer who is in control of the Department and in whose custody records of that Department remain. It will usually be the Secretary to the Provincial Government in Provincial Departments or the Secretary to the Government of India in the Departments of the Government of India. In England, it is the political head or the Minister who has been held to be the Head of the Department, but under the Evidence Act it is either the Minister or the permanent Head of Department who has the right to grant or withhold permission to the production of a document relating to affairs of State: (1950) 52 Punj.L.R. 153: A.I.R. 1950 East Punj. 228 (F.B.).

The use of the word "concerned" in relation to the Head of the Department shows that the affidavit must contain a sworn statement by the Head of the Department in whose custody the documents happen to be at the time when discovery and production is claimed. The principle and the foundation on which S. 123 rests is concern for the public interest. If an affidavit is made by the Head of the Department that he does not wish to produce certain documents as they constitute unpublished official records relating to affairs of State, he is deposing by implication that the production of those documents will be prejudicial to public interest. The words "Head of the Departments concerned" are not only applicable to the Ministers in the case of Provincial Governments and to the Members of the Viceroy's Executive Council so far as the Central Government is concerned. Therefore, the affidavits by the Chief Secretary of the Provincial Government or Home Secretary of the Central Government are good: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 209. See also I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 175: A.I.R. 1944 Sind 145.

The Secretary to the Government in charge of the Department to which the document in respect of which privilege is sought belongs is an Officer at the Head of the Department within the meaning of S. 123 and, hence, to insist on an affidavit from the Minister in charge of that Department is wrong: (1954) 2 M.L.J. 236: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 926.

Government documents required to be produced under O. 13, R. 10, C.P. Code—Secretary to Government who is Head of Department concerned is competent authority to claim privilege under Ss. 123, 124: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 251.

The claim of privilege under S. 123 has to be put forward by the Head of the Department concerned and not by the subordinate of such head: 30 Pat.L.T. 327. Summons to produce document served on Collector—Collector claiming privilege by means of an affidavit through his personal assistant in direct charge of records—Privilege held claimed by Collector and not by personal assistant—Held, no defect: (1953) 66 Mad.L.W. 927: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 278.

The National Savings Commissioner is not the Secretary of the Finance Department and his claim of privilege under S. 123 must therefore fail. In the case of a Collector, the claim is still weaker because he is not a Head of Department even for the purpose of the Orissa Service Code: 29 Cut.L.T. 179: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 213: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 111.

The Chief Personnel Officer, N.E. Railway is not given the status of a Head of Department for the purpose of claiming the privilege under S. 123 of the Evidence Act even if it was possible to confer such a status on a person, who is not in fact Head of Department by any notification of the Government or of the Railway Administration: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 762: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1118.

8. Privileged documents — What are and what are not.—Statements in departmental enquiry into the conduct of Police Officers are not privileged under Ss. 123, 124 or 125, and can be called for when those witnesses are subsequently examined in a criminal Court on a charge against the Police Officers for taking illegal gratification: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 431: 13 Cr.L.J. 445. Where letters addressed by the Head of a Department reach the addressee, those letters would not be unpublished documents within the meaning of S. 123, and the Court would be entitled to see the documents and decide under S. 162 as to their admissibility: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 157: 143 I.C. 685.

In a suit by an employee challenging the order of dismissal, papers containing noting by the various Officers and the communication made in official confidence from one Officer to another can be validly withheld by the Department claiming them to be privileged under S. 123 on the ground that their disclosure would not be in public interest and would materially affect the freedom and candour of expression of opinion in the determination and execution of public policies: 1968 Cur.L.J. 990 (Punj.).

As the notings and the comments of the officials are an essential part of the enquiry proceedings culminating in the order of removal of the employee from service, the same cannot be treated as privileged proceedings relating to the affairs of the State and in any manner prejudicial to the public interest. Removal of an employee after enquiry and collecting the relevant material cannot be said to be related to public policy as such. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Disting.]: 1978 Rev.L.R. 483.

There are two categories of documents which can be said to relate to affairs of the State. Documents whose contents, if disclosed, would affect national defence or public security or good neighbourly relations of the country belong to one category. The other category comprises of such documents, disclosure of whose contents would not affect the national defence, public security or good neighbourly relations, but would materially affect the freedom and candour of expression of opinion in the determination and execution of public policies. This second category would include notes and minutes made by respective officers on the relevant files, opinion expressed or reports made and gist of official decisions reached in course of determination of the said questions of policy. Privilege in regard to this second category of documents can be claimed in the interest of efficient administration of public affairs. The said category of documents may claim the status of documents relating to public affairs, if their disclosure would cause possible injury to public interest or impair the proper functioning of the public service: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 363: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 661. [In appeal against the said judgment, the Supreme Court in A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2201, held that as the High Court rejected the State's claim of privilege in regard to departmental notings contained in official files, for the reason that the affidavits filed on behalf of the Government did not adequately bring out the involvement of public interest consequent upon the disclosure of the notings, the judgment of the High Court has to be confined to the particular facts of the case and cannot be used as a precedent in other cases for calling upon the Government to produce confidential notings in official files, if the disclosure thereof is calculated to impair public interest.]

In the matter of departmental enquiries conducted against Government employees no privilege could be claimed by the State in respect of notings or opinions expressed on the file during such proceedings. In case the documents regarding which privilege is claimed related to departmental proceedings, i.e., proceedings contemplated under the service rules, obviously the privilege could not be claimed. However, with respect to other matters for which service rules do not contemplate, the State would be within its rights to claim privilege in respect of office notings or opinions expressed by officers or the officials on such matters. Thus, where a dismissed Government employee, wanted production of his representations made to the Chief Minister, in respect of which privilege was claimed on the ground that office notings or opinions were expressed on such representations by the Government officials, held, those representations could not be called proceedings under the rules such as departmental proceedings, the State could legitimately claim privilege with respect to office notings or opinions expressed on such representations. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 255; (1977) 1 S.L.R. 565; 1978 Rev.L.R. 483; A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149, Rel. on]: (1990-2) 98 Punj.L.R. 475: (1990) 2 Rev.L.R. 289.

Where privilege was claimed in respect of annual confidential reports and minutes of Departmental Promotion Committees, held, the claim of privilege, cannot be upheld: 1983 Lab.I.C. 469 (D.B.).

Where petitioners alleged that Governor's order dispensing with domestic enquiry on ground that it was in interest of security of State was passed without application of mind to relevant records, held, it was necessary for exercise of powers of High Court under Art. 226 to look into records to determine whether Governor had applied his mind to same—Hence, privilege under S. 123 could not be claimed. [(1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 339 (Karn.), Rel. on]: (1981) 2 Karn.L.J. 489: (1982) 1 Serv.L.J. 213: 1982 Lab.I.C. 430 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Officers of the Government are often times confronted with orders of Courts, impossible of immediate compliance for various reasons. On such occasions they will necessarily have to note in the files, the reasons why the orders cannot be complied with and also indicate that the Courts would not have passed those orders if full facts were placed before them. The expression of opinion by the officers in the internal files are for the use of the Department and not for outside exposure or for publicity. To find the officers guilty for expressing their independent opinion, even against orders of Courts in deserving cases, would cause impediments in the smooth working and functioning of the Government. These internal notings, in fact, are privileged documents, notings made by the officers in the files cannot be made the basis of contempt action against each such officer who makes the notings. S. 163 entitles the prosecution to make use of them if they turn out to be not in favour of the defence: 13 Cr.L.J. 445: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 431.

Observation by High Court on report of Enquiry Officer against conduct of judicial officer, forwarded to Governor, are privileged: I.L.R. (1965) Bom. 317: A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 156.

Where documents summoned to be produced in the Court are part of the preparation of documents leading to the advice tendered to the President of India, held, they are privileged documents under Art. 74(2) of the Constitution; the Supreme Court is precluded from directing that they be produced in the Court; Cabinet papers are protected from disclosure not by reason of their contents but because of the class to which they belong; and Cabinet papers also include the papers brought into existence for the purpose of preparing submission to the Cabinet: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 782.

Where privilege claimed against production in Court of a summoned document was supported by the affidavit of the Secretary to the Government of India in the concerned Ministry which gave a gist of the intelligence reports against an Air India Pilot, quoted the numbers of the files comprising reports of his Ministry as well as the Ministry of Home Affairs as also of the Intelligence Bureau, held, the Court found no reason to look into the documents and allowed the privilege not because the affidavit was of a high officer but because he seemed to be aware of the seriousness of the case: A.I.R. 1988 Bom. 416: (1988) 3 Bom.C.R. 292.

Any communication made between Chief Minister and Governor of the State concerning land acquisition proceedings is a privileged communication: A.I.R. 1995 Raj. 69.

Communications between Ministers of State: 5 Bom.L.R. 30: I.L.R. 27 Bom. 189; I.L.R. 32 Mad. 62: 19 M.L.J. 263.

Where in case of preventive detention, privilege was claimed, held, the claim of privilege can hardly prevail over the constitutional mandate of disclosure under Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution: 1981 Bom.C.R. 551: 1981 Cr.L.R. 445: 1982 Cr.L.J. 53 (D.B.).

The reports of the inspection of various banks by the Reserve Bank and the correspondence between the various banks and the Reserve Bank regarding their affairs are documents which relate to affairs of State and the claim for privilege in respect of these documents is justified: (1959) 1 L.L.J. 539.

As to production of State records to which protection of this section does not extend, see 2 Weir 781. Secretary to the Board of Education, West Bengal held had no power to claim privilege in respect of the reviewer's report submitted to the Board: 1954 Cr.L.J. 624: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 216.

Reports by auditors from the Accountant General's Office—Prosecution of Government Officer for criminal breach of trust—Accountant General should not claim privilege and refuse to produce original reports. See 1958 B.L.J.R. 6: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 166.

Statements made to and recorded by a Forest Range Officer in the course of an investigation into an offence under the Madras Forest Act do not relate to any affairs of State nor can they be said to be communications made in official confidence the disclosure of which would be injurious to public interests. No privilege can be claimed in respect of such statements under Ss. 123 and 124: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 492: (1937) 1 M.L.J. 613.

The reports made by officers of the C.I.D. Special Branch who cover public election meetings comprising, inter alia, the mental notes made by them and the chart of such meetings, the places they were held at and the names of the speakers prepared and furnished by the Police could not said to be privileged documents: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 308: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 646.

The accidents register kept by a medical practitioner is not a privileged document, and a Magistrate cannot therefore, refuse to cause production of the same: (1937) 50 Mad.L.W. 796: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 240. The diary of a foot constable who was shadowing the movements of a suspect could not possibly become an affair of State within the accepted meaning of the words: (1940) 42 Punj.L.R. 484: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 217. An entry in a posting register kept by the Customs Department, showing the section to which officers are posted, is not a State document for which privilege can be claimed under S. 123 or S. 162: 45 I.C. 284: 19 Cr.L.J. 524.

S. 124 of the Evidence Act can be applied only when the communication is made to a public officer in official confidence. On a complaint against a Sub-Inspector of Police made to a District Superintendent of Police the latter directed the Circle Inspector of Police to make an investigation and during the course of investigation statements were recorded from various persons, but ultimately no action was taken. On a subsequent private complaint being filed, the accused applied for calling of the statements recorded by the Circle Inspector for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses. On a claim of privilege by the District Superintendent, held, the statements in question cannot be considered to be statements made in official confidence. The accused is entitled to use those statements to contradict the prosecution witnesses: A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 864(1): I.L.R. (1952) Mad. 170: (1951) 1 M.L.J. 526.

The record kept at the Police Station about the activities of a particular person and the reports about him made by the Sub-Inspector to the Inspector from time to time or even by the Inspector to the Superintendent of Police cannot be regarded as privileged under Ss. 123 and 124: A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 293: 47 Cr.L.J. 277.

Case diary — Privilege — Bar under S. 162—Statement of witnesses recorded during investigation of crime can be used in civil litigation as previous statements: 1964 All.L.J. 950: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 452: A.I.R. 1965 All. 494.

Where a Police report about the antecedents and character of a Government employee (petitioner), whose services were terminated by the State basing their conclusion on the report, is produced by the Government in Court, without prejudice to the claim of privilege under Ss. 123 and 124, Evidence Act, the Court would be competent to refuse the petitioner access to the report on the ground that it would react to the detriment of public interest. Perusal of the report by the Court without giving such an opportunity to the petitioner does not involve any violation of the principles of the natural justice. In this case, the Court, however, did not look into the confidential file, as the petitioner was not agreeable to that course: 1964 Ker.L.J. 162: I.L.R. (1964) 1 Ker. 374: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 63.

A statement made by a subordinate officer to his superior regarding the apprehension of an accused person within the hearing of various other people is a relevant fact and is admissible under S. 124: 45 I.C. 284: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 451.

A petition sent against a person to the Excise Commissioner and a report thereon, in so far as it contains the statements made by witnesses to the Investigating Officer, do not come within the purview of S. 123 at all and therefore, there can be no claim for privilege in respect thereof: I.L.R. (1944) 1 Cal. 410: (1942-43) 47 Cal.W.N. 928: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 539.

A Police witness in proceedings under Ch. VIII, Cr. P. Code cannot claim privilege when asked about a statement made or given to him by one of the witnesses. If such a statement was given in the course of an investigation, the plea of privilege might be based on S. 124 of the Evidence Act, as S. 125 refers to information given before the initiation of proceedings and S. 123 cannot apply. Such a plea of privilege cannot be allowed, for a statement by a person who afterwards gives evidence as to the facts in that statement cannot be said to have been a statement made in official confidence, nor can a Police Officer be heard to say that the public interest will suffer if the accused are allowed their right of cross-examination: I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 252: A.I.R. 1942 Sind 122.

Income-tax Officer may in a proper case claim privilege under Ss. 123 and 124: 1960 Ker.L.J. 1191: I.L.R. (1960) Ker. 1292: A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 32.

After the repeal of S. 137 of the Income-Tax Act, 1962, there is no longer any impediment left in the way of a Court to summon the production of documents filed by an assessee before the Income-tax Authorities after 1-4-1964, relating to assessment proceedings after 1964-65, onwards and the finality attached to the Commissioner's order under S. 138(1) of that Act has no relevance to the exercise of power by a Court to summon the production of documents in a case pending before the Court. [1974 Tax. L.R. 703 (Del.) (F.B.), Partly reversed]: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 990: (1992) 2 S.C.C. 13: (1992) 1 Hindu L.R. 283; (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 157 (P.&H.).

Privileged document—Conciliator's report regarding his findings on an industrial dispute not a privileged document or a confidential document—Party to dispute entitled to a copy of the report: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 174.

Documents annexed to petition already in Court—Claim of privilege under S. 123 by respondent after service of rule nisi—Court may adopt judicial blindness to these documents and proceed in accordance with law—But if petitioner does not take any step to direct respondent to produce originals before Court, no question of taking collateral evidence to determine validity of objection arises—Court is justified in excluding these documents from consideration in arriving at its decision in case on merits. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 254, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 131 (D.B.).

Fire breaking out in Railway truck at wayside station resulting in loss of goods—Departmental enquiry by Railway Administration with a view to litigation which might arise out of accident—Enquiry report is privileged document: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 489: 1960 B.L.J.R. 669.

Where in a suit for damages for breach of the terms of a licence which conferred the right on the plaintiff to fish for and take away chank shells from the sea off the coasts, inter-departmental communications and reports sent by the Assistant Directors of Fisheries to the Deputy Director showing the price for computing the damages were sought to be used as evidence, held, they could not be excluded from consideration as no question of public importance or public interest was involved in the reports: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 29 [Reversed on another point in (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 777.]

Where in a suit to restrain the State of Madras from diverting water flowing into the plaintiff's tank by construction of a dam at the instance of the State of Travancore, an official file from the State of Madras was summoned but the trial Court had granted privilege, held, in revision on inspection of the file, that the part containing correspondence between the two Government was entitled to the privilege but not the part containing the statements recorded and reports made by subordinate officials in regard to the riparian rights of the ryots; the last part directed to be produced in the Court. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 468: (1971) 84 Mad.L.W. 455.

Trial for offence of theft and conspiracy by Court-Martial—Reports of Security Officer and C.B.I. not allowed to be inspected by accused nor produced on record under the cover of privilege under Ss. 123 and 124—Reports containing conclusions of officers—They could not be classed as evidence of previous statements—Accused could not be said to have suffered in their defence. See 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 109 (Del.).

Where the State is a party to a litigation and the documents which the State is called upon to produce in that litigation relate to commercial or contractual activities of the State and if it is the considered view of the officer concerned that the disclosure of certain document is likely to damnify public interest then and then alone he is entitled to claim privilege in respect of them: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 20.

Where in a suit for recovery of moneys for construction of a minor irrigation work, the State justified deductions and altogether denied its liability and on letters written by and to the departmental officers, the State claimed privilege by an affidavit of the Secretary of the Department which merely expressed the apprehension that their disclosure would hurt and be prejudicial to the public interest but without disclosing the reasons underlying his apprehension, held, no privilege could be allowed on such an affidavit, the affidavit should have indicated briefly and within permissible limits, the reason for the apprehension, even more so when the documents prima facie are of commercial character and pertain to the State's commercial activities; the State, despite being allowed one and a half years time, did not produce the documents for the High Court inspection. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1658; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Raj. 221: 1979 Raj.L.W. 366.

Where in a suit for recovery of the balance price of the chrome ore supplied to a public authority under instruction from the State, the plaintiff summoned in evidence an official file pertaining to meeting attended by all the three parties where certain decisions regarding the price was taken and the State claimed privilege under S. 123, held, as the file summoned on the face of it relates to a commercial transaction and not to the affairs of the State, no privilege can be granted; the State was directed to produce the same and they were to be kept in the Court in a sealed cover and were to be proved in evidence subject to the objections of relevance and admissibility. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 196; A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 72; A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 199: (1986) 61 Cut.L.T. 270.

9. Refreshing memory from privileged document.—Before any witness can be allowed to refresh his memory from any document in respect of which a plea of privilege under S. 123 is put forward it is essential that the plea of privilege should be determined. The Judge must, therefore, decide the question whether the document in question is protected from disclosure under S. 123, before he allows any witness to refresh his memory from such document. The decision of the question should not be postponed until after the witness has been allowed to refresh his memory: 30 Pat.L.T. 327.

10. Secondary evidence—Knowledge of witness based on privileged document—Admissibility.—The evidence of a witness deposing to a particular fact is inadmissible in evidence if his knowledge about that fact is based upon a confidential register which is not open to inspection by Court as being unpublished privileged Government records and not upon personal knowledge and experience only: (1958) 1 Cal.L.J. 46: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 440.

11. Industrial Tribunal bound by the provisions of this section.—Industrial Tribunal is bound by the relevant provisions of the Evidence Act in a matter of admitting documents regarding which privilege is claimed in consequence of the provisions of S. 11(3)(b) of the Industrial Disputes Act: (1959) 1 L.L.J. 539: (1958-59) 15 F.J.R. 297 (Punj.).

12. Stage at which privilege may be claimed.—Claim of privilege at stage of inspection of documents—Permissibility: (1961) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 203: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493.

Claiming privilege for production of document on the final order for its production is not vitiated by mala fides merely because no privilege was claimed when it was directed to be produced at an earlier occasion: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 264.

Where certain documents annexed to a petition were described in the counter-affidavit of the respondent-Railway Authority as general secret and confidential instructions having no bearing on the case and the petitioner neither took steps to call for their originals nor explained how he came by those documents, it cannot be said that the Railway Authority had waived any claim to privilege in respect of those documents under S. 123, and it is entitled to raise the objection under S. 123 at the hearing particularly when the documents are introduced by the petitioner not in accordance with law. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 254, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 131 (D.B.).

Suit for damages against State—Interrogatories—State not answering on ground of confidential nature of information—Subsequent claiming of privilege—Procedure: I.L.R. (1956) 1 Cal. 370.

13. Revision against order allowing or disallowing privilege.—An order allowing or disallowing privilege under S. 123 in criminal proceedings is an interlocutory order and does not finally determine the proceedings; such an order is, therefore, not amenable to revision. [(1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 94 (S.C.), Rel. on; 1978 Cr.L.J. 165 (S.C.), Disting.]: A.I.R. 1980 N.O.C. 72: 1980 Cr.L.J. 292: 1980 Kash.L.J. 1 (F.B.).

14. Miscellaneous.—Communication made to one public officer forwarded by him to another public officer—Affidavit by latter in support of claim of privilege is sufficient: (1963) 5 Ori.J.D. 10: 29 Cut.L.T. 179: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 213: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 111.

Government claiming want of knowledge of proceedings under S. 46 of U.P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act—Other party claiming knowledge on part of Government of such proceedings and applying for discovery and inspection of certain documents in support of his allegations—Government claiming privilege—Held, Compensation Officer will be required to decide in the light of decisions in A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493 and A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1658, whether claim of privilege raised by State Government should be sustained or not—That must be done after appropriate affidavits by Heads of Departments concerned were filed and claim of privilege was properly examined: (1966) 1 S.C.A. 556: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1164.

Where in the bofors kick back case, the High Court quashed the First Information Report after looking into the documents produced before it by the Government as secret documents for Court's perusal, held, those documents from their very nature could have never been in possession of any third party much less with the accused and in such a case, the High Court was not at all justified in making use of those documents for its findings especially in a case of this nature where there are serious and outrageous allegations: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1082: 1993 (Supp.) 4 S.C.C. 260: 1993 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1171: 1993 Cr.L.J. 859.

Where in a writ petition by way of public interest litigation the arrest and prosecution of the Inspector General of Police, Southern Zone, Kerala was prayed for on the ground that as per newspaper reports he was involved in the I.S.R.O. espionage case and documents and video cassettes collected by the Central Bureau of Investigation were sought to be summoned and privilege in respect thereof was claimed by an affidavit of the Special Secretary, Union Ministry of Home Affairs claiming that the records are connected with and had a bearing on the national security and friendly relations with foreign countries whereupon the High Court summoned and perused the documents and the cassettes, held, the documents and cassettes had no bearing on the national security; privilege not allowed but the High Court nevertheless declined to allow the writ on the ground that the High Court could not interfere till the investigations have been concluded: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1976 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Accused has no right to free or certified copies of statements made during investigation of different offences: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1552: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 189.

When privilege was claimed in respect of two letters of the Superintendent of Police to the Deputy Inspector General of Police, Enforcement, summoned as evidence to claim damages for wrongful detention by the State Government under the Defence of India Rules, 1962 by affidavits of the Home Secretary and the Chief Minister and the Court directed the Chief Minister to appear in the Court for examination and the Court at the instance of the State directed the trial Court to consider affidavit of the Home Secretary, if any clarification is needed and call for further clarifications by affidavit from him and if still necessary, from the Chief Minister: (1979-80) 84 Cal.W.N. 751.

Where an employee of a public limited Company whose Directors were being prosecuted for indulging in black marketing and whose statement was recorded during investigation and who provided certain material which was taken into custody, copies where of were submitted along with the police report under S. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure contended on being summoned as a prosecution witness that he was a mere informant, not a witness, and his secrecy should not be exposed and relied upon under S. 123, held, the contention was misconceived; S. 123 was not attracted: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 469.

Where a foreign candidate was denied admission in the medical course even when he had secured higher marks than another student who was admitted but not impleaded in the writ petition and there were also other candidates getting even higher marks but not admitted, held, though no relief in the circumstances could be granted, it is high time for the Central Government to frame guidelines for admission of foreign student even if the current scheme contemplates admission on merit or recommendation; the Government may not claim privilege in such matters under Ss. 123 and 124 by filing affidavits. [A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1994 Mad. 204.

Section 124—Synopsis.

[See also Notes under S. 123.]

1. Scope and applicability.
2. Relative scope of section 123 and section 124.
3. Privileged official communication.
4. Public officer.
5. Public interest.
6. Duty of officer claiming privilege.
7. Powers and duties of Court.
8. Failure to claim privilege—Effect.
9. Miscellaneous.

S. 124 must be construed liberally so that its ambit comprehends every communication made to a public officer in official confidence; the section speaks of communications made to a public officer; it does not indicate as to who should be the communicator; he can be any one, whether a private citizen or another public officer: (1973) 1 An.W.R. 31: (1972) 2 An.L.T. 202: 1973 M.L.J. (Cr.) 52: 1973 Cr.L.J. 931(D.B.).

The heart of the matter under S. 124 whether the disclosure of the communication made in official confidence would amount to betrayal of the person who made the communication under a bona fide and honest impression that neither the source nor the contents of the communication would be published; the object of the section is to enable the public officer to discharge duties in the interest of the general public; if he is unable to keep it from the public view, informants would stop coming to him to give him voluntary information in confidence: (1973) 1 An.W.R. 31: (1972) 2 An.L.T. 202: 1973 M.L.J. (Cr.) 52 : 1973 Cr.L.J. 931 (D.B.).

Privilege claimed in respect of certain document—Contention that only Receiver of document is debarred from producing it and S. 124 does not prevent producing that document from sender—Contention, held, could not be accepted because that would completely put at naught provisions of S. 124: 1967 Cur.L.J. 488.

State cannot claim privilege against probity of conduct of public servant in issue to screen his conduct from judicial scrutiny: 1968 Lab.I.C. 804: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 255. In a proper case an Income-tax Officer can claim a privilege: A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 32. See also A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 196: (1970) An.W.R. 323; 1972 Raj.L.W. 433: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1496 [Privilege can be claimed by the Minister or his secretary in the form of an affidavit.]

Citizen has a right to know about the activities of the State, the instrumentalities, the departments and the agencies of the State. The privilege of secrecy which existed in the old times, does not survive now to a great extent. The State can impose and should impose the reasonable restrictions in the matter like fundamental rights where it affects the national security and any other allied matter affecting the nation's integrity. But this right is limited and particularly in the matter of sanitation and other allied matter every citizen has a right to know how the State is functioning and why the State is withholding such information in such matters: A.I.R. 1988 Raj. 2.

A privilege extends only in a communication upon the subject with respect to which the privilege extends and the privilege can be claimed in exercise of the right or safe guard of the interests which creates the privilege: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1266: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1372: (1970) 1 S.C.C. 590.

Ss. 123, 124, 162 have to be read together while deciding the question of privilege relating to evidence of unpublished official records relating to any affairs of the State or confidential communications to Public Officers. While issuing rule nisi there is no question of any witnesses being summoned to produce a document which is in his power and any objection being taken at the time when it is produced by the witness. The question of examining witness in a writ proceeding as in the case of civil action does not arise. All that the Court does when it issues the rule nisi is to call for the records and not any witness to give any evidence as the contents of the unpublished official records. The privilege, claimed under S. 123 is based on public policy as being detrimental to public interest or service. Even in a civil action as distinguished from an action under Art. 226 the questions that usually arise are whether the documents in respect of which privilege is claimed is really a document relating to the "affairs of State" and whether the disclosure of its contents would jeopardise the public interest. In other words the interests of the State prevails over the interest of an individual if by producing the documents in respect of which privilege is claimed, it would cause injury to the interest of the State or its services.

Care has, however, to be taken to see that interests other than that of the public do not masquerade in the garb of public interest and take undue advantage of the provisions of S. 123.

The foundation for the privilege is injury to public interest. The expression "affairs of State" is of very wide amplitude and it will cover every business activity of the State so as to take in even day-to-day routine administration as also highly confidential matters pertaining to Defence, Foreign Affairs, Cabinet minutes or what advice was tendered by the Minister to the Governor specified in, Art. 163(3) secret services and the like. Therefore, the activities of a democratic welfare State extend to so many fields and all such activities can be brought within the broad meaning of the compendious expression "affairs of State". It only shows that any document relating to any affairs of State cannot partake the character of a privileged document, the disclosure of which would not be without possible injury to the public interest.

The extraordinary powers under Art. 226 of the Constitution are indeed "very high and transcendent" and the writ should run so as to reach injustice wherever it is found and that can be achieved only when the records called for are submitted to the Court for its scrutiny and perusal.

A judicial check or review far from affecting the interests of the public service, would protect them against arbitrary or illegal actions of or interference by the Ministers or other superiors.

Having regard to the extraordinary jurisdiction conferred on the High Court under Art. 266 of the Constitution, no general blanket protection can be given to the State and it is for the High Court to ultimately decide notwithstanding the objection raised by an officer or a Minister claiming privilege, the nature and class of the documents and the decision of the Court shall prevail: (1970) 2 An.W.R. 323: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 196 (D.B.).

It is not proper for an authority claiming privilege to claim privilege without considering particular papers and then coming to a decision whether privilege should or should not be claimed: I.L.R. 14 Luck. 351: A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 65. S. 124 is designed to prevent the knowledge of official papers beyond that circle which would obtain knowledge of them in confidence whether the confidence was express or implied. As the object is to prevent the disclosure of things not known outside that circle which is in confidence, the section has no application when once there has been a disclosure to what may be called a member of the public to whom the contents of such papers has not been made known in confidence: I.L.R. 14 Luck. 351: 1938 O.W.N. 1354.

A party to an action who had made a communication to the Government or to a Head of the Department of the Government is entitled to ask for its production. The Government or the Head of the Department has no right to claim any privilege in respect of such a document: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 20.

Where in a criminal trial, the Court summoned the statements of private persons recorded by the Customs Authorities, undoubtedly officers of the Revenue and certainly not Police Authorities, held, no privilege in respect of the summoned documents could be claimed; such information as a class is not entitled to immunity under S. 124: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 28 (Mad.).

It is indeed detrimental to the interests of a democratic welfare State to disclose or divulge the names of spies, decoys or informers as well as the contents of the document or information which are confidential in nature. Very many citizens would refrain from giving any information relating to offences against the State to the concerned public officers for fear or dislike of being mixed up in enquiries, if such information is required to be published or produced in a Court of law. The fear of reprisals on the part of the criminals sought to be looked is also a valid ground to withhold the contents of such information. [(1962) 1 An.W.R. 256 at 259, Expl.; A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 278; 1967 Cr.L.J. 1232; A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 118, Rel. on]: (1973) 1 An.W.R. 31: (1972) 2 An.L.T. 202: 1973 M.L.J. Whether a document was made in official confidence or whether public interest would suffer by its disclosure are questions of fact: (1983) 1 Ren.C.R. 389 (Del.).

Appointment of some officers or their discharge on ordinary grounds of ineptitude or corruption cannot be said to involve matters relating to determination and execution of public policy. Therefore, mere expression of opinion of various hierarchy of officers on the file as to the suitability or unsuitability of a particular candidate for a post and the results obtained by such candidate in any examination held for appointment to that post, are normally not matters which would affect the efficient administration of public affairs: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 363: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 661.

The statement of a person recorded under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the course of investigations cannot be deemed to be an unpublished official record and is not subject to the bars of Ss. 123 to 125: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 469.

Production of State documents—Claim for privilege—Difference between provisions under C.P.Code and Evidence Act: 1957 Cr.L.J. 134 (Madh. Pra.).

For the application of S. 124, Evidence Act, the first question which has to be decided is whether the communication which is to be disclosed was one made to the officer in public confidence.

Where the previous statements of the witnesses were made in the proceedings under S. 7, Police Act, in the presence of the complainants, and in the subsequent case against the complainants themselves, those statements were required for contradicting those very witnesses. Held, that it was neither the communication made in official confidence nor was it one affecting the public interest. S. 124, therefore, was not applicable: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1035: A.I.R. 1959 All. 543.

Provisions of section apply to and govern trial of an election petition: 1967 Cr.L.J. 691: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 155.

Communications made in official confidence—Section is intended to protect not only communications by one public officer to another but also communications by private person to public officer: (1966) 2 M.L.J. 529: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 861: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1232: 1966 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 168.

Right to claim privilege—Available only to public servants and not to private parties: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 632: (1968) 2 M.L.J. 393: 23 S.T.C. 255.

A co-operative society, not having been created by statute, is not a statutory body; thus, it is not entitled to claim privilege under S. 124: 1984 M.L.J. (Cr.) 127.

Defence is not entitled to make fishing enquiry into papers and records of prosecuting agency when they have no definite allegation to make: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

Official communications—Privilege claimed by State Government in respect of—Procedure: A.I.R. 1963 All. 415.

Where the plaintiff wanted certain documents to be summoned and admitted in evidence but the defendant objected to it on the ground that said documents were privileged documents under S. 57 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959 and therefore, they could not be marked in evidence, held, the Court is duty bound to consider whether such documents are prohibited under S. 57(1) of the Act and decide whether they should be admitted or not. Neither the officer can disclose nor the Court can summon and admit in evidence any of the documents that are prohibited by S. 57 of the said Act: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 704.

2. Relative scope of section 123 and section 124.—(See also S. 123, Note 4, supra). A privilege can be claimed for unpublished official records under S. 123 or official correspondence under S. 124; when privilege is claimed under S. 123, the Court has to hold a preliminary enquiry to ascertain whether or not the document relates to affairs of the State for which purpose the Court should direct the parties to file their affidavits, desirably of the Head of the Department or, may be, even of a Minister, disclosing why the document relates to the affairs of the State. On the Court being satisfied on the point, the document is excluded; otherwise it may itself inspect the document and decide whether to accord or withhold privilege; if the document is partially inoccuous, it may be produced in evidence after sealing other parts of the document. However, for the purposes of S. 124 the objection need not be raised by the Head of the Department; it may well be raised by the public officer; the objector must contend that the communication was made in official confidence which is to be determined by the Court, not by the public officer. But the Court must decide whether the documents falls within the ambit of S. 123 or S. 124: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 253: 1978 Rajdhani L.R. 345.

3. Privileged official communication.—Courts have adopted a basic principle for deciding whether a particular document is a communication made in official confidence to a public officer or not, viz., whether the document produced or the statement made was under the process of law or not. If the former is the case it would be difficult to say that a document produced or statement made under the process of law is a communication made in official confidence. If on the other hand, a document is produced or a statement is made in a confidential department enquiry not under process of law but for the gathering of information by the department for guiding them in the future action if any they have got to take, it would be a case of communication made in official confidence. (Communication held covered by S. 124): (1953) 66 Mad.L.W. 927: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 278.

Communications made in official confidence by a subordinate officer to his superior officer in the discharge of his official duties must be taken as belonging to the class of documents which the public interest would require to be regarded as privileged: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 20.

A distinction has to be drawn between cases: where two citizens engage in civil litigation and want official communications to be disclosed at the time of the trial, and cases, in which the State has entered into a commercial transaction with a private citizen in the course of which the State has made certain communications pertaining to the cases in which it is interested as a defendant or a plaintiff. In the former case, the State not being interested either way, a Government officer is expected to keep before himself only the interests of the public before a privilege is claimed. But in a case in which the State itself is a party, the Court must be satisfied that the mind of a responsible officer of the Government has been applied to the question as to whether the safety of the public interests warrants giving or withholding of the information. The Court must also be convinced that the privilege is not claimed to avoid inconvenient disclosures which may tell against its own side in the litigation or as a matter of mere departmental routine. In order that a Court should arrive at the finding that the communications were made in official confidence whose disclosure would cause public interest to suffer, it has got to be seen whether this disclosure would be injurious to national defence, or to good diplomatic relation, or for the proper functioning of the public service, so as to allow those documents to be kept as secret. The bare fact that the production of the documents might adversely tell upon the fortunes of the litigation would not be sufficient to hold that the documents were made in official confidence and that there disclosure would affect adversely the interests of the State. Communications made by one officer to another in matters which arise out of commercial relations which subsist between the State on the one side and a private citizen on the other cannot be treated as communication made in official confidence: 10 J.&K.L.R. 17: A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 11. But see infra. A communication made by one Secretary to the Government to another Secretary to the Government is a communication in respect of which privilege can be claimed. Such inter-departmental correspondence cannot be compelled to be produced. But any correspondence which passed between an officer of the State and the petitioners must be produced when summoned: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 304: (1959) 1 M.L.J. 288 .

It does not behove the State Government to keep back even any such document, the production of which may possibly not be in its own interest, yet necessary for a just decision of the case. Withholding of documentary evidence for a litigant, professed and held to be a virtuous, can hardly be said to be desirable. Thus, where the respondent instituted a suit for declaration that he was entitled to the salary of the trained Graduate Teacher from June, 1963, as he had acquired the requisite qualification at that time and he referred to a memo issued by the State Government and addressed to the Accountant General, informing him that Graduates, who have passed C.T. examination, would be treated as trained Graduate Teachers entitled to a certain scale of pay but the appellate State failed to produce said document and pleaded it to be a "privileged document," held, State could not claim privilege in respect of said document. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 130; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1144, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 156.

Before any official communication can be clothed with privilege of secrecy in terms of S. 124, it has to be shown that the said communication was made in official confidence and that the concerned officer to whom it is made considers that the public interest would suffer by its disclosure. Thus, where after occurrence of the fatal accident in question, defendant, Oil and Natural Gas Commission, itself appointed a domestic commission of inquiry of competent officers and directed them to go on the spot and find out as to how the accident occurred and to suggest ways and means for avoiding such accidents in future and every aspect of it was made public and inquiry was made on the spot but, subsequently, commission claimed privilege from disclosing inquiry report of the committee, held, disclosure of the findings of the inquiry committee in its report was emminently in public interest; there was no official confidence or secret permeating round the said report. Thus, the report in question could not get benefit of S. 124. [A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 237, Rel. on]: (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. 27: (1985) 26 Guj.L.R. 1315 (D.B.).

An advice from his Advisor to the Governor during the President's rule is equivalent to a Minister's advice to the Governor under Art. 163(3) of the Constitution of India; it is protected from the purview of the Court; it is hit by the bar contained in Ss. 123 and 124; merely because it had been published in newspapers does not make them anytheless privileged: (1989-2) 96 Punj.L.R. 304.

Resolution of Government containing opinions of Government officers whether privileged: (1926) 28 Bom.L.R. 1213: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 590. Correspondence between President of Municipal Council and Secretary to Government is privileged. Nor could secondary evidence from the President be got: 6 Mys.L.J. 453.

A confidential report submitted as the result of a confidential order of an officer to enable him to take departmental action, is a privileged document falling within the purview of S. 124 of the Evidence Act. Nor is such a document admissible under any section of the Evidence Act: 28 Sind L.R. 274: A.I.R. 1935 Sind 50.

Petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution—Hearing of—Inter-departmental communication—Reference to—Claim of privilege—Not made in proper form by proper authority disclosing reasons—Claim not entertained (Constitution of India, Art. 226): 1968 Lab.I.C. 1055: A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 230.

S. 162 enables Court to inspect document or take other evidence to determine its admissibility—Court inspecting document in question and allowing claim for privilege—Held, on perusing the document that it was made in official confidence, was marked secret and contained some material outside of the enquiry and since further enquiry meant further waste of time in an already long-drawn-out trial, the lower Court was right in allowing claim for privilege: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

Communications to public officer in official confidence—Cable addresses and cables sent to those addresses are not communications to public officer in official confidence—Court acts wrongly in allowing the claim of privilege from production made by the Telegraph Check Office: 1970 Cr.L.J. 9: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 130.

Acknowledgment made in official confidence—Value of. See A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 110.

Statements made to a station master of State Railway not made in official confidence is not privileged: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 543.

Defamation—Complaint made to Police is absolutely privileged: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 505: (1969) 1 M.L.J. 338.

Accused has no right to free or certified copies of statements made during investigation of different offences: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1552: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 189.

Where an enquiry is one under S. 176, Cr.P.Code, copies of depositions of witnesses taken in such an enquiry should be furnished to the accused. The fact that the enquiry under P.S.O. 145 is not a statutory enquiry would not then really affect the question. It cannot, however, be said that every enquiry, under P.S.O. 145 is in respect of an enquiry under S. 176, Cr.P.Code, which relates only to cases of suspicious death. The question whether a party would be entitled to copies of documents in the enquiry under P.S.O. 145, would, therefore, depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. For that purpose the nature of the enquiry under P.S.O. 145 should first be determined and then the statement of every witness considered individually to find out whether they were made in official confidence.

Where a criminal case arising out of an occurrence was started against the accused and the same occurrences also formed the subject of an enquiry under P.S.O. 145, and the enquiry was held in open and witnesses were examined in the presence of others and there was nothing to indicate that any communications were made by any witness in official confidence to the officer conducting the enquiry, held, that the question of privilege under S. 124 did not arise and the accused were entitled to copies of statements of witnesses: 1966 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 168: (1966) 2 M.L.J. 529: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 861: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1232.

Enquiry by C.I.D. Inspector—Statements of witnesses recorded by, during enquiry—If documents relating to affairs of State or communications made to public officer in official confidence—Privilege, if available: 1982 Cr.L.J. 393 (Andh. Pra.).

4. Public officer.—Public officer is an officer with public as opposed to private duties who receives communications made to him in official confidence of such a nature that disclosure in certain cases would injure the public interests. The Court of Wards, for the purposes of S. 124, is to be considered as a Government office and its officers public officers: I.L.R. 14 Luck. 351: A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 65. Whether President of the Municipal Council is a "public officer": 6 Mys.L.J. 453.

Though public officer is not defined under the Act, all officers who in discharge of their regular duties receive communications made to them in official confidence and are expected not to disclose confidential information to others must be held to be "public officers" within the meaning of S. 124: 1973 M.L.J. (Cr.) 52: (1973) 1 An.W.R. 31: 1973 Cr.L.J. 931: (1972) 2 An.L.T. 202.

The term "public officer" as used in the Evidence Act can be assigned to this term in S. 2, C.P.Code. The duties of the Vice-Chancellor of the Punjab University are undoubtedly of a public character as they concern the regulation of educational activities in the Province, and the Vice-Chancellor when performing these public duties is acting as a public officer within the meaning of S. 124 of the Evidence Act: I.L.R. (1946) Lah. 561: A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 220 (D.B.).

The agent of a Railway Company is not a public officer as defined in S. 2(e), C.P. Code, although he has power under S. 131 of the Railways Act to arrest certain persons for offences committed on the Railways. He cannot, therefore, object to produce documents in his possession under S. 124: I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 46: A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 286.

Whether station master of State Railway is a public officer: 6 O.W.N. 937: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 543.

Privileged documents or communications—Privilege can be claimed when communication has been made to a public officer in official confidence and the officer concerned must feel or be satisfied that public interest would suffer if disclosure of communication in question is made. Thus, Divisional Manager of a Bank being neither a public officer nor had the privilege been claimed by him in his official capacity, held, disclosure or production of summoned documents could not be said to be likely to injure any public interest: (1991) 1 Rev.L.R. 205.

5. Public interest.—A mere mechanical repetition of the words that the production and disclosure of the document would injure public interest or would be prejudicial to the public interest would not be sufficient. It is for the Court to satisfy that there was a real danger of some injury being caused to the larger public or national interest by the production or disclosure of the documents in question: (1989) 3 An.L.T. 275.

Where in a suit by the contractor for enhanced payment of the contract work, he wanted the State to produce two documents, i.e., (i) the estimate prepared by the Superintending Engineer pursuant to the plaintiff's request for enhanced rate, and (ii) recommendations of the Chief Engineer to the Government based on his report, held, these documents had nothing to do with public interest; they were vital documents for the litigation between the parties; thus, the Government could not claim privilege in respect of these documents: A.I.R. 1971 Ker. 228: 1971 Ker.L.J. 278.

Where in a suit for damages for breach of the terms of a licence which conferred the right on the plaintiff to fish for and take away chank shells from the sea off the coasts, interdepartmental communications and reports sent by the Assistant Directors of Fisheries to the Deputy Director showing the price for computing the damages were sought to be used as evidence, held, they could not be excluded from consideration as no question of public importance or public interest was involved in the reports: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 29 .

Official communication — Privilege — Non-disclosure necessary for proper functioning of public service—Production not ordered: 1969 Lab.I.C. 974: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 246.

Where on the Department seizing certain papers on search, it was agreed to between the assessee and the Income-tax Authorities that agreed assessment would be made on that basis and no penal action would be taken and when penal action was initiated against the assessee despite promise and he sought production of records embodying that agreement and privilege was claimed by the Department, held, the assessing authorities have to act judicially and independently; they cannot act on the advice of outsiders even if higher in rank in the official hierarchy; those communications were against law and their disclosure could have no adverse impact on the public interest: (1974) 95 I.T.R. 523 (All.) (D.B.).

Where the Department acted not only on the basis of an anonymous information, but also on the basis of some more signed letters received by it on the issue and the signatories of those other letters not only gave their names and addresses but some of them even sent reminders to make inquiries about the resultant action taken by the Department on their tips, held, the public interest privilege claimed by the Secretary in the Ministry of Finance was to be upheld: 1985 Cr.L.R. (Guj. & Mah.) 309.

Where contraband gold was seized on the basis of information furnished by a private person and recorded by the Assistant Collector, Central Excise and Customs and the Department claimed privilege under Ss. 124 and 125 on the grounds that the information was strictly confidential and its disclosure would injure public interest, held, since the Government or the public officer is the sole judge of public policy or public interest, the privilege was rightly allowed: (1973) 1 An.W.R. 31: (1972) 2 An.L.T. 202: 1973 M.L.J. (Cr.) 52: 1973 Cr.L.J. 931 (D.B.).

Where privilege claimed against production in Court of a summoned document was supported by the affidavit of the Secretary to the Government of India in the concerned Ministry gave a gist of the Intelligence reports against an Air India Pilot, quoted the numbers of the files comprising reports of his Ministry as well as the Ministry of Home Affairs as also of the Intelligence Bureau, held, the Court found no reason to look into the documents and allowed the privilege not because the affidavit was of a high officer but because he seemed to be aware of the seriousness of the case: A.I.R. 1988 Bom. 416: (1988) 3 Bom.C.R. 292.

6. Duty of officer claiming privilege.— S. 124 confers right on the public officers to claim privilege from disclosure of confidential communications. But before exercising that right, the officer concerned must come to the conclusion that the disclosure of such document would be detrimental to the public interest. He is the sole judge to decide that fact but his decision should not be arbitrary or capricious. He should not claim privilege merely because such disclosure would either advance the case of the adversary or damage his case. The only relevant consideration which should weigh with him is that the disclosure of such document would prejudice the public interest. If he honestly comes to the conclusion that it would adversely prejudice the public interests, he in exercise of the discretion vested in him should claim privilege from disclosing such document. But exercise of such privilege should not be abused. S. 124 should in no event be resorted to as a cloak to shield the truth from the Court: (1967) 69 Bom.L.R. 878: 1968 Mah.L.J. 126: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 322.

For the purpose of S. 124, communication has to be made to the public officer who considers that the public interest suffers by its disclosure. It is for the Court to decide whether or not a particular document for which privilege is claimed was a communication made to a public officer in official confidence and if the Court decides that it was so made then it has no authority to compel the public officer to produce it, because the public officer himself is the sole judge as to whether its disclosure would or would not be in the public interest. Where the statement contained in a document was not intended to be made public, it must be said that it was made in official confidence. It is not, however, enough for the public officer to merely claim privilege. He must apply his mind to the question whether public interests are likely to suffer by the disclosure of the contents of the document called for; and only if he considers that public interest would suffer by such disclosure that the Court would grant privilege: (1939) 41 Bom.L.R. 391: A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 237.

On an application of a party for the production of documents in the custody of a Governmental Department, summons should be issued to the Head of the Department concerned. He must, therefore, apply his mind to the documents sought to be disclosed and come to his own conclusion whether public interest would or would not suffer by such disclosure. He has then to claim privilege if he chooses to do so by means of a communication, preferably in the form of an affidavit, claiming privilege and sufficiently indicating why he is claiming privilege. It is also desirable, but not indispensable that the records should be sent in a sealed cover through an officer of the Department claiming privilege. The statement of the Head of the Department would be considered conclusive unless for compelling reasons to the contrary and the privilege will be upheld. In any event, it is the duty of the Court to apply its own mind as to whether the claim is not arbitrary and capricious and if need be it would be open to the Court to look into the document and come to its own conclusion: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 228: (1952) 2 M.L.J. 375.

Under S. 124, whether the communication in question was made in official confidence is a matter for the Court to decide and whether the public interests would suffer by its disclosure is for the public officer to decide. But the public officer before claiming protection under S. 124 must come to a positive conclusion that by the disclosure of the communication, public interests would suffer. He cannot claim the protection of S. 124 on any other ground. It is also necessary that the privilege in question should be claimed by the official concerned. Where the official concerned has not directly claimed any protection under S. 124 nor was the Court informed that the disclosure of the documents called for would affect public interest no foundation is laid for claiming the privilege in question. Whether a statement is made in official confidence or not is a question of fact. Merely because a communication is made to a public official voluntarily, it cannot be said that it is made in official confidence: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 186.

Where in a suit for recovery of money for construction of a minor irrigation work, the State justified deductions and altogether denied its liability and on letters written by and to the departmental officers, the State claimed privilege by an affidavit of the Secretary of the Department which merely expressed the apprehension that their disclosure would hurt and be prejudicial to the public interest but without disclosing the reasons underlying his apprehension, held, no privilege could be allowed on such an affidavit; the affidavit should have indicated briefly and within permissible limits the reason for the apprehension, even more so when the documents prima facie are of commercial character and pertain to the State's commercial activities; the State, despite being allowed one and a half years time, did not produce the documents for the High Court's inspection. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1658; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Raj. 221: 1979 Raj.L.W. 366.

7. Powers and duties of Court.—S. 124 leaves it to the Court to consider whether a communication is of the nature covered by the section, i.e., the Court has to decide whether the section can be applied. If it does, the Court has to exclude the document if the public officer concerned considers that the public interests will suffer by disclosure. The Court cannot question his decision on that point. Where the communication or document is a confidential one not intended to be revealed to the public but only to the person to whom it is addressed and to such persons to whom the officer concerned thinks fit to send it, it must be held to be a privileged document: (1943) 56 Mad.L.W. 74: (1943) 1 M.L.J. 154.

Where privilege is claimed under S. 124, the first and essential duty of the Court is to satisfy itself that the communication in question is one made in official confidence. Once the Court comes to the conclusion that the communication in question is one made in official confidence, the Court practically vanishes from the picture and it is for the public officer concerned to decide whether the document should be disclosed or not. The Court had nothing to do with the question as to whether the view expressed by the officer that public interest will suffer by such disclosure is correct or not.

Obiter: —It cannot be urged that no plea of privilege can be claimed when a report (the communication in question) is submitted on the basis of the provisions of the statute or the rules thereunder: 1964 Ker.L.T. 493: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 83: 1964 Ker.L.J. 762.

Whether a communication was made in official confidence, is a matter subject solely to judicial decision and if once the Court comes to the conclusion that the communication has been made not in official confidence, then the public officer to whom the communication has been made has no other alternative but to produce the documents, irrespective of the fact that in his opinion the interests of the State would suffer by such a disclosure. If, however, the Court comes to the conclusion that the communication was made in official confidence, then it is for the officer alone to whom the communication has been made to decide as to whether the document should be produced or not. If he elects not to produce it, the Court cannot compel him to produce: 10 J.&K.L.R. 17: A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 11.

The question whether a communication was made in official confidence is for the Court to decide. But the public officer concerned is the sole judge of whether it should or it should not be disclosed. The Court may adopt any procedure that it considers suitable in the circumstances to satisfy itself whether the document for which the privilege is claimed is a communication made in official confidence. This the Court can do by going through the entire file. It would be better if it is made more explicit by the Court after going through the file that it found that the documents in question were communications made to a public officer in official confidence. Then it would not be necessary for the Court to express its supererogatory opinion whether it agreed or did not agree with the Collector that the communication should not be disclosed because the public officer concerned is the sole judge of whether it should or it should not be disclosed: (1953) 66 Mad.L.W. 927: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 278.

Where documents summoned relate to the security of the State, national defence, foreign relations, cabinet decisions and high national policies and privilege is sought, the Court would treat the executive's opinion as conclusive; the decision best left to be made by the executive, for the Court is not the proper place to adjudicate upon such matters. However, on other confidential documents such as confidential reports, etc., about the Government servants, the Court may decide whether privilege should be allowed or not: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 243: I.L.R. (1976) 2 Del. 667.

When privilege is claimed in respect of a document on the ground of public interest, held, the Court is entitled, indeed bound, to insist upon its production and inspection with a view to determine whether it relates to the affairs of the State and whether the disclosure of its contents would be prejudicial to public interest; while so doing, the Court would give due weight to the opinion of the executive on the point-which is, however, not conclusive. But it would strike a balance between the requirements of public which demands on the one hand that evidence should be held back and that, on the other, it should have all relevant material before it to do justice to the case; it is only when the former outweighs the latter that the Court would grant privilege: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 243: I.L.R. (1976) 2 Del. 667.

The Magistrate should not disallow the claim of privilege without perusing the documents themselves. There may be portions of the document which cannot be disclosed without injury to public interest. Public interest should not be allowed to suffer on account of the objectionable conduct of the prosecution before the Magistrate in not bringing the documents before the Court and also in putting forward their claim of privilege piecemeal: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 19: I.L.R. (1957) 1 An.W.R. 106: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 486.

8. Failure to claim privilege—Effect.—Where privilege under S. 124 was not claimed in the trial Court in respect of documents summoned, held, the High Court declined to interfere under Art. 226 of the Constitution; the correct procedure was to first claim the privilege in the trial Court: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 28 (Mad.).

9. Miscellaneous.—Where a foreign candidate was denied admission in the medical course even when he had secured higher marks than another student who was admitted but not impleaded in the writ petition and there were also other candidates getting even higher marks but not admitted, held, though no relief in the circumstances could be granted, it is high time for the Central Government to frame guidelines for admission of foreign student even if the current scheme contemplates admission on merit or recommendation; the Government may not in future claim privilege in such matters under Ss. 123 and 124 by filing affidavits. [A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1994 Mad. 204.

Where Board of Revenue relying upon the report of the Deputy Commissioner refused to grant liquor licenses to the respondents though said report was not shown to them, held, the Board could not be compelled to disclose the report to respondents as it was confidential in nature. Further, respondents never made a demand for a copy of the report, and even if such a request was made, the Board would have been fully justified in not furnishing the same. Such a refusal would not amount to denial of natural justice for the obvious reason that the rules of natural justice must necessarily vary with the nature of the right and the attendant circumstances. The grant of liquor licence was not a matter of right but merely in the nature of privilege. [1983 Tax. L.R. (N.O.C.) 114; (1983) 2 Gau.L.R. 78, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 898: (1984) 2 S.C.C. 488: 1984 U.J. (S.C.) 417.

[1][125. Information as to commission of offences.—No Magistrate or Police Officer, shall be compelled to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence, and no Revenue Officer shall be compelled to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence against the public revenue.

Trial for offence of theft and conspiracy in Court-martial—Reports of Security Officer and CBI not allowed to be inspected by accused nor produced on record under cover of privilege under Ss. 123 and 124—Effect: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 109 (Del.).

Section 125—Notes.

Scope of section.—S. 125 entitles a Police Officer to refuse to disclose the source of his information as to the commission of any offence, while public policy demands that no adverse inference be drawn against the prosecution for withholding an informer from the witness-box: 1959 All.L.J. 519: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1274: A.I.R. 1959 All. 727. S. 125 contemplates only the prohibition of the source from whom the Magistrate or the Police Officer got information as to the commission of the offence and not as to the custody of any documents or other material objects, that might have been seized in the course of investigation and that might be tendered in evidence in support of the commission of the offence: (1954) 2 M.L.J. 239: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 1023. Only source of information to the Police is privileged and thus detail can be elicited: (1987) 3 Crimes 91 (Mad.).

S. 125 rests upon policy and it protects the name of a spy or information not the nature of the information and it has no application to an informant who lays a sworn informant and thereby initiates criminal proceedings. This rule is clearly applicable to gambling cases: 16 Cr.L.J. 447; 8 S.L.R. 309.

The copy of F.I.R. which is statutorily required to be furnished to the accused under S. 173, Cr.P.Code to enable the trial to commence, cannot be treated as a "privileged" document. The material section indeed is S. 125, but scope thereof is clear and narrow. It secures privilege for a "Magistrate or Police Officer" to refuse to "say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence". The "privilege" contemplated under S. 125 is merely in respect of the source of the information, and not to the content of the information. Besides, the identity of the informant is always disclosed in an F.I.R. under S. 154 (2): 1989 Cr.L.J. 580 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

In criminal prosecutions the witnesses for the Crown are privileged from disclosing the channel through which they received or communicated information. But this privilege cannot be claimed by a detective: I.L.R. 42 Cal. 957: (1914-15) 19 Cal.W.N. 676.

Spy witnesses—Examination of, is neither necessary nor desirable: 1960 B.L.J.R. 511: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1650: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 582.

Where the accused's demand for permission to peruse the complaint merely to ascertain the name of the informer is denied, the non-production of the complaint is not improper but privileged under S. 125: 37 I.C. 54: 18 Cr.L.J. 70.

Where rewards had been granted by the Customs Authorities to the informants whose recorded statements led the discovery of the offence, held, the Customs Authorities could not be compelled to disclose to the trial Court the name of the informants; the information was privileged under S. 125: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 28 (Mad.).

126. Professional communications.—No barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil shall at any time be permitted, unless with his client's express consent, to disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil, by or on behalf of his client, or to state the contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment, or to disclose any advice given by him to his client in the course and for the purpose of such employment:

Provided that nothing in this section shall protect from disclosure—

(1) any such communication made in furtherance of any [1][illegal] purpose;

(2) any fact observed by any barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil, in the course of his employment as such, showing that any crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of his employment.

It is immaterial whether the attention of such barrister, [2][pleader], attorney or vakil was or was not directed to such fact by or on behalf of his client.

Explanation.—The obligation stated in this section continues after the employment has ceased.

1. Scope and applicability.—S. 126, Evidence Act makes all communications between professional advisers like a barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil, and their clients confidential, and it is only when the clients express consent, that such a person may disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment. The proviso to this section rightly provides, however, that the protection of the section will not extend to any communications made in furtherance of an illegal purpose, or to any fact showing that a crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of the employment. It is remarkable that the obligation laid down in this section continues even after the employment is ceased: A.I.R. 1954 Raj. 241: I.L.R. (1955) Raj. 70.

On this section, see also I.L.R. 3 Bom. 91; I.L.R. 8 Bom. 263; I.L.R. 4 Bom. 576; 4 Bom.L.R. 460.

S. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act is enacted to prevent disclosure by an advocate of any communication made to him for the purpose of his employment as such advocate, by or on behalf of his client, or any advice given by him to his client in the course of such employment. An advocate is also not permitted to state the contents or condition of any documents with which he has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment. The protection against production or disclosure, however, does not extend to any original document which might have come into the possession of the advocate from his client.

If the client is compellable to produce the document, there is no reason either on principle or authority on which the advocate can refuse to produce the document. The document handed over to the advocate by

As the defence of a man known to be guilty is not a criminal purpose, this communication is protected from disclosure.

(b) A, a client, says to B, an attorney—"I wish to obtain possession of property by the use of a forged deed on which I request you to sue".

This communication, being made in furtherance of criminal purpose, is not protected from disclosure.

(c) A, being charged with embezzlement, retains B, an attorney, to defend him. In the course of the proceedings, B observes that an entry has been made in A's account-book, charging A with the sum said to have been embezzled, which entry was not in the book at the commencement of his employment.

This being a fact observed by B in the course of his employment, showing that a fraud has been committed since the commencement of the proceedings, it is not protected from disclosure.

the client cannot be said to be privileged under S. 126, Evidence Act unless the document contains any communication made to the advocate by the client in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such advocate. Hence, a letter addressed to the client by the State Government which was alleged to be in the brief of the Counsel and of which production was sought in the present case from the advocate of the accused was obviously not a letter in respect of which any privilege could be claimed by the advocate of the accused under S. 126, Evidence Act: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 833: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 610: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 290.

S. 126 is not restricted only to oral communications made to the pleader by the client, but extends also to facts observed by the pleader in the course of and for the purpose of his employment and he is not bound to disclose them without the consent of the client: 36 Cr.L.J. 31: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 269.

Privilege can be claimed only when the advocate or the clients are asked to disclose any professional communication between them. Such a privilege, however, cannot be claimed in respect of a document which has already come in possession of the opposite party and has been filed on record: 1992 Cr.L.J. 319 (All.).

There is no privilege to communications made before the creation of the relationship of pleader and a client. Where two persons have a dispute about a claim made by one of them upon the other and both seek the help of a pleader, and one of them makes a statement to the pleader, the statement so made to the pleader by one of the parties is admissible. The test is whether the communication is made to the witness in his character of legal adviser. Further, in order to attract S. 126 the communications by the party to his pleader must be confidential: I.L.R. 58 Cal. 1379: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 148.

But the mere presence of friends of clients specially when such friends occupy more or less the same position as he himself does not destroy the privilege: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 47. In an action for damages for personal injuries, copies of the case notes prepared by the hospital in respect of the plaintiff's attendance for treatment at the hospital are privileged where, when they were made, litigation was in active contemplation and they were made by the plaintiff's legal advisers to assist in advising their client in making his claim, though no privilege attaches to the original notes: (1959) 1 W.L.R. 702.

S. 126 is designed to abort the attempt to intrude into privacy of the close preserve of the fund of information conveyed by the client closetted in confidence. All information surrounding the case will be conveyed by the client to the advocate and sifting of relevant material constitutes the nucleus for preparation and make up of the case. S. 126 facilitates the client to pass on full information and material without fear or apprehension of advocate being obligated to divulge the information. In the absence of this privilege the frank disclosure by the client upon discussion will be imperilled. Absolute privilege is conferred save in situations of communications for illegal purpose or in furtherance of fraud or crime. Thus, where an advocate pursuant to the summons issued to him at the instance of plaintiff appeared and claimed privilege on the ground that he was appearing for the defendants and he would be obligated to divulge privileged communication if he was called upon to adduce evidence, held, the advocate should not be called upon to give evidence in view of S. 126: (1984) 2 An.W.R. 138: (1984) 1 An.L.T. 280.

S. 126 prohibits a pleader from disclosing any communication made to him in the course of and for the purpose of his employment as such pleader. Disclosure implies that which was not already made known to others. If the communication by the client to the advocate is put in the form of a notice and that notice is produced in Court, it forms the basis of a complaint for defamation under S. 500, I.P.Code. If what is communicated by the client to the advocate is what is put in the notice then there is already a disclosure; and when such an advocate is called upon to give evidence, he is not disclosing any fact for the first time but is only substantiating what is already disclosed. S. 126, therefore, does not stand in the way of summoning the advocate for this purpose. [1935 Mad.W.N. 460, Rel. on]: (1972) 2 An.W.R. 253: (1972) 2 A.P.L.J. 62: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 652.

The sending of a communication to an advocate on behalf of his client is virtually a communication made to the client himself. As such there is no publication of the imputation concerning the client. [A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 299, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 18: 1988 Cr.L.J. 124: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1361: I.L.R. (1987) 1 Ker. 547.

The Court cannot rule out the evidence of a counsel as inadmissible on the ground of the incompetency of the Counsel to be a witness: 15 Cr.L.J. 429: 12 All.L.J. 285.

The practice of employing legal advisers who are well qualified in law has recently grown up; the nature of their duty is to advise their employers on legal questions, rather on all matters pertaining to law and litigation; the same as that of barristers, pleaders, vakils or attorneys except that they do not appear in Courts. There is, thus, no reason why they should not get the same protection as the legal advisers who appear in Courts. The communications made in confidence to them by their employers or vice versa are protected under Ss. 126 and 129: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 6: 1982 Mah.L.J. 798: 1982 Hindu L.R. 93.

A communication in the nature of legal advice from a law officer or law department does not fall under S. 126, it is, however, privileged to a limited extent under S. 129 and cannot be looked into as evidence if the person in receipt of the advice does not tender it as evidence; but where he sues on the basis of legal advice, the Court may compel him to disclose the advice: 1986 All.W.C. 191.

Where the salaried law officer of the Municipal Corporation had prepared a draft reply by the Municipal Commissioner to the State Government's query and neither any legal advice was sought nor given by the law officer but on the contrary the draft letter disclosed facts as they occurred, which contained shocking disclosures as to how the Corporation had been seeking to evict occupants on concocted and false grounds, held, the document was not a confidential communication between the client and his legal adviser; it was not entitled to any protection of law either under S. 126 or S. 129. [A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 11 and (1972) 2 Q.B. 102, Rel. on] A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 6: 1982 Mah.L.J. 798: 1982 Hindu L.R. 93.

Where parties having a common interest engaged common lawyer and discussed matters common to both, held, communication could not be said to be privileged between the two persons but was privileged from disclosure at the instance of a third party: (1991) 1 Ker.L.T. 116.

Exemption from disclosure—Lawyer giving notice on behalf of his clients—Court cannot enquire into whether the lawyer had authority to act on behalf of his client—However, lawyer should satisfy himself with regard to his authority: (1979) 5 All.L.R. 302: 1979 All.L.J. 703.

The dictation given by a lawyer to his clerk and transcription made by him of a per se libellous matter cannot amount to publication: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 18: 1988 Cr.L.J. 124: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1361: I.L.R. (1987) 1 Ker. 547; 1974 Cr.L.J. 1435 (Bom.); (1884) 1 Q.B. 842; (1907) 1 K.B. 371.

Issue of commission for examination on interrogatories of Counsel of a deceased party in Pakistan—Evidence sought to be adduced by interrogatories not admissible under Ss. 92 and 126, Evidence Act, and as being opposed to defendant's own pleading—Court acts without jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 27.

2. Applicability to other professions.— There is no protection afforded by the Evidence Act to a doctor as such. It is his duty to assist the Court in every way possible and to disclose to the Court all the information in his possession relevant to the matter in issue: I.L.R. 55 All. 134: 1933 All.L.J. 14: A.I.R. 1933 All. 56.

Though the Act grants no special privilege to a newspaper or journal, it is undoubtedly true that the disclosure of the newspaper's source of information should not be ordered if it would be injurious to public interest; the media's freedom to investigate and report on matters of public interest is essential to a free society which makes available to the public an information otherwise not available. However, such protection can be extended only if the information or material published is of public importance, as for example, where the information relates to malpractices in a Governmental organisation; even information relating to the private life of a public figure may be of public importance if it has a bearing on his manner of discharging his duties or it reflects on his suitability for the office he occupies. But where impugned article contained comments made by different persons on the lifestyle of a film script writer and his actress wife, held, it could not be taken as a matter of public interest; the private life of the script writer and his actress wife may cater to the curiosity of a certain kind of reader but what is interesting to the public is not necessarily of public interest; privilege not allowed: A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 339: 1987 Mah.L.J. 689.

3. Privilege is of client and not of lawyer.—S. 126 has been enacted for the protection of the client and not of lawyer; and it is founded on the impossibility of conducting legal business without the professional assistance and on the necessity in order to render that assistance effectual, of securing full and unreserved intercourse between the two. The privilege is the privilege of the client and not of the legal adviser. The latter is, therefore, bound to claim the privilege unless it is waived by his client expressly under S. 126, or impliedly under S. 128, e.g., by examining the legal adviser as to the privileged communication. A party cannot be compelled to disclose any confidential communication made to his legal adviser unless he offers himself as a witness. The privilege applies to all communications oral or documentary in the course of and for the purpose of the employment as legal adviser and the privilege continues throughout and does not get terminated by the termination of the litigation or the death of the parties. This rule, however, covers only the private and confidential communications between the client and the lawyer and which cannot be disclosed either by means of direct questions or elicited by means of indirect tactics. It does not, however, preclude the lawyer from replying to the opposite party who wants to proceed against him from stating that what all he did was in pursuance of the instructions given to him and not on his own volition. The rule under S. 126, does not require that a lawyer should vicariously make himself responsible for an offence which he never committed and in any event he will not be advancing his cleint's cause by remaining mute since in that case it is a fair inference to draw that what he did was either in violation or in excess of the instructions given to him or that he and the client conspired to defame the complainant and in which event both the lawyer and the client would find themselves in the dock, ranged as co-accused. So looked at from any point of view, the rule under S. 126 of the Evidence Act cannot cover the case of a lawyer acknowledging a notice given to him and replying that what he did was only in pursuance of his instructions and nothing more. The foundation of the rule embodied in S. 126, discussed: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1239: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 741.

The privilege in respect of professional communication between a client and his advocate is intended only to protect the interest of the client in respect of any action of prosecution for any prior act or offence. The privilege is not intended to cases of commission of any offence. The law presumes that an advocate acts in discharge of his duty in pursuance of the instructions of his client and the protection given under S. 126 of the Evidence Act is restricted by the provisions contained in the section itself. A defamatory imputation about a person in the instructions to an advocate will not be a privileged communication: (1966) 2 M.L.J. 443: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 395.

4. "In the course and for the purpose of his employment".—S. 126 shows that, the communication by the accused to the lawyer should have been made in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil on behalf of the client. The communication should have been while the relationship of attorney and client subsisted. Thus, where an advocate who was residing just about half a kilometer away from the place of occurrence deposed that on the day of incident the accused came to his house at about 11 P.M. (incident occurred at 10.30 P.M.), and he was not cross-examined, held, said piece of evidence did not fall within S. 126. [A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 269, Disting.]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 162 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Employment of a lawyer for drafting a document/deed, held, is professional employment: 1980 Jab.L.J. 599.

5. "Express consent".—A failure on the part of a client to claim privilege when he is under cross-examination does not amount to "express consent" given by him to his legal adviser to disclose a communication which is otherwise privileged under the section: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 47: 27 Sind L.R. 72.

6. Privilege is not absolute.—The immunity from disclosure which can be claimed by a client in respect of communication made to his lawyer is not absolute but is limited in its scope by S. 126 of the Evidence Act. The right given to a client under S. 126, Evidence Act, is restricted in its operation to the purpose of defending him or presenting his case and its protection extends no further. It is restricted in its scope by the two provisos contained in the sections itself and the privilege could be claimed only by those clients who have already completed the crime and seek legal advice for defence but it is not open to those who commit subsequent crimes which may be described as future wrong doing. Whether the lawyer exceeded the commission or was a conspirator or was ignorant of the illegal purpose and became a dupe of the client will make no difference and in such a case proviso (1) would apply. Held, on facts, that unless the defamatory imputations in the notice could be justified for the purpose of petitioner's civil claim the case would fall under proviso (1) to S. 126, Evidence Act, and not under the general rule of the section. It would not, therefore, be a privileged communication and there would be no bar to the counsel making a disclosure: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 38: A.I.R. 1963 All. 33.

The privilege afforded to a legal adviser under S. 126 is of a very limited character. It protects only such communications as are made to the legal adviser in confidence, in the course of and for the purpose of his employment. And if the communication is not made in confidence then communication is in no sense privileged: 27 Sind L.R. 72: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 47.

7. Communication held to be privileged.—Where a person has acted as lawyer to a party he is debarred under S. 126 from disclosing the instructions given to him by his client and hence the client cannot be convicted on the evidence of the lawyer as to the instructions given to him on the strength of which he had put certain defamatory questions to a witness: (1950) 1 M.L.J. 654: A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 537.

If a lawyer puts questions containing imputations to a witness in open Court, no possible question under S. 126 can arise: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 545: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 278.

Where a Hindu widow applied through her pleader for a succession certificate to the estate of her husband and the same was granted without the production of the Will, the contents of which had been disclosed to the applicant's pleader and in a later proceeding the pleader was sought to be examined with reference to the Will, held, that as the pleader became acquainted with the Will in the course of and for the purpose of his professional employment he was privileged under S. 126. The circumstance that the widow was willing to tender the Will in Court or that its contents had otherwise been made known was entirely immaterial: (1929) 31 Bom.L.R. 1046: A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 414. Opinions given by the Law Secretary who functions as a legal Remembrancer to the State, regarding the plaintiff's claim against the State and which are in the nature of an advice given by the legal adviser to his client are privileged: A.I.R. 1954 J.&K. 11.

Where in a motor accident claim case, the Tribunal directed the Insurance Company to furnish the record relating to compromise to find the stage of compromise, held, the Tribunal was not justified in calling for the record as the communication between the Counsel for the Insurance Company and the Insurance Company was a privileged communication: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 486: (1982) 21 Del.L.T. 430.

Where a defence lawyer refused to show his notebook to the Court claiming privilege on the ground that the register in which he had taken down the notes of the evidence also contained certain instructions given to him by his client which amounted to a privileged communication and could not be looked into by the Court, held, the lawyer had rightly claimed privilege under S. 126 of the Evidence Act as the register contained instructions given by the client which being privileged could not be disclosed to the Court. [(1974) 1 Cal.H.C. (N.) 325, Reversed; A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 535 and A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 535, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 917: 1981 Cr.L.J. 341: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 109: (1981) 2 S.C.R. 661.

8. Communication held to be not privileged.—Communications between a prosecutor in a Crown case and his attorney are not privileged: 27 Sind L.R. 72: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 47.

The privilege under S. 126, Evidence Act is not absolute. When defamatory questions are put by a lawyer to a witness in cross-examination on client's instructions without any reasonable basis for putting them, it cannot be said that said communication is made for the purpose of his employment as lawyer and its disclosure is protected under S. 126 without express consent of the client: 1969 M.L.J. (Cr.) 504: 1970 Cr.L.J. 260: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 606: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 34; 1987 Cr.L.J. 739: (1987) 1 Crimes 27 (Ker.).

9. Waiver.—The privilege embodied in S. 126 is not liable to melt down on the principle of waiver or acquiescence. This can be more understood from S. 128 which says that by giving evidence, a party shall not be deemed to have consented to such disclosure as is mentioned in S. 126. It is only when the party calls such advocate as a witness that the party shall be deemed to have consented to such disclosure, that too only if he questions the witness about it. S. 126 uses strong language in imposing the prohibition. No advocate "shall at any time be permitted" to disclose such communication "unless with his client's express consent". A failure on the part of the client's to claim privilege cannot be stretched to the extent of amounting to "express consent" envisaged in the provision. [A.I.R. 1933 Sind 47, Rel. on]: (1994) 1 Ker.L.J. 696: 1995 Cr.L.J. 61 (D.B.).

Deposing on the same matter by a party does not amount to waiver of the privilege; express consent is necessary for such waiver: 1980 Jab.L.J. 599.

10. Proviso.—There must be definite charge of fraud and something to support the charge before the claim of privilege can be overruled ; and the legal practitioner can then be rightly compelled to answer the question with regard to the condition of the document at the time that it was in his possession: 144 I.C. 175: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 61 (2).

Where plaintiff approached an advocate and sought advice in respect of a forged promissory note and the advocate found that the four revenue stamps purported to have been singed by the defendant were re-used on the promissory note, which was a blank one, he did not agree with the plaintiff and, in reality, differed from filing the suit on the basis of such a promissory note, held, this advice or communication tendered by advocate to the plaintiff was not covered by the protection under S. 126: A.I.R. 1994 Guj. 31.

11. Miscellaneous.—An unsigned and undated letter allegedly written by the accused-advocate to his client, who was a terrorist to remain absconding and which letter did not reach him, held, could not be used against said advocate in evidence taking into consideration the fact that he had appeared for the members of the group to which said terrorist belonged before various Courts; said letter could not be taken as an abatement under S. 3(3) of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act, 1987: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2168 (Mad.).

Section 127—Notes.

Protection to interpreters is of peculiar importance in India as there are so many races speaking different languages: I.L.R. 26 Cal. 53: 2 Cal.W.N. 649.

The dictation given by a lawyer to his clerk and transcription made by him of a per se libellous matter cannot amount to publication: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 18: 1988 Cr.L.J. 124: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1361: I.L.R. (1987) 1 Ker. 547; 1974 Cr.L.J. 1435 (Bom.); (1884) 1 Q.B. 842; (1907) 1 K.B. 371.

128. Privilege not waived by volunteering evidence.—If any party to a suit gives evidence therein at his own instance or otherwise, he shall not be deemed to have consented thereby to such disclosure as is mentioned in section 126; and if any party to a suit or proceeding calls any such barrister, [1][pleader], attorney or vakil as a witness, he shall be deemed to have consented to such disclosure only if he questions such barrister, attorney or vakil on matters which, but for such question, he would not be at liberty to disclose.

129. Confidential communications with legal advisers.—No one shall be compelled to disclose to the Court any confidential communication which has taken place between him and his legal professional adviser, unless he offers himself as a witness, in which case he may be compelled to disclose any such communications as may appear to the Court necessary to be known in order to explain any evidence which he has given, but no others.

1. Inserted by Act 18 of 1872, S. 10.

Section 128—Note.

The privilege embodied in S. 126 is not liable to melt down on the principle of waiver or acquiescence. This can be more understood from S. 128 which says that by giving evidence, a party shall not be deemed to have consented to such disclosure as is mentioned in S. 126. It is only when the party calls such advocate as a witness that the party shall be deemed to have consented to such disclosure, that too only if he questions the witness about it. S. 126 uses strong language in imposing the prohibition. No advocate "shall at any time be permitted" to disclose such communication "unless with his client's express consent". A failure on the part of the client to claim privilege cannot be stretched to the extent of amounting to "express consent" envisaged in the provision. [A.I.R. 1933 Sind 47, Rel. on]: (1994) 1 Ker.L.J. 696: 1995 Cr.L.J. 61 (D.B.).

Section 129—Notes.

Absence of words "to the Court" in S. 122 which appear in this section signify that S. 122 is of general application: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1511: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 228.

The practice of employing legal advisers who are well qualified in law has recently grown up; the nature of their duty is to advise their employers on legal questions, rather on all matters pertaining to law and litigation; the same as that of barristers, pleaders, vakils or attorneys except that they do not appear in Courts. There is, thus, no reason why they should not get the same protection as the legal advisers who appear in Courts. The communications made in confidence to them by their employers or vice versa are protected under Ss. 126 and 129: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 6: 1982 Mah.L.J. 798: 1982 Hindu L.R. 93.

A communication in the nature of legal advice from a law officer or law department does not fall under S. 126; it is, however, privileged to a limited extent under S. 129, and cannot be looked into as evidence if the person in receipt of the advice does not tender it as evidence; but where he sues on the basis of legal advice, the Court may compel him to disclose the advice: 1986 All.W.C. 191.

Legal advice is not information, information must relate to fact; advice cannot be a fact. Between a lawyer and his client the communication is privileged and it cannot be forced to be brought on record in view of S. 129. If a confidential communication between a person and his legal professional advisor cannot be required to be disclosed, the name of the legal advisor also would be exempt from such a disclosure: 1985 All.W.C. 662.

The sending of a communication to an advocate on behalf of his client is virtually a communication made to the client himself. As such there is no publication of the imputation concerning the client. [A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 299, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 18: 1988 Cr.L.J. 124: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1361: I.L.R. (1987) 1 Ker. 547.

130. Production of title-deeds of witness not a party.—No witness who is not a party to a suit shall be compelled to produce his title-deeds to any property, or any document in virtue of which he holds any property as pledgee or mortgagee, or any document the production of which might tend to criminate him, unless he has agreed in writing to produce them with the person seeking the production of such deeds or some person through whom he claims.

131. Production of documents which another person, having possession, could refuse to produce.—No one shall be compelled to produce documents in his possession, which any other person would be entitled to refuse to produce if they were in his possession, unless such last-mentioned person consents to their production.

132. Witness not excused from answering on ground that answer will criminate.—A witness shall not be excused from answering any question as to any matter relevant to the matter in issue in any suit or in any civil or criminal proceeding, upon the ground that the answer to such question will criminate, or may tend directly or indirectly to criminate, such witness, or that it will expose, or tend directly or indirectly to expose, such witness to a penalty or forfeiture, of any kind:

Proviso.—Provided that no such answer, which a witness shall be compelled to give, shall subject him to any arrest or prosecution, or be proved against him in any criminal proceeding, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer.

2. Witness.

4. "No such answer".
5. "Shall be compelled to give".

1. Scope and applicability.—The imperative language of S. 132 does not permit a witness, required to answer a relevant question, to refuse to answer on the ground that it would amount to self-incrimination; but under S. 94 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, a voter cannot be required to disclose for whom had he cast his vote; the prohibition under S. 94 of 1951 Act is, however, not absolute; the voter has the privilege to disclose or not to disclose the candidate for whom he had voted; S. 94 of 1951 Act is, thus, to that extent, an exception to S. 132: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1362.

There is no privilege to the maker of a statement under S. 161 of the Cr.P.Code: (1985) 1 Crimes 414 (Guj.).

As the Evidence Act does not apply to interrogatories by a Customs Officer exercising powers under S. 171-A of the Sea Customs Act (corresponding to S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1962), S. 132 of the Evidence Act is not attracted to such cases: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 44: 1970 M.L.J. (Cr.) 490: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 821.

Privilege under Art. 20(3) of the Constitution—Confined to accused—Not applicable to witnesses: A.I.R. 1957 All. 396: 1957 Cr.L.J. 698.

S. 132, Evidence Act, if overridden by S. 478(5), Companies Act, 1956—Officer of company under public examination—If can refuse to answer incriminating questions or claim protection in respect of same: (1970) 2 Comp.L.J. 46: 1971 Mah.L.J. 282: (1971) 41 Comp. Cas. 70.

2. Witness.—S. 132, Evidence Act, does not apply to a statement made by a person during an investigation under S. 161, Cr.P.Code. An investigation under Chapter XIV, Cr.P.Code, may be a proceeding but is certainly not a suit or a civil or criminal proceeding. A person who is interrogated under S. 161 by a Police Officer making an investigation is not a witness. The word "witness" used in S. 132, Evidence Act, refers only to a person who enters the witness-box and is sworn as a witness: A.I.R. 1960 All. 623: 1960 All.L.J. 109: 1960 All.Cr.R. 118.

An accused who had been jointly charged with another but whose case has been separated before the trial commenced so that he could be examined as a witness in the case of the other accused cannot be denied the benefit of the proviso to S. 132 of the Evidence Act. He is as much a witness as any other, when once he is not an accused person within the meaning of S. 342, Cr.P.Code. The legal position of such a witness does not differ from the position of any other ordinary witness, and there is nothing that could prevent such a person from taking benefit under the proviso to S. 132 of the Evidence Act. When an oath could be administered to such a person, naturally the incidents of S. 132 of the Evidence Act will also attach themselves to such a person as a witness: I.L.R. (1957) Mad. 715: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 727.

Examination of self-confessed criminal in conspiracy as witness—Propriety and legality—Objection to admissibility of testimony—Criminal conspiracy to smuggle gold: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1124: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 938.

A witness is legally bound to answer any question which is relevant to the matter in issue even if the answer to such question is likely to criminate him directly or indirectly. The provisions of proviso to S. 132, clearly protect a witness from being prosecuted on the basis of the answers given by him in a criminal proceeding which tend to criminate him directly or indirectly. Thus, the apprehension of co-accused-turned-approver that his evidence as an approver in the present case would be used against him in other criminal cases where he figured as an accused was misconceived: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 598: 1989 Cr.L.J. 986: (1989) 37 Del.L.T. 200.

A person who is tried for an offence under S. 3 of the Gambling Act has every right to cite as his witness another person who is a co-accused with him for an offence under S. 4 in a separate trial. The co-accused's position is sufficiently protected by S. 132: 73 I.C. 521: A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 247. As to privilege of statement made before the coroner, see I.L.R. 50 Bom. 56: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 141 (F.B.).

Person summoned to appear before authorities under Sea Customs Act—Position of: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 267: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 225.

Companies Act, 1913, S. 185—Proceedings under against managing director—Criminal proceedings in respect of same subject-matter also pending against managing director—Recording of evidence for managing director in proceedings under S. 185—Adjournment of proceedings till after decision of criminal cases in view of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution if can be claimed by managing director—Managing director if compelled to be a witness against himself: I.L.R. (1962) 1 Punj. 468: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 101.

3. Proviso.—In a case where a party to a civil litigation gives evidence, it is possible to presume that he gives the evidence on his own accord. Similarly, if the accused in a criminal case offers himself to be examined as a witness, a presumption may arise that the evidence given by him is voluntary. That would not be the position with regard to the evidence given by witness summoned by the Court. The answer given by a witness in a Court, whose presence is required by the Court either by issuance of summons or by other means cannot be equated with the answer given by a party in a civil litigation or the statement of an accused as a witness, in a criminal case. The answer given by such a witness cannot be characterised as a mere voluntary statement and without any compulsion. Where the petitioner was summoned as a witness and while being examined he gave an answer incriminating himself, held, that answer could not be used against him in subsequent criminal proceedings as he was clearly protected under the proviso to S. 132. [(1987) 2 Ker.L.T. 222, Approved; 1989 Cr.L.J. 986, Foll.]: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2455 (Ker.) (D.B.).

As the proceedings before the Lokayukta under the Gujarat Lokayukta Act, 1986 are deemed to be civil proceedings by virtue of its being deemed to be a civil Court, the protection provided by proviso to S. 132 of the Evidence Act applies to a witness who has been compelled to answer any question during the investigation: A.I.R. 1992 Guj. 10: (1992-1) 33 Guj.L.R. 223 (D.B.).

Prosecution for offence of cheating—Petitioners cited as witnesses therein—Held, petitioners were bound to answer all questions and they could not be prosecuted for their answers: 1970 Cr.L.J. 945 (Raj.).

Where respondent was accused of bigamy and during course of hearing father of first wife of accused made an application asking that second wife of accused might be summoned as a witness but an objection was raised that if she was summoned as a witness, then she would be deposing against her own interest and it would amount to compelling her to make a statement against herself which was rejected by the lower Court, held, objection was rightly rejected: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1239 (All.).

Where in a prosecution for contravention of the Motor Spirits and High Speed Diesel Oil (Maintenance and Regulation of Supplies) Order, 1979, a witness turned hostile and for that reason he was made an accused under S. 319(1) of the Cr.P.Code and was ultimately convicted alongwith other accused persons for contravention of the said order, held, there being no evidence against him to connect him with the crime even remotely, the trial Judge overlooked the requirements of S. 319(1), Cr.P.Code and violated the prohibition contained in proviso to S. 132 of the Evidence Act: 1990 Cr.L.J. 100 (Ker.).

Witness voluntarily making defamatory statements before Court—Is not protected under proviso to S. 132: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 705(1): A.I.R. 1965 All. 597.

A witness must claim the benefit of the protection afforded by S. 132 before he makes the statement in respect of which a question is subsequently raised: I.L.R. 40 All. 271: 43 I.C. 823; A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 58.

His status, motive, etc., go a great way to determine his criminal responsibility: A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 58.

The distinction between the eighth exception to S. 499, Penal Code and S. 132 of the Evidence Act is that the former excludes a statement from the definition of defamation altogether whereas the latter excludes prosecution for defamation and bars proof of the accusation in a trial for defamation: A.I.R. 1960 All. 606.

A person who answers questions put to him by Counsel without seeking the protection of S. 132 is not entitled to protection in a charge of defamation and all he is entitled to is the limited privilege under S. 499, I.P. Code: I.L.R. 52 Mad. 422: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 236: 56 M.L.J. 570.

So, defamatory statements made by persons in answer to interrogatories during investigation under S. 161 are not protected under S. 132, Evidence Act: 1960 All.L.J. 109: 1960 All.Cr.R. 118: A.I.R. 1960 All. 623.

A person making a defamatory statement as a party or as a witness in a judicial proceeding is liable to be charged under S. 500, I.P.Code, irrespective of the liability for perjury. Such person can be protected if he pleads and succeeds in applying any of the exceptions mentioned in S. 499, I.P. Code: 10 I.C. 682: 12 Cr.L.J. 193. The English doctrine of absolute privilege in cases of defamation does not apply in India: 13 Cr.L.J. 25: 5 Sind L.R. 133; A.I.R. 1934 Sind 114: 28 Sind L.R. 251. See also 51 M.L.J. 112 (F.B.).

Proviso—Suit for defamation—Privilege of witness—Principles stated—Plaintiff and defendant arrayed respectively as accused and prosecution witnesses in cross cases under S. 107, Cr.P. Code—Abusive language of defendant, during cross-examination by plaintiff, a lawyer though held to be a gross abuse of the privilege of a witness, in view of the peculiar position of plaintiff, defendant held was not liable: 1967 All.L.J. 158: 1967 All.W.R. (H.C.) 163: A.I.R. 1967 All. 476.

4. "No such answer".—The taking of a thumb-impression is not equivalent to asking a question and receiving an answer and may be proved against the person in any criminal proceeding and the proviso to S. 132 does not apply where no objection is taken to the thumb-impression being taken: I.L.R. 39 Cal. 348: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 503. Where a charge for perjury is based on two contradictory statements, every possible presumption in favour of their reconciliation should be made: 15 Cr.L.J. 379: 23 I.C. 747; 24 I.C. 576: 15 Cr.L.J. 488.

S. 132 applies only to questions asked in the course of trial: I.L.R. 39 Cal. 348: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 503.

5. "Shall be compelled to give".—The compulsion contemplated in the proviso to S. 132 is something more than being put into the box and being sworn to give evidence; the compulsion may be expressed or implied. It is not necessary that the compulsion must be in any set form of words or that the asking for protection should be in a particular form. If the witness is made to understand that he must answer all questions without exception, it would amount to compulsion: A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 371.

The question as to when it can be said that a witness has been "compelled" to answer within the meaning of the proviso to S. 132 is a question of fact to be determined by the Tribunal in each case. S. 132 does not require that a witness, before he can claim protection under the proviso, must first ask to be excused from answering the question on the ground that the answer will incriminate him. Questions which are allowed by the Court in spite of objection by the pleader of the witness must be deemed to be relevant so far as the witness is concerned, and he is bound to give an answer. Answer so given is an answer which the witness is "compelled to give" within the meaning of S. 132 and the witness is entitled to the protection of the proviso. He cannot, therefore, be prosecuted for defamation in respect of a defamatory statement made by him in such an answer; whether the answer was true or deliberately false is irrelevant: I.L.R. 21 Pat. 778: A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 117; A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 241: 1962 M.P.L.J. 305; 1971 M.P.L.J. 284.

"Compelled to answer questions" meaning of: 28 Sind L.R. 251: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 114; 1939 Rang.L.R. 479: A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 371.

The mere record of a deposition is not by itself sufficient evidence of compulsory or voluntary nature of the statement of a witness: A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 58. The protest from a witness is not necessary in respect of every question for the benefit of the privilege afforded by S. 132: A.I.R. 1921 All. 362. But see 27 Cr.L.J. 1383: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 385.

Unless a person objects to any question the answer to which is likely to incriminate him, he cannot be said to have been compelled to give such answer within S. 132, proviso of the Act: 59 I.C. 324: (1920) 22 Bom.L.R. 1247; I.L.R. 50 Bom. 162: (1926) 28 Bom.L.R. 1: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 141 (F.B.); 10 O.W.N. 735: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 370. See also 17 Mys.L.J. 102: 43 Mys.H.C.R. 675.

Where the witness was compelled to answer the question put to him by the Judge under S. 132, proceedings for defamation could not be taken against him: I.L.R. 10 Luck. 169: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 386; I.L.R. 42 All. 257: 21 Cr.L.J. 186: 54 I.C. 890: A.I.R. 1920 All. 140.

In order to be entitled to the protection given by S. 132 of the Evidence Act, the witness must object to the question which tends to incriminate him and the mere fact of the witness being called to the witness-box, sworned and questioned about relevant facts, does not imply that he was compelled to answer the question. The question whether a statement was made voluntarily or under compulsion is a question of fact. But an obligation under law to state the truth as a witness on oath cannot ipso facto be equated with compulsion and admissions made by a witness in the witness-box about the commission of an offence by him can be used against him in evidence. Held, on facts, in the case of witnesses subsequently tried for offence under S. 201, I.P.Code, that although the admissions made by the accused could be used against them, their explanation during their examination under S. 342, Cr.P. Code, could be regarded in the context as true and sufficient for the purpose of discharging the onus of explaining away the admissions and the answers given by the accused in their examination under S. 342 could be taken into consideration to explain the admissions: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 965: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 475.

Where the complainant and his witnesses sworn as witnesses gave certain answers containing defamatory matter in their examination-in-chief without any protest or hesitation and without begging to be excused from answering the questions put to them, it cannot be said that they were compelled to give answers within the meaning of the proviso to S. 132, Evidence Act, so that they are not entitled to claim the protection of the proviso and can be prosecuted for defamation and the accusation made by them in their depositions can be proved against them. The compulsion referred to in the proviso does not include the compulsion by the general or common law of the land; there should be special compulsion by the Presiding Officer of the Court. The giving of evidence is a matter of duty and not of compulsion and the duty cannot be treated as compulsion within the meaning of the proviso.

The compulsion contemplated by the proviso must arise out of the refusal of his prayer to be excused: A.I.R. 1960 All. 606: 1960 All.W.R. (H.C.) 543: 1960 All.Cr.R. 345.

133. Accomplice.—An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person; and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

1. Scope — Sections 133 and 114, Illustraton (b).—The combined effect of Ss. 133 and 114, Illus. (b) may be stated as follows: According to the former, which is a rule of law, an accomplice is competent to give evidence and according to the latter which is a rule of practice it is almost always unsafe to convict upon his testimony alone. Therefore, though the conviction of an accused on the testimony of an accomplice cannot be said to be illegal yet the Courts will, as a matter of practice, not accept the evidence of such a witness without corroboration in material particulars. There should be corroboration of the approver in material particulars and qua each accused: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599; (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 557 (Ker.).

The provision under S. 133 has to be considered along with another rule of prudence or caution suggested in Illus. (b) given under S. 114 of the Evidence Act. Both rules in terms appear to be confined to criminal cases and are really in unison. They only represent different stages in the judicial assessment of evidence against an accused person against whom evidence produced consists of the statement of his alleged accomplice. Under S. 114 of the Act, a presumption may be made when an accomplice's statement is put before a Court in relation to the particular offence which is alleged to have been committed by the accused person and the circumstances in which it is so done. The power under S. 114 to draw presumption is discretionary. It is possible to conceive of a case where the Court might consider it unnecessary to require corroboration of what the accomplice has stated though such occasions may be rare. On conviction the basis of uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice would not be illegal. S. 133 of the Act depicts rather an exception to the general rule of prudence indicated in Illus. (b) under S. 114 of the Act. It may safely be accepted as a workable rule that except where there are special reasons and exceptional circumstances, the ordinary rule of caution indicated above has to be considered first in relation to facts of a particular case by a Court. The rule illustrated under Illus. (b) of S. 114 of the Act, is a rule of prudence rather than a statutory inhibition and it has to be applied wherever considerations similar to those indicated therein arise for consideration. From the nature of things the propriety of applying the principle underlying the above rule cannot depend upon the nature of particular Tribunal which is required to consider it but rather upon the nature of the issue involved. Consequently, even in a civil case, while assessing evidence, the Court ought to require corroboration of evidence of accomplice for any other reason but that the witness has a serious strain upon his evidence as a participator in a nefarious act: 1965 M.P.L.J. 791: 1965 Jab.L.J. 933: I.L.R. (1965) Madh. Pra. 800.

The provision in S. 133 is an absolute rule of law. Although it says that it is not illegal to convict an accused on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, it does not go to the extent of saying that such conviction is proper. It does not rule out precautions being taken in appreciating the evidence of an accomplice. What is said in Illus. (b) to S. 114 is only a rule of caution or guidance to be observed in practice. It is not at all a rule of law. In that respect Illus. (b) to S. 114 is complementary to S. 133. The resulting position is that there is nothing legally wrong in convicting an accused on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice but prudence demands corroboration in material particulars of his evidence before conviction is entered. The reasons for taking usual precautions before accepting the evidence of an approver are not far to seek. An approver is an accused converted as a prosecution witness. In order to escape the possible consequence of the charges against him he is one likely to swear falsely. He is an immoral person having participated in the crime. Consequently, he cannot have much regard for the sanction of oath. The thought of pardon always makes him lean towards the prosecution. His inclination is always to make his own share in the transaction as slight as possible and to place the serious blame on others. If there is other independent evidence about the crime the testimony of an accomplice is superfluous Therefore, in practice Police usually invites a party to become an approver only after they have failed in every other way to supply the missing links. For all these reasons an approver, is a suspect witness, and his evidence can be accepted only if it is materially corroborated: 1969 Ker.L.T. 471: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1577; 1988 Cal.Cr.L.R. 155.

The combined effect of S. 114(b) and S. 133 is that though a conviction based on the sole testimony of an accomplice is not illegal, prudence requires that the Judge should look for independent corroboration. An accomplice is according to law a participant in crime; that stigma is attached to him; his reliability could be doubtful. But it must be made clear that all accomplices are not participants in the criminal act equally; there is always a difference of degree; there could be a person who might unwillingly join other or is only a servant getting salary; there are grades and grades of accomplices; one may get the entire ill-gotten wealth and the other may only get a paltry salary out of it. The needs and objects of different persons differ: (1982) 23 Guj.L.R. 299: (1981) 1 Guj.L.H. 328 (D.B.).

An accomplice is competent to give evidence under S. 133 of the Act but according to S. 114 of the Act it is unsafe to convict on his testimony alone.

The Court in the first instance has to satisfy itself that the statement of the approver is credible in itself and that there is evidence other than the statement of the approver that the approver himself has taken part in the crime. After the Court is satisfied about these two things, the Court has to seek corroboration of the approver's evidence with respect to the part of the other accused persons in the crime and this evidence has to be of such a nature as to connect the other accused with the crime: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1206 (Raj.).

An accomplice is a competent witness vide S. 133 and the conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds on uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. But this section has to be read alongwith Illus. (b) to S. 114, which in express terms says that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The corroborating evidence, broadly stated, must connect or tend to connect the accused with the crime charged. This is so because of the danger of the approver introducing some innocent person or persons into an otherwise true prosecution story. Such evidence, however, need not by itself be sufficient for sustaining the conviction of the accused for in that case the evidence of the approver would be wholly unnecessary and mere surplusage. The Court should evaluate the evidence of an approver de hors the corroborating pieces of evidence for, if his testimony is itself uninspiring and unacceptable justifying its rejection outright, then, it would be futile and wholly unnecessary to look for corroborating evidence. It is only when the approver's evidence is considered otherwise acceptable that the Court applies its mind to the rule that his testimony needs corroboration in material particulars connecting or tending to connect each one of the accused with the crime charged: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 1188: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 805: 1973 Cr.L.J. 914; A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 658: 1990 Cr.L.J. 889: (1990) 2 Bom.C.R. 630.

The combined effect of Ss. 133 and 114 Illus. (b) is that though a conviction based upon accomplice evidence is legal, the Court will not accept such evidence unless it is corroborated in material particulars. The corroboration must connect the accused with the crime. It may be direct or circumstantial. It is not necessary that the corroboration should confirm all the circumstances of the crime. It is sufficient if the corroboration is in material particulars. The corroboration must be from an independent source. One accomplice cannot corroborate another. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599; (1916) 2 K.B. 658, Rel. on]: 1970 Cr.L.J. 9: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 130.

Illus. (b) to S. 114 is to be read alongwith S. 133, and neither rule is to be ignored in the exercise of judicial discretion. It is the duty of the Court which has to deal with an accomplice's testimony to consider whether the requisite corroboration is furnished by other evidence or facts proved in the case, though at the same time the Court may rightly in exceptional cases, in the absence of this corroboration, give credit to the accomplice's testimony against the accused if it sees good reason for doing so upon other grounds: I.L.R. 11 Luck. 662: A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 156.

The corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice must be by independent testimony which confirms in material particulars not only the evidence of the crime which was committed but also that the accused committed it. S. 133 of the Evidence Act of course lays down that an accomplice shall be a competent witness and a conviction based on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not illegal on that account. There is, however, a rule of guidance laid down in Illus. (b) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act to which the Court should also have regard, namely, that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The rules laid down in Ss. 114, Illus. (b) and 133 are part of one subject and neither is to be ignored in the trial of a case. The effect of these two provisions, on the whole, is that the Legislature has laid it down as a maxim or rule of evidence resting on human experience that an accomplice is unworthy of credit against an accused person unless he is corroborated in material particulars in respect to that person, and that it is duty of the Court which in any particular case has to deal with the testimony of an accomplice to consider whether the maxim applies to exclude that testimony or not: A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 84: 52 Cr.L.J. 766.

S. 133 contemplates no legal taboo against convicting an accused on the uncorroborated testimony of his accomplice; that is, however, a legal theory; in practice no Court would do so; it may have to presume that an uncorroborated accomplice in material particulars is not worthy of credit, a caution sounded in S. 114 (b). As per A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 832, "this rule of caution or prudence has become so ingrained in the consideration of accomplice evidence as to have almost the standing of a rule of law": 1991 Cr.L.J. 2941: (1991) 1 Ker.L.J. 784: (1991) 2 Ker.L.T. 119 (D.B.).

Ss. 133 and 114, Illus. (b) read together lay down that though conviction on the testimony of an accomplice is not illegal but the Courts will not accept such evidence as a matter of practice without its corroboration in material particulars. However, the Court must first satisfy itself from his evidence which must show him to be a reliable witness. It is only after this test is satisfied that the question of corroboration would become relevant if the approver's evidence is totally unreliable and does not inspire the Court's confidence, it has to be rejected at the threshold. The corroboration required is of two kinds: (1) that which reassures the Court that the approver himself is a trustworthy witness, and (2) the corroboration in material particulars not only of the commission of the crime but also of the accused's complicity therein: 1991 Cr.L.J. 859 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Although S. 114, Illus. (b) provides that a Court may presume that the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless corroborated, the word "may" is not "must" and no decision of a Court can make it "must": I.L.R. 17 Luck. 516: 1941 O.A. 1018: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 221; 23 Pat.L.T. 606: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 271; A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 74; I.L.R. 22 Pat. 27: A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 146.

S. 133 and S. 114 (b) deal with the law relating to the evidence of an accomplice, namely, a guilty associate in crime but a competent witness; though under S. 133 a conviction based on uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is not illegal, but the rule of guidance embodied in S. 114 (b) has resulted in the settled practice which requires that the evidence of the accomplice must be corroborated which has virtually attained the force of law: (1994) 4 S.C.C. 478: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1252: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3071: (1994) 2 Crimes 1: (1994) 2 An.L.T. (Cr.) 429.

A pardoned accomplice examined as a prosecution witness is, under S. 133, a competent witness and his testimony is admissible. Under S. 114 (b), he may be presumed to be unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars; such a presumption is, however, not conclusive or irrebuttable. The two provisions are, thus, not irreconcilable; if the Court raises no presumption or it stands rebutted, conviction of the accused based on uncorrborated testimony of the accomplice is not illegal: 1983 Raj.L.W. 226.

Undoubtedly, law permits conviction on uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice if the Court is satisfied that his evidence is true and reliable but the rule of prudence says that such testimony should not be accepted unless there is some evidence, direct or circumstantial, from independent sources as may reassure that the approver's version is truthful and can be safely acted upon to convict the accused as laid down in S. 114, Illus. (b). However, the nature and extent of corroboration would vary with the facts and circumstances of each case; there can be no invariable rule covering all cases: 1980 Cr.L.R. 227 (Raj.); 1979 Cr.L.R. 425: 1979 W.L.N. 342: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 215 (Raj.) (D.B.).

There is no antithesis between S. 133 and Illus. (b) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act because the illustration only says that the Court "may" presume a certain state of affairs. It does not seek to raise a conclusive and irrebutable presumption. Reading the two together the position which emerges is that though an accomplice is a competent witness and though a conviction may lawfully rest upon his uncorroborated testimony, yet the Court is entitled to presume and may indeed be justified in presuming in the generality of cases that no reliance can be placed on the evidence of an accomplice unless that evidence is corroborated in material particulars, by which is meant that there has to be some independent evidence tending to incriminate the particular accused in the commission of the crime. [(1916) 2 K.B. 658; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54; A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 257; A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 500; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1184; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 832; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 856, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1579: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1206: (1977) 3 S.C.C. 68.

The difficulty in understanding the combined effect of S. 114 (b) and S. 133, though they are parts of one and the same subject and neither can be ignored in the exercise of judicial discretion except in cases of exceptional nature, arises largely due to their placement in two different Chapters of the Act; the better course was to insert the Illus. (b) as an explanation or in any case as a proviso to S. 133: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2420: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3271.

2. Accomplice—A competent witness.— An accomplice is a competent witness against an accused and a conviction will not be illegal if it proceeds upon his uncorroborated testimony; but the absolute rule of law as regards the evidence of accomplice is subject to a rule of guidance contained in Illus. (b) of S. 114 that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless it is corroborated in material particulars: 114 I.C. 609: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 233; (1984) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 205 (Del.).

The rule of law says that an accomplice is competent to give evidence and the rule of practice says that it is almost always unsafe to convict upon his testimony alone. But the rule of law to this extent triumphs over the rule of practice that if special circumstances exist which render it safe, in an exceptional case to act upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice and upon that alone, the Court will not merely for the reason that the conviction proceeds upon such uncorroborated testimony say that the conviction is illegal. This is the plain meaning of S. 133. Their is no difference between the law in India and the law in England in this respect: 1937 Rang.L.R. 110: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 209.

An accomplice is undoubtedly a competent witness under the Indian Evidence Act. There can be, however, no doubt that the very fact that he has participated in the commission of the offence introduces a serious taint in his evidence and Courts are naturally reluctant to act on such tainted evidence unless it is corroborated in material particulars by other independent evidence. It would not, however, be right to expect that such independent corroboration should cover the whole of the prosecution case or even all the material particulars of the prosecution case. If such a view is adopted, it will render the evidence of the accomplice wholly superfluous. On the other hand, it will not be safe to act upon such evidence merely because it is corroborated in minor particulars or incidental details because, in such a case, corroboration does not afford the necessary assurance that the main story disclosed by the approver can be reasonably and safely accepted as true. It is well settled that the appreciation of approver's evidence has to satisfy a double test. His evidence must show that he is a reliable witness and that is a test which is common to all the witnesses. If the test is satisfied the second test which still remains to be applied is that the approver's evidence must receive sufficient corroboration: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 961.

As laid down by S. 133, an accomplice is a competent witness against an accused person, and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. But it has long been a rule of practice, which is now virtually equivalent to a rule of law, that it is dangerous and unsafe to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

The nature and the extent of corroboration, must necessarily depend on the facts and circumstances of each case, including the nature of the offence involved.

It is also by now very well-settled that independent corroborative evidence need not come up to the standard of being sufficient by itself to sustain conviction. What is needed is the existence of some additional evidence showing that the version given by the accomplice is probably true and that it is reasonably safe to base a conviction thereon: 1960 Cr.L.J. 989: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 364: I.L.R. (1960) Punj. 111.

An approver is undoubtedly a competent witness under the Indian Evidence Act. Under S. 133 an accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 292 (D.B.); (1991) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 424 (S.C.).

An accomplice will be a competent witness no doubt in eye of law, but his evidence must receive sufficient corroboration. It would not be right to expect that such independent corroboration should cover the whole of the prosecution story or even all the material particulars. If such a view is adopted it would render the evidence of the accomplice wholly superfluous. [1957 Cr.L.J. 1014 (S.C.), Rel. on].

The fact that the accomplice is a man of questionable character is not by itself sufficient to reject his evidence: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1243 (Pat.); (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 683.

Though an approver is a competent witness he being a participant in the offence and as usually interested and infamous witness, his evidence requires to be corroborated by other evidence: 1957 An.L.T. 709: I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 742: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 165.

An approver is undoubtedly a competent witness under the Evidence Act. But the appreciation of his evidence has to satisfy a double test. His evidence must show that he is a reliable witness and that is a test which is common to all witnesses. If this test is satisfied, the second test which still remains to be applied is that the approver's evidence must receive sufficient corroboration. This test is special to the cases of weak or tainted evidence like that of the approver: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1360: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 459. Every person who is a competent witness is not a reliable witness and the test of reliability has to be satisfied by an approver all the more before the question of corroboration of his evidence is considered by criminal Courts. The Court may accept the evidence of an approver if he is found to be reliable and his testimony receives corroboration from independent sources, the corroboration while it need not cover the entire story or all its material particulars, should be of such a nature as to afford the assurance that the main story disclosed by him can safely be accepted. In other words, while it is not necessary to insist on complete corroboration, nevertheless it is well to bear in mind the fact that the witness having won pardon for his part in the crime on the undertaking to help to obtain the conviction of his erstwhile collaborators, it is not at all unlikely that he may indulge in exaggeration or prevarication in an attempt to carry out his part of the bargain: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Ker. 492: (1962) 2 Ker.L.R. 499.

If it is found that the approver's account against one of the accused person is wholly discrepant, this finding itself should inevitably lead the Court to scrutinise his evidence in respect of the other accused persons with greater caution.Where the statements made by the approver on subsequent occasions merely add details which were not included in the first statement, it may perhaps be a different matter. It is true that omissions have not included always the same significance as contradictions. But where it is patent that the two sets of statements, are wholly inconsistent and irreconcilable, that obviously leads to a very serious infirmity in the character of the witness: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637 followed in A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 387.

An approver's statement has to pass a double test. The first test is of reliability, being common to all witnesses. The second test required is that there must be some other independent evidence which corroborates or tends to corroborate the statement of the approver not only with regard to the commission of the offence but also with regard to the connection of the accused with the offence. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1199, Foll.].

S. 133 of the Evidence Act, 1872, lays down a rule of law while Illus. (b) to S. 114, which, as its language clearly connotes, is merely a rule of prudence, reading these sections together, the Courts in India have held that whilst it is not illegal to act upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, it is a rule of prudence so universally followed as to amount almost to a rule of law that it is unsafe to act upon the evidence of an accomplice unless it corroborates in material respects so as to implicate the accused. The rule, which according to the cases has hardened into one of law, is not that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge and in jury cases must find place in the charge before a conviction, without corroboration can be sustained. Held, that the approver in this case was not such a trustworthy witness whose testimony could be safely relied upon without corroboration connecting or intending to connect the accused with the crime: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 163: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 104.

Per Khan, J.—There is a double test for the evidence of an approver. The first test is whether he is reliable and that is a test which is common to all witnesses. The second test is whether the approver's evidence has received sufficient corroboration.

Per Shiv Dayal, J.—An approver is duty-bound to disclose the whole truth before the Court. He does not fulfil his undertaking if he suppresses any material fact. Where he suppresses any material fact, it casts a cloud on the veracity of the approver.

Where in a murder case the approver was the only eye-witness to the occurrence, what actually happened at the scene of occurrence is a very significant matter to be disclosed by the approver. If he suppresses that material point, no useful purpose is served by granting him pardon: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 672 (Madh. Pra.).

The evidence of an approver has to fulfil two tests for its acceptance. Firstly, it must be natural and credible. Where this is prima facie lacking, there is really no question of further corroboration and the prosecution can only rely upon other peices of evidence. Secondly, even if a Court is inclined to accept the evidence as natural or convincing, it must be corroborated in material particulars with regard to the participation of the accused concerned.

The corroboration of a co-accused in a judicial confession is of the weakest character, and can only be considered in order to be thrown into the scale when other evidence is also fairly adequately available: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1344: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 462.

The corroboration for the approver's evidence to convict the other accused which the Court seeks is generally of two kinds: (1) the approver's statement should be credible and must find support in other evidence of his being a participant in the offence; (2) the Court should then seek corroboration of the approver's testimony in regard to the other accused's part in the offence to connect them with the offence; the Court's exercise must be composite and not separated in two water tight compartments: 1988 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 50 (Cal.) (D.B.).

An approver though a competent witness and a conviction based on his evidence alone may not be legally bad, it is recognised rule of law that before convicting an accused person on that evidence, it must be firstly credible in itself or say of a reliable witness, at the same time showing that he had taken part in the crime. Secondly, if that initial test is satisfied, the Court has to find out whether his evidence finds sufficient corroboration both with regard to the crime, as also in relation to the identity of accused in connection therewith from other reliable material on record. Thirdly, credibility or reliability of an approver can well be considered as a whole along with the other evidence in the case. The corroborative evidence should be independent and reliable since that weighs with the mind of the Court in acting upon the other part of the evidence of the approver relating to the crime committed by the accused in any such case: (1970) 11 Guj.L.R. 258.

Accomplice has to satisfy twin tests of credibility and corroboration on material particulars from independent sources: 1970 Cr.L.J. 944 (Punj.).

Every competent witness is not necessarily a reliable witness; the testimony of an accomplice has, therefore, to satisfy a double test; it must be, like that of any other witness, first determine whether it is truthful; it is only after his having been found to be reliable that the second test of corroboration has to be satisfied: 1983 Raj.L.W. 226.

Approver's evidence—Credibility—Tests to be applied in determining whether his evidence should be acted upon: (1964) 3 S.C.R. 297: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 671: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1850; 1985 Cr.L.J. 1311: 60 Cut.L.T. 9; 1982 Cr.L.J. 1156 (Ori.).

The evidence of an approver, if believed, is sufficient foundation whereon to repose a conviction, but in practice in Court ex majori cautela insists upon corroboration of the approver's statements in material particulars: 69 I.C. 462: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 153; 151 I.C. 473: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 719 (F.B.). See also 1938 Rang.L.R. 213; 1937 A.M.L.J. 18; 1942 O.W.N. 403: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 435; I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 742: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 31.

Approver's evidence—Corroboration in material particulars—Necessity: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1492: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1199.

The approver is a competent witness but the position in law is fairly well settled that on the uncorroborated testimony of the approver it would be risky to base the conviction, particularly in respect of a serious charge like murder: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1438: 1986 Cr.L.J. 1072.

No doubt the evidence of accomplice ought as a rule to be regarded with suspicion. The degree of suspicion which will attach to it must, however, vary according to the extent and nature of the complicity: (1946-47) 51 Cal.W.N. 900: (1947) 49 Bom. L.R. 688: (1947) 2 M.L.J. 328 (P.C.) followed in 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 209: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 769.

The Court may call in aid the statement of an accomplice witness and use it to lend assurance to the other evidence and thus fortify itself into believing that without the aid of the statement it would not be prepared to accept: 1956 Cr.L.J. 32: A.I.R. 1957 All. 53.

The foremost essential condition for accepting the approver's statement is that it must be trustworthy statement: 114 I.C. 623: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 222.

Where the accomplice's evidence is found to be truthful, there is no need for corroboration: I.L.R. 8 Pat. 235: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 630; 1930 Mad.W.N. 169.

Credibility of approver's testimony depends upon the extent of removal of "taint" in his evidence: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 850.

Where the complicity of a person is solely due to coercion and his evidence cannot be ascribed to any desire to escape legal consequence, the discredit attaching to his evidence is practically negligible: 19 I.C. 207: 1912 Mad.W.N. 1108.

The evidence of an accomplice stands on the same footing as any other evidence. The Court is not obliged to hold that he is unworthy of credit and must be corroborated. It is for the Court to consider, after taking into consideration all the circumstances, one of these being that he is an accomplice, whether it does or does not rely on the evidence. To entirely rule out the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice might in many cases lead to miscarriage of justice: 1941 O.W.N. 1255: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 163; A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 822; I.L.R. 8 Pat. 235: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 630; 11 Pat.L.T. 545.

The statement made by an accomplice should be accepted when it is strongly corroborated in material particulars by clear and cogent evidence, the authenticity of which is not open to doubt: 120 I.C. 257 (2): A.I.R. 1930 All. 29.

3. Value of accomplice's or approver's evidence.—Accomplice evidence—Use and value of: A.I.R. 1957 All. 53: 1957 Cr.L.J. 32.

The testimony of a professed accomplice requires to be carefully scrutinised with anxious search for possible corroboration: 29 Mad.L.W. 155: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 15 (P.C.). See also A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 430; A.I.R. 1930 All. 740; 145 I.C. 251: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 116.

Evidence of accomplice—Value of—Conviction on—Rule of prudence: (1965) 67 Bom.L.R. 317: I.L.R. (1965) Bom. 648: A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 195.

Testimony of accomplice—Accomplice giving evidence against accused—Held, much reliance could not be placed on evidence of accomplice: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 68.

The guidelines to appraise the approver's testimony are: (1) a conviction based on uncorroborated testimony of an approver, a competent witness, under S. 133, is not illegal; (2) the Court may, however, presume that the approver is untrustworthy unless corroborated in material particulars; (3) the accused should not ordinarily be convicted unless the approver's testimony against him is corroborated in material particulars; (4) such corroboration may be direct or indirect; (5) if the approver's testimony is intrinsically impossible or otherwise unreliable, it should be straightway discarded without seeking corroboration; (6) the approver's reliability may be adjudged in several ways including its corroboration in material particulars; and (7) the approver must necessarily be a participis criminis either on his own admission or the evidence on record: 1976 Raj.L.W. 484: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1428.

Evidence of approver—Presumption: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1435: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 961. See also 1981 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 223 (Del.).

Where the approver's evidence has failed to pass the test of reliability, the question whether it has secured that independent corroboration, both with regard to the crime and the criminal which the law requires, does not really arise. The inquiry should rather be whether the remaining evidence in the case is sufficient to sustain the conviction: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 412: 1958 Ker.L.T. 181 [Overruled on another point 1974 Ker.L.T. 328 (D.B.).]

Evidence of approver—Dependability—Tests to be satisfied—Conviction on his testimony alone—Not safe under S. 114 of the Act: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1206 (Raj.).

Accomplice's evidence—Court will not accept it unless corroborated in material particulars: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45: 1970 Cr.L.J. 9: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 130.

Approver's evidence—Appreciation of—Test of credibility—His evidence must show that he is a reliable witness and must receive sufficient corroboration. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637, Foll.]: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 651: 1964 Raj.L.W. 264; 1969 Ker.L.R. 471: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1577.

It cannot be laid down as a matter of law that the evidence of witnesses who support the statement of an approver is not corroborative evidence merely because their evidence was known to the Police before the approver was given pardon. In such a case, it can, however, be said that the approver might have been tutored by the Police to make a statement fitting with the evidence already known to the Police. But where there does not exist any such suggestion on the record it can corroborate the evidence of the approver: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 286: 56 Cr.L.J. 86.

The approver being in Police custody during the material period is likely to have been influenced by the prosecution and most of his performances before the verifying Magistrate possibly were on the basis of guidance given by the Police Authorities. One would accordingly attach no importance at all to the verification proceedings. The prosecution is thus deprived of the assurance that could have been gathered as a result of the verification made by the Magistrate with reference to the evidence given by the approver. The verification proceeding conducted on the basis of the confession of the approver which normally lends support to the confessional statement and the approver's evidence, are thus not of value in the case: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 683.

When the accomplice gives his statement to the Police, he does not know that he would be granted pardon and possibly for that reason does not come out with all the facts known to him and he does so while making his statement before the Magistrate as he knows by then that he would be tendered pardon on condition that he would disclose all the facts known to him. The omission in the Police statement, therefore, by itself would not necessarily render his evidence unreliable. In considering whether the approver's evidence passed the test of reliability, the Court would have to consider whether taken as a whole and in the light of the facts and circumstances of the case it was a credible version or not. Held, on facts and circumstances that, even assuming that the trial Court was in error in not permitting the omission in the statement made by the approver before the Police to be brought on record, there was enough circumstantial evidence to corroborate the approver's version relating to the accused-appellant: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1006: 1970 Cr.L.J. 898.

All persons coming technically within the category of accomplice cannot be treated as precisely on the same footing: 13 Pat.L.T. 802: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 96.

Prima facie involvement of others—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice may be sufficient to indicate: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2040: (1981) 22 Del.L.T. 139.

Though it is not always safe to rely on the evidence of an accomplice, but it is not the law that under no circumstances, the evidence of an accomplice shall be relied on. Therefore, there must be some additional evidence rendering it reasonably safe to act upon: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3151 (Ker.) (D.B.). See also 1982 Cr.L.J. 2303: I.L.R. (1982) 2 Ker. 752.

Where the approver's evidence threw all the blame on the co-accused and assigned to himself only a slight role and his testimony got no corroboration from independent evidence on record including medical evidence itself, held, no conviction could be based on his evidence: 1980 Cr.L.R. 227 (Raj.).

Where the approver's testimony of the accused going to Dubai to bring back synthetic yarn was corroborated by the seizure of the vessel containing the goods and the clear panchanama prepared, held, it could not be said that the trial Court did not appreciate the evidence properly or committed any error of fact or law; conviction upheld: 1984 Cr.L.R. (Guj. & Mah.) 266.

4. Reasons for corroboration.—The law as to accomplice evidence is well-settled. The Evidence Act in S. 133 provides that an accomplice is a competent witness against an accused person and that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The effect of this provision is that the Court trying an accused may legally convict him on the single evidence of an accomplice. To this there is a rider in Illus. (b) to S. 114 of the Act which provides that the Court may presume that accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. This cautionary provision incorporates a rule of prudence because an accomplice, who betrays his associates, is not a fair witness and it is possible that he may, to please the prosecution, weave false details into those which are true and his whole story appearing true there may be no means at hand to sever the false from that which is true. It is for this reason that Courts, before they act on accomplice evidence, insist on corroboration in material respects as to the offence itself and also implicating in some satisfactory way however small, each accused named by the accomplice. In this way the commission of the offence is confirmed by some competent evidence other than the single or unconfirmed testimony of the accomplice and the inclusion by the accomplice of an innocent person is defeated. This rule of caution or prudence has become so ingrained in the consideration of accomplice evidence as to have almost the standing of a rule of law: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 832: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1017.

Evidence of an accomplice is generally held untrustworthy for three reasons: (i) because he is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself, (ii) because he, as a participator in crime and consequently an immoral person, is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath, and (iii) because he gives his evidence under promise of a pardon or in the expectation of an implied pardon: I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 209.

Every approver comes to give evidence in return for immunity; he is to start with an unreliable person; he is a person of low morals, a participator in crime who has let down his companions, the rule of caution, therefore, calls for material corroboration, a requirement of the time-worn judicial practice. Like all other witnesses, his evidence must be reliable and must not be uninspiring and unacceptable and liable to outright rejection. If he passes the test, the rule of caution would come into play; the Court then must look for corroboration in material particulars which connect or tend to connect each of the accused with the crime committed; he must bridge closely the distance between the crime and the accused to give needed assurance for acceptance of his testimony: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1573 (Ori.).

An approver is a most unworthy friend, if at all, having bargained for his immunity, he must prove his worthiness for credibility in Court. This test is fulfilled: (1) if his story involves him in the crime and appears intrinsically natural and probable catalogue of events, and contains minute details in accord with reality, which is likely to save it from being rejected brevi manu; (2) once that hurdle is crossed, his story must implicate the accused in such a manner as to give rise to the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt. Though in a rare case taking into consideration all the factors, circumstances and situations, a conviction based on the approver's uncorroborated evidence confidently found by the Court to be true and reliable may be permissible, but ordinarily the approver's statement has to be corroborated in material particulars, bridging closely the distance between the crime and the criminal; clinching features of involvement disclosed by an approver appertaining directly to an accused, if found reliable by the touchstone of other independent credible evidence, would provide the needed assurance for acceptance of his testimony as true whereupon conviction may be based. [A.I.R. 1974 All 324, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 856: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 742: 1975 Cr.L.J. 765.

The double test propounded in A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637 does not contemplate appraisal of the approver's testimony into two separate compartments. An approver is not an inpenitence but a deserter in hope of pardon; he is likely to weave into his testimony some untruths; it is for that reason that the Courts view his testimony, in the start, with suspicion and search for its corroboration; if found to be unreliable, it must be rejected there and then; but if found to be reliable or which is rare, wholly reliable, he can be believed with or without corroboration; it is only when the Court is unable at once to accept him to be wholly reliable that it calls for corroboration, direct or circumstantial, of the role played by the accused: 1976 Raj.L.W. 484: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1428; I.L.R. (1977) 27 Raj. 904.

The demanding degree of proof traditionally required in criminal cases and the devaluation suffered by a trap witness, naturally involved in the outcome of the case, suggest the legitimate search for corroboration from independent or unfaltering source-human or circumstantial—to make judicial certitude doubly sure. Such an approach casts no pejorative reflection in the integrity of the witness but is necessitated because of the hazard of holding a man guilty on interested, even if honest, evidence which may impair confidence in the system of justice: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 989: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 84: 1974 Cr.L.J. 784.

The testimony of an accomplice witness is a tainted one; and that taint is not removed in respect of a particular offence simply because he had to act or part in the commission of that offence although his complicity is clear in respect of another offence, the two offences having been committed in some series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction: 1953 Cr.L.J. 708: A.I.R. 1953 Bilaspur 3.

An approver's evidence is in itself tainted evidence though in some cases it may be worthy of belief: 4 L.L.J. 284: 23 Cr.L.J. 251.

Witnesses to whom assurances are given are themselves guilty of offences—They are accomplices and their evidence will be looked as tainted: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117.

5. Necessity for corroboration.—The rule in S. 114, Illus. (b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars, has become a rule of practice of so universal application that it has now almost acquired the force of law: 120 I.C. 721: A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 97. See also 184 I.C. 545: A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 361.

All that is insisted on as a matter of prudence is that before acting upon his evidence the Court must be satisfied that his evidence has been corroborated in material particulars by other items of independent evidence: I.L.R. (1957) Ker. 559: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 443: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 134; A.I.R. 1959 All. 149 (bribe givers).

An approver's evidence cannot be accepted unless it is corroborated in material particulars by other independent evidence: 13 I.C. 998: 13 Cr.L.J. 182; I.L.R. (1953) Bom. 670: A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 297. See also I.L.R. 9 Lah. 550: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 193; I.L.R. 9 Luck. 355: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 90; 73 I.C. 808: A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 235; 19 All.L.J. 725: 63 I.C. 455; 34 I.C. 976: (1916) 18 Bom.L.R. 266; 1942 O.W.N. 403: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 435; A.I.R. 1953 Manipur 2; A.I.R.1955 J.&K. 13; 1970 M.L.J. (Cr.) 123.

A conviction based on the evidence of an accomplice is not bad but in established practice it is necessary that such evidence should be corroborated by some untainted evidence in material particulars: 24 I.C. 174: (1913-14) 18 Cal.W.N. 550; 73 I.C. 963: 4 Pat.L.T. 381; 2 Pat.L.T. 773: A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 337; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 850; 1954 Ker.L.T. 801: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 87. See also 1983 Cr.L.J. 1788: 1983 Kash.L.J. 279; 1981 Cr.L.R. 460 (Guj.). The testimony of an approver is generally looked upon with suspicion as he is considered to be a man of low morals and not wholly trustworthy: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2320: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 851: (1994) 1 Crimes 1017.

A statement of accomplice would be unworthy of belief unless corroborated by other good evidence: 1955 All.L.J. 330: A.I.R. 1955 All. 138.

The law as to accomplice evidence is well settled. Under S. 133 an accomplice is a competent witness against an accused person; and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. This is a rule of law. There is, however, a rule of prudence contained in Illus. (b) to S. 114 under which the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The necessity of corroborations is stressed therein. S. 133 should not be read in isolation but together with S. 114, Illus. (b). An accomplice witness as well as an ordinary witness are competent to testify, but in one case of an ordinary witness there is no presumption as in Illus. (b) to S. 114 and for good reasons. The evidence of an accomplice, though admissible, remains suspect evidence because of the tainted source from which it comes. S. 146 can properly be invoked to test his veracity and also discover who he is and what is his position in life and shake his credit by injuring his character. It is possible to conceive that one circumstance alone may be sufficient corroboration. Conduct of accused may also be capable of supplying corroboration. The corroboration should not only be in regard to the crime but also in regard to the identity of the person charged. What is necessary is to be reasonably satisfied, as prudent man, that the story of the accomplice that the accused and no one else committed the crime, is true: 1969 Cr.L.J. 739: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 68. See also A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 832: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1017; (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 393 (Punj.); A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 34: 51 Cr.L.J. 419.

It is a well-established rule that the evidence of an accomplice or approver who, from the very nature of things has participated in the crime, should not ordinarily be made the basis for convicting an accused person without corroboration in material particulars. Corroboration does not of course mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates; nor is it necessary that he should be confirmed in every detail. It is sufficient if there is confirmation as to the material circumstances of the crime and as to the identity of the accused in relation to the crime. The evidence required for corroboration need not necessarily be direct; it may be circumstantial. Nor can the degree and extent of the corroboration be defined exactly, since that is a matter for the decision of the Court in each particular case. If the Court does not lose sight of this fundamental principle which is to be observed in appreciating the evidence of the approver, it cannot be said that a conviction based on the evidence of the approver, is unjustified or unsustainable: I.L.R. (1951) Trav.-Co. 644: A.I.R. 1952 Trav.-Co. 155; 1974 Cr.L.J. 43 (D.B.); 1973 Cr.L.J. 955 (D.B.).

A conviction cannot be based on the evidence of accomplice unless it is corroborated in material particulars by the evidence of persons who are not accomplices. Tainted evidence cannot corroborate other tainted evidence: (1948-49) 53 Cal.W.N. 479: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 594.

Without material corroboration there should ordinarily be no conviction, when accused can explain for articles found with them: 76 I.C. 716: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 385.

It is unsafe but not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. An accomplice's evidence must be viewed with suspicion: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 233; 13 Pat.L.T. 802: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 96; A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 500; A.I.R. 1934 Sind 185; A.I.R. 1934 Sind 78(2); I.L.R. 9 Luck. 355: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 90; 1938 Mad.W.N. 1272: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 266; 175 I.C. 465: A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 177 (F.B.) (retracted confession of co-accused is no corroboration); A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 209; 16 Mys.L.J. 147; (1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 333: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 429; 5 Lah.L.J. 572: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 683; A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 76: 68 I.C. 821; 20 Cr.L.J. 561: 52 I.C. 49 (All.); 19 I.C. 321: (1913) 15 Bom.L.R. 288; I.L.R. 15 Mad. 814; (1912) 14 Bom.L.R. 367; I.L.R. 3 Lah. 144; 65 I.C. 622: 23 Cr.L.J. 158; 20 P.R. (Cr.) 1919: 49 I.C. 607; I.L.R. 35 Mad. 397: 14 I.C. 896 (F.B.); 17 P.R. (Cr.) 195; 16 Cr.L.J. 634; 17 Cr.L.J. 97; 17 Cr.L.J. 107; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 63; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 536; I.L.R. 2 Luck. 631: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 369; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 78; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 10; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 36; 120 I.C. 721: A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 97; A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 433 (S.B.); 1957 Cr.L.J. 67 (Madh. Bh.).

Law is well settled that the approver's evidence must receive sufficient corroboration: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 559 (D.B.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 487 (Ori.).

It is needless to say that evidence of the approver, if his version is found prima facie acceptable, is required to be corroborated in material particulars, connecting each accused with the crime: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 569.

Accomplice evidence requires corroboration in material respects as to offence implicating accused: 1971 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 387.

Although the evidence of an accomplice is good evidence against his co-accused under S. 133, and although there is no rule of law that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction on the testimony of an accomplice, the necessity of corrboration as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it must be present to the mind of the Judge before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained. As a rule of prudence, therefore, sufficient corroboration is insisted upon with reference to the circumstances and other details to show that the testimony of the approver is, in fact reliable: I.L.R. 38 Pat. 1251: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 841: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 260.

It is well settled that, except in special circumstances, the Courts are duty bound to raise the presumption under S. 114 (b). A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 1188; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 856 crystallize a definite rule that though a conviction can be based on uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice but as a rule of prudence it is unsafe to rely on such uncorroborated testimony: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 2420: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3271.

Witness either accomplice or of character analogous to accomplice—His evidence must be corroborated in material particulars: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 175.

Version given by an accomplice unless corroborated in material particulars by independent and reliable evidence, is unworthy of credit: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 497: A.I.R. 1964 All. 481.

The evidence of an approver should not be believed without material corroboration and in order to see whether there is such corroboration, the Court should scrutinize and marshall out very carefully the facts: 91 I.C. 232: 12 Cr.L.J. 35. See also A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 342. But even if corroborated, it cannot be acted upon unless the Court is satisfied that the evidence of the accomplice is reliable: (1983) 1 Crimes 457 (Ker.).

The statement of an approver, veracious though it may appear to be, and though the truth of a large part of it be established beyond all doubt nevertheless requires corroboration: 34 I.C. 993: 17 Cr.L.J. 273.

It is established as a rule of prudence that the testimony of accomplice if it is thought reliable as a whole conviction could only be based if it is corroborated by independent evidence either direct or circumstantial connecting the accused with the crime. Thus, where evidence of the approver showed that he had claimed to be a spectator at every moment and had not participated at any stage and his version did not appear to be natural, held, in absence of any independent corroboration, conviction could not be based on his testimony: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 599: 1988 Cr.L.J. 842.

Before a conviction can be founded on the evidence of an accomplice, his testimony must be substantially corroborated. Thus, the various corroborative circumstances, when considered in the context of the evidence of the accomplice, corroborated by his statements before the Customs Authorities and reaffirmed by his plea of guilty and the conviction which followed, left no manner of doubt that the evidence of the accomplice could reasonably and safely be accepted as true and conviction recorded by acting upon the same. [1967 Cr.L.J. 1014 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1980 Cr.L.J. 618 (Del.) (D.B.).

The conviction is not illegal which proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice but the rule of corroboration must be present to the mind of the Judge and corroboration may be dispensed with only if the peculiar circumstances of the case make it safe to dispense with it. It is not necessary that corroboration would be on each and every point. Corroboration on material particulars is enough. Thus, where a subordinate official (merely a clerk) working in the Municipal Corporation under the two accused (Deputy Engineer and Overseer) procured the municipal labour and material and carried out the repairs to the house of the accused No. 1 on receiving instructions from the two accused and he had no axe to grind against any of the accused and would not have carried out the repairs had the accused not given any instructions to him, held, in the circumstances, his evidence, even assuming it was an accomplice's testimony, could be accepted without corroboration: 1978 Cr.L.J. 431 (Bom.).

The nature and extent of corroboration of accomplice's evidence varies from case to case. It is not safer to base a conviction in serious crimes on accomplice's evidence without corroboration on material particulars: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 139: 1988 Cr.L.J. 398: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 1: (1988) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 60.

There should be direct and material corroboration of the statement of an approver who is of very bad character: 32 I.C. 843: 17 Cr.L.J. 107.

An approver is generally regarded as a person of little moral worth who is purchasing his own freedom at the expense of others, and though in law the accused can be convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of the approver it is only prudent that the evidence of the approver should be corroborated. The corroboration should be with regard to the actual factum of the crime and also the identity of the accused. The corroboration required however, is to be such as to tend to convict the accused with the crime and need not be of such a nature that by itself it should be sufficient proof connecting the accused with the crime. The corroborative evidence may be circumstantial, but if it points clearly to the accused, it can be safely acted upon and made the basis of the conviction. The amount of corroborative evidence varies with the facts and circumstances of each particular case. But much or little the purpose of corroborative evidence is to satisfy the Court that the approver, when he implicates a particular individual, does so truly: I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 456: A.I.R. 1945 Sind 132; A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 455. See also 6 Mys.L.J. 419 [Courts require material corroboration as a matter of prudence and practice.]

What the law requires in the case of an accomplice's evidence is that there should be such corroboration of the material part of the story connecting the accused with the crime as will satisfy reasonable minds that the approver can be regarded as a truthful witness. The corroboration need not be direct evidence of the commission of the offence by the accused. If it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime it will be sufficient and the nature of the corro-boration will depend on and vary with the circumstances of each case: 1966 Cr.L.J. 205: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 821; I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 209.

It is necessary that the testimony of an approver should be strengthened by corroboration, but it is impossible to lay down any rigid formula as to what kind of evidence should be treated as corroboration. However, generally, the following two principles are kept in view: (1) the corroboration must come from independent sources and thus, ordinarily, the testimony of an accomplice would not be sufficient to corroborate that of another, and (2) the corroboration need not be by direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime: 1977 Cr.L.J. 32 (P.&H.).

"Corroborative evidence" contemplates only supporting evidence which renders the accomplice evidence more probable; corroboration required is only of a general kind rendering it probable that the version of the accomplice is true and can safely be acted upon. And it need not be by direct evidence; it may even be circumstantial, "working cumulatively in geometrical progression and eliminating other possibilities". [(1972) 3 W.L.R. 910; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 54; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45; (1970) 2 S.C.W.R. 70; (1956) 2 Q.B. 432; (1973) 2 W.L.R. 254, Rel. on; 1958 Ker.L.T. 181, Overruled]: 1974 Ker.L.T. 328 (D.B.).

In discussing the evidence of the approver, it is erroneous to segregate the incidents deposed to by the approver and seek their corroboration in isolation. It is not necessary that there should be independent confirmation of every material circumstance in the sense that the independent evidence in the case, apart from the testimony of the complainant or the accomplice, should in itself be sufficient to sustain conviction.

The independent evidence must not only make it safe to believe that the crime was committed but must in some way reasonably connect or tend to connect the accused with it by confirming in some material particular the testimony of the accomplice or complainant that the accused committed the crime.

The corroboration must come from independent sources and thus ordinarily the testimony of one accomplice would not be sufficient to corroborate that of another. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. S. 157, Evidence Act, makes no exceptions. The weight to be attached to it is, of course, another matter and it may be that in some cases the evidentiary value of two statements emanating from the same tainted source may not be high, but in view of S. 118 its legal admissibility as corroboration cannot be questioned: 1960 B.L.J.R. 565: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1360: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 459. See also 1963 Ker.L.T. 992: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 454.

The warning of the danger of convicting on uncorroborated evidence is given when the evidence is that of an accomplice. The primary meaning of accomplice is any party to the crime charged and some one who aids and abets the commission of crime. The nature of corroboration is that it is confirmatory evidence and it may consist of the evidence of second witness or of circumstances like the conduct of the person against whom it is required. Corroboration must connect or tend to connect the accused with the crime. When it is said that the corroborative evidence must implicate the accused in material particulars, it means that it is not enough that a piece of evidence tends to confirm the truth of a part of the testimony to be corroborated. That evidence must confirm that part of the testimony which suggests that the crime was committed by the accused. The first test of reliability of approver and accomplice evidence is for the Court to be satisfied that there is nothing inherently impossible in evidence. After that conclusion is reached as to reliability, corroboration is required: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1330: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1158.

Extent of corroboration varies with the circumstances of each case including the character and antecedents of the approver: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 850: 107 I.C. 97. See also A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 82.

Illus. (b) to S. 114 requires corroboration in "material particulars" to rebut the presumption of untrustworthiness which ordinarily attaches to the testimony of an accomplice. The nature and extent of the corroboration would depend upon, and vary with, the circumstances of each case, particularly the nature of the offence charged, the character and antecedent of the approver and the degree of suspicion attaching to his evidence. It is now well settled that the minimum amount of corroboration required to make it safe to act on the testimony of an approver is that his evidence must be corroborated not only as to the corpus delicti but also as to the identity of the accused persons. The corroborative evidence must show or tend to show that the story of the approver that the accused committed the crime is true; in other words, the corroborative evidence must be such as confirms not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also the evidence that the accused committed that crime: (1950) 52 Punj.L.R. 248; A.I.R. 1951 Simla 178: 52 Cr.L.J. 116; 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 455. In law, the statement alone of the approver can be taken as sufficient proof to establish the crime, but it is the invariable practice of the Court to require in the case of an approver's statement, evidence corroborating not only the approver's own part in the crime, but the fact that the accused has been truthfully implicated: A.I.R. 1948 Lah. 24: 48 Cr.L.J. 967: (1947) 49 Punj.L.R. 42. See also 1975 B.B.C.J. 221.

The nature of corroboration necessarily varies according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. The corroboration need not be such as to confirm the accomplice in every detail of the crime; nor need it be by direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 294. Corroboration may be circumstantial: 120 I.C. 721: A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 97; I.L.R. (1956) Cut. 195: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1208.

There must be independent evidence connecting the accused with the offence. It is, however, not true that independent corroboration of an approver's evidence should cover the whole of the prosecution story or even all the material particulars. All that is required is that the approver's testimony should be corroborated in material particulars by other independent evidence and this as a rule of caution and prudence and not as a statutory requirement though the rule has come to find an honored place in our criminal jurisprudence. According to statute, a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice and rule of caution and prudence is based on Illus. (b) to S. 114, according to which an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars. The nature and extent of corroboration required by this rule of prudence must, from the very nature of things, vary with the circumstances of each case and it is impossible if not also dangerous, to formulate with precision the kind of evidence which should or may be regarded as sufficient corroboration to sustain conviction. What is required is that some additional evidence should be forth coming rendering it probable that the story of the approver is true and it is reasonably safe to act upon it and also that it reasonably connects or tends to connect the accused with the offence charged. The corroboration coming from independent source need not be direct, connecting the accused with the crime; circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to satisfy the test of the rule of prudence: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 30: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 130.

While it would be desirable to record a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver, it would be unreasonable to expect that such corroboration should cover the whole of the prosecution story. It is sufficient if the approver's evidence is corroborated in material particulars and connects the accused with the crime. At the same time it would not be safe to act upon such evidence merely because it is corroborated in minor particulars: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 378: A.I.R. 1964 All. 139.

The question as to whether corroboration is necessary and, if so, to what extent is a question to be decided on the facts of each particulars case. Much depends on the nature of the offence, the extent of the complicity of the witness in it and the circumstances under which the accomplice makes his statement: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 185. The corroboration of the evidence of an approver need not consist of evidence which standing alone, would be sufficient to justify the conviction of the accused person whom he seeks to implicate. If this were the law, it would be unnecessary to examine an approver at all. All that is required is that the corroboration should be sufficient to afford some sort of independent evidence to show that the approver is speaking the truth with regard to the accused person: I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal. 327: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 441.

The evidence of an accomplice, although it may require corroboration, need not be corroborated in regard to every small detail, for if there be such corroboration, the evidence of the accomplice would be totally unnecessary. The case might well stand on the other evidence alone.

In any event, it is not illegal to base a conviction on the evidence of an accomplice alone, nor is a Court required to set aside a verdict of the jury merely on the ground that it is based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice unless it is clear that by the omission to require corroboration, a failure of justice has, in fact, occurred: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1154: A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 534.

An accomplice is a competent witness and conviction can rest on his testimony but the Courts will rely on such testimony only if they are satisfied in regard to its truthfulness. It is not necessary that the testimony of the approver should be corroborated in every minor detail. In a murder case recovery of articles belonging to deceased from different accused and the dead body from a particular place in pursuance of the statement of the approver, was held to be sufficient corroboration of the approver's statement, connecting different accused with the crime: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 148: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 34.

Corroboration is required only of material circumstances and not confirmation of every detail deposed to by the accomplice. There must be corroboration of the crime as well as of the identity of the persons charged. The corroboration must be by independent testimony and corroboration need not be by direct evidence and may be circumstantial. The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. It would be in high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration. Except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice that the accused committed the crime is true, not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime, it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. Therefore, the conviction of an accused on the testimony of an accomplice cannot be said to be illegal yet the Courts will, as a matter of practice, not accept the evidence of such a witness without corroboration in material particulars: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 713: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 598.

The law is well settled that the Court looks with some amount of suspicion on the evidence of an accomplice witness which is a tainted evidence and even S. 133 clearly provides that the evidence of an accomplice witness should not be accepted unless corroborated. At the same time, it must be remembered that corroboration must be in respect to material particulars and not with respect to each and every item however minor or insignificant it may be. Actually the requirement of corroboration is a rule of prudence which the Courts have followed for satisfying the test of the reliability of an approver and has now been crystallized into a rule of law. It is equally well settled that one tainted evidence cannot corroborate another tainted evidence because if this is allowed to be done then the very necessity of corroboration is frustrated: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1761.

The evidence of an accomplice is always open to suspicion and so has to be corroborated by independent evidence, direct or circumstantial confirming not merely the material particulars of the alleged offence but also some particulars connecting the accused with it: A.I.R. 1952 Him. Pra. 57: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1939. See also A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 482: 1957 Cr.L.J. 939 [Corroboration need not be by way of direct evidence and it can be in the shape of circumstances]. Only in exceptional cases the corroboration can be dispensed with. The evidence in corroboration of the approver's evidence need not be direct evidence. It is sufficient that it is merely circumstantial: 118 I.C. 423: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 321(2); 152 I.C. 934: A.I.R. 1935 All. 86; 146 I.C. 935: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 112; I.L.R. 58 Bom. 40: (1933) 35 Bom.L.R. 1040: A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 482; I.L.R. 15 Lah. 673; 1936 O.W.N. 64: A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 156. See also A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 850; A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 207; A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 353.

Courts are naturally reluctant to act on the tainted evidence of an approver unless it is corroborated in material particulars by other independent evidence. But it would not be right to expect that such independent corroboration should cover the whole of the prosecution story or even all the material particulars. If such a view is adopted, it would render the evidence of the accomplice wholly superfluous. On the other hand, it would not be safe to act upon such evidence merely because it is corroborated in minor particulars or incidental details, because in such a case corroboration does not afford the necessary assurance that the main story disclosed by the approver can be reasonably and safely accepted as true: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637; 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 695: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 275.

Approver's evidence—Corroboration in material particulars necessary—Every material particular need not be corroborated but it must be of such nature as to connect or tend to connect accused with crime—Such corroboration absent—Accused must be acquitted: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 651: 1964 Raj.L.W. 264.

Approver's evidence—Corroboration necessary—There should be corroboration in material particulars and qua each accused: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599.

Corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice does not mean that everything said by the accomplice should be spoken by some other witness; if that were so, there would have been no need of the evidence of an accomplice. It is precisely because the prosecution cannot prove its case wholly and fully by evidence that the law permits the evidence of an accomplice. The corroboration required by law should be such that would lead the Court to believe that the testimony of the accomplice is truthful and can be acted upon. In case of wholly reliable accomplice witnesses no corroboration need be necessary to act upon their testimony; one accomplice witness may be corroborated by another witness if there is no collusion amongst them. [(1972) 3 W.L.R. 910; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 54; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45; (1970) 1 S.C.W.R. 70; (1956) 2 Q.B. 432; (1973) 2 W.L.R. 254, Rel. on; 1958 Ker.L.T. 181, Overruled]: 1974 Ker.L.T. 328 (D.B.).

The corroboration must be such as would lead the Court to believe that the accomplice is giving truthful evidence and that it would be safe to act upon that evidence. The corroboration must come from independent sources and ordinarily the testimony of one accomplice would not be sufficient to corroborate that of another. Further, it is not sufficient that there should be corrobroation of the accomplice evidence that a crime was committed, but there should be corroboration of his testimony that the accused was in some way connected with that crime. Finally, the corroboration need not be by direct evidence, it can also be by circumstantial evidence: (1953) 55 Bom.L.R. 191: I.L.R. (1953) Bom. 670: A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 297; 1959 Cr.L.J. 947: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 387.

Corroboration evidence should confirm in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the accused committed it: A.I.R. 1963 Lah. 294; A.I.R. 1964 Kutch 20: 1964 Cr.L.J. 793; 230 I.C. 431: 48 Cr.L.J. 651; I.L.R. (1956) Cut. 195: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 177.

An accused should not be convicted on the statement of an approver unless such testimony is strongly corroborated and the corroboration distantly implicates the accused with crime committed: 40 I.C. 696: 9 P.W.R. (Cr.) 1917; 39 I.C. 680: 9 P.R. (Cr.) 1917: A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 164: 11 Pat.L.T. 545; 146 I.C. 701: A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 352; 147 I.C. 1172: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 114.

The corroboration of an approver's evidence need not be of a kind which proves the offence against the accused. It is sufficient if it connects the accused with the crime: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 340: 1957 Cr.L.J. 422.

It is unsafe to rely upon the uncorroborated testimony of the approver; the corroboration must be of the statement connecting the accused with the offence: 12 I.C. 513: 12 Cr.L.J. 537 (A); 1929 Mad.W.N. 794.

It is unsafe to act upon the evidence of an accomplice witness, unless it is corroborated; the corroboration should be independent and should be in respect of the offence as well as of the connection of the accused with the offence and the degree of corroboration would vary according to and depend upon the circumstances of each case: I.L.R. (1952) Bom. 53: A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 184.

The evidence of an accomplice being that of an interested witness or tainted one, caution requires that there should be corroboration from an independent source in some material aspect not only commission of crime but also his involvement in it, before its acceptance. However, it is not necessary to expect corroboration on all the circumstances of the case or every detail of the crime. It would be sufficient to have corroboration as to material circumstance of the crime and of the identity of the accused in relation of the crime. Where evidence of approver was corroborated on material aspects from truthful independent sources, held, evidence of the approver could be believed: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1791: (1994) 1 Bom.C.R. 648 (D.B.).

Where an accomplice is coerced and threatened into submission to commit an offence, he is not a criminal of the basest kind. The corroboration necessary to establish his credit will be less than if his complicity in the offence had been voluntary and spontaneous: 150 I.C. 917: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 78.

The rule that testimony of an approver must be corroborated not only as to the crime but also as to the identity of each accused person and that the corroboration must proceed from an untainted source is not a technical rule, but is founded on long judicial experiment: I.L.R. 38 Cal. 559: (1910-11) 15 Cal.W.N. 593; A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 22; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 850; (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 866.

Approver's statement as to identity of accused should be corroborated: 48 Cal.L.J. 481. See also A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 430 (most careful scrutiny is needed).

For basing conviction on the evidence of an approver, it must be found that he was a reliable witness and his version was intrinsically credible and his evidence should be corroborated in material particulars by other evidence direct or circumstantial. All that is required is that there must be some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice is true and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it. This does not mean that the corroboration as to identity must extend to all the circumstances necessary to identify the accused with the offence. [1970 S.C.C. (Cr.) 404; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1330; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54, Foll.]: 1981 M.P.L.J. 622: 1981 Jab.L.J. 324.

Corroboration is required of accomplice's evidence only to enable the Court to convict an accused as it is not prudent to base a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. Corroboration by itself cannot make the story of the accomplice acceptable when on the face of it, it has to be rejected: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 228.

The probative value of the evidence of an accomplice is practically the same as the confession of a co-accused. [I.L.R. 38 Bom. 156, Foll.]. A conviction based on the evidence of an accomplice or the confession of a co-accused is not illegal, though it is not safe to act on such testimony, unless corroborated in material particulars: 24 I.C. 153: 15 Cr.L.J. 417: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 15; 7 O.W.N. 862: A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 455.

The corroboration required for the evidence of an accomplice need not prove the commission of the offence by the accused; it would be suffice if it connects the accused with the crime committed and should lend assurance that the approver is speaking the truth; it should be of material particulars and qua each accused. It is additional evidence which renders the approver's version probably true and reasonably safe to act upon; it need not cover the entire prosecution story nor the entire material particulars; it is not meant to render the accused's version superfluous; it can be direct or indirect but must be independent of the approver's evidence: (1994) 4 S.C.C. 478: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1252: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3071: (1994) 2 Crimes 1: (1994) 2 An.L.T. (Cr.) 429.

Evidence of accomplice and confession of co-accused—Distinction between. See (1936) 38 Bom.L.R. 1122: A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 31.

Accomplice—Extent of corroboration required—Case of an accomplice is different from confession of accused. [A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 175, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 54 (D.B.).

Evidence proving that the accused were, at the time the crime was committed, near the scene of the crime and so placed as to justify the inference that they were accompanying persons whose complicity in the crime has been satisfactorily proved by independent evidence, is sufficient corroboration of the evidence of the accomplice: I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal. 312.

While looking for corroboration to the evidence of approvers, one must first look at the broad spectrum of the approver's version and then find out whether there is other evidence to lend assurance to that version. The nature and extent of the corroboration may depend upon the facts of each case. The corroboration need not be of any direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. The corroboration even by circumstantial evidence may be sufficient. But such evidence as to corroboration must be independent and must not be vague or unreliable. Thus, where in a murder case, there was evidence regarding the presence of the accused alongwith the approver in the house of the deceased and the prosecution also recovered weapons of the crime at the instance of the accused which also lent re-assurance by way of corroboration to the evidence of approver, held, the approver's evidence could be relied upon for convicting the accused: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 672: 1988 Cr.L.J. 845.

Admittedly, it is not necessary that the story of the approver should be corroborated in every detail of the crime nor is it necessary that the corroborative evidence should itself be sufficient for conviction. (Evidence of the approver held was corroborated by recovery of a shirt having human bloodstains and other articles on the information given by the accused): A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 286: 56 Cr.L.J. 86.

Approver's evidence—Corroboration on material particulars by witnesses who were believed in—No interference with conviction of accused: 1967 Cr.L.J. 671: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 792.

Where the case was entirely dependent on the approver's evidence but there was no satisfactory evidence to corroborate approver's evidence on material particulars regarding accused's participation, held, the accused was entitled to acquittal: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1871 (2): (1980) 2 S.C.C. 369.

One of the prosecution witnesses stated that the approver had made a confession of his participation in the offence of the murder of the deceased. The other witness stated that the knife with which the murder of the deceased was alleged to have been committed was prepared by him at the instance of the two accused persons. The knife was discovered at the instance of accused No. 1. The two accused were convicted on this evidence under S. 302, read with S. 34, Penal Code. Held, that the statement of the first witness was no corroboration of the approver. The evidence of the other witness also could not operate as a corroboration of the approver's story because the knife was got prepared by the two accused nine weeks before the murder. The time gap in the preparation of the knife and murder was great and it was possible in such circumstances that the accused No. 2 might have recanted and not proceeded with the commission of the offence. The finding of the knife at the instance of the first accused also was no corroboration of the approver's story which would be sufficient to connect the accused No. 2 with the murder under S. 34 of the Penal Code. In the circumstances the conviction of accused No. 2 was not sustainable: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599.

7. Whether maxim falsus in uno falsus in omnibus is applicable to approver.—Approver's evidence — Conditions for its acceptance — Appreciation of approver's evidence — Principles — Maxim falsus in uno falsus in omnibus—Maxim is not applicable to approvers or to any class of witness in India: 1967 Cr.L.J. 134: A.I.R. 1967 All. 64.

If the evidence of an approver is discarded, it must be discarded as a whole and the defence cannot base arguments on it any more than the prosecution: 11 Pat.L.T. 520: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 164. But see infra. Statement reliable in part and unreliable in part—Reliable portion corroborated by best reliable evidence—It can be relied upon, while rejecting the rest. [A.I.R. 1939 All. 567, Foll.]: I.L.R. (1953) 5 Assam 136: A.I.R. 1954 Assam 27.

8. Whether one accomplice can corroborate another.—For the purposes of the rule of practice, the evidence of one accomplice is not corroborative of the evidence of another: A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 172: 50 Cr.L.J. 642 (P.C.); 1953

The evidence of one accomplice is not sufficient corroboration of the evidence of their accomplices, nor are previous statement, made by the same person sufficient: 21 M.L.J. 283: 9 I.C. 897; A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 213; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 850; A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 1466; 146 I.C. 1064: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 355; 1954 Ker.L.T. 801: A.I.R. 1955 Trav.-Co. 87; I.L.R. (1953) Bom. 670: A.I.R. 1953 Bom. 297.

There is nothing in S. 133 to suggest that the statement of one approver cannot be regarded as corroborating that made by another approver. No doubt if it could be shown that the approvers had ample opportunity of consultation their corroborative value would be greatly diminished: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 366. See also 76 I.C. 698: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 335; A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 153: 96 I.C. 127: A.I.R. 1926 All. 705; (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 639: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 946.

Accomplice in different stages of crime—Their evidence is not mutually corroborative: 1933 Mad.W.N. 1129. See also 146 I.C. 701: A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 352: 16 Nag.L.J. 186.

The fabrication of a false defence cannot be regarded as sufficient to corroborate an approver. The evidence of one approver cannot be said to corroborate another except where both have, at the earliest opportunity and before there has been any chance of consultation, deposed to the same acts as having been committed by particular accused person: I.L.R. 3 Lah. 144: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 1.

One accomplice witness may be corroborated by another witness if there is no collusion amongst them. [1958 Ker.L.T. 181, Overruled]: 1974 Ker.L.J. 328 (D.B.).

9. Corroboration of approver's evidence by another co-accused.—Corroboration of an approver's evidence by another co-accused amounts to one tainted piece of evidence being corroborated by another tainted piece of evidence and conviction thereon is bad: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 745: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 58; (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 777: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 678; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 171; I.L.R. 15 Lah. 491: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 873; 16 Nag.L.J. 186: A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 352: 146 I.C. 701; A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 264; 1938 Mad.W.N. 962; A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 218; A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 433 (S.B.); I.L.R. (1938) Nag. 516: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 328; (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 61: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 339; (1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 333; 146 I.C. 364 A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 946; 146 I.C. 303: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 320; I.L.R. 55 All. 91: 1932 All.L.J. 1125: A.I.R. 1933 All. 31.

10. Corroboration by approver's relative.—Statement made by an approver to a near relation of his, disclosing the crime committed by him, as early as could reasonably be expected in circumstance of the case, is admissible under S. 157, as corroborating the evidence of the approver. The evidence of the relation to whom the disclosure is made, in the circumstances of the case, cannot be deemed to be a statement of an accessory after the fact and therefore, of an accomplice.

Three conditions must unite to render one an accessory after the fact, viz., that the felony must be complete, that the accessory must have knowledge that the principal committed the felony, and that the accessory must harbour or assist the principal felon. The mere fact, that one had knowledge that a crime had been committed, and that he concealed or failed to disclose such knowledge, does not render him an accomplice. Nor would a person who remains passively silent after obtaining knowledge of the commission of the crime be an accessory or an accomplice within the rule as to the testimony of accomplices. The evidence of this witness is not of much probative value since he deposes only to the statement of the approver himself. There is, however, no bar to the statement of the approver being used as corroboration whatever be the value of his evidence in Court: 1960 B.L.J.R. 565: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1360: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 459.

Where the testimony of an approver was sought to be corroborated by his sister's son, a young college student not ignorant of the possible impact of his testimony which might implicate his maternal uncle and, therefore, not an independent witness and the accused was not asked any question about such testimony, held, it could not be said that the testimony of the accomplice had been corroborated; conviction set aside: 1983 Raj.L.W. 226.

11. What is good corroboration and what is not.—The discovery of blood-marks on the person and in the house of the accused as well as his suspicious conduct immediately after the murder were held to be sufficient corroboration of the evidence of the accomplice: 4 Lah.L.J. 405: A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 392.

The evidence of an approver can be acted upon when there are corroborations as required under the law. When there is no inherent improbability in the evidence and it is not falsely concocted or tutored by the Police, and further the dacoities committed by the accused at different places are corroborated by the evidence of the persons in whose houses the dacoities were committed, it can be safely acted upon: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1074 (D.B.).

Where there were circumstances completing the links in the chain of circumstantial evidence against the accused, held, it constituted substantial and sufficient corroboration of the approver's statement in material particulars: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1320: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 234.

Where apart from the approver, two accused in their confession had implicated other accused in the commission of the offence, held, the confessions of the two accused can be used to lend corroboration to the approver's testimony about the involvement of other accused: 1988 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 50 (Cal.) (D.B.).

The fact that the accused who was charged with dacoity at the house of a person who was a money-lender, was indebted to him, is no corroboration of the evidence of the accused's accomplice: 1957 Cr.L.J. 939: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 482.

Where the testimony of the approver, a participant in a bank dacoity, was vivid and detailed and was corroborated by evidence of the bank employees except in the matter of the strong room having been locked by the other dacoits which arose from the peculiarity of the place —he was kept to keep watch at the entrance wherefrom the strong room was not visible—held, the approver's evidence being quite credible could be used to convict the other accused: 1988 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 50 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Where the only witness who corroborated an accomplice was his son aged 7 years who parrot-like repeated what he had been tutored to say, held, that it was unsafe to convict the accused on such evidence: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 587.

Where inspite of certain discrepancies in the evidence of certain persons who had in one way or the other helped the accused in furthering their objectives, the trial Court accepted their evidence as accomplice evidence on being satisfied that their evidence was credible in the sense that the things which they had deposed were true and there was sufficient corroboration to their evidence, held, it could not be said that the trial Judge acted on the accomplice evidence without applying the double test i.e., test of reliability and necessity of corroboration as laid down in A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 637. [A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 961, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 450: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1277: (1972) 3 S.C.C. 511.

Where the approver's evidence was amply corroborated by eyewitnesses and other circumstantial evidence, i.e., recovery of weapons etc., held, prosecution established the case to that extent beyond all reasonable doubt: 1993 (Supp.) 4 S.C.C. 7: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 23.

Where the approver did not depose that the axe, the murder weapon was concealed by the accused at the place wherefrom it was recovered but without human blood stains on its blade nor were there any such stains on the approver's clothes and the blood stains on the ghagra of the deceased's wife could have been resulted from her contact with the blood lying on the beddings and grounds where the murder had taken place, held, recovery of the axe or ghagra could not be taken as corroborative evidence of murder by the accused: 1980 Cr.L.R. 227 (Raj.).

Where an accomplice who was involved in transaction of drug trafficking and it was through this evidence that the prosecution sought to prove that the accused was in possession of brown sugar but his evidence was not corroborated and was in basic variance with the evidence of his mother who received drugs for safe custody, held, evidence of the accomplice was unreliable: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1296 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Several accomplices simultaneously and without previous concert giving consistent account of the crime implicating accused—Court may accept the several statements as corroborating each other. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599; (1916) 2 K.B. 658, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45: 1970 Cr.L.J. 9: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 130.

Where both the approver and the accused had a common motive to murder the deceased and the Courts below had concurrently found that the conviction based on the approver's testimony was adequately corroborated and the Supreme Court sustained the conviction but commuted the sentence of death to one of life imprisonment because the Court could not be oblivious of the tendency to minimise one's own part and to shift the dominant role to the accused, a tendency inherent in the evidence of all accomplices, which tendency could not be said to be wholly absent from the testimony of the approver: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 139: 1975 Cr.L.J. 226: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 414.

Where the approver's evidence in regard to the complicity of the wife of the deceased, in the conspiracy of murder, lacked corroboration on certain material particulars necessary to connect her, held, she was entitled to the benefit of doubt: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 139: 1988 Cr.L.J. 398: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 1.

12. Duty of Judge to jury.— The Evidence Act nowhere requires that there should be corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. Although it says in S. 114(b) that the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars, it makes it clear in S. 133 that an accomplice shall be a competent witness against the accused person and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. There is no doubt, therefore, that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in evidence. But it has long been a rule of practice at Common law, which has become virtually equivalent to a rule of law, and which is exactly the law in India, so far as accomplices are concerned, and it is certainly not any higher in the case of sexual offences, that the Judge should warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or accomplices, and it lies in the discretion of the Judge, to advise them not to convict upon such evidence; but the Judge should point out to the jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence. If after this proper caution by the Judge, the jury nevertheless convict the prisoner, his conviction will not be quashed, merely upon the ground that the accomplice's testimony was uncorroborated. The only clarification necessary in India is where this class of offence is sometimes tried by a Judge without the aid of a jury. The true rule in every case of the type is that the rule about the advisability of corroboration should be present to the mind of the Judge. In such cases, it is necessary that the Judge should give some indication in his judgment that he had this rule of caution in mind, and should proceed to give reasons for considering it unnecessary to require corroboration on the facts of the particular case before him and show why he considers it safe to convict without corroboration in that particular case. It is wrong for a Judge to think that he could not, as a matter of law, convict without corroboration. The nature and the extent of the corroboration that is required must necessarily vary with the circumstances of each case, and also according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. It is, however, clear (i) that it is not necessary that there should be independent confirmation of every material circumstances; all that is required is that there must be some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice (or the complainant) is true and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it. (ii) The independent evidence must not only make it safe to believe that the crime was committed but must in some ways reasonably connect the accused with it. (iii) The corroboration must come from independent sources and thus, ordinarily the testimony of one accomplice would not be sufficient to corroborate that of another accomplice. (iv) The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime, "independent" merely means independent of sources which are likely to be tainted: I.L.R. 43 Pat. 781: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 404.

To let the evidence of approvers go to a jury without giving them proper warning is a misdirection. For a Judge to withdraw consideration of the guilt or innocence of the accused from the jury by telling them that a conviction cannot be based upon uncorroborated testimony of an approver would be no less a misdirection and directly contrary to the statute. The Judge is bound to caution the jury and to advice them that generally speaking the natural presumption for them to make is that the evidence of the approver is unreliable though they are not compelled in law to act on the presumption. Nature of corroboration required pointed out: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 500. The production of stolen property by an accused person even from a place which is not in his own possession may be accepted as material corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice who has deposed that the accused joined him in committing the burglary or theft: 111 I.C. 447: 29 Cr.L.J. 863.

It has long been a rule of practice for Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and it is in the discretion of the Judge to advice them not to convict upon such evidence, but the Judge should point out to the jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence. This rule of practice, which has virtually become a rule of law has arisen in consequence of the danger of convicting a person upon the unconfirmed testimony of one who is admittedly a criminal. What is required as corroboration is some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice is true and that is reasonably safe to act upon it. It is not necessary to require confirmation of all the circumstances of the crime. It is sufficient if there is confirmation as to a material circumstance of a crime and of the identity of the accused in relation to the crime: 31 Sind L.R. 82: A.I.R. 1937 Sind 162. See also 42 Pat.L.R. 67; A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 163; (1943) 45 Bom.L.R. 64: A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 74; A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 146: I.L.R. 22 Pat. 27; A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 143: I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 315; A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 82; 198 I.C. 78: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 271. See also A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 187: 49 Cr.L.J. 297; 49 Cr.L.J. 331; A.I.R. 1948 Lah. 24; 47 Cr.L.J. 202; 47 Cr.L.J. 159; 47 Cr.L.J. 196.

In case where a Judge combines the functions of a Judge and jury, he is bound under law to scrtunise the accomplice's evidence—with the required degree of care and caution, which is required of him in a trial by jury, and just as he is bound to give a warning to the jury, he must warn himself that it is unsafe to convict a person on accomplice's evidence in the absence of substantial corroboration by independent evidence: 114 I.C. 457: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 215; A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 114: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 934.

The uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law; but it has long been a rule of practice, which has virtually become equivalent to a rule of law, that the Judge must warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Where the offence is tried by a Judge without the aid of a jury, it is necessary that the Judge should give some indication in his judgment that he has had this rule of caution in mind and should proceed to give reasons for considering it unnecessary to require corroboration on the facts of the particular case before him and show why he considers it safe to convict without corroboration in that particular case: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 500.

13. Corroboration in sexual offences.—(See also S. 118, Note 7, supra). Though a girl who is a victim of an outrageous act such as rape is, generally speaking, not an accomplice the rule of prudence requires that her evidence should be corroborated before a conviction can be based upon it. The nature and the extent of the corroboration that is required when it is not considered safe to dispense with it must necessarily vary with the circumstances of each case and also according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 751: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 641. If the jury has been appraised of the necessity, ordinarily speaking of corroboration of the evidence of the prosecutrix, it is for the jury to decide whether or not it will convict on the uncorroborated testimony of a prosecutrix in the particular circumstances of the case before it. It is well established that the nature and extent of corroboration, necessary, will vary with the circumstances of each case. The nature of the corroborative evidence should be such as to lend assurance that the evidence of the prosecutrix can be safely acted upon: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 143: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 311.

It is a rule of caution that in sexual offences it is not safe to rely on the evidence of the prosecutrix, unless it is corroborated in material details. But where the evidence of the prosecutrix herself furnishes such material that it falsifies the whole, story, corroboration is not of much help in establishing the guilt of the accused: 1959 Cr.L.J. 237: A.I.R. 1959 Tripura 11.

In a case of rape, the principle requiring corroboration in respect of accomplice witness cannot be applied in considering the evidence of the prosecutrix because she cannot be treated as an accomplice in a rape case. Further, the Evidence Act nowhere provides that the evidence of a prosecutrix in a rape case required corroboration. But as a matter of prudence the Courts have insisted on the need of corroboration of the evidence of the prosecutrix. Therefore, there can be no hard and fast rule as to the nature and extent of the evidence required to corroborate the case. However, any corroboration should be such as to render the prosecution story reliable and safe to act upon it by proving the commission of the crime and establishing the identity of the offender. In short, the question whether the statement of the prosecutrix requires corroboration and in what particular and what kind of corroboration should be considered sufficient, are in the ultimate analysis questions relating to the correct and proper appreciation of evidence and must be answered with reference to the facts and circumstances of individual cases. The principles of corroboration laid down in cases should be looked at merely as guiding principles and not as inflexible rule of law: 1967 Cr.L.J. 922: 1967 Raj.L.W. 326: A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 159.

There is no rule of law or a practice which makes it obligatory that the evidence of the prosecutrix should be corroborated before a conviction for rape could be entered. The only rule that demands corroboration in such a case is rule of prudence and even this rule of prudence hardened into a rule only because decided cases had a tendency to treat the victim of a rape (of any sexual or unnatural offence, for that matter) as an accomplice which in several cases the victim is not. And what this rule of prudence requires is that this should be present to the mind of the Judge. Merely for the reason that there is no corroboration for the evidence of the victim of an outrageous act, such evidence should not be rejected if it appears from the circumstances that the victim is speaking the truth: 1969 Cr.L.J. 818 (Ker.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 2162 (Ori.).

It cannot be laid down that in no case could a conviction for a sexual offence follow unless the victim was supported by other independent evidence. If the Court feels without hesitation that the account given by the prosecutrix is veracious and that it is free from those taints that make a witness's statement difficult of acceptance without reservation, it can proceed to convict the offender as the law does not insist that in every case and under every circumstance, to warrant a conviction, the complainant must be corroborated by other evidence. The guarantee of safety in the matter of depending upon the testimony of a solitary witness is the satisfaction of the Court: I.L.R. (1953) Patiala 328 A.I.R. 1954 Pepsu 72. See also 1953 Raj.L.W 255.

Where a male is charged by a female with a sexual offence, even if the prosecutrix is to be treated as an accomplice, still, since a conviction can be based on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice alone, and it is properly so based when the accomplice is proved to be worthy of credit—a prosecutrix also can serve as the sole witness where the evidence discloses nothing against her, either as respects her past character, or as respects the truth of the accusation made by her or as respects her being a consenting party to the act charged. Particularly that seems to be the position in a case where the prosecutrix is a mere child. Thus, where the evidence of the prosecutrix is clear, firm, realistic and entirely convincing, it is pre-eminently a case where the conviction of the accused can safely be based on the evidence of the prosecutrix alone. Per P. B. Mukheri, J.— In cases of rape the jury may convict on the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecutrix but the Judge should warn the jury that it is dangerous to do so. There is no warrant in law for the presumption that the complainant victim in a rape case must ipso facto be regarded as accomplice. Whether such complainant is an accomplice or not must be determined independently by reference to the actual facts in each individual case: I.L.R. (1953) 1 Cal. 330.

It is well settled that the prosecutrix cannot be considered as an accomplice and, therefore, her testimony cannot be equated with that of an accomplice in an offence. As a rule of prudence, however, Court normally looks for some corroboration of her testimony so as to satisfy its conscience that she is telling the truth and that the person accused of rape on her has not been falsely implicated: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2661: 1973 Cr.L.J. 179; (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 59.

Testimony of prosecutrix—Corroboration: 1968 Cr.L.J. 690(2) (Manipur). See also (1987) 3 Crimes 831 (Gau.).

A prosecutrix of a sex offence is not an accomplice but a victim; unless the evidence discloses a strong reason to falsely implicate the accused, held, the Court should ordinarily have no hesitation in accepting her testimony. [(1990) 1 S.C.C. 550, Foll.]: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 615.

The rule of prudence to look for corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice by other independent evidence, based on human experience, is embodied in S. 114(b); however, though a victim of rape is not an accomplice, yet due to a long line of judicial decision spread over a number of years, her evidence is treated almost like that of an accomplice requiring corroboration; though a conviction on the sole testimony of a victim of rape is not illegal on that Court, the judgment should show that the Judge was conscious of the rule of prudence; if the victim is a grown up married woman, it is always safe to insist on corroboration. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2661; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1252 and (1916) 2 K.B. 658, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 911: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1285: (1983) 4 S.C.C. 10.

In a rape case, the prosecutrix is not regarded as an accomplice and, therefore, the rapist can be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of the ravished woman, if it is found true and inspires confidence. Law does not require corroboration of the testimony of the victim of rape in order to convict the accused. If the corroboration is there, it would give additional strength to the prosecution. But the absence of corroboration does not wipe of or erase the testimony of the victim, and it can safely be acted upon to convict the accused provided it is genuine, trustworthy and impressive. Thus, where the testimony of prosecutrix, in itself was strong enough to seek conviction of the accused and moreover, it was corroborated in material particulars from many sources, held, conviction of accused was sustainable: 1984 Raj.L.W. 262. See also 1995 Cr.L.J. 1561 (Ori.) (D.B.).

The evidence of the girl ravished is treated somewhat along the same lines as accomplice evidence. The rule as to corroboration, which has hardened into one of law, is not that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction, but that the necessity of corroboration as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained: I.L.R. (1977) Karn. 1413: (1977) 2 Karn.L.J. 308.

In the case of a rape there is nothing in law to prevent a conviction on the sole testimony of the prosecutrix. Corroboration of her evidence is not absolutely essential since she does not stand in the position of an accomplice. But the rule of prudence requires that there must be some corroboration of the evidence of the prosecutrix. Where rape is denied the sort of corroboration one looks for is the medical evidence showing injury to the private parts of the complainant, injury to the other parts of her body, seminal stains on her clothes or the clothes of the accused, or on the places where the offence is alleged to have been committed and in all cases importance is always attached to the subsequent conduct of the complainant. Whether she makes a charge promptly or not is always relevant. The tender years of the child which is the victim of a sexual offence, coupled with other circumstances may render corroboration unnecessary but that is a question of fact in every case: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 689 (Ori.).

On a question as to the necessity for corroboration of the complainant's evidence in the case of an offence of rape, held the Evidence Act nowhere says that corroboration in such cases is necessary. A woman who has been raped is not an accomplice. If she was ravished she is the victim of an outrage. If she consented there is no offence unless she is a married woman, in which case questions of adultery may arise. In the case of a girl who is below the age of consent, her consent will not matter so far as the offence of rape is concerned, but if she consented her testimony will naturally be as suspect as that of an accomplice. So also in the case of unnatural offences. A large volume of case law has grown up which treats the evidence of the complaintant somewhat along the same lines as accomplice evidence and the position now reached is that the rule of prudence that such evidence should be corroborated has hardened into one of law. But the true rule is that in every case of this type the rule about the advisability of corroboration should be present in the mind of the Judge. In a jury case he must tell the jury of it and in a non-jury case he must show that it is present to his mind by indicating that in his judgment. But he should also point out that corroboration can be dispensed with if, in the particular circumstances of the case before him, either the jury or where there is no jury, he himself is satisfied that it is safe to do so. The rule is not that corroboration is essential before there can be conviction, but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstances make it safe to dispense with it, must be present to the mind of the Judge, and in jury cases, must find a place in the charge before a conviction without corroboration. There is no rule of practice that there must, in every case, be corroboration before a conviction can be allowed to stand. The nature and extent of the corroboration required when it is not considered safe to dispense with it must necessarily vary with the circumstances of each case and also according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. But the general rules are: (1) It is not necessary that there should be independent confirmation of every material circumstances. (2) The independent evidence must not only make it safe to believe that the crime was committed but must in some way reasonably connect or tend to connect the accused with it by confirming in some material particular the testimony of the accomplice of complainant that the accused committed the crime. (3) The corroboration must come from independent sources and thus ordinarily the testimony of one accomplice would not be sufficient to corroborate that of another. (4) The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. On the question whether a previous statement of an accomplice or complainant can be accepted as corroboration, held, S. 157 of the Evidence Act dealing with corroboration makes no exceptions and therefore, provided the condition prescribed therein, that is to say "made at or about the same time, etc." are fulfilled, there can be no doubt that such a statement is legally admissible in India as corroboration. The weight to be attached to it is of course, another matter, but in view of S. 118 of the Evidence Act, its legal admissibility as corroboration cannot be questioned: A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54.

If the evidence of the victim of rape does not suffer from any basic infirmity, and the "probabilities-factor" does not render it unworthy of credence, as a general rule, there is no reason to insist on corroboration except from the medical evidence, where having regard to the circumstances of the case, medical evidence can be expected to be forthcoming, subject to the following qualification: Corroboration may be insisted upon when a woman having attained majority is found in a compromising position and there is a likelihood of her having levelled such an accusation on account of the instinct of self-preservation. Or when the "probabilities-factor" is found to be out of tune. Because:—(1) A girl or a woman in the tradition bound non-permissive society of India would be extremely reluctant even to admit that any incident which is likely to reflect on her chastity had ever occurred; (2) she would be conscious of the danger of being ostracized but the society or being looked down by the society including by her own family members, relatives, friends, and neighbours; (3) she would have to brave the whole world; (4) she would face the risk of losing the love and respect of her own husband and near relatives, and of her matrimonial home and happiness being shattered; (5) if she is unmarried, she would apprehend that it would be difficult to secure an alliance with a suitable match from a respectable or an acceptable family; (6) it would almost inevitably and almost invariably result in mental torture and suffering to herself; (7) the fear of being taunted by others will always haunt her; (8) she would feel extremely embarrassed in relating the incident to others being overpowered by a feeling of shame on account of the upbringing in a tradition bound society where by and large sex is taboo; (9) the natural inclination would be to avoid giving publicity to the incident lest the family name and family honour is brought into controversy; (10) the parents of an unmarried girl as also the husband and members of the husband's family of a married woman, would also more often than not, want to avoid publicity on account of the fear of social stigma on the family name and family honour; (11) the fear of the victim herself being considered to be promiscuous or in some way responsible for the incident regardless of her innocence; (12) the reluctance to face interrogation by the investigating agency, to face the Court, to face the cross-examination by Counsel for the culprit, and the risk of being disbelieved, act as a deterrent: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 753: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1096: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 217.

The prosecutrix of a sex offence is not at par with an accomplice; in fact, she is a victim. Undoubtedly a competent witness, her evidence must receive the same weight as any victim of physical violence; nowhere does the Act bar its acceptance unless corroborated in material particulars. What is necessary is that the Court must be alive to the fact that she is interested in the outcome of the trial and if the Court feels satisfied about the reliability of her evidence it is not required to look for corroboration. The High Court's view that it is only in the rarest of rare cases if the Court finds that the testimony of the prosecutrix is so trustworthy, truthful and reliable that other corroboration may not be necessary is not correct; the law is otherwise: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 658: 1990 Cr.L.J. 889: (1990) 2 Bom.C.R. 630.

Criminal cases—Conviction on evidence of single witness—Testimony of approver of victim of sexual offence—Corroboration—Necessity for—Where there are no exceptional reasons operating, it becomes duty of Court to convict, if it is satisfied that testimony of a single witness is entirely reliable: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 614.

Assuming the person on whom rape is committed met other women just after the incident and had talked to them about it, that does not constitute sufficient corroboration, in the case when the story related by such person is unnatural. It is true that the talks would be statements made to the witnesses on or about the time when the fact took place, and would be admissible as corroboration under S. 157, Evidence Act. However, the weight to be attached to them is another matter, and though they may emanate from the same source their evidentiary value may be nil if the source itself is tainted: A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 96: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1525.

Where the allegations of the prosecutrix regarding abduction, wrongful confinement and rape were found to be infirm and exaggerated and medical evidence also did not support her version and further none of the evidence was corroborated by independent witnesses, held, offence against accused was not established beyond reasonable doubt and he could not be convicted on the basis of version of prosecutrix: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 283 (Madh. Pra.).

14. Corroboration to evidence of abducted girl.—Generally stated, an abducted woman is not an accomplice and her evidence does not require corroboration. But, the rule, is not that corroboration is essential before there can be a conviction but that the necessity of corroboration, as a matter of prudence, except where the circumstance make it safe to dispense with it must be present to the mind of the Judge, before a conviction without corroboration can be sustained: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1390 (Manipur).

Evidence of girl abducted—Sufficiency for conviction: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 412: 1958 Cr.L.J. 929.

Evidence of girl abducted must be taken with a great amount of caution: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 42: 1957 Cr.L.J. 847.

Corroboration of prosecutrix in trial under S. 366, Penal Code, is not necessary. See A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 121: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 922: 1955 Nag.L.J. 61. See also (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 26.

Case under S. 366, I.P Code—Evidence of prosecutrix—Her case that she was compelled, threatened or otherwise induced to go with accused who was alleged to have raped her without her consent—Her statement, in order to base conviction of accused upon, must be corroborated in some material particulars from independent source: (1970) 1 S.C.W.R. 767: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1029.

15. "Accomplice"—Meaning of.—The expression "accomplice" means a person who knowingly or voluntarily co-operates with or aids and assists another in the commission of a crime. The expression obviously includes principals in the first and second degree. It is wide enough to include persons who are known to the English law as accessories after the fact: (1946) 48 Punj.L.R. 410: A.I.R. 1947 Lah. 220; I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 209.

The word "accomplice" has not been defined by the Act and should, therefore, be presumed to have been used in its ordinary sense. An accomplice means a guilty associate or partner in crime, or who, in some way or other, is connected with the offence in question or who makes admissions of facts showing that he had a conscious hand in the offence. An accomplice confesses himself a criminal who has been concerned in the commission of a crime participis criminis, whether he is concerned in the strict legal sense as principal in the first or second degree, or merely as accessory before or after the fact. Persons to be accomplice must participate in the commission of the same crime as the accused persons in a trial are charged: I.L.R. 17 Luck. 516: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 221; (1943) 45 Bom.L.R. 64: A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 74; 6 Sau.L.R. 118: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 55; A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 332.

The word "accomplice" is inter-changeable with an associate in crime who is consciously so connected with the criminal act done by his confederate, that he on account of the presence of the necessary "mens rea" and his participation in the crime in some way or other can be tried along with that confederate actually perpetrating the crime: I.L.R. (1952) Patiala 512: A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 82.

An accomplice is a person who participates in the commission of the actual crime charged, against an accused. He is to be a participis criminis. There are two cases, however, in which a person has been held to be an accomplice even if he is not a participis criminis. Receivers of stolen property are taken to be accomplices of the thieves from whom they receive goods, on a trial for theft. Accomplices in previous similar offences committed by the accused on trial are deemed to be accomplice in the offence for which the accused is on trial, when evidence of the accused having committed crimes of identical type on other occasions be admissible to prove the system and intent of the accused in committing the offence charged: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 253: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1821.

An accomplice means a guilty associate or partner in a crime; a person who is connected with the offence or who makes admissions of facts showing that he had a conscious hand in it. Where a witness is not concerned with the commission of the crime he cannot be said to be an accomplice although he gives no information about it until the arrival of the Police owing to fear of the accused: I.L.R. (1950) Lah. 183: A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 129.

Accomplice—Person witnessing arson being committed—Position of: 1958 An.L.T. 856.

As to who is an "accomplice", see A.I.R. 1934 Sind 185: 28 Sind L.R. 336; (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 777: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 678 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 171.

Accomplice, who is—Though witness concerned may not confess to his participation in crime, Court has to decide on a consideration of the entire evidence whether he is an accomplice. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599; (1916) 2 K.B. 658, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45: 1970 Cr.L.J. 9: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 130.

A person who cannot be indicted owing to the absence of the element of mens rea, he having acted under pressure exerted by the principal, is not an accomplice and his evidence does not require corroboration: I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 315: 1945 Nag.L.J. 134: A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 143.

An accomplice is a witness and not an accused person: 9 P.R. (Cr.) 1911: 10 I.C. 340: 12 Cr.L.J. 267.

It is now well settled law that while under S. 133 of the Evidence Act, an accomplice can be competent witness, such evidence to be acted upon should be corroborated in material particulars. This rule of prudence and caution is derived from the principle set out in Illus. (b) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act. But this principle pre-supposes that the witness in question is an accomplice in the sense of one who was a participis criminis. He should be one who is tarred with the same brush as the accused in the crime though not to the same extent. A person who totally exculpates himself from the crime and says he was only a passive eye-witness to the commission of the offence cannot be called "accomplice" in the strict sense even though the formalities of granting a pardon, etc., is gone through before he is called upon to give evidence as an approver. Still the principle of prudence and caution applicable to the evidence of an "accomplice" in the strict sense, will be applicable to such cases also. Even the evidence of person, who was present with the accused at the time of the commission of the offence, but who completely exculpates himself and does not admit having taken any part whatever in the commission of the offence or in any active or passive preparation for the same, will also have to be corroborated in material particulars before it could be acted upon: (1970) 1 M.L.J. 450.

The word accomplice has not been defined in the Act; but he is generally understood to mean a guilty associate or partner in crime; and on becoming an approver, he becomes a prosecution witness: (1994) 4 S.C.C. 478: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1252: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3071: (1994) 2 Crimes 1: (1994) 2 An.L.T. (Cr.) 429.

A person who assisted the criminals to the extent of keeping a look-out to see whether the Police were approaching, is an accomplice whose evidence requires corroboration: I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal. 312.

An accomplice is one who has concurred in the commission of an offence and is a guilty associate in the crime. Accomplices are usually interested and always infamous witnesses. One accomplice cannot corroborate another and the corroboration of the evidence of accomplices must come from independent sources: (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 510.

The word "accomplice" is ordinarily used in connection with law of evidence and rarely in the substantive law of crimes; its primary meaning, as per A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1330, is "any party to the crime charged and someone who aids and abets the commission of crime". And S. 306 of the Cr.P.Code treats

"any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or party to an offence" as an accomplice: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2941 (Ker.) (D.B.).

An "accomplice" is a person who has concurred in commission of an offence; its dictionary meaning is a partner in crime, an associate in guilty; he is a guilty associate who could be jointly indicted with the accused. In two cases, however, persons who are not participis criminis have bene held to be accomplices, namely (i) receivers of stolen property have been held to be accomplices of the thieves from whom they receive goods, in a trial for theft, and (ii) where a person has been charged with a particular offence and evidence of other similar offences by him has been admitted as proving system and intent and negativing accident. Persons who have not taken any part in the commission of the crime (murders) but only dug pits at the instance and direction of the accused R who was the District and Sessions Judge under whom those persons served as peons and who had no idea that murders would be committed and the pits were dug for accommodating the dead bodies, cannot be said to be "accomplices" and their evidence cannot be treated as the evidence of accomplices: 1975 Cr.L.J. 354 (Gau.) (D.B.).

So far as the statutory provisions are concerned, there is nothing in law to justify the proposition that evidence of a witness, who happens to be cognisant of a crime, or who made no attempt to prevent it, or who did not disclose its commission should only be relied upon to the same extent as that of an accomplice. The real question in such a case is the degree of credit to be attached to the testimony of such a witness; and that depends on all the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and the principle of caution and the requirement of corroboration on material particulars should also be applied if the circumstantial evidence calls for it.

A person gave evidence of the occurrence only two days after the occurrence and did not incriminate himself in the occurrence from the very beginning. He was treated as an approver by granting pardon and was kept under arrest throughout and even at the time of giving evidence. There were discrepancies between his evidence in the Court and his earlier statement before the Police and his evidence contained serious improbabilities.

Held, that in the absence of circumstantial evidence connecting the accused with the crime, the accused could not be convicted on the basis of testimony of such witness without corroboration thereof on material particulars: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 112: 1970 Cr.L.J. 288.

The mere fact that a witness did not reveal the knowledge of the intended crime to the proper authorities is not sufficient to make him an accessory or an accomplice so as to vitiate his evidence: I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 511: A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 335. See also 1979 Bom.C.R. 30.

A person cannot be treated as an accomplice merely because he was present when the offence was committed and was fully aware of the person who committed it but did not disclose it to the proper authorities: I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 395: 1945 Nag.L.J. 191: A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 186; 1956 Madh. Bh.L.J. 571: A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 262.

A person who is present at the commission of the crime and who is interested in not disclosing the commission of the crime is a person who is in the position of an accomplice: I.L.R. (1957) Cut. 347: A.I.R. 1957 Ori. 260.

A man who quietly looks on at a murder, may not necessarily be an accomplice; but he is not a safe witness against the alleged murderer: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1193: A.I.R. 1953 Vindh. Pra. 38.

Witnesses witnessing murder but remaining inactive are to be treated as accomplices. Their evidence must be corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence: I.L.R. (1953) Hyd. 32: A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 161.

Witness to a crime who does not give information of the same, though not an accomplice in the strict sense of the term, still his evidence is not free from suspicion: 11 O.W.N. 1383: A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 1; 11 O.W.N. 661: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 315. See also 49 Mys. H.C. Rep. 444 (Accessory after the fact).

A person's knowledge of the deliberations in the course of which the dacoity was planned, his having seen the accused departing for a particular purpose or his having accompanied the accused when the latter went for disposal of the stolen articles cannot be said to be an accomplice and his evidence does not require corroboration on material particulars: 6 Sau.L.R. 118: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 55.

A wife who is cognisant of the fact that the accused intended to kill her husband but did not disclose that fact to him, must be regarded as an accomplice and her testimony cannot carry any higher value than the testimony of an accomplice: (1936) 38 Punj.L.R. 226: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 731. A person who knowingly aids in the disposal of stolen property is an accomplice: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 721: 67 M.L.J. 693.

The primary meaning of an accomplice is any party to the crime charged and someone who aids and abets the commission of crime. Where a person in a murder case only assisted the accused in removing the dead body and burying it in the river bed acting under duress, he cannot be termed as an accomplice: 1984 Mah.L.J. 709 (D.B.).

To attract S. 133, a person should be an accomplice, i.e., he should have participated in the crime.

When a driver of a truck shot the deceased who was sleeping in the truck and the cleaner helped him to remove the body of the deceased to a pit and covered it with tarpaulin and sprinkled diesel on it and set it on fire, he must be held to have taken part in commission of the crime and is an approver: 1981 M.P.L.J. 622: 1981 Jab.L.J. 324.

16. Accessory after the fact.—One who deposes that he only helped the accused in disposing of the body of the deceased after he was killed by the accused is not an accomplice: 73 I.C. 506: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 345. See also 161 I.C. 289: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 101; 45 Cal.L.J. 581: (1925-26) 30 Cal.W.N. 816; 99 I.C. 929: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 78; 145 I.C. 240: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 199; A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 513 (accessory after the fact).

Indian law does not recognise any such thing as an accessory after the fact. A man who does not abet a crime cannot be regarded as an accomplice. Although a person who assists in disposal of the dead body may become liable to punishment under S. 201, Penal Code, this is quite another offence, and helping to dispose of the body of a man who had been murdered, without having taken any part in the murder itself, does not make a man an accomplice with regard to the murder: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 513; I.L.R. 13 Luck. 115: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 259; 164 I.C. 677: A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 373 [Corroboration not necessary in every detail]. See also 163 I.C. 681: A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 242 (P.C.); 165 I.C. 144: 1936 O.W.N. 848; I.L.R. 17 Lah. 518: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 400; I.L.R. 58 All. 695: A.I.R. 1936 All. 337.

A, while working as a Chairman of certain local board, took out huge sum of money from the treasury for the payment of stipends of the primary school teachers and appropriated it to his own use. B succeeded him as Chairman and B and C, the Head Clerk of the Board, tried to screen A by committing irregularities, first by drawing large sums of money from the treasury without proper bills in some cases and then, utilising the money drawn for current stipends, towards payment of arrear stipends of teachers. They also continued the practice of insisting on the teachers not to put the dates while signing the stamped receipts and thus, created the impression that the arrears were properly paid. B and C were shown joined as co-accused with A in F.I.R. but later on B and C were produced as prosecution witnesses and A alone was tried for an offence under S. 409, I.P.Code. Held, that B and C were clearly "accessories after the fact" and a Court must insist on adequate corroboration of their testimony before it could sustain the conviction: 25 Cut.L.T. 269: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 159.

17. Person who is not participis criminis.—Evidence of person who is not participis criminis—Reliability of—Depends on facts and circumstances of each case—Principle of corroboration on material particulars should be applied to such evidence if circumstantial evidence calls for it: 1969 M.L.J. (Cr.) 112: 1970 Cr.L.J. 288.

Accomplice—Participis criminis in respect of actual crime charged is an accomplice—Though witness concerned may not confess to his participation, Court has to decide on a consideration of the entire evidence whether he is an accomplice. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 599; (1916) 2 K.B. 658, Rel. on]: 1970 Cr.L.J. 9: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 45: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 130.

18. Witnesses no better than accomplices.—Persons who assisted in the concealment of the offence are no better than accomplices: 120 I.C. 190: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 540.

Persons having knowledge of commission of offence and keeping quiet for some days is no better than accomplice: (1925-26) 30 Cal.W.N. 816. But see contra (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 77: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 678.

A suspected participator in the crime appearing as a prosecution witness is on the same basis as an accomplice and a conviction cannot be based upon his uncorroborated testimony: 15 Cr.L.J. 440: 24 I.C. 146.

Even where the object of the person who instigates another to commit a crime is to catch him in the act of committing the crime, e.g., Police decoys, the instigation amounts to an abetment of the offence, and the abettors must be regarded as accomplices when the object of the instigation is to make the offender commit the crime and the person who is instigated actually commits the offence. Even if they are not accomplices in the strict legal sense, their evidence has to be viewed with caution, and it is not safe to act upon their evidence without material corroboration: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 893. But see A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 245.

Where a prosecution witness admitted that he had intentionally made a false statement regarding non-availability of the case property (film Kissa Kursi Ka) earlier, held, cannot be relied upon for convicting the accused; such witness, being no better than an accomplice, cannot be believed unless his testimony finds corroboration from reliable sources: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1382: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 665: 1980 Cr.L.J. 965.

In case of witness not in better position than an accomplice, held, corroboration in material particulars is necessary as of prudence and practice: 1982 Jab.L.J. 823.

Offence under S. 468, I.P.Code—Witness typing the document alleged to have been forged by accused—Testimony of such witness, almost of an accomplice, sought not to be relied upon without corroboration: 1963 Raj.L.W. 416.

19. Person held to be accomplice.—Witness stating that she accompanied accused to isolated place knowing that accused was to deliver child—Witness further stating that accused killed her newly born child by twisting umbilical cord round its neck and strangulating it—Witness not disclosing this fact to anybody even after taking accused back to latter's house—Held, witness was no better than an accomplice—Her testimony because of her subsequent conduct was not above suspicion—Conviction on such evidence could not be sustained: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 231: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1020: (1970) 1 M.L.J. 560: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 298 (D.B.).

Leaders of a community accepting money for voting from a candidate at an election—Leaders are accomplices: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1199: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 416 (F.B.).

Where a cycle shop owner from whom 7 tape recorders were recovered stated that he had purchased them from a person who used to visit his shop to hire cycles and there was no evidence as to the price for which the records were purchased or he made any enquiry from their seller as to the source from which the seller had obtained it and he merely identified the seller from a photograph shown, held, apparently the cycle shop owner was either the thief or the receiver of stolen property and on being caught he concocted the excuse to save his skin; he is an accomplice and his testimony could not be accepted without corroboration which was clearly lacking: (1982-1) 23 Guj.L.R. 35: (1981) 1 Guj.L.H. 421.

20. Person held to be not accomplice.—The rule of prudence, which is now recognised as a rule of law, that evidence of accomplice before it is utilised for convicting an accused person must be corrborated in material particulars in so far as it involves the accused, can have no application where the evidence is led only for the purpose of proving that the complainant was in possession of some property which is alleged to be stolen. For persons who have helped the complainant in disposing of the stolen property cannot be said to be accomplices of the accused who are being prosecuted for committing offence of extortion against the complainant: 1956 Cr.L.J. 605: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 341.

The clerk in the office of the Municipal Corporation was a subordinate of both the accused (Deputy Engineer and Overseer). He was actually working directly under accused No. 2 and at the instance of these accused he procured the municipal labour and material and carried out the repairs to the house of accused No. 1. In the circumstances, it cannot be said that the clerk, in any way was a party to the offence under S. 409, Indian Penal Code and cannot be dubbed as an accomplice: 1978 Cr.L.J. 431 (Bom.).

The mere fact that a witness of the election petitioner printed the offending leaflet which prejudiced the prospects of latter's election in the general elections could not clothes him with the character of a guilty associate or partner in the crime of corrupt practice within the meaning of S. 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951. The omission on the part of such a witness to send to the concerned District Magistrate a copy each of the declaration and the printed material as required by sub-S. (2) of S. 127-A of the Act might lay him open to prosecution for an offence under sub-S. (4) of S. 127-A of the Act but would not make him an accomplice or render his statement untrustworthy: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2169.

Prevention of Food Adulteration Act (1954)—Prosecution for sale of adulterated milk—It is not a rule of law that evidence of Food Inspector cannot be accepted without corroboration—He is not an accomplice. [(1970) 11 Guj.L.R. 530, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1277: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 500: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1075.

The person having no prior knowledge whatsoever about the designs of the accused, held, cannot be branded as accomplice: 1984 Cr.L.R. 384 (Guj.).

The company's bank account at Bombay was to be operated by one R, at Delhi and by the accused at Bombay. R signed blank cheques and gave them to the accused. The accused was tried under S. 409, Penal Code. Held, that the mere signing of the blank cheques by R was hardly an index of complicity when the bank account had to be operated both by accused and R jointly. R had to sign blank cheques in order to avoid delay in payment and possible occasional falling through of the transactions. No sinister intention could be imputed to R on account of his signing blank cheques in the expectation that those cheques would be properly used by the accused. R was not, therefore, an accomplice: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 253: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1821.

Accused engaging coolie to carry bundle containing stolen property—Coolie having no knowledge that bundle contained stolen article—Coolie is not in a position of accomplice—Article held to be in possession of accused engaging the coolie: I.L.R. 32 Pat. 243: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 109.

The accused invited the prosecution witnesses for taking liquor at a certain place. On reaching the place, the witnesses were not supplied with liquor and they saw the dead body of the victim tied with ropes and being removed towards a nearby paddy field. Nothing was suggested as to why they would falsely implicate the accused. Held, witnesses were not accomplices and that their evidence could be relied upon, without corroboration being required: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1255: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 245.

21. Accomplice and spy—Distinction.—A person who, as a spy or a detective, associates with criminals solely for the purpose of discovering and making know their crimes and without any criminal intent, is not an accomplice, and it is immaterial that he encourages or aids in the commission of the crime. An accomplice on the other hand is a person who has concurred in the crime and who acknowledges himself to be a criminal. A spy does not acknowledge himself to be a criminal, if a witness merely lends himself to a scheme for the purpose of convicting the guilty he is not an accomplice: 1946 Nag.L.J. 586: I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 982: A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 109.

The detective and accomplices are distinguished clearly when a conspiracy contains persons of both the character. The former enter with a design of detecting or betraying it, while the latter do concur fully with other accomplices till they are alarmed or they turn upon their associates and expose them. In the case of those, corroboration equal to that of others is necessary: 16 I.C. 257: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 1105.

Per Panigrahi, J.—The question whether a witness who is engaged by the Police to act as a spy is to be believed must be decided by the Judge who tries the case and his reliability would be determined by the circumstances of the particular case. There can be no rule of general application. The fact that a person is engaged to witness a crime does not make him an accomplice unless he is proved to have participated in the commission of the crime. If he has participated in the crime, the mere fact that he was engaged by the Police will not entitle him to claim immunity from being charged as an accomplice. Whether he is the one or the other will depend upon the view taken by the Judge of fact having regard to all the circumstances of

An accomplice is a person who is a guilty associate in crime or who sustains such a relation to the criminal act that he could be jointly indicted with the defendant (principal). The act of a detective in supplying marked money and placing bets with the accused for detection of a crime has no element of mens rea and so cannot be treated as that of an accomplice and hence his evidence does not require corroboration: I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 181: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 245. But See 48 Mad.L.W. 322: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 893.

The evidence of witnesses, even if they are spies has to be judged by fact in order to find out whether the witnesses by themselves are reliable witnesses. A person who offers bribe and another person who goes with him are clearly witnesses who are agents provocateurs and are such whose evidence need corroboration: 1954 Cr.L.J. 545: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 89.

Though it may sometimes be necessary to employ spies or decoys for detection of offences which cannot be detected in any other way, the practice is not looked upon with much favour because in their enthusiasm these men soon degenerate into agents provocateur instigating or provoking the commission of crimes. If a man makes himself an agent for the prosecution before associating with the wrongdoer or before the offence is committed or if with a view to protect his own interest or that of others pretends to associate with such persons with the object of preventing the commission of an offence by giving timely information to the authorities, he is not an accomplice. But if such a person or a spy or an informer in the exuberance of his enthusiasm actually instigates another to commit a crime even if it be for detection of offence or to get the credit of having him arrested, he is an abettor under the penal law and his position cannot be anything other than that of an accomplice: 1958 Cr.L.J. 906: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 368.

22. Accomplice and decoy witness.—A distinction has to be drawn between an accomplice and a decoy witness, the former being a person who joins another with the intention of aiding the commission of an offence and the latter who is instrumental in provoking the commission of the offence with the object of discovering the offence and detecting the offender. An accomplice is an associate in crime. Mere aiding in the detection of a crime by becoming an instrument of detection without any intention to commit the crime and without any intention to make gain out of the perpetration of the crime cannot make the person so aiding an associate in crime: I.L.R. (1952) Patiala 512: A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 82.

The fact that a person acts as decoy is not sufficient to reject his testimony, when it is supported in every particular by the other witnesses: 1958 Cr.L.J. 827: A.I.R. 1958 All. 481.

Decoy witness—Rule of prudence requires corroboration in material particulars of his testimony: I.L.R. (1967) Guj. 1046: (1968) 9 Guj.L.R. 278.

Evidence of decoy witness supported by another trap witness about sale of spurious parts of cycle by accused—Sufficiency to sustain conviction: 1960 Cr.L.J.1956: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 641.

Decoy witness—Practice of supplying decoy witness with Government money for bringing about the completion of offence deprecated—(Penal Code, 1860, S. 161)—(Prevention of Corruption Act 1947, S. 4): A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 51: 1956 Cr.L.J. 227.

23. Accomplice and informer.—If at the time when a person joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice; and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the Police: 110 I.C. 676: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 647. See also I.L.R. 9 Lah. 500: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 193.

In all cases depending upon informer's evidence the degree of support required for the evidence depends in each case upon the individual's credit: 15 I.C. 987: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 669.

24. Accomplice and partisan and interested witness.—Even in the matter of the evidence of an accomplice, corroboration is not required in every detail of the occurrence but corroboration in some of the material particulars alone might be sufficient to believe the evidence of the accomplice. The reason is that he has his own axe to grind inasmuch as he desires to get away with a pardon and he is interested in securing his release by involving other persons. In the case of a partisan witness it cannot be said that his evidence is tainted just as that of an accomplice. Some caution is of course required in the matter of the evidence of the partisan witness also, but the corroboration may not be just of that type which is required in the case of an accomplice. Some corroboration in one or two material particulars inspire confidence in the evidence of a partisan witness. General observations made by the highest Courts are of course of great value, but it is the duty of the Court, deciding a particular case to carefully examine the circumstances in the context of which those observations were laid down. In bribery case it often becomes necessary to lay a trap and if simply on account of such a trap the evidence of the complainant and the Police party is to be discarded, it would be very difficult to bring the offenders to book. Of course as the complainant in a bribery case is interested like the complainant in other cases and the Police officials are more or less anxious that the trap might succeed, it might be said that it is advisable that some corroboration from independent sources might be sought. But it cannot be said that in no case should the evidence of the complainant and the Police officials of the raiding party be acted upon without corroboration: 1958 Raj.L.W. 596.

Evidence of accomplice and evidence of partisan witness — Distinction — Former needs corroboration for conviction while no corroboration is necessary in latter case: 1968 Cr.L.J. 150: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1323.

There is no inflexible rule that the evidence of the witnesses of the raiding party must be discarded in the absence of any independent corroboration. The correct rule is this: if any of the witnesses are accomplices who are participis criminis in respect of the actual crime charged, their evidence must be treated as the evidence of accomplices; if they are not accomplices but are partisans or interested witnesses, who are concerned in the success of the trap, their evidence must be tested in the same way as other interested evidence is tested by the application of diverse considerations which must vary from case to case, and in a proper case, the Court may even look for independent corroboration before convicting the accused person: 1958 Ker.L.T. 676: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 758: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 88; A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 500: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 641.

Simply because a witness is present when the amount to be offered as bribe is given to the complainant and is also present when the recovery is made, it cannot be held that he is to be taken as a partisan witness. It may happen by accident that both the events might take place in the presence of the same witness. It may also happen that some witnesses might be asked to witness the recovery of the amount of the bribery from the bribe-taker and thereafter the amount to be offered might be delivered by the officer in their presence to the complainant: 1958 Raj.L.W. 596.

It is now well settled that while in the case of evidence of an accomplice, no conviction can be based on his evidence unless it is corroborated in material particulars, as regards the evidence of a partisan witness, it is open to a Court to convict an accused person solely on the basis of that evidence, if it is satisfied that evidence is reliable: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 337 (D.B.).

In the case of an interested or partisan witness as distinct from an approver or accomplice the evidence can be accepted even without corroboration if the Court thinks that it is acceptable. In the case of an accomplice or approver on the other hand, the evidence cannot be accepted without corroboration. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1323; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1762, Rel. on]: 1971 Ker.L.T. 672.

Interested witness—Corroboration: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 199: 1957 Cr.L.J. 325.

Where the corroborating witness is apparently interested, he being inimical to the accused, the evidence of the approver cannot form any basis for conviction: (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 2.

Where Panch witness was a municipal employee in adulteration case, held, he could not be said to be a partisan witness: (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 446.

25. Evidence of raiding party.—Independent corroboration does not mean that every detail of what the witnesses of the raiding party have said must be corroborated by independent witnesses. Even in respect of the evidence of an accomplice, all that is required is that there must be some additional evidence, rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice is true and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it. Corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime, it is sufficient even though it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 500: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 641.

The mere fact that panch witnesses accompany the Police and witness the raid does not make them interested witnesses. They do not by reason of participation in those proceedings stand on the same footing as the complainant or the Police who are interested in the success of the raid. In the absence of any such participation or interest on their part, their evidence must be judged by the same standards as that of any other witness. Their status, the presence or absence of any motive to favour or disfavour, a party the dispassionate nature of their evidence and all other factors bearing on their independent and reliability and probabilities of their story may be taken into account: (1967) 8 Guj.L.R. 413: I.L.R. (1967) Guj. 386.

26. Accomplice and trap witness.—A trap witness does not fall under the category of accomplices and his evidence does not require corroboration. It is always for the Judge to decide whether it is safe to rely and act upon trap witness. Each case depends upon its own merits. His partiality for the prosecution is a factor which can hardly be ignored. The character, position in life, and the social standing of the witness would go a great way in helping the Judge to appreciate his evidence. The evidence of such witness should not be disbelived only because of his role but should be tested and should succeed and fail by reason of its own inherent strength or weakness: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 50: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 326; A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 166: 1959 Cr.L.J. 484.

Though a trap witness is not an accomplice or an approver, he is certainly an interested witness in the sense that he is interested to see that the trap laid by him succeeded. He could at least be equated with a partisan witness and it would not be admissible to rely upon his evidence without corroboration. But the evidence of a trap witness is not a tainted one and it would only make a difference in the degree of corroboration required rather than necessity for it: 1968 Cr.L.J. 925: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 63.

Trap witnesses—Evidence—Corroboration—Trial of offences under Prevention of Corruption Act—Though trap witnesses are interested witnesses, as a matter of law, their evidence cannot be rejected for want of corroboration: (1968) 3 S.C.R. 189: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 17.

The weight to be attached to his evidence will depend upon the character of each individual trap witness. Prudence requires that the Courts should demand and the prosecution should adduce some corroborative evidence. That evidence adduced to corroborate this trap witness need not be strong, absolutely convincing or sufficient in itself to support a verdict of guilty, nor even equivalent to the swearing of one credible witness. No general rule can be stated with respect to the quantum of evidence corroborating a trap witness's testimony. Each case must be governed by its own circumstances keeping in view the nature of the crime, the character of the trap witness's testimony and the general requirements necessary to sustain a conviction: 1959 Cr.L.J. 484: A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 166.

The rule of prudence requiring corroboration for the testimony of a trap witness has always been recognised. An accomplice, according to the accepted meaning, is a guilty associate or partner in a crime and spies, detectives and decoys who set a trap do not, generally belong to the category of accomplices, because they frequently act with the sole purpose of protecting the interests of the public and the society and do not share the mens rea. It is manifest that the question whether a particular trap witness is an accomplice in law or not must depend on the circumstances of each case. Where the trap witness was a person who was in the habit of bribing station masters in order to secure the booking of his goods and his story was that he had no grievance in that respect and that only because the Police Officer contacted him, he became a party to the trap the witness is in the position of an accomplice rather than an honest trap witness. The reasons why accomplice evidence is held to be untrustworthy and to require corroboration are that from the very nature of his evidence (1) he is a person of low character who has participated in a crime and is, therefore, likely to have no regard to the sanctity of his oath; (2) he is interested in falsely distorting the facts in order to shift the guilt from himself; and (3) that he has the inducement of either a promise or implied pardon for his own part in the crime, and is, therefore, likely to be biased in favour of the prosecution. No doubt every one of these reasons might not apply to a trap witness. The trap witness in question was probably giving bribes to the station masters because he could not secure the booking of his goods otherwise, and to this extent was an unwilling accomplice. But he was a habitual bribe giver for which offence he expects not to be prosecuted, by shifting the blame on the station masters. He is also interested in the success of the trap, and for these reasons would be biased in favour of the prosecution. Therefore, the least that can be said is that he is a partisan witness: 1956 An.L.T. 256: 1956 An.W.R. 288: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 441.

Evidence of trap witness—Corroboration of every detail not necessary: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 828: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1762.

Evidence of trap witness—Court can accept portion of evidence corroborated in material particulars by others evidence: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 828: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1762. See also 1975 B.B.C.J. 846.

It is true that it is very difficult to detect a case of bribery without the aid of a trap; yet it is also not safe for the Courts to rely on the persons who are laying the trap. They are known as "agents provocateur". They are in the nature of accomplices, particularly those who actually tender the money. The other witness and the Magistrate may be in a better position and, therefore, in a bribery case it is very necessary to examine the evidence rather closely and unless there is independent corroboration by the witnesses or by the circumstances of the case, it would not be safe to convict only on the sole testimony of the accomplice, who had tendered the money: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 556. While it is true that independent corroboration, may not be possible in bribery cases yet the Courts have to be very careful at the time of recording a finding of conviction that the case has been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The Courts cannot allow suspicions, however strong, supported by tainted evidence, to take the place of proof only because it is difficult to find good evidence justifying a conviction of the accused person.

It is difficult to lay down what evidence should be or could be regarded as corroboration. Its nature and extent will always vary with the facts and circumstances of each case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 167.

Evidence of person participating in trap—Value of: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1421: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 543.

Trap witness — Uncorroborated testimony of—Evidentiary value. See 1982 Cr.L.J. 954 (Ori.).

A distinction has to be made in the various kinds of a trap or payments of bribe. There may be a case in which a bribe is going to be paid in the normal course of business and on information being received by the Police a trap is arranged for watching this normal course of transaction. No legitimate objection for laying such a trap can be made but there may be another case in which it is not the intention of a bribe giver to pay any bribe and it is only the Police which wants that a bribe should be paid in order that an offence may be staged and detected. It is this kind of trap which has been disapproved in the pronouncement of the various High Courts as also by the Supreme Court: 1957 All.L.J. 934: 1958 Cr.L.J. 586: A.I.R. 1958 All. 334.

Evidence of accomplice—Credibility of—Bribery case—When a trap becomes illegitimate, the trap witnesses are no better than accomplice and their evidence cannot be accepted unless corroborated in material particulars: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Ker. 340: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 60. See also A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 287; 1982 Cr.L.J. 1314: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 249: (1982) 23 Guj.L.R. 605.

It cannot be said that the evidence of Police can never be accepted without corroboration: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 341: I.L.R. (1957) Mys. 177: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 150.

An accomplice is a participator in the crime; a person who is not a participator is not an accomplice. A Police Officer who has no intention to and does not accept an amount offered to him as bribe or in order to enrich himself, but who merely lays a trap in order to bring to book the person offering it and to bring him to punishment for attempting to corrupt a public servant is not a participator and therefore, not an accomplice, and his evidence does not require corroboration: I.L.R. (1952) Bom. 900: (1952) 54 Bom.L.R. 153: A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 435.

Police Officials cannot be discredited in a trap case merely because they are Police officials nor can other witness be rejected for their being prosecution witnesses on some other occasions in the past; the Court has basically to judge their evidence in the light of probabilities and intrinsic credibility of the witnesses: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 989: 1974 Cr.L.J. 784: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 84; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1024: 1974 Cr.L.J. 789: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 305.

There is no rule of prudence as such or which has crystallized into a rule of law requiring that evidence of the Police Officer who had laid the trap should be treated as evidence of accomplices requiring corroboration; in a particular case, the Court may be disinclined to act upon his evidence without corroboration, but, equally, in another appropriate case, if the Court may unhesitatingly accept evidence of such an officer, it is all a matter of appreciation; there can be no hard and fast rule nor any precedential guidance. [(1974) 1 Cr.L.T. 233 (Del.), Approved]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 873: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 390.

Whatever the criminal tendencies of a man might be, he has a right to expect that he will not be deliberately tempted beyond the powers of his frail endurance and provoked into breaking the law, and this is all the more heinous where the temptation is at the instance of those who are the guardians and keepers of the law. Where such a method is employed, that alone might make the conviction illegal. Held, that the trap in the instant case was designed on the accused himself suggesting the bribe in the first instance and was not founded upon a solicitation of the accused and the pressing of temptation upon him. As such, the trap did not fall within the mischief of prohibited category referred to above: 1961 M.L.J. (Cr.) 776: (1961) 2 M.L.J. 547: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 482.

Where in a trap raid in a corruption case one witness was concerned in laying the trap and the other witness was related to, and procured by him and no other eye-witness was examined, held, it was serious infirmity; the Department must seriously endeavour to secure really independent and respectable witnesses of the raid to inspire confidence; conviction set aside: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 91: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 145: 1976 Cr.L.J. 172.

Student and another young man used as trap witnesses in detection of offences under Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act, 1956—Employment of such persons for detection of offences under the Act deprecated: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1189: (1962) 2 S.C.R. (Supp.) 632.

Where in a case of bribery, the High Court magnified every minor detail or omission to falsify or throw even a shadow of doubt on the complainant's evidence, held, it would be the very antithesis of a correct judicial approach to the evidence of witnesses in a trap case; if such a harsh touchstone is prescribed to prove such a case, it will be difficult for the prosecution to establish any case at all: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 63: 1984 Cr.L.J. 4: (1984) 1 S.C.C. 446.

27. Evidence of Executive Magistrate as trap witness—Value of.—The position of an Executive Magistrate is different from that of a regular Magistrate who discharges only judicial functions. The principles on which the employment of Magistrate as witnesses of police traps has been condemned have hardly any application where the Magistrate concerned are Executive Magistrates who perform no judicial functions. His evidence in regard to the statements made by the accused, would not become inadmissible on the ground that they were not recorded under S. 164 of the Cr.P. Code. [A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 500, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 111: 1960 Cr.L.J. 934.

It is not necessary that Executive Magistrates should always keep away from operations intended to catch the criminal red handed; he is not so strongly motivated to get a suspect somehow or other punished; he is professionally detached and has a public responsibility to help detect a bribe-taker if credible requests are made; he is not a cloistered virtue unconcerned with social claims on his services. To condemn roundly every public official or man of the people as a quasi accomplice for participating in a raid is to harm the public cause: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1516: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1062: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 560.

May be a judicial officer should hesitate to get involved in Police trap experiments and expose himself to charges of unveracity: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1516: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1062: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 560.

28. Persons taking part in negotiations for bribe or themselves bribe giver.—Persons taking part in negotiations for bribes cannot be said to be independent witnesses and their evidence is not free from doubt but persons merely present are not accomplices: 20 Cr.L.J. 258: 50 I.C. 18.

Persons who were either instrumental in negotiating the bribe or in arranging for its payment are in the position of accomplices and it is highly unsafe to base a conviction under S. 161 of the Penal Code on their testimony without independent corroboration: 34 Pat.L.R. 836: 147 I.C. 557.

Where a person does not himself demand any bribe but is invited to join in the conspiracy and at every stage takes care to keep his superiors informed of its progress, he cannot, under the circumstances, be regarded as an accomplice: A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 117.

It is obvious that a distinction must be drawn between a person who is threatened and becomes an accomplice and one who voluntarily takes part in the crime. In the former case corroboration necessary to establish the credit of such a person would be much less than in the latter case. In bribery cases this distinction becomes of great importance in view of the nature of the offence. When a person gives a bribe to a public servant with a view to induce him to abstain him from doing his duty, the bribe-giver is as much guilty as the taker; a greater amount of corroboration is necessary in the case. But, when the person is compelled by force of circumstances to give the bribe to induce the public servant to do his plain duty which he otherwise refuses to do, there is no doubt the element of wrong doing but the credibility of the giver would stand at a higher footing than in the previous case and very slight corroboration is sufficient: 3 Sau. L.R. 196: A.I.R. 1951 Sau. 25.

Though a person who gives a bribe is technically an accomplice of the person who receives it, his position is different from that of a co-offender. In cases where the accused is charged with extorting bribes from persons, the giver of the bribe becomes not a willing participant but a victim of the offence. The consideration that an accomplice is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself hardly applies to the evidence of one who testifies that he has bribed the accused thereby making himself out to be a briber. However, in the case of bribe-givers, it may not be prudent to base a conviction on their sole evidence in the absence of any corroboration whatsoever: 1960 Ker.L.T. 666 I.L.R. (1960) Ker. 783: A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 99 (F.B.).

A person who offers a bribe to a public officer is an accomplice and his evidence requires corroboration: 46 Cal.L.J. 331; 1947 Nag.L.J. 310; (1992) 1 Crimes 350 (Ori.).

A person who pays a bribe to the accused, not voluntarily but as a result of demand from the accused, and merely with a view to render necessary assistance in the detection of the crime cannot be said to be an accomplice in the commission of the offence under S. 161, because he has not the mens rea that he is paying the amount to secure a favour from the accused. It cannot be said that he aided or abetted the offence of illegal gratification by the accused: I.L.R. (1957) Ker. 559: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 443: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 134.

Where a person had given bribes to the accused on previous occasions, it is proper to require the same degree of corroboration for his evidence in regard to the alleged bribe as in the case of an accomplice: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 111: 1960 Cr.L.J. 934. See also (1987) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 672.

A person who has given bribe to the accused is an accomplice and his testimony needs to be corroborated before it can be relied upon on the question of the purpose for which he gave the money to the accused: A.I.R. 1955 Pepsu 156: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1387.

Bribe-givers are of various categories. The unblushing one who pays the bribe to get an advantage and subsequently gives evidence for some ulterior purpose, he is an accomplice of the darkest hue. At the other extreme is the person who from the beginning has no intention of giving a bribe but make a show of offering and doing it so as to bring the dishonest public servant to book; such a one is far from being an accomplice, a good citizen to be respected and encouraged. Between the two there are many gradations and consequently need more or less corroboration by independent testimony. There is the giver who goes half way with the intention of paying but for some reason beyond his control thinks it wise and safe to report to the authorities and becomes a witness. He ranks next to the unblushing type. Another who changes his mind without external pressure is still technically an accomplice and ranks next and is not so unreliable as the other two below him. The professional spy or decoy who gives the bribe for pecuniary or other advantage though not an accomplice is still a suspect all the same and requires corroboration. If the decoy is not acting for gain but being the victim of the demand for bribe helps spontaneously, from a sense of the citizens' duty, he is a reliable and respectable witness: A.I.R. 1951 Vindh. Pra. 17: 52 Cr.L.J. 561.

It all depends on the circumstances of each case as to whether the bribe-giver, that is the complainant was willing to give bribe or that he was compelled and reluctantly agreed to give bribe. If he was not willing to give bribe but under the circumstances was compelled to agree to give bribe then he cannot be treated as an abetter and his evidence cannot be treated as evidence of an accomplice and if the Court feels it safe to rely on the evidence of that witness after due caution, the order of conviction can be passed on the evidence of that witness and there is no need of independent corroboration of his evidence like that of an accomplice. However, if the Court feels it not safe to implicitly rely on the evidence of that witness, the Court may seek corroboration from other evidence. In a case where the Panch witnesses turned hostile and/or are found to be not independent, in such a case looking to the facts and circumstances of each case, the Court may rely on the evidence of the complainant and also that of the Police Officer for the purpose of convicting the accused when the attending circumstances are consistent with the guilt and not consistent with the innocence of the accused. [A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1453, Foll.]: (1987-1) 7 Guj.L.H. 364: (1987-2) 28 Guj.L.R. 878 (D.B.).

After introduction of S. 165-A of the I.P.Code making the person who offers bribe guilty of abetment of bribery the complainant cannot be placed on any better footing than that of an accomplice and corroboration in material particulars connecting the accused with the crime has to be insisted upon: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1191.

There is no reason why the evidence of an accomplice should be disbelieved, although necessarily it has to be received with caution, as it is generally regarded with suspicion. The rule of the Court which requires corrboration of the evidence of an accomplice, if it applies at all, applies with very little force to a case of bribery or receipt of illegal gratification under S. 161, I.P. Code. In such cases, the persons who pay the bribe and those who act as intermediaries are the only persons who can ordinarily be expected to give evidence about the receipt of bribe. The objections to the evidence of an accomplice cannot really apply where the alleged accomplice (the person paying the bribe) is not a willing participant in the offence, but is really a victim of that offence: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 276: 1949 Nag.L.J. 92: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 342; A.I.R. 1952 Tripura 2: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1201.

Case under S. 161, Indian Penal Code—Complainant's evidence—Corroboration—Necessity: 1959 Cr.L.J. 34: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 30.

Trial of offences under Prevention of Corruption Act—Persons giving illegal gratification under coercion and fear of being harassed are not accomplice—Their evidence is not required to be corroborated: (1968) 3 S.C.R. 189: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 668: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 17.

Receiver of bribe in relation to the giver is an accomplice—He is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars: 1967 Cr.L.J. 691: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 155.

By and large a citizen is somewhat reluctant, rather than anxious, to complain to the Vigilance Department and to have a trap arranged even if illegal gratification is demanded by a Government servant. Ordinarily, it is only when a citizen feels oppressed by a feeling of being wronged and finds the situation to be beyond endurance, that he adopts the course of approaching the Vigilance Department for laying a trap. His evidence cannot, therefore, be easily or lightly brushed aside. Of course, it cannot be gainsaid that it does not mean that the Court should be oblivious of the need for caution and circumspection bearing in mind that one can conceive of cases where an honest or strict Government official may be falsely implicated by a vindictive person to whose demand, for showing favours, or for according a special treatment by giving a go-by to the rules, the official refuses to yield: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1453: 1983 All.L.J. 1170: (1984) 1 S.C.C. 254.

In a case under S. 165-A, Penal Code, the complainant and the person to whom bribe had been tendered must be regarded as a witness whose evidence should be corroborated before the same can be acted upon. Where the witness directly proving the tendering of the bribe is the full brother of the person to whom bribe was offered, his evidence has to be taken with some caution: 1956 Cr.L.J. 991: A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 385.

Being accomplices to the commission of crime because of their statements of payment of bribe-moneys to the appellant for three months, the evidence of these two self-condemned persons, who, on their own showing, had thrown moral scruples and sense of honesty, if they had any, to the winds for which, instead of refusing to meet the demand of the appellant, they had willingly paid bribe-amounts for three months would be unworthy of credit without corroboration in material particulars and through reliable sources. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1382, Foll.]: (1985) 59 Cut.L.T. 510.

True, the person paying the gratification is, in a way, viewed from a wide angle, an accomplice; but before his evidence is dubbed as unworthy of credit for want of corroboration, it deserves a pragmatic or realistic approach. Where the bribe-giver voluntarily went to the offender and persuaded him to accept the bribe, he is an undiluted accomplice and as a rule of prudence, the Court should insist on independent corroboration; but if, on the other hand, he was persuaded to give, he actually became a victim of the offender's persuasion; to name him an accomplice and reject his testimony for want of corroboration would sometimes be unrealistic and imprudent. The Court must always bear in mind that insistence on corroboration is not based on any rule of law, but is a caution of prudence. On occasions where bribe giving or payment of gratification was done in a way that independent persons had no occasion to witness it, corroboration may not be possible; but when the accused collected amounts from persons with the promise to secure recruitments for them and not being able to get them recruited, he returned the money to them through cheques which bounced, held, there was thus, sufficient corroboration to the evidence of the bribe-givers; the accused was liable to be convicted: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1005 (Ker.).

Bribe giver—If accomplice: 1960 M.L.J. (Cr.) 695 (Ker.).

Where the person giving bribe had no intention of achieving his purpose by paying it but only in order to expose the conduct of the public servant and to bring him to book, he paid the amount as directed by the Police, held, he could not be treated as an accomplice: 1995 Cr.L.J. 955 (Mad.).

A person who is not a willing party to the giving a bribe and who is only actuated by the motive of trapping another cannot be regarded as an accomplice, but the evidence of such a witness is that of a partisan witness who was out to entrap another. A partisan witness merely means a person who is interested in the prosecution. There is no rule that in the case of an interested witness there must always be independent corroboration. The Courts must always weigh the evidence with particular caution, and if after scrutinizing the evidence of an interested witness, the Court finds it safe to accept such evidence, then independent corroboration is not necessary.

Whether a Panch acted as a Panch witness after the raid is over or during the course of the raid, he cannot be treated as a partisan witness unless the idea to make a raid originated from him. In order to provide independent evidence of what happened in the course of a raid, it is always necessary that the Police should get the assistance of independent Panchas and it is not reasonable to stigmatise Panchas are not independent but interested witnesses simply because they do their duty of providing independent evidence as to what happened in the course of the raid: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 50: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 1.

Where the complainant, a Minister, who was offered a large bribe for a favour, gives impression of being interested and upon his complaint the conversation between the Minister and the accused is tape recorded, held, this not being a case wherein the demand emanated from the public servant, the Minister was not in the position of an accomplice; the accused could be convicted on the Minister's uncorroborated statement; on facts, the Minister's statement was amply corroborated: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2863 (Bom.).

One Nandlal was not a willing party to the giving of the bribe to the accused. The proposal came from the accused and it was only under the fear of being illegally detained by him that Nandlal apparently agreed to pay him the sum demanded. Soon after his release from the pressure of the accused, Nandlal contacted one Bhuramal and with his help secured the assistance of the Anti-Corruption Police in trapping the accused. He sought the assistance of the Anti-Corruption Police as he had been harassed by the accused. He did not want to pay bribe to the accused, but wanted to get him arrested. Held, that this clearly showed that Nandlal was altogether unwilling to pay the bribe demanded by the accused, but gave his seeming consent simply to get away from the accused. Nandlal, therefore, could not be said to be an accomplice and could be described only as a partisan witness. Held further that one Patel helped Nandlal out of a difficult position by agreeing to stand as a surety for him for the payment of the bribe and thus obtained his release for the time being. He also was not an altogether willing party to the giving of bribe to the accused. However, in view of the fact that the amount of bribe was settled by the accused through his instrumentality, some suspicion could be entertained against him that he was not so unwilling regarding the payment of bribe as was Nandlal. Hence, this witness was more or less in the position of an accomplice: 1958 Raj.L.W. 596.

Where several Railway servants are prosecuted under S. 120-B, Penal Code, and S. 5, Prevention of Corruption Act, for having entered into a conspiracy not to allot wagons or book goods without extracing bribes at a time when there was great shortage of wagons, the Forwarding Agents and the Commission Agents or Merchants, who were alleged to have paid bribes to the accused in order to get as many wagons or booking as possible, such persons cannot be treated as the victims of bribery. They took full advantage of the alleged corruption to enrich themselves and cannot be treated as any thing other than accomplices. If the Forwarding Agents are treated as accomplices, their evidence must receive independent corroboration in respect of each of the accused persons from evidence which is not tainted before prudence will allow it to be accepted. In such circumstances, the evidence of one Forwarding Agent will not be sufficient to corroborate the evidence of others, nor will complaints made by them earlier to the authorities be a corroboration of the nature required. If the evidence of the Forwarding Agents or one or more of them is of such exceptional character as to indicate that it must be true, a conviction based on that evidence will not be illegal but in considering this fact care must be taken not to allow the mind to be influenced by general allegations of wholesale bribery rampant in the Railway Goods Booking Department. In considering whether there was sufficient independent corroboration, the principle that the corroboration must be on some material particular not only bearing upon the facts of the crime but upon the accused's implication in it, must not be lost sight of. Sufficient corroboration of the general allegation of bribery is not sufficient: 1956 Cr.L.J. 687: A.I.R. 1956 All. 358.

Where D was accused of taking bribe and was tried for the offence under S. 161, Penal Code and S. 5(2) read with S. 5(1) (d), Prevention of Corruption Act, and J the bribe-giver was a person against whom investigation for the offence of black-marketing was pending and D was convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of J that D demanded a bribe from J and another on pain of being prosecuted for black-marketing and therefore, he informed the authorities and a trap was laid for D. Held, that considering the fact of investigation of the offence of black-marketing against J and another was pending, J was interested in entrapping the accused and therefore, conviction could not be based on the evidence of J without independent corroboration: A.I.R. 1951 Simla 14.

29. Bribery cases—Generally.—Corroboration by independent evidence connecting the accused with the crime of bribery is necessary where the witnesses are in the position of trap witnesses against whom allegations of ill-will towards the accused are made and one of such witness had admittedly been convicted of an offence described as "forgery". Corroboration need not be by direct evidence that the accused received bribe. It is sufficient even though it is circumstantial evidence which connects him with the crime: 1968 Cr.L.J. 391 (All.).

It does not seem to be law that if the money given as bribe is provided by a particular officer of the Police then the evidence of all the witnesses become evidence of accomplices and must be looked at with suspicion. As regards corroboration of accomplice witnesses, it is not necessary that there should be independent corroboration of every material circumstance. All that is required is that there must be some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice or the complainant is true and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of the connection of the accused with the crime: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1380: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 961.

Party presenting document for registration to Sub-Registrar—At the suggestion of the peon in the office of the Sub-Registrar that the Sub-Registrar expected some money for early return of the document, party paying some money to the Sub-Registrar and latter accepting same—Held, party could not be said to be an accomplice but all that could be said was that she was an interested witness—Court, held, should call for some corroboration before her evidence was accepted: 1961 M.L.J. (Cr.) 692: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 44.

Where the Panch witness had been specially selected with the assistance of informant, held, version of those witnesses being highly unnatural, it merited rejection: (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. (U.J.) 21 (D.B.).

Where sole evidence on which the prosecution hinged was that of decoy witness and he was the person who played the role of bribe-giver and the explanation given by the appellant was found to be probable, held, without any corroboration of the evidence of said witness, it would be risky to convict the appellant: 1989 Cr.L.J. 172 (Ori.).

Charge of corrupt practice of bribery at an election—In election cases it is unsafe to base a finding of such corrupt practice on uncorroborated testimony of accomplices: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1199: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 416 (F.B.).

Where out of the two accused tried for the offence of bribery the statement made by one under S. 342, Cr.P.Code is exclamatory, it cannot be used as evidence against the other accused, the conclusion arrived at by this method will be illegal: 1961 M.P.L.J. 721: 1961 M.P.C. 778.

30. Applicability of rule that accomplice is unworthy of credit to departmental proceedings.—Rule of evidence that accomplice is unworthy of credit has no application to departmental proceedings—If delinquent public servant is made aware that accomplice's report would be used against him and is given opportunity to cross-examine the accomplice, authorities can act upon report of accomplice: 1966 B.L.J.R. 825.

Departmental enquiry—Enquiry Officer can act on uncorroborated testimony of accomplice or partisan witnesses: (1965) 2 Mys.L.J. 490: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 220.

Conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice—Rules of evidence as prescribed by the Evidence Act, however, do not strictly apply to departmental proceedings against a servant: (1981) 2 Serv.L.J. 507: 1981 Lab.I.C. 741 (All.).

The evidence of an accomplice in departmental enquiries is legal evidence; but the rule of caution requires that the disciplinary Tribunal should not act on that evidence unless it is corroborated or the Tribunal has, after cautioning itself as to the danger of acting solely on accomplice evidence, decided after the deliberation to accept it. [1971 Ker.L.T. 865, Rel. on]. Courts have held that in departmental enquiries, the evidence of an accomplice is not necessarily unacceptable: (1979) 1 Serv.L.R. 479: 1979 Lab.I.C. (N.O.C.) 125 (Ker.).

31. Delay in making statement—Effect.—Long delay in making their statements, would make evidence of accomplices liable to grave suspicion: 67 I.C. 828(2): 2 L.L.J. 296.

To support a conviction on the statement of an approver especially of one whose initial statement was very long delayed, the statement requires material corroboration connecting each individual accused with the crime committed: 63 I.C. 612: 22 Cr.L.J. 676 (L.); 10 O.L.J. 280: A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 65. See also 1929 Mad.W.N. 698 (mere presence of a person in the house is not such a corroboration). See also A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 309; 6 Mys.L.J. 419; 34 Pat.L.R. 866; (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 934: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 114; 150 I.C. 21: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 346; (1943) 56 Mad.L.W. 737: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 634 (F.B.); I.L.R. 22 Pat. 681: A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 67.

The evidence of a witness who was cognizant of the crime and who did not divulge it until pressed by the Police needs very careful scrutiny, and a Court would be justified in a particular case in not acting upon the evidence of such a witness unless there are circumstances to lend support to his evidence. But this does not mean that the corroboration which the Court requires in such a case is of that kind of corroboration which one requires in the case of the evidence of an approver or an accomplice: I.L.R. (1956) Madh. Bh. 104: A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 262.

Where the co-accused turned an approver after about 20 months from the date of occurrence and his statements made before the Police were recorded four months after the occurrence, copies of which were not made available to the defence, held, no reliance could be placed on his evidence: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 226: 1984 Cr.L.J. 164: (1984) 1 S.C.C. 686.

Where an approver's testimony recorded 7 or 8 years after the event implicated a new person and was not corroborated, held, the rule of caution required its rejection: 1984 Cr.L.R. 266 (Guj.).

32. Antecedents of approver—Effect.—This rule is not rendered inapplicable by the personal conduct and antecedents of the approver or by the absence of motive on his part or on the part of the investigating agency to implicate individual accused: 148 I.C. 745: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 583.

Approver—Evidence of—Value of—Corroboration—Necessity—Duty of Court—Antecedents of approver how far affects value of his evidence: 1966 Cr.L.J. 949: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1273.

Where the approver gave a correct picture of the case and his statement was corroborated by other evidence which was on record of the case, held, he was a reliable witness. Merely because some other criminal cases were pending against him would not make his conduct unbelievable: 1985 Raj.L.W. 658.

33. Retracted statement is admissible.—A retracted statement of an approver is admissible as evidence against an accused person: 61 I.C. 528: 12 Mad.L.W. 1385. A resiled statement of an accomplice naturally must be subjected to greater scrutiny. It is no doubt open to the Sessions Judge to admit in evidence such a resiled statement and treat it as substantive evidence but, in order to act upon the same, great caution and care is highly essential: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 455: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 182. May be sufficient corroboration of the approver's story as against himself but not against a co-accused: 20 Cr.L.J. 188: 49 I.C. 604. If there is no other reliable evidence in corroboration, the evidence of the approver coupled with the retracted confession of a co-accused is not sufficient for conviction: I.L.R. 55 All. 91: A.I.R. 1933 All. 31: 1932 All.L.J. 1125.

34. Evidence of accomplice who was not granted pardon.—Where a person was not granted a formal pardon but was examined under S. 10, Gambling Act, he is not an approver and therefore, his evidence can be accepted without corroboration: L.R. 1 All. (Cr.) 101.

Retaining accomplices without judicial pardon—Whether objectionable: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117.

Person accused along with others not tendered pardon for purpose of examining him as a witness—If can be examined as an accomplice or approver: 1978 M.P.L.J. 547.

Where the tender of pardon was made by a Magistrate without complying with the provisions of S. 337, Cr.P.Code, the tender of pardon was illegal, and therefore, the approver's evidence must be excluded: I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 742: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 31: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 165: 1958 Cr.L.J. 343.

Withdrawal of pardon granted to a person—Competency as witness against other accused—Refusal of prosecution to examine—No bar to his examination at fresh trial necessitated by retirement of Sessions Judge: 1961 Raj.L.W. 188: A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 274.

35. Evidence of co-accused against whom charge was unconditionally withdrawn.—The co-accused against whom a charge has been unconditionally withdrawn is a more reliable witness than the accomplice who is examined under conditional pardon although proper corroboration is necessary in both cases: 144 I.C. 74: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 148.

Evidence of person not charge-sheeted by Police—How far reliable: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

36. Evidence of convicted and sentenced accused.—The evidence of an accomplice who has been convicted and sentenced and has nothing to gain or lose deserves greater weight than that of an approver: 1952 Cr.L.J. 15: A.I.R. 1951 Him. Pra. 75. See also 14 I.C. 607.

Transport of rice without permit in lorry in contravention of Orissa Food Grains Control Order—Lorry stopped by Police and rice seized before crossing Orissa border—Conviction of driver separately for offence—Trial of person who arranged for transport—Driver—Evidence of—Admissibility against person for whom he drove lorry—Corroboration. See A.I.R. 1952 Ori. 164: 17 Cut.L.T. 154.

37. Punter — Value of evidence.—A punter cannot be considered to be an independent witness. Such a witness being sent by the Police is obviously a witness under their influence. Hence, the evidence of such a witness required corroboration in order to base a conviction thereon: A.I.R. 1954 Madh. Bh. 145: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1347. It is not correct to say that the evidence of the punter should be accepted with caution. If the punter's evidence is corroborated by other evidence on record, it can be safely used to convict an accused person: 1957 Cr.L.J. 510: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 17.

The punter is not in the same position as that of an accomplice. He is certainly entitled to great credit and his evidence is entitled to great value than that of accomplice.

The principles applicable to cases under the Gambling Act would not be applicable to cases relating to the evidence of an accomplice. Even in the case of an accomplice's evidence, corroboration is not necessary in law, but in practice it is necessary at least in one material particular. There is a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The same rule would apply to every witness, who is unworthy of credit. For the same reasons, the evidence of a punter and of Police Investigating Officer who are interested in securing conviction, is unworthy of credit, and there is no reason why the principles applicable to one type of witness who is unworthy of credit, viz., an accomplice, should not apply to another type of witness who is unworthy of credit for different reasons. But as to the extent of corroboration, it is not necessary that there should be independent corroboration in all material particulars: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 253: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 141: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 188.

Conviction of an accused on a charge of gambling (in this case under S. 13, Rajasthan Public Gambling Ordinance, 1949) should not be founded merely on the evidence of a punter, such evidence being tainted and the Courts should always require independent corroboration of his evidence before a conviction can be safely founded on it. Finding of a marked or a signed currency note in cases of this type is by itself entirely insufficient to justify a conviction: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 842: 1960 Raj.L.W. 528.

A conviction cannot be sustained on the uncorroborated evidence of a decoy punter: (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 439: 1960 Cr.L.J. 275(1): A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 72.

It is not necessary in law to have corroboration to the evidence of the P.S.I. and the Panch witnesses in a prosecution under S. 12 of the Gambling Act. Of course, the evidence of a Panch in cases under S. 12 of the Gambling Act has to be appreciated in the ordinary manner and after giving good reasons it is open to a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge to reject the evidence of the punter. But where the Magistrate has accepted the evidence of the punter giving detailed reasons, the High Court will not interfere with the finding in revision: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 87: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 733.

38. Confession—Value of.—S. 30 of the Act, does not compel a Court to accept the confession of a co-accused as corroboration of the approver's evidence. It only empowers the Court to take into consideration such confession as against the person jointly tried with him or against the person who makes such a confession. Though an accomplice's evidence is legal evidence and not excluded by any of the provisions of the Evidence Act, it has been held as a rule of practice that such evidence should not be accepted as corroborative evidence. The same principle should apply in the case of a confessional statement: (1949) 2 M.L.J. 428; 76 I.A. 147. See also (1948-49) 53 Cal.W.N. 609: A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 257: (1949) 2 M.L.J. 194 (P.C.).

Confession of co-accused—Value of: A.I.R. 1957 Ori. 172: 1957 Cr.L.J. 902.

Where there is a single retracted confession corroborating other accomplice evidence, the caution must necessarily be still greater and the probative value smaller. Even if there are more than one such confession and they are proved to be given independently and without an opportunity for a prior concert, the probative value may increase but the need for caution remains because a number of suspects may be promoted by the same or different motives to embroil a particular individual. It is only when false implication is excluded after close scrutiny that confession of a co-accused can be used to lend assurance to other evidence. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54, Foll.]: (1968) 2 S.C.R. 641: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1017: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 832.

Courts must exercise great caution if there are circumstances which indicate inducement or pressure which is not recognised by law: 148 I.C. 745: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 583. See also (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 2. Confession of one accused cannot be said to be corroborated by the confession of another as against a third accused who has not confessed at all. But between the first two the confession of one may be said to be corroborated by the confession of the second and vice versa: 60 I.C. 786: 22 Cr.L.J. 290(L.).

Where there is nothing against an accused person but a confession made by a co-accused from the dock at the trial, a conviction cannot be supported: 118 I.C. 512: A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 285.

The confession of an accomplice should be subjected to the most anxious scrutiny in so far as it incriminates others, and received with caution as it is not sifted by cross-examination: 14 Cr.L.J. 179: 19 I.C. 179; 16 Cr.L.J. 233: 8 S.L.R. 203; 103 I.C. 49: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 581; 24 All.L.J. 1050; 99 I.C. 929: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 78.

Confession of co-accused if can be taken into account in considering evidence of accomplice: (1965) 67 Bom.L.R. 317: I.L.R. (1965) Bom. 648: A.I.R. 1965 Bom. 195.

An approver's evidence supported by the retracted confession of a co-accused behind the back of the accused is not sufficient to convict the accused. Such a retracted confession is not a corroboration of a high value: 18 I.C.672: 11 All.L.J. 73.

Extra-judicial confession—Corroboration by approver—Sufficiency: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 52: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1254.

Confession of co-accused, even if voluntary and free from any taint or infirmity cannot form basis of conviction of accused: (1966) 1 An. L.T. 209.

Retracted confession of accused—Confession voluntary and true—General corroboration sufficient to sustain conviction on such confession—Confession of co-accused implicating him and others—Corroboration in material particulars necessary—Differences in the confessions of one accused and the other—Effect: 32 Cut.L.T. 1140.

The confession of a co-accused cannot, however, be used as a substantive evidence in the sense that a conviction on that alone can stand. Under S. 30 of the Evidence Act, the Court may "take into consideration" the confession of a co-accused. The confession can be used only in support of other evidence and cannot be made the foundation of a conviction. If there is no other evidence, and if the other evidence in the case is insufficient to establish a prima facie case against the accused, the confession must be excluded from consideration. The confession cannot be used to supplement evidence otherwise insufficient and in no case, can it be used to fill a gap in the prosecution evidence: (1978) 46 Cut.L.T. 496.

Merely because the statement of the co-accused recorded under S. 108 of the Customs Act, 1961 is retracted subsequently by the co-accused, it cannot be said that it is no evidence. Conviction can be based by the Court even on the sole retracted statement of the co-accused recorded under S. 108 of that Act, provided that the Court is satisfied that said retracted statement of the co-accused is otherwise reliable and trustworthy, after considering the attending circumstances of the case. At the most it can be said that it would be risky to base conviction on the sole retracted statement of the co-accused; but it can never be said that no conviction can be based on the retracted statement of the co-accused: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2800 (Guj.).

Where in a case there are confessions of co-accused and approvers, Court has to ask itself whether they are reliable, whether what they have stated is true or corroborated and whether the corroboration is sufficient to incriminate any or all of the other accused. Where the approver's evidence is corroborated almost in every particular by medical evidence, all that can be said is that his evidence would be sufficient to convict the accused if there is sufficient independent corroboration not only corroborating his evidence but also corroborating implication of the other accused in the crime: I.L.R. (1979) Bom. 380 (D.B.).

Where in a joint trial, confession of co-accused inculpating the accused is admitted against the accused and the confessing co-accused does not testify, the accused's rights under confrontation clause of the Sixth Amendment of the American Constitution are violated, notwithstanding instructions to the jury to consider the confession as evidence only against the co-accused.

But where there is other overwhelming evidence of accused's guilt, and where the evidence supplied through confession is only cumulative, the constitutional error of violation of confrontation clause is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt so as not to warrant reversal of accused's conviction: (1969) 23 Law Ed. 2nd 284: A.I.R. 1970 U.S.S.C. 15.

Confession of an accused cannot be used to corroborate the evidence of an approver because such a confession is a tainted piece of evidence and cannot be placed on a higher footing than the evidence of the approver itself but the retracted confession of the accused may be relied upon against himself along with other evidence to prove his guilt: 1977 W.L.N. 379.

Examination of self-confessed criminal in conspiracy as witness—Propriety and legality—Objection to admissibility of testimony: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1124: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 938.

Accomplice evidence—Taking accomplice evidence outside S. 337, Cr.P.Code, by using S. 494 or otherwise—Power to tender self-confessed criminal as witness instead of trying him as accused—No violation of Arts. 14 and 20: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1124: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 938.

A retracted confession is in itself a tainted piece of evidence and stands in need of corroboration and it is absolutely unsafe to seek corroboration of the accomplice evidence by retracted confession: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1979: A.I.R. 1952 J.&K. 36.

Retracted confession of accused—Corroboration required—Difference between evidence of accomplice and confession of accused: (1958) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 130: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 66. Confession of co-accused retracted later—Use of as corroborative evidence against other accused and against himself: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 680: A.I.R. 1964 Ori.144.

39. Miscellaneous.—Witness neither accomplice nor anything analogous to an accomplice but an ordinary witness—As a general rule, Court may act on testimony of such solitary witness without corroboration unless circumstances of a particular case necessitated corroboration: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 424.

Examination of approver as witness after other witnesses—Propriety: 1968 Cr.L.J. 514: A.I.R. 1968 Manipur 34.

Corroboration evidence is a question of law: (1927-28) 32 Cal.W.N. 945.

Where the accused sought to impeach the testimony of a witness as that of an accomplice, held, the burden lies on the accused to convince the Court by his own testimony or some other material on record that the witness could aptly be described as an accomplice: A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 26: 1971 Cr.L.J. 786.

Accomplice whether to be joined as accused: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

Classification is permissible if there is nexus between classification and purpose to be achieved—Accused cannot be put in the same position as that of witnesses by acquitting him: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

It is mainly the duty of the prosecution to bring the accomplice character of the evidence to the notice of the Court and then invite it to believe it by reference to the corroborative evidence on record. An accused is under no legal obligation to do so: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 215 See also I.L.R. 17 Luck. 516: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 221. Where the evidence of an accomplice is corroborated only as regards some accused conviction of others is bad: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 222. See also 146 I.C. 934: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 122.

Where the two witnesses who though regarded as independent, did not in fact corroborate anything that the accomplice witnesses had said, held, a finding that is recorded by the Courts below about the guilt of the accused, must be deemed to be a finding based upon no legal evidence: 1979 Bom.C.R. 30.

134. Number of witnesses.—No particular number of witnesses shall in any case be required for the proof of any fact.

Innocent purchasers of smuggled gold—Evidence of—Corroboration not necessary: (1960) 62 Bom.L.R. 634: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 229: A.I.R. 1961 Bom. 48.

Approver's evidence and corroborating piece of evidence cannot be treated separately: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1762.

Where a charge of conspiracy depends upon the evidence of an approver, the Judge should make up his mind whether he is going to believe the approver and if he thinks that the approver's evidence is unsatisfactory and suspicious, he could disbelieve it altogether. If on the contrary, he comes to the conclusion that inasmuch as there is corroborative evidence, it does not matter much whether the approver is telling the truth or not, he would be approaching the case from a wrong point of view: 66 Cal.L.J. 575. See also I.L.R. 22 Pat. 681: A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 67; I.L.R. 13 Luck. 115: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 259; I.L.R. 12 Luck. 415: A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 413 (accessory after crime); A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 513.

Where the entire case of murder and rape depended on the approver's testimony which found no corroboration and did not inspire the Court's confidence, held, the accused, in the spirit of the high traditions of the country's criminal jurisprudence, cannot be sent to the gallows even if there is a lurking doubt in the Court's mind about the guilt of some of them: 1991 Cr.L.J. 859 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Conviction of an accused under S. 201, I.P.Code based on the uncorroborated testimony of accomplices cannot be sustained when it appears that these accomplices have not given any clear evidence connecting the accused with the crime and the Sessions Judge has not indicated in his judgment any reason as to why he believed the uncorroborated testimony of these accomplices: 26 Cut.L.T. 638.

Where the finding of the High Court on the essential part of the prosecution story in respect of the charge under S. 467, I.P.Code, really rested on the evidence of the accomplice uncorroborated by any other evidence. Held, that the High Court erred in law in making a finding against the appellant in respect of the charge under S. 467 and the conviction should be set aside: I.L.R. (1962) 2 All. 904: (1963) 2 S.C.R. 121: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1573.

1. Scope and principle of section.—Under S. 134 no minimun number of witnesses is prescribed by law to prove a fact. At the same time the law does not lay down that the statement of witnesses must necessarily be accepted as true unless the opposite party produces evidence of its own to contradict them: 1942 All.W.R. (Rev.) 277(1): 1942 R.D. 486(2). See also 10 W.R. 236: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 408.

A single witness, if believed is sufficient to prove the facts alleged: (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 696: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 226; I.L.R. (1952) Nag. 700: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 154. Court is concerned with quality and not quantity of evidence; section is based on the maxim that evidence is to be "weighed" and not "counted": (1988) 2 Karn.L.J. 69: I.L.R. (1988) Karn. 1805 (D.B.).

Under S. 134 no particular number of witnesses would be required in any case to prove any fact. The testimony of a single witness, if believed is sufficient to establish any fact. It is not the number of witnesses who matter but the quality of evidence led: 1966 Cr.L.J. 522: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 194.

Per Das, C.J.—There is no rule of law that the uncorroborated testimony of one witness cannot be accepted. If there is any such rule, it is a rule of prudence, and whether that rule should be adopted or not will depend on the circumstances of each case: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 384.

As a general rule, a Court can and may act on the testimony of a single witness though uncorroborated. Unless corroboration was insisted upon by statute, the Court should not insist on corroboration except in cases where the nature of testimony of the single witness itself required the same as a rule of prudence. The question of corroboration arises only in regard to a witness who is neither wholly reliable nor wholly unreliable in which the Court should be circumspect. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 614, Foll.]: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 405: 1970 Mah.L.J. 634: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438 (D.B.).

The law does not provide number of witnesses to be examined in a particular case. One witness, if he is reliable, is sufficient to prove any fact. It is the quality that matters, not the quantity: 1968 Jab.L.J. 737: 1968 M.P.L.J. 745.

O. 16, R. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure not having laid down the number of witnesses which a party can produce, the field is clearly left open by the Legislature for the trial Court. The first duty cast upon the Courts is to control the proceedings and do substantial justice, and it being not the legislative interest to allow any number of witnesses which party may wish to summon, the Courts must apply their mind in the context of the nature of the litigation, the number and nature of the issues, the party on which the onus is placed and the specified purpose for which a witness is summoned and determine as to the witnesses required in the case; it cannot be left to the whims and fancies of the party summoning them: A.I.R. 1995 J.&K. 32.

2. Matrimonial matters.—S. 134, embodies the principle that sufficiency of evidence is not a matter of number or quantity but of quality, the need for corroboration arises not because the evidence is of an interested person but because the evidence of the party is such as does not inspire confidence. The rules of evidence are not different in divorce cases under the Indian Divorce Act than elsewhere and there is no minimum standard of proof necessary: (1994-1) 113 Mad.L.W. 544.

Husband's petition for dissolution of marriage—Grounds of wife's adultery and desertion—Both respondents remaining ex parte—Petitioner examining himself alone—No corroboration—His evidence held sufficient for relief sought for: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 91: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 457 (S.B.).

Wife's petition for nullity of marriage on ground of husband's incapacity—Testimony only of wife available—Corroboration not essential if evidence is reliable—Standard of proof required: A.I.R. 1970 Guj. 43: (1969) 10 Guj.L.R. 661.

Petition for judicial separation—Number of witnesses—Test is qualitative and not quantitative—Corroboration is not matter of law but a matter of precaution: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 502.

Issue of paternity of child—Evidence of mother alone—Sufficiency: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 67.

3. Departmental enquiry.—Misconduct by worker—Enquiry by management—Principles of natural justice—Requirements as to—Charge against workman of participation in assault on officers—Enquiry by assaulted officers themselves—Enquiry consisting merely of putting questions to each workman in turn—There is travesty of principles of natural justice—Enquiry vitiated—De novo enquiry by Tribunal—Insistence on corroboration before accepting evidence of a single witness—Procedure held not erroneous as contravening S. 134, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1713: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 165.

4. Motor accident claim case.—It is well known that if there are a large number of witnesses who witnessed the accident, a selection may be made by the claimants. Thus, where in a motor accident claim case, eye-witnesses as well as the doctor who conducted post-mortem had been produced, held, non-production of any other witness such as the shop-keepers of the area where the accident occurred or the Investigating Officer, could not cause any adverse inference to the claimants' case: A.I.R. 1986 Del. 94: (1986) 29 Del.L.T. 223: 1986 Rajdhani L.R. 102.

5. Criminal cases—General.—In criminal cases it is the weight of the evidence and not the number of witnesses which the Court has to consider and one credible witness outweighs the testimony of a number of witnesses of indifferent character and unless corroboration is insisted upon by statutes, Courts should not insist on corroboration except in cases where the nature of the testimony of single witness itself requires it as a rule of prudence. It can by no means be laid down as a general maxim that the assertion of the witnesses is more convincing to the mind than the assertion of one witness. An accused can be convicted even on the basis of the evidence of a single eye-witness; but such a witness must be a man or woman of worth. There is no law which requires the Sub-Inspector's evidence like that of an accomplice, to be corroborated in material particulars before it can be acted upon. The evidence of the Sub-Inspector will succeed or fail exactly like that of any other material witness: (1957) 70 Mad.L.W. 1012.

The general rule recognised in S. 134, which by laying down that "no particular number of witnesses shall, in any case, be required for the proof of any fact" has enshrined the well-recognised maxim that "Evidence has to be weighed and not counted". It is not seldom that a crime has been committed in the presence of only one witness, leaving aside those cases which are not of uncommon occurrence, where determination of guilt depends entirely on circumstantial evidence. If the Legislature were to insist upon plurality of witnesses, cases where the testimony of a single witness only could be available in proof of the crime, would go unpunished. It is here that the discretion of the Presiding Judge comes into play. The matter thus must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the quality of the evidence of the single witness whose testimony has to be either accepted or rejected. If such a testimony is found by the Court to be entirely reliable, there is no legal impediment to the conviction of the accused person on such proof. Even as the guilt of an accused person may be proved by the testimony of a single witness, the innocence of an accused person may be established on the testimony of a single witness, even though a considerable number of witnesses may be forth coming to testify to the truth of the case for the prosecution. Generally speaking, oral testimony in this context may be classified into three categories, namely (1) wholly reliable, (2) wholly unreliable, (3) neither wholly reliable nor wholly unreliable. In the first category of proof, the Court should have no difficulty in coming to its conclusion either way—it may convict or may acquit on the testimony of a single witness, if it is found to be above reproach or suspicion of interestedness, incompetence or subordination. In the second category, the Court equally has no difficulty in coming to its conclusion. It is in the third category of cases, that the Court has to be circumspect and has to look for corroboration in material particulars by reliable testimony, direct or insisting on plurality of witnesses. Irrespective of the quality of the oral evidence of a single witness, if Courts were to insist on plurality of witnesses in proof of any fact, they will be indirectly encouraging subordination of witnesses. Situation may arise and do arise where only a single person is available to give evidence in support of a disputed fact. The Court naturally has to weigh carefully such a testimony and if it is satisfied that the evidence is reliable and free from all taints which tend to render oral testimony open to suspicion, it becomes its duty to act upon such testimony. There are exceptions to this rule, for example, in cases of sexual offences, these are cases in which the oral testimony is, by its very nature, suspect, being that of a participator in crime. But, where there are no such exceptional reasons operating, it becomes the duty of the Court to convict, if it is satisfied that the testimony of a single witness is entirely reliable: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 614.

The unus nullus rule of English law that one is equal to none has been done away within S. 134 of the Evidence Act which lays down the general rule applicable to all cases that no particular number of witnesses shall in any case be required for the proof of any fact. Even in England the said rule applies only in certain classes of cases. Cases of bribery do not fall under any of those classes. Inspite of the universal nature of the provisions of S. 134, the English rule has been followed by Courts in India as a rule of caution and prudence, for example, in cases of perjury and in sexual cases. It has not been applied to cases of bribery: 1952 Cr.L.J. 107: A.I.R. 1952 H.P. 1. Per Das C.J.—There is no rule of law that the uncorroborated testimony of one witness cannot be accepted. If there is any such rule, it is a rule of prudence, and whether that rule should be adopted or not will depend on the circumstances of each case: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 384. See also A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 164; 1957 B.L.J.R. 149; 1959 M.P.L.J. 98: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 31.

S. 134 merely follows the maxim that evidence is to be weighed and not counted. In any case the testimony of a single witness, if believed, is sufficient to establish any fact. As a rule of prudence, however, a Judge should seek for corroboration to fortify himself about the guilt of the accused if there is a speck of doubt in his mind relating to the testimony of that particular witness: 1955 B.L.J.R. 428: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 39.

As a general rule, a Court can and may act on the testimony of a single witness though uncorroborated. One credible witness outweighs the testimony of a number of other witnesses of indifferent character. Unless corroboration is insisted upon by statute, Courts should not insist on corroboration except in cases where the nature of the testimony of the single witness itself requires as a rule of prudence, that corroboration should be insisted upon, for example, in the case of a child witness, or of a witness whose evidence is that of an accomplice or of an analogous character. Whether corroboration of the testimony of a single witness is or is not necessary, must depend upon facts and circumstances of each case and no general rule can be laid down in a matter like this and much depends upon the judicial discretion of the Judge before whom the case comes: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 20: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 255.

The facts that the single witness is only a soda vendor and had been convicted for some petty offences are not by themselves sufficient grounds to reject his testimony. Held, that the version given by this witness was consistent with probabilities and that it was generally a true version of the occurrence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1362: I.L.R. (1968) 2 Ker. 303.

Conviction can be based on evidence of single witness if he is reliable—If witness is not wholly reliable, corroboration may be sought in material particulars: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 175.

There is no law that conviction cannot be based on the evidence of a solitary witness. It is only a rule of prudence rather than of law. If the evidence of the only witness is found reliable and free from any doubt, it can be well acted upon: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 454.

Under S. 134, no particular number of witnesses is required to prove a certain fact. It is the quality of the evidence and not the quantity which matters and if the statement of a solitary witness is consistent throughout and there are no major contradictions in his statements and the same inspires confidence in the Court, then the conviction can be based on the testimony of a solitary witness: 1981 Cr.L.R. 506 (Raj.).

Under S. 134 there is no restriction or limitation as to the number of witnesses which can be produced. Convincing and consistent evidence of a solitary witness, against whose veracity no attack can be levelled can constitute the basis of conviction for murder: 1969 Cr.L.J. 94 (Punj.).

As a general rule, a Court can and may act on the testimony of a single witness though uncorroborated. One credible witness outweighs the testimony of a number of other witnesses of doubtful veracity. It is left to the discretion of the Judge in each case to scan the evidence with great care and caution and find out whether it is wholly reliable. If such a testimony is found by the Court to be entirely reliable, there is no legal impediment to the conviction of the accused person on such proof. The Court is concerned with the quality and not with the quantity of the evidence necessary for proving or disproving a fact. Held, on scanning the evidence that it was extremely difficult to rely on the testimony of the witness in the instant case to find the accused guilty: 1963 Ker.L.J. 112: 1963 Ker.L.T. 325; 1979 Cr.L.R. 614: I.L.R. (1979) 29 Raj. 953: 1979 W.L.N. 501.

It is true that under the Evidence Act, trustworthy evidence given by a single witness would be enough to convict an accused person, whereas evidence given by half a dozen witnesses which is not trustworthy would not be enough to sustain the conviction. But where a criminal Court has to deal with evidence pertaining to the commission of an offence involving a large number of offenders and a large number of victims, it is usual to adopt the test that the conviction could be sustained only if it is supported by two or more witnesses who give a consistent account of the incident. In a sense, the test may be described as mechanical; but it cannot be treated as irrational or unreasonable. It is, no doubt, the quality of the evidence that matters and not the number of witnesses who give evidence. But sometimes it is useful to adopt a mechanical test: I.L.R. (1964) 2 All. 694: (1964) 8 S.C.R. 133: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 202.

Generally speaking, oral testimony may be classified into three categories: (1) wholly reliable, (2) wholly unreliable, and (3) neither of the two. In the first category, the Court has no difficulty in coming to the conclusion either way; it may convict or acquit on the testimony of the single witness, if his testimony is found to be above reapproach or suspicion of interestedness, incompetence or subordination. The Court has no difficulty in the second category either, but in the third category, the Court has to be circumspect and look for corroboration in material particulars by reliable testimony, direct or circumstantial which may not be possible in cases where only a single person is available to give evidence; in such a situation the Court has to weigh carefully and if satisfied that the evidence is reliable and free from all taints which tend to render the testimony open to suspicion, it becomes its duty to act upon the same. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 614, Foll.]: (1994) 4 S.C.C. 549: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1294.

Testimony of one witness—Conviction based on—Legality: 1957 B.L.J.R. 149. See also A.I.R. 1958 Punj 164; A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 8 (F.B.); (1970) 1 M.L.J. 402. See also (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 165.

Sole eye-witness in order to be acted upon, should be absolutely independent and not interested: (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 195.

A conviction can be based on the testimony of a single witness if wholly reliable and his evidence establishes the prosecution's case. Under S. 134, Evidence Act no particular number of witnesses is required for proof of any fact: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1266: A.I.R. 1958 All. 746. Where testimony of sole eye-witness was consistent and was corroborated by medical evidence, held, it can be relied on: (1980) 1 M.P.W.N. 152; (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 50; (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 28 [Where testimony of sole eye-witness was corroborated by other evidence and F.I.R. had been lodged without delay and incident was immediately narrated to other and he himself had received injury in the same incident, held, his testimony was reliable.]

Conviction on evidence of single witness—Factors to be considered—Bhutt, J.—A person can legally be convicted on the evidence of a solitary witness. But the question is whether in the particular circumstances of the case it is safe to do so.

Krishnan, J.—The law in India does not prescribe the minimum number of witnesses for the conviction of any person; the uncorroborated evidence of a single witness is not on that ground alone insufficient to sustain a conviction; that would depend on the facts and the circumstances of each case. Certainly, the spontaneous and independent observations of two or more honest witnesses to the same effect, would carry more conviction than the observation of an equally honest single witness even in good faith, because the factors of honest error partly cancel out. Surely, the criteria for the assessment of evidence are just the same, whether the offence is a slight one, or one that would call for a capital sentence; but in practice Courts considering a capital case, feel a heavier load on their conscience and automatically begin to apply the same principles with more caution than in less serious ones: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 31: 1960 Cr.L.J. 230.

It is not necessary that independent evidence must be examined but where there is evidence that a large number of independent witnesses could have deposed about the incident, their absence from the list of witnesses and the presence of only partisan witnesses does create a doubt whether the version, which is being given by them, is to be believed: A.I.R. 1955 All. 189: 1955 Cr.L.J. 473.

Witness neither accomplice nor anything analogous to an accomplice but an ordinary witness—As a general rule Court may act on testimony of such solitary witness without corroboration unless circumstances of a particular case necessitated corroboration: (1962) 3 S.C.R. 590: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 424; (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 211; (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 110.

As a general rule, a Court can and may act on the testimony of a single witness though uncorroborated. One credible witness may outweigh the testimony of a number of other witnesses of indifferent character. In order to sustain an order of conviction on the basis of the testimony of a solitary witness, such evidence must be clear, cogent and convincing and should be of an unimpeachable character. [1957 Cr.L.J. 1000 (S.C.) and (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 473 (S.C.), Rel. on]: (1981) 52 Cut.L.T. 512: 1982 Cr.L.J. 500.

Some corroboration should be sought from the other prosecution evidence in support of the testimony of a solitary witness particularly where such witness also happens to be closely related to the deceased. [A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 810, Foll.]: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 211. See also (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 16.

Testimony of even a single witness, if believed, is sufficient to establish any fact. S. 134 follows the maxim that evidence is to be weighed and not counted. Any hard and fast rule that a particular number of witnesses should be required to prove a particular offence would hamper the administration of justice, as in many cases it may not be practicable to get more than one witness: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2812 (Ori.) (D.B.); A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 236: 1989 Cr.L.J. 799; (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 218 [Sole testimony of Police Officer, when liable to be rejected.]

Plurality of evidence is not at all required for the bringing home the guilt of the accused; it is the quality of the evidence and not the plurality of witnesses which is important in the appraisal of evidence. Even single witness testimony can be sufficient to prove the guilt of the accused if found entirely reliable. Evidence has to be weighed and not counted: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2954 (All.) (D.B.); 1987 Cr.L.J. 442 (All.); 1983 All.Cr.R. 377: 1983 Cr. L.J. (N.O.C.) 86; (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 368; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 47; 1973 Mah.L.J. (Note) 23.

It is not the number of witnesses examined nor the quantity of evidence adduced by the prosecution but the quality that counts: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 126: 1982 All.L.J. 1524: 1983 Cr.L.J. 218: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 218; 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 136 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Witnesses have to be weighed, not counted; in human affairs, quality matters more than the quantity; an accused may justly be convicted even on the evidence of a single eye-witness provided it is convincing and appears to be truthful: 1976 Kash.L.J.

253: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310; 1973 Cr.L.J. 418. Where the sole eye-witness was partly disbelieved, held, corroboration was necessary: 1982 M.P.W.N. 396. The mere fact that a part of the evidence of sole eye-witness is rejected is no ground to disbelieve the other part which inspires confidence: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1998 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Mere non-examining of some more witnesses to the occurrence cannot be fatal to the prosecution case. [1973 Cr.L.J. 1807 (S.C.), Rel. on; A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1158; 1979 Cr.L.J. 236, Disting.]: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 64 (Ori.).

Acceptability of evidence, and not numerological sufficiency of witnesses, is material. The evidence has to be weighed; number of witnesses is not to be counted. A conviction can be maintained on the basis of the evidence of sole witness. Therefore, mere non-examination of some persons does not affect the credibility of the prosecution case: 1993 Cr.L.J. 378 (Ori.) (D.B.).

S. 134, recognises the golden rule that what is required is only the quality of evidence and not the quantity. Even a solitary testimony of a witness without suffering from any of the infirmities, is enough to prove the case of the prosecution for the purpose of mulcting or fastening criminal liability upon a person accused of an offence: 1992 Cr.L.J. 661 (Mad.). But such evidence must be clear, cogent and consistent and should be above reproach and of an unimpeachable character: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 155; 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 26: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 42; (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 211; A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1193: 1993 Cr.L.J. 187. However, each and every type of infirmity or minor discrepancies will not render the evidence of such witness unreliable: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1735: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2192.

The prosecution is not bound to produce all the witnesses. Material witness considered necessary by the prosecution for unfolding the prosecution story alone need be produced without unnecessary and redundant multiplication of witnesses. In view of the examination of the injured and the person to whom the injured narrated the incident at the earliest opportunity and the medical evidence, non-production of persons of the locality could not injuriously affect the account given of the incident: 1973 Cr.L.J. 481.

Prosecution has the right to pick and choose witnesses. All occurrence witnesses need not be examined: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2106 (Ker.) (D.B.).

When there are a large number of eye-witnesses, it is not the bounden duty of the prosecution to examine all of them. It is open to it to pick and choose provided that such picking and choosing was fair: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T 667 (D.B.).

Withholding of material prosecution witness may lead to inference that false implication of accused may be probable: (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 195.

Whether sole-testimony of eye-witness can be said to be reliable in absence of corroboration. See (1979) 1 M.P.W.N . 185; (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 20. Value of sole tainted witness. See (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 24.

It is elementary that the evidence of an infirm witness does not become reliable merely because it has been corroborated by a number of witnesses of the same brand; for evidence is to be weighed, not counted: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 989: 1975 U.J. (S.C.) 692: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 37. Solitary testimony of interested witness, when held to be not reliable. See (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 287; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 58; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 204; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 106 [Where relations between the solitary eye-witness and the accused were strained, held, when his testimony is otherwise doubtful, it is not safe to act upon it]; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 146; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 62 [Where testimony of sole partisan witness was held to be not reliable.]

Court may believe one witness in preference to a large number of the other side: 24 W.R. 18 (Cr.) Evidence in case of perjury—Necessity for more than one witness: 5 W.R. (Cr.) 23; B.L.R. (Supp.) Vol. (F.B.) 459. Estate of dead person sought to be made liable—Uncorroborated testimony of claimant—Court's duty: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 351.

Where eye-witness implicated one of the accused whose alibi was accepted, held, it was not safe to convict the accused on the lone testimony of eye-witness particularly when his name was not mentioned either in the earliest report or during the inquest: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1175: 1993 Cr.L.J. 408.

Where two out of three injured witnesses had been examined, held, in view of the fact that examination of the third injured would have only repeated the evidence of the two examined witnesses, no doubt could be cast on the prosecution for his non-examination. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 184, Rel. on]: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2226 (Guj.) (D.B.).

Where the sole witness disclosed the incident only after about six months, and before the committing Court, the witness was declared hostile by the prosecution and in the Sessions Court he was not examined as a witness but was later called as a Court witness, held, it was wholly unsafe to found the conviction of the accused on the single testimony of such witness: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 102: 1979 U.J. (S.C.) 660: 1980 Cr.L.J. 199: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 490. See also 1983 M.P.W.N. 240 [Where the sole eye-witness did not reveal the incident to anyone nor F.I.R. was lodged, held, he was not a reliable witness.]

Where the witness was removed from the scene of occurrence in an unconscious state and his evidence regarding the complicity of the appellants was corroborated by the statement made by him to the Magistrate soon after he regained consciousness in the hospital and his statement was recorded by the Magistrate before he could possibly be contacted by anyone and further he confined himself to the questions put to him and gave brief and direct answers, held, very great weight was necessarily to be attached to his statement and his failure to mention overt acts attributable to assailants did not detract from his credibility: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 648: 1981 Cr.L.J. 166: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 360.

An accused can be punished on the sole uncorroborated testimony of an independent eye-witness, if the witness is held by the Court to be a witness of sterling worth and if the witness is not held to be of sterling worth then in such a situation it requires corroboration. Where a question arose as to whether accused could be convicted on oral testimony of only one eye-witness when other three eye-witnesses had been declared hostile by prosecution and it was found that testimony of sole eye-witness was corroborated by medical evidence, ballistic expert opinion and other circumstantial evidence, held, conviction of accused could be based on sole testimony of eye-witness: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1466 (Raj.) (D.B.).

(a). Victim/complainant as sole witness.—When sole-testimony of the victim is duly corroborated by the First Information Report and the medical evidence, held, it may be relied upon: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 76.

Where in her dying declaration, the only survived victim had not mentioned the names of two of the accused persons but in her deposition in the Court, she implicated them also and the prosecution had not supplied the copy of said declaration to the accused so that she could not be confronted by the defence, held, that by itself was not a ground to give the benefit to the other accused persons on the basis of the contents of said declaration particularly when the case rested on the sole testimony of that survived victim. However, the said two accused persons not named in the dying declaration were entitled to benefit of doubt: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3251 (S.C.).

Where the victim-sole witness knew the accused even before the occurrence of the incident and, thus, was in a sound position to identify him as her assailant and her testimony was found to be worthy of credence and there was no reason for falsely implicating the accused, held, accused could be convicted on her sole testimony: 1983 Raj.L.W. 611.

Where complainant was the sole witness to prove involvement of the accused in the offence but his evidence was infirm in certain respects and there were discrepancies as to the integral part of the case, held, sole testimony of complainant could not be acted upon: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1136 (Cal.) (D.B.). See also (1980) 1 M.P.W.N. 330.

In cases of sexual offences.—The lone testimony of a victim of rape can be made the sole basis for conviction and no corroboration is necessary in case the same is accepted as true and free from suspicion: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2784 (Ori.); (1978) 45 Cut.L.T. 317.

Where the evidence given by the prosecutrix herself was self corroborative and was also sufficiently corroborated by circumstantial evidence, held, the mere fact that prosecution failed to examine a witness due to his non-availability could not invalidate the conviction: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2657 (Bom.) (D.B.); (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 99 [Prosecutrix's statement corroborated by First Information Report, medical evidence and reports of chemical examiner and serologist.]

See also (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 212 [Need and extent of corroboration]; (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 101; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 27 [Value of uncorroborated testimony.]

(b). Murder cases.—Although it is permissible to base a conviction on the testimony of a solitary witness and there are instances of such convictions even for capital offences, such instances are rare and found to be of exceptional circumstances. A case cannot be considered to be one of that type when the spot of murder is surrounded by houses in the village and close to the Bhajanemane where people congregate and the time is evening when people usually return home. It is difficult to assume that none but a single person could have witnessed the commission of the crime or that better material could not have been placed before the Court: I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 625: A.I.R. 1954 Mys. 81. Held, that the testimony of only one witness was quite insufficient in a murder case where the occurrence took place in broad day light and was seen by a large number of persons: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 48.

Since under the Evidence Act, no particular number of witnesses are required for the proof of any fact, it is a sound and well-established rule of law that quality and not quantity of evidence matters. In each case the Court has to consider whether it can be reasonably satisfied to act even upon the testimony of a single witness for the purpose of convicting a person. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 614, Rel. on]. If a witness, who is the only witness against the accused to prove a serious charge of murder, can modulate his evidence to suit a particular prosecution theory for the deliberate purpose of securing a conviction, such a witness cannot be considered as a reliable person and no conviction can be based on his sole testimony: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 560: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 442: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 339: 1975 U.J. (S.C.) 940. See also 1983 Cr.L.J. 694 (Raj.).

The evidence of a single eye-witness, especially when corroborated by medical evidence of autopsy and other witnesses who had actually come to the spot soon after the deceased was stabbed cannot be rejected as unreliable; his evidence can neither be considered wholly unacceptable nor wholly impeachable, it has to be considered in the light of the features of the case which should put the Court on its guard; though it is not the principle of law that a conviction cannot be based on the testimony of a single witness, yet it is a well known principle of criminal jurisprudence that, before convicting the accused on the testimony of a single witness, the Court must have implicit faith and reliance on his testimony; but where a single witness, not an eye-witness, was interested, hostile, unreliable, infirm and discrepant, the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt and acquittal: 1981 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 237: 1981 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 210. See also 1978 M.P.L.J. 599: 1978 Cr.L.J. 1149.

Plurality of evidence is not a necessity of law in order to prove the prosecution case. What is scrutible is whether the single testimony of the witness radiates confidence or not and the Courts can very well base conviction believing prosecution version on the single testimony of a witness. The prime consideration worth bearing in mind is that whether it will be safe to place implicit reliance on the testimony of solitary witness in the case. Where testimony of solitary witness in a murder trial was not thoroughly free from doubt in view of enmity between accused and brother of the witness and further there was also absence of independent corroboration, held, testimony of said witness could not be relied upon for conviction of the accused: 1988 Cr.L.J. 960 (All.) (D.B.).

The principle that a conviction is possible on the testimony of a sole eye-witness cannot be applied to a case where the evidence of that sole witness is not such as can compel acceptance.

Where, therefore, the evidence is that besides the solitary witness, there were 14 or 15 persons who rushed to the scene of occurrence, amongst whom were independent persons not connected with the deceased or accused, it cannot be held that the prosecution sought a conviction on the sole testimony of that witness who was not free from flaw.

Held, a conviction cannot be based on the testimony of the sole eye-witness in the circumstances of the case: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1921 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Even where there is only a sole eye-witness of a crime, a conviction may be recorded against the accused concerned provided the Court which hears such witness regards him as honest and truthful. But prudence requires that some corroboration should be sought from the other prosecution evidence in support of the testimony of a solitary witness particularly where such witness also happens to be closely related to the deceased and the accused are those against whom some motive or ill-will is suggested. Thus, where there was inordinate delay in giving the first information to the Police and there were other inherent inconsistencies in the evidence of the sole eye-witness, i.e., wife of the deceased, held, accused could not be convicted on testimony of such a witness without corroboration from other prosecution evidence: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 810: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 629: (1983) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 216.

Though it is not necessary in law that more than one witness should be examined to prove a fact but unless the witness is very reliable, the Court would ordinarily look for corroboration. Thus, where the solitary witness produced by the prosecution in a murder case and who was related to the deceased claimed that he knew the accused but, it was transpired from his evidence that he did not know the accused, held, conviction could not be based on his testimony: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 313: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1921. See also 1984 Cr.L.J. 559 (Cal.).

It is the quality of the evidence adduced which matters and not the number of the witnesses examined. Thus, where in a murder case, the evidence of the wife of accused was found to be of unimpeachable quality and was corroborated by the circumstances and the first information report lodged, held, her evidence was sufficient to convict the accused: 1995 Cr.L.J. 564 (Bom.) (D.B.). See also 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 67 (Ori.).

A person may be convicted even on the statement of a solitary witness but such a solitary witness should be wholly reliable. Thus, where in a murder case, the evidence of a solitary witness who was the son of the deceased was not found to be reliable, held, no reliance could be placed thereon: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3107: 1992 All.L.J. 950 (D.B.); 1985 Cr.L.J. 1872 (Ori.).

Where in the first information report, the alleged sole eye-witness had merely stated that at the dead of night on hearing the barking of the dogs, he was woken up and on coming out on to the balcony saw that his brother, the deceased, had come out to see why the dogs were barking and that after some time he heard the cries of the deceased and saw the accused running in different directions but the manner of the assault or the occurrence relating to pushing the deceased in the well was absent in the F.I.R. and that apart, it was clear from the evidence of the other prosecution witnesses who also reached at the well after hearing the cries of the deceased that the said eye-witness had enquired from the deceased as to how he fell in the well, held, an eye-witness would not have made such an enquiry; therefore, it was clear that he had not seen the occurrence and was falsely introduced as an occular witness in the case: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2457: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2598. See also (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 275 (D.B.); (1980) 1 M.P.W.N. 167.

Where the deceased was having a premarital affair with the accused's newly weded wife and in the trial of the accused for the murder of the deceased, she was the only prosecution witness examined and two other material witnesses were not examined by the prosecution and further her testimony was tainted with several infirmities like (1) recording of her statement in Police custody 3 or 4 days after her interrogation, (2) recording of her statement by the Magistrate under S. 164 of the Cr.P.Code straight from the Police custody thereby tying her up to that version; (3) her version of assault on the deceased being irreconcilable with medical evidence, (4) inconsistency between her version and the Investigating Officer as to the recovery of the accused's blood-stained clothes, held, no conviction could be based on her solitary evidence: 1981 Cr.L.J. 276 (Sikkim) (D.B.).

Where terror was created in the minds of the people living in the locality due to attack and counter attack between two political factions due to which there was reluctance on the part of some of witnesses to identify the accused though they witnessed the occurrence, held, in such a case the prosecution version could not be rejected for the failure to examine the witnesses in the locality: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2362 (Ker.) (D.B.). See also 1994 (Supp.) 1 S.C.C. 74: (1993) 1 Crimes 997: 1993 Cr.L.R. 295.

Where a child witness of 15 years deposed that her father murdered her mother and his four children by pouring petrol in car in which they travelled but he miraculously escaped and he withstood lengthy, gruelling and torturing cross-examination, held, he could not be branded as not a witness of truth: 1985 Cr.L.J. 602 (Raj.). See also 1983 Cr.L.J. 1515 (Gau.).

(c). Dacoity and theft cases.—Where in a trial for offence of dacoity none of the witnesses in their earlier statements or in oral evidence gave any description of the dacoits whom they have alleged to have identified in the dacoity, nor did the witnesses give any identification marks, viz., stature of the accused or whether they were fat or thin or of a fair colour or of black colour, held, in absence of any such description, it will be impossible to convict any accused on the basis of a single identification, which was made about three and a half months after the dacoity. OF THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESS evidence is not bad for want of evidence by other witnesses: 1961 Nag.L.J. (Notes) 21.

In cases of rioting it would be extremely hazardous to convict on the testimony of a single eye-witness. In such cases, the rule of prudence requires that Courts should insist on plurality of eye-witness account. [(1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 226 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2355 (Bom.).

Where the Court under S. 319(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure has to form its opinion whether grounds exist for proceeding against a person not then accused, held, even the statement of one witness is sufficient; the Court's opinion formed under this section is akin to the opinion formed under S. 200 or S. 202 of the Code. [1983 Cr.L.J. 433 (S.C.), Rel. on; 1952 Cr.L.J. 582 (Cal.); 1973 Cr.L.J. 1722 (Ker.), Disting.]: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 8: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 871.

Penal Code, 1890, S. 452—Evidence and proof—To insist on a uniform rule of at least two witnesses to speak to the identity of rioters is not safe when the injured and assailants are known to each other very well: 1969 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 124.

Where three examined witnesses had testified and proved the facts but two other witnesses, who could prove some of those facts, were not examined in the case of a raid under S. 21 of the Prevention of Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1988, held, for non-examination of the two witnesses, no adverse inference could be raised against the prosecution: 1991 Cr.L.J. 134 (Del.).

Where a raid under S. 21 of the Prevention of Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1988 had been organised within two hours of the receipt of the secret information and some of the public witnesses asked to join had refused to do so and there could possibly be some commotion if more persons were asked to join resulting in the culprits becoming suspicious and disappearing from the spot, held, non-joining of public witnesses would have no effect on the evidence of raid if it was otherwise reliable and beyond reasonable doubt; the only effect of not joining the public witnesses in such cases is that the Court should appraise the evidence with a bit more care and caution: 1991 Cr.L.J. 134 (Del.).

Conviction under S. 3, Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966, if can be based on sole evidence of Sub-Inspector of R.P.F. See 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 178: 1983 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 59.

Neither the Evidence Act nor the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure contain any section or rule for ordering witnesses out of Court although it is generally done by the Courts as a matter of practice. It is clear that the Court has power to order unexamined witnesses out of Court at any time during the trial on the application of either party. It is undoubtedly true that a party to a litigation has got the right to remain in Court while the trial of the suit is going on and it is equally well established that the Court has got inherent power to order any person who has to give evidence out of Court-hall when other witnesses are being examined until that person is called to give evidence. Since under S. 135 of the Evidence Act, the Court has the power to prescribe the order in which witnesses are to be examined, where a party is also a witness, the Court can require him to give evidence before he examines his other witnesses. If he is not willing to do so, the Court can order him out of the Court-hall when his other witnesses are giving evidence. When a party himself is conducting a case without the aid of the Counsel, he can examine himself first and then examine his other witnesses. The Court has to consider whether the claim made by one party to exclude the other party from the Court-hall is well-founded and also to consider the objections of the other party: A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 420; 1987 Ker.L.J. 990: (1987) 2 Ker.L.T. 263.

If a witness is found to have been present when the evidence of other witnesses was being recorded, as his presence was not noticed, held, the Court should examine him and record his statement with a note that he was present in Court when other witnesses were being examined: A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 78: 1955 Cr.L.J. 814.

S. 135 lays down that the order in which witnesses are produced or examined shall be regulated by the law and practice in force and in absence of law, by the Court's discretion; O. 18, R. 3-A of the Code of Civil Procedure as inserted by amendment in 1976 requiring the party to examine himself as his own witness before examining other witnesses is such law enacted to prevent the "persisting notorious malpractice indulged in by litigants bordering on dishonesty" whereunder they would last examine themselves to fill up the lacunae left by other witnesses; even though R. 3-A is directory, it would not mean that it could be transgressed indiscriminately in an unbridled manner.

A duty is cast on the Court to record reasons, which means that valid and compulsive grounds must be made out by the party seeking to postpone its own examination as a witness; the party should seek prior permission from the Court; since grant or withholding of permission is subject to revision, the Court's order has to be in writing and not oral: (1985) 2 M.L.J. 35: A.I.R. 1985 Mad. 183; (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. 617.

S. 135 has two conditions for its application: (1) evidence is to be regulated as per law and practice for the time being in force; but (2) in the absence of any law to the contrary. As a general practice witnesses are examined in the criminal Courts in the order in which the prosecution examines them; the Courts seldom interfere for the burden of proving its case lies on the prosecution and it is for the prosecution to chose and devise the ways and means to establish its case beyond reasonable doubt. The Court's interference in this regard may seriously prejudice the prosecution and occasion miscarriage of justice: 1975 Cr.L.J. 216: 1975 Kash.L.J. 56 (F.B.).

There is no law which governs the order in which two contesting parties are entitled to cross-examine a witness of the opposite party; S. 141 deals with leading questions, S. 143 with questions lawful in cross-examination, S. 147 with the circumstances where-in a witness shall be compelled to answer questions and S. 148 empowers the Court to decide as to when a question may be asked and the witness be compelled to answer it: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 1007.

The order in which the two contesting parties are entitled to cross-examine a witness of the opposite party is not a question of right but lies within the domain of the Court's powers to conduct proceedings before it in a regular manner. Thus, any decision made by the Court in this behalf is not a case decided; it is not subject to the Court's revisional jurisdiction under S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 1007.

Domestic enquiry—No rule prescribed for order in which witnesses should be examined—Persons proceeded against should be given opportunity to rebut evidence: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 364: (1965) 1 L.L.J. 88.

The rules of Evidence Act have no application to the departmental proceedings and the examination of witnesses need not be in the order as laid down in the said Act.

Thus, where in departmental proceedings before the enquiry officer, accused was examined first and other witnesses were examined after him and subsequently the accused pleaded that adopting of said procedure was violative of rules of natural justice though no such objection was taken by him before the enquiry officer, held, as there was nothing to show on the part of the accused that he was prejudiced in any way, the procedure adopted could not amount to any failure of the rules of natural justice: A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 336.

It may be that a witness can request the Court not to be required to answer certain questions. But the request from the witness that he should be dropped altogether is a strange request. Where a witness requested the Court that she should be dropped from the array of the witnesses, held, such a request was liable to be rejected: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 511.

It is well established rule of evidence that a party should put to each of his opponent's witness so much of his case as concerns that particular witness. If no such questions are put, the Courts presume that the witness's account has been accepted. If it is intended to suggest that a witness was not speaking the truth upon a particular point, his attention must first be directed to the fact by cross-examination so that he may have an opportunity of giving an explanation. [A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 440, Foll.]: (1992) 1 Rev.L.R. 78 (D.B.).

Power of Court to regulate order of examining witnesses: I.L.R. 39 Cal. 245: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 265; (1946) 36 Trav.L.J. 19 (F.B.).

Order of examination of witness generally left to discretion of Counsel: (1900-01) 5 Cal.W.N. 15. Where at the trial, the prosecution witnesses who had been summoned were present in the Court as also the complainant and though the accused for certain

136. Judge to decide as to admissibility of evidence.—When either party proposes to give evidence of any fact, the Judge may ask the party proposing to give the evidence in what manner the alleged fact, if proved, would be relevant; and the Judge shall admit the evidence if he thinks that the fact, if proved, would be relevant, and not otherwise.

reasons of his own wanted to cross-examine the witnesses before the complainant, the Court insisted on the complainant being examined first on the ground that his state of health necessitated that course. Held, that the Magistrate should have acceded to the request of the pleader of the accused and directed the cross-examination of the witnesses before the complainant: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 288: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 189.

Where even before the plaintiff's case was opened or the evidence of his witnesses was given, the principal defendant was examined, held, the procedure adopted was most unsatisfactory: A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 73.

Where a party to a suit was present in Court when his witnesses were examined and later on claimed to be examined as a witness in support of a contention put forward by him, and it was disallowed, it was held that there was no doubt a practice to refuse to allow such a person to give evidence but that there was no rule of the Court to that effect, nor was there any provision of law in the C.P.Code or in any other statute; S. 135 did not authorise a Court of law to refuse the examination of a witness who might have done something which was not very desirable. [A.I.R. 1934 All. 840, Overruled]: 1941 All.L.J. 345: A.I.R. 1941 All. 314: I.L.R. (1941) All. 612.

Where the witnesses are not summoned at the instance of the accused for cross-examination, but are summoned for examination in a de novo trial, the order in which these witnesses are to be examined-in-chief rests at the discretion of the prosecution: 152 I.C. 236: A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 209.

Criminal trial—Practice—Unexamined witnesses—Power to disallow their presence till actually examined—Court has inherent power to make such order: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1445: A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 316.

The object with which a Counsel for the accused cross-examines a prosecution witness is not only to test his veracity but also to elicit such facts as help the accused in his defence; he may even try to demolish the prosecution's whole version. Merely because a question asked in cross-examination is of a roving nature, it does not, and cannot amount to a confession or a statement made on behalf of the accused; no conviction can be made thereupon: 1986 All.W.C. 831.

Though it is prosecutor's choice to examine a witness, such choice is neither arbitrary nor capricious; all those witnesses necessary for unfolding the prosecution story should be examined; a public prosecutor is not a mouth piece of the Police; he must be fair to the accused as well: 1989 M.P.L.J. 223: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 206.

Effect of Judge's suggestion that further evidence need not be given: (1904) 6 Bom. L.R. 636. "No matter how often the same case comes before Court, if the accused persons be different on each occasion, the witnesses for the prosecution must be examined de novo". See W.R. 1864 (Cr.) 38(2); ibid 1(2); 13(1); 1 B.L.R. (O. Cr.) 37; I.L.R. 9 Mad. 83.

Omission to do this though illegal yet if it has not occasioned a failure of justice, a new trial need not be ordered: I.L.R. 9 Mad. 83. Fresh evidence after closing of case—Permissibility. See A.I.R. 1958 All. 67.

Material witnesses are to be examined unless allegations are made that they will not speak truth. Thus, where in a murder case, according to prosecution story, a villager who came on murder spot hearing cries was not examined in view of evidence of son of deceased that he had joined hands with the accused persons and had taken oath not to depose against them, held, failure to examine him would not vitiate prosecution. 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 246 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Section 136—Notes.

Where a Judge is in doubt as to the admissibility of a particular piece of evidence, he should declare in favour of admissibility rather than of non-admissibility: I.L.R. 12 All. 1 (F.B.). The Court must confine itself strictly to the provisions of the Act and come to a conclusion as to the relevancy of a fact on the interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Act only: A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 23 (F.B.).

Where in cross-examining a witness for the prosecution, questions are disallowed by the Court on the ground of irrelevancy or other grounds, the evidence should show what the questions are and the reason for disallowing them: 55 I.C. 593: 1 Pat.L.T. 632.

If the fact proposed to be proved is one of which evidence is admissible only upon proof of some other fact, such last-mentioned fact must be proved before evidence is given of the fact first-mentioned, unless the party undertakes to give proof of such fact, and the Court is satisfied with such undertaking.

If the relevancy of one alleged fact depends upon another alleged fact being first proved, the Judge may, in his discretion, either permit evidence of the first fact to be given before the second fact is proved, or require evidence to be given of the second fact before evidence is given of the first fact.

Illustrations

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement about a relevant fact by a person alleged to be dead, which statement is relevant under section 32.

The fact that the person is dead must be proved by the person proposing to prove the statement, before evidence is given of the statement.

(b) It is proposed to prove, by a copy, the contents of a document said to be lost.

The fact that the original is lost must be proved by the person proposing to produce the copy, before the copy is produced.

(c) A is accused of receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen.

It is proposed to prove that he denied the possession of the property.

The relevancy of the denial depends on the identity of the property. The Court may, in its discretion, either require the property to be identified before the denial of the possession is proved, or permit the denial of the possession to be proved before the property is identified.

(d) It is proposed to prove a fact (A) which is said to have been the cause or effect of a fact in issue. There are several intermediate facts (B, C and D) which must be shown to exist before the fact (A) can be regarded as the cause or effect of the fact in issue. The Court may either permit A to be proved before B, C or D is proved, or may require proof of B, C and D before permitting proof of A.

In proceedings for allotment of route permits under S. 68-D of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, the competent authority disallowed an objector from asking its own witness the question whether it was in public interest to allow the State Transport Undertaking to operate exclusively the route to the total exclusion of private operators, held, the question had rightly been disallowed; it was not intended to elicit any fact or information but only the opinion of the witness: A.I.R. 1972 All. 308: 1972 All.L.J. 61 (D.B.).

Oral evidence—Order as to admissibility is interlocutory order: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 129 (Cal.).

No doubt the proper time to take an objection as to the admissibility of a document is when the document is tendered in evidence, but the omission to object to a document which is not in itself admissible will not make such document evidence. It is the duty of the Court to exclude all irrelevant evidence, even if no objection is taken. The question of relevancy of a document is a question of law and can be raised at any stage: (1944-45) 49 Cal.W.N. 791: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 492.

137. Examination-in-chief.—The examination of a witness by the party who calls him shall be called his examination-in-chief.

Cross-examination.—The examination of a witness by the adverse party shall be called his cross-examination.

Re-examination.—The examination of a witness, subsequent to the cross-examination by the party who called him, shall be called his re-examination.

138. Order of examinations.—Witnesses shall be first examined-in-chief, then (if the adverse party so desires) cross-examined, then (if the party calling him so desires) re-examined.

The examination and cross-examination must relate to relevant facts but the cross-examination need not be confined to the facts to which the witness testified on his examination-in-chief.

Direction of re-examination.—The re-examination shall be directed to the explanation of matters referred to in cross-examination; and if, new matter is, by permission of the Court, introduced in re-examination, the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter.

Whenever objection is raised to a document's admissibility or on any other ground, the Court must decide the same before admitting it in evidence and proceeding further with the trial: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 376 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Where documents, even if relevant, are not sufficient to establish the necessary facts, held, their admissibility need not be gone into: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 815.

Issue or not to issue process under S. 244, Cr.P.Code to compel the attendance of any witness is in the Court's discretion. See I.L.R. (1954) Hyd. 544 (D.B.).

1. Scope and applicability.—The examination of a witness means as laid down in S. 137, his examination-in-chief, his cross-examination and his re-examination. No examination of a witness can be complete, if the adverse party is illegally refused permission to cross-examine him or the party calling him has refused permission to re-examine him. It is not necessary for the Legislature to provide expressly for the cross-examination or the re-examination of a witness; it is enough if it lays down that witness shall be examined. Of course, the Legislature is not debarred from enacting a special provision for the cross-examination of a witness if it considers it necessary in order to remove a possible doubt or by way of abundant precaution. A witness must be discharged after his examination is over and if the Legislature desires to give a further right of cross-examination to the adverse party after the discharge, it has to enact a special provision to that effect. But because such a provision is enacted, it should not be thought that when there is no special provision for the cross-examination of a witness, the adverse party has no right to cross-examine him. The Evidence Act deals with the rights of parties in the matter of evidence, it is the Code of Criminal Procedure, which lays down the procedure. Whether a party has a right to cross-examine the adverse party's witnesses or not has to be ascertainted from the Evidence Act which is known to be exhaustive on the subject and not from the Code of Criminal Procedure, which deals with the subject of evidence only incidentally. Of course, S. 138 also regulates the orders in which a witness can be examined-in-chief, cross-examined and re-examined, but this is because the rights of parties to examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination a witness accrue in certain order and a provision conferring the rights must at the same time regulate the order in which they are to be exercised: 1956 Cr.L.J. 841: A.I.R. 1956 All. 385. But see A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 822 [S. 138 deals with order of proceedings and not with rights of parties.]

S. 138 provides that the cross-examination must be on relevant facts. The words "relevant facts" in S. 138 must have a wider meaning than the term applied to examination-in-chief: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 240: (1982) 1 D.M.C. 31.

By the force of O. 18 of the C.P.Code, 1908, S. 138 of the Evidence Act will be attracted to the examination of witnesses by the Commissioner appointed by the Court as per O. 26 of the C.P.Code: (1989-1) 103 Mad.L.W. 489 (D.B.).

The examination of an approver as a witness should be done in the manner provided in S. 138, Evidence Act. See 1986 Cr.L.J. 2104 (Andh. Pra.).

Certainly it is open to the Court to direct the Commissioner to append the certificate as required under Rr. 5 and 6 after reading over the evidence and interpreting the same to the witness. The observation in A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 737 that Rr. 5 and 6 of O. 18, C.P.Code is applicable to the evidence recorded by a Commissioner was an obiter and not the ratio of that judgment. Where there was challenge as to the correctness of the statement recorded by the Commissioner and the only contention was regarding the reading over and explaining the evidence in the language known to the witness and said statement was also not sought to be relied on in a criminal proceeding against the witness, held, there was no illegality in the Courts below relying on the evidence of said witness: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 337.

Where a witness is sought to be examined by a party on commission by written interrogatories, the other side has a choice before it, either to file written interrogatories or to insist upon an opportunity being given to him to cross-examine the witness orally. But the oral examination of a witness is not permissible after his examination and cross-examination is complete on written interrogatories. [A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 60, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 J.&K. 54: 1982 Kash.L.J. 462.

Provisions of Ss. 137 and 138 are applicable to proceedings under S.145, Cr.P.Code in absence of any provision to contrary: 1979 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 12: 1979 Cr.L.J. 550 (J.&K.) (D.B.). Proceedings under S. 145, Cr.P.Code —Finding as to possession on basis of evidence not recorded and consequently not cross-examined—Order illegal. See 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 79 (Gau.).

S. 33 engrafts an extraordinary exception to the normal rule of examining witnesses embodied in S. 138; the Court must be greatly cautious when S. 33 is invoked; it must insist on direct proof of all the requisite conditions for admitting secondary evidence under the section: 1979 Sikkim L.J. 1: 1979 Cr.L.J. 610.

In a warrant case instituted otherwise than on a Police report, the accused has the statutory right to cross-examine the prosecution witness before the charge; the Magistrate cannot deny this right to the accused; it amounts to the right and opportunity of cross-examination envisaged in S. 33; whether or not the accused exercised that right or availed of that opportunity, the evidence of the witness before charge is admissible under that section: 1979 Sikkim L.J. 1: 1979 Cr.L.J. 610.

Where evidence of a deceased witness had already been recorded under S. 231 of the Cr.P.Code read with S. 137 of the Evidence Act during the Sessions trial and there was no subsequent stage for giving his evidence, held, there could be no occasion to resort to S. 33 for giving relevancy to the evidence already recorded: 1984 M.P.L.J. 492.

2. Examination-in-chief.—Testimony of witnesses includes examination-in-chief, cross-examination by the opposite party and re-examination by the party on whose behalf the witness appeared. Statement of witness, who is not tendered for cross-examination, is inadmissible in evidence: (1993) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 50 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

The examination of a witness means as laid down in S. 137, his examination-in-chief, his cross-examination and his re-examination. It follows that the provision that a witness shall be examined means not only that he should be examined-in-chief but also that he should be permitted to be cross-examined and re-examined: A.I.R. 1956 All. 385 (D.B.).

Law does not bind the prosecution to call all the witnesses though it must produce all the material witnesses. Where a prosecution witness is said to have been won over, the prosecution need not examine him but should make him available so that the defence may know his name and particulars, so that the defence may examine him in defence. But when the defence choose not to examine him in defence when he was present in the Court, it cannot subsequently raise the grievance that he was not examined as a witness: (1977) 4 Cr.L.T. 161 (Punj.).

3. Cross-examination to follow examination-in-chief.—There cannot be a cross-examination of a witness unless he has been first examined-in-chief. Hence, where the Court directs the plaintiff to appear for his cross-examination by the defendant even though the plaintiff had not given any evidence in examination-in-chief on his behalf, the order is untenable. The fact that because the plaintiff did not enter the witness-box, the defendant was deprived of an opportunity of cross-examining him does not justify the order directing the plaintiff to appear for his cross-examination even though he had not given any evidence in examination-in-chief: 1960 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 17.

It is only when a witness has been called by a party that the other party as soon as the examination-in-chief is closed has a right to cross-examine him. The test, in order to determine whether a witness has been called by the prosecution, is whether he has been summoned and sworn and further whether he is a competent witness. Where a witness is manifestly a competent witness and has been "tendered" and put into the witness-box by the prosecution and oath has been administered to him, it is the prosecution which should technically be deemed to have called him although it did not put a single question to him and therefore, the Court cannot be said to act illegally in allowing him to be cross-examined under S. 154: 1958 Cr.L.J. 931: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 422.

Witnesses not examined-in-chief cannot be tendered for cross-examination: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 286: 1955 Cr.L.J. 86; A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 71 (F.B.); (1973) 75 Punj.L.R. 466: 1973 Cur.L.J. 291: 1974 Cr.L.J. 117.

Where the prosecution did not wish to examine a witness for having been won over and tenders him for cross-examination, held, it is not permissible in common-sense or by statute; as S. 138 contemplates cross-examination following examination-in-chief, there can be no cross-examination in the absence of examination-in-chief. Tendering an unexamined witness for cross-examination is unknown to law; it is impermissible: (1977) 4 Cr.L.T. 161 (Punj.).

4. Cross-examination — Scope, object and purpose of.—Cross-examination is as essential as examination-in-chief for eliciting from a witness material which is to constitute evidence: A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 173: 47 Cr.L.J. 851 (D.B.).

An accused is entitled in law to put further questions to a prosecution witness by way of cross-examination in respect of what he had stated in reply to questions put to him in cross-examination by the other co-accused. Each accused is entitled in law to test the evidence given against him by a prosecution witness by cross-examination and such cross-examination need not be limited only to what has been stated by him in examination-in-chief. Though Ss. 137 and 138 do not in words speak of a further round of cross-examination, there is neither in these sections nor anywhere else in the Evidence Act anything to bar the accused from exercising his right of cross-examination afresh if and when the prosecution witness makes a further statement of facts prejudicial to him: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 315: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 175.

Use of cross-examination—See 6 W.R. 181: I.L.R. 21 Cal. 401; I.L.R. 6 Cal. 279. Object of examination: I.L.R. 30 Cal. 625. There is no hard and fast rule as to the right of a Counsel to demand in cross-examination the repetition of the whole story told in the examination-in-chief: 15 Cr.L.J. 148: 22 I.C. 724.

The very object of cross-examination is to ask questions regarding what the witness states in examination-in-chief; though the witness normally replies to the questions put by the advocate, but the replies are really those of the witness, particularly when he is also a party to the proceedings. Therefore, all questions asked in cross-examination to challenge the evidence-in-chief are permissible. No law says that cross-examination should be confined to what is volunteered by the witness and cannot be directed to challenge or clarify the statement recorded in examination-in-chief; a party can always be asked the purpose behind his reliance on a particular incident even when it had come out in reply to question put to him by his advocate in his examination-in-chief: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 498.

The accused has the valuable right to cross-examine the witnesses to elicit suppressed facts and expose discrepancies; its object is to impeach the credibility and general value of the evidence adduced. Though the accused has no right to seek postponement of the cross-examination which should follow the examination-in-chief, but where either the Counsel for the accused is not available for some unforeseen reason or is not ready to cross-examine the witnesses when the examination-in-chief is over, the trial Court may, in its discretion, defer the cross-examination of any such witness. Thus, where the deferred cross-examination of certain prosecutions witnesses on request by the accused's Counsel could not be completed due to non-presence of the Counsel, held, the accused could seek recall of the witnesses for cross-examination in the interest of justice: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3758 (Raj.).

In cross-examining a witness, the cross-examining lawyer not only tries to bring out contradictions in the evidence given in examination-in-chief, but he also tries to build up his case by establishing new facts: I.L.R. (1951) 1 Cal. 87. See also 1977 Raj.L.W. 212: 1978 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 82 (D.B.).

Court should generally leave cross-examination to the parties. See 27 O.C. 246: A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 361. The right of cross-examination given by S. 138 is not fettered by the fact that there are Police papers which are not referred to by the prosecution; and the cross-examination can be made on all matters allowed by the Evidence Act. The cross-examination is not limited to matters raised in evidence else-where: 10 I.C. 917: 4 Bur.L.T. 113.

The questions put in cross-examination must be either relevant and pertinent to the matter in issue or calculated to elicit answers affecting the witness's title to credit: 6 Mys.L.J. 551 (F.B.); 1980 Bom.C.R. 675 (D.B.). Read in this connection the observations of Sir John Wallis in A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 69: 62 M.L.J. 457 (P.C.).

In cross-examination a party can ask questions on every issue to establish its case. There is no rule of procedure which deprives a party of its right to cross-examine a witness in respect of the whole case on the ground that evidence with regard to some issues has already been tendered. The questions, however, must be such as relate to the relevant facts: A.I.R. 1951 Madh. Bh. 86. Certain questions put in cross-examination by Counsel for accused—Inference against accused that he admits facts referred to therein cannot be drawn: 1953 Raj.L.W. 348.

Once a party, even by mistake, comes to the witness-box and swears and is examined about a document, he would become a witness and will be liable to be cross-examined by his opponent. Under S. 138, Evidence Act, cross-examination cannot be confined to the facts to which the witness testified in his examination-in-chief. He can be cross-examined as to the whole of the case: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 135.

Cross-examination is not limited to matters upon which the witnesses had already been examined-in-chief but extends to the whole case. In cross-examination questions which relate to the relevant facts in suit or proceedings may be asked with the exception as provided under Ss. 146, 148, 149, 150, 151 and 152 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 240: 1982 Hindu L.R. 226.

Generally speaking, S. 138 does provide a wide scope for cross-examination which it need not be confined to what is spoken to in the examination-in-chief. The opening part of the second half of the section clearly provides that examination and cross-examination must relate to relevant facts. But any deviation in respect of the relevancy of facts is permissible in cross-examination only to attack the reliability, character and such other things concerning the witness. However, such wider scope conferred for purposes of cross-examination cannot be used to establish the defendant's case which he is required to independently establish by producing relevant documentary or oral evidence to discharge the burden cast on him: (1988) 1 Karn.L.J. 588.

By virtue of Ss. 137 and 138, the examination of a witness will include his examination-in-chief, his cross-examination by the opposite party, if any, and his re-examination by the party calling him. The right of cross-examination not only is referable to S. 138, Evidence Act itself but one of the principles of natural justice is that the evidence may not be read against a party if the same has not been subjected to cross-examination or at least an opportunity has not been given for cross-examination. S. 138 of the Evidence Act impliedly lays down that the statement of a witness would be read as evidence against a party only if it was tested on the anvil of cross-examination or opportunity was afforded for the purpose. All witnesses are subject to cross-examination. The right of cross-examination could not be curtailed or circumscribed on one pretext or the other or in one way or the other. There is nothing in S. 165 to suggest that the cross-examination of a witness called by Court is barred under all circumstances: 1979 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 12: 1979 Cr.L.J. 550 (J.&K.) (D.B.).

Whether a party can cross-examine his own witness — Examination-in-chief, whether may be termed as cross-examination simply because some questions under S. 154 were put to the witness. See 1981 Jab.L.J. 143.

Where the trial in a warrant case was at the stage after recall of P.Ws for cross-examination, under S. 256 of Cr.P.Code, the witness cannot be further examined-in-chief.

However, where contingency arises due to any omission on the part of the prosecution to "fully" examine any of its witnesses due to remissness or inadvertence, the Court may act under S. 165 and if the Court examines him before cross-examination but after charge, it will not cause prejudice to the accused: (1973-74) 78 Cal.W.N. 973: 1975 Cr.L.J. 838.

5. Cross-examination—Extent and limits of.—It is certainly implied by S. 138 that the party should have an opportunity to cross-examine and does not mean that merely a right to cross-examine a witness without an opportunity being offered for cross-examination is sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law: 24 Cr.L.J. 595: A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 53.

See 2 Jur. N.S. 161: 9 W.R. 587; 12 M.I.A. 381; 3 B.L.R. (A.C.) 273. No time limit for cross-examination can be imposed. But Court should see that it does not go in rambling way or extend to inadmissible questions: 1979 Mah.L.J. 11.

It is open to any cross-examiner to put questions to the witnesses with a view to search out the real truth in regard to the accusation levelled against the accused persons, but while putting questions to the witnesses, the cross-examiner should keep certain standard of decency and decorum. Held, that without any proof or cogent reason, the cross-examiner was not justified in putting a suggestion to the daughter of the deceased that the deceased was having illicit intimacy with a person: 1979 Cr.L.R. 445: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 684 (D.B.).

Accused convicted for murder of wife—Witness, a relative and neighbour of accused—Question asked as to whether she told Police when her statement was recorded that daughter of accused called her and shouted that her father was assaulting her mother—No omission of that statement under S. 162, Cr.P.Code—Such question could not be permissible though answered in negative as it was misleading and unfair: 1984 Cr.L.J. 209.

Statement of witness to Police not made available for accused for cross-examination—Evidence of such witness—Admissibility. See 1946 Nag.L.J. 139.

Examination-in-chief revealing to accused specific accusation of giving fatal blows—Cross-examination normally conducted on basis of information in examination-in-chief—Accused cannot be said to be prejudiced by ignorance of accusations while proceeding with cross-examination: 1966 Cr.L.J. 223: (1965) 1 Law Rep. 714 (Mys.).

Where defendants resisted a possession suit filed by the plaintiff-auction purchaser of the disputed property who purchased it in a private sale, on the ground that the plaintiff was only a nominee of the mortgagee and, thus, private sale held in his favour was invalid but the defendants were refused cross-examination of the plaintiff regarding the question whether he was only a nominee of the mortgagee, held, order of the lower Court in disallowing questions in cross-examination regarding the plea taken by defendant was illegal: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 371.

Proceedings under S. 145, Cr.P.Code—Documents permitted to be proved by witness who has not filed an affidavit—Opposite party seeking to cross-examine the witness on merits—Magistrate refusing permission on the view that the witness could not have been examined-in-chief on merits—Order of Magistrate is contrary to law—The witness having been allowed to prove documents, the opposite party is entitled to cross-examine the witness as to relevant matters, even if they are not covered by examination-in-chief—S. 138, Evidence Act is for the purpose of contradiction under S. 145 of the Evidence Act and does not constitute substantive evidence: 1968 All.Cr.R. 8: 33 Cut. L.T. 971.

Where after close of the case, the plaintiffs were permitted to adduce further evidence, held, the lower Court could not refuse the chance of adducing evidence in rebuttal by the defendants: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 184: 1982 B.L.J.R. 359: 1982 Pat.L.J.R. 300: 1982 B.L.J. 450.

A defendant not appearing or not filing its written statement in a suit does not necessarily admit the plaintiff's claim; even after he has been proceeded ex parte, he can still join proceedings and participate in the suit prospectively; he is to be permitted to cross-examine the plaintiff's witness examined at that stage; if the Court disallows such a request of the defendant, that would amount to an error: 1990 Punj.L.J. 346: (1990) 2 Rev.L.R. 350: (1990-2) 98 Punj.L.R. 65.

The right to cross-examine a witness who is called by a Court arises not under the provision of S. 311 of the Cr.P.Code, but under the Evidence Act which gives a party the right to cross-examine a witness who is not his own witness. Since a witness summoned by the Court could not be termed a witness of any particular party, the Court should give the right of cross-examination to the complainant. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 178; (1992) 5 C.C.R. 258 (Ori.); (1994) 7 C.C.R. 229 (Ori.), Rel. on]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 76 (Ori.).

6. Who is entitled to cross-examine.— Whether or not a party has a right to cross-examine the adverse party has to be ascertained from the Evidence Act and not from the Code of Criminal Procedure which deals with the subject of evidence only incidentally: A.I.R. 1956 All. 385 (D.B.).

Where the same witness is cross-examined on behalf of different parties and during the course of it he makes a statement damaging to the case of one of parties who had already cross-examined him, then, the latter party is entitled to cross-examine the witness with reference to the statement so made: 189 I.C. 757: A.I.R. 1940 All. 353. See also A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 175; I.L.R. 21 Cal. 401 (D.B.).

Right of cross-examination belongs to adverse party: A.I.R. 1917 Cal. 264 (S.B.)

The general rule is that a defendant may cross-examine his co-defendant who gives evidence, or any of his co-defendant's witness, if his co-defendant's interest is hostile to his own. It is only where the evidence of a co-defendant or a co-respondent is adverse to the defendant or the respondent that the defendant or respondent can claim right to cross-examine. Where the contentions of the defendant and the co-defendant are identical, there is no such right of cross-examination: (1946) 48 Bom.L.R. 36. Statement of witness to Police not made available to accused for cross-examination — Evidence of such witness — Admissibility. See I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 126: A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 193: 1946 Nag.L.J. 139.

S. 138 allows the right of cross-examination of a witness to an adverse party. Parties arrayed as defendants in a suit, having taken contradictory stands on a relevant and material issue, shall be adversary to each other and entitled to exercise their right of cross-examination against each other: A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 319: 1979 Rev.L.R. 118: (1979) 81 Punj.L.R. 24: I.L.R. (1978) 2 Punj. 393.

A defendant supporting the plaintiff in the written statement cannot be said to have an interest in conflict with that of the plaintiff; he has, therefore, no right to cross-examine the plaintiff. Ss. 137 and 138 contemplate cross-examination of witnesses by the adverse party; it is obviously the adverse party whose interest is in conflict with the party which has produced the witness that can exercise the privilege of cross-examining that witness: (1985) 5 Guj.L.H. 934.

The defendants who are supporting the plaintiff's case should cross-examine the plaintiff first and it is then that the "contesting defendants", who are the real "adverse party", should be directed to cross-examine the plaintiff: 1986 Mah.L.J. 643; A.I.R. 1920 Pat. 94 (D.B.).

A party claiming to cross-examine a witness must show that it is an "adverse party"; merely because it is shown as a defendant, it cannot be styled as an adverse party unless it is further shown that it is a contesting party in the sense that it disputes the plaintiff's case put forth in the plaint. Thus, where the pro forma defendants in their written statement fully supported the plaintiff's case, held, they could not be adverse parties, and could not cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2324; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 76, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Guj. 190: (1981) 1 Guj. L.H. 230.

The right to cross-examine a witness is a statutory right conferred on a party concerned only when its interest is adverse to that of the party proposed to be cross-examined. Thus, where the defendants requested the Court to decree the plaintiff's suit as prayed for in plaint and specifically admitted in their written statement that the plaintiff had properly maintained the accounts, held, the defendants, having no interest adverse to that of the plaintiff, could not be allowed to cross-examine the plaintiff; that would amount to avoidable harassment of the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1978 Andh. Pra. 193: (1977) 1 An.W.R. 417. But see A.I.R. 1975 Del. 109: (1975) 77 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 42 [Where in a suit for eviction, the Rent Controller refused to grant permission to petitioner sub-tenant to cross-examine witness produced by another sub-tenant on the ground that their defence was identical, held, denial of opportunity to the petitioner sub-tenant to cross-examine witness of another sub-tenant was illegal. [A.I.R. 1917 Cal. 264; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 919; (1946) 48 Bom.L.R. 36, Disting.; A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 229 and 1894 Probate Division 248, Rel. on].]

Tenant's right to cross-examine the witness produced by the sub-tenant in an eviction suit on the ground of sub-tenancy. See (1987) 1 Ren.L.R. 257 (P.&H.).

Right of one to cross-examine other defendants—Evidence produced by partner-defendant found admissible against other co-defendant partner—Co-defendants have right to cross-examine deposing defendant: 1965 Raj.L.W. 346: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 229.

7. Failure to cross-examine.—It is a well established rule of evidence that a party should put to each of his opponent's witnesses so much of his case as concerns that particular witness. If no such questions are put, the Courts may presume that the witness's account has been accepted. If it is intended to suggest that a witness was not speaking the truth upon a particular point, his attention must first be directed to the fact by cross-examination so that he may have an opportunity of giving an explanation: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 440: (1958) 60 Punj.L.R. 349; (1992) 1 Rev.L.R. 78 (D.B.); (1983) 23 Del.L.T. (S.N.) 44.

Failure to cross-examine witness on certain point—Amounts to acceptance of truth of his testimony thereon—Exception is when testimony itself contains inherent improbability and is of incredible and romancing character: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 751; A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 620.

Failure to question opponent's witness—Presumption is that his evidence is accepted A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 205: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N 458; 1976 Cr.L.J. 758 (Him. Pra.)

Failure to cross-examine a witness on a point stated in her evidence-in-chief will not amount to acceptance of her testimony thereon when such testimony is inherently incredible: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38: (1969-70) 74 Cal.W.N. 168 (D.B.). But see 1977 Cr.L.J. 410 (Del.).

When there has been no cross-examination on a point, the evidence in examination-in-chief must be accepted. [(1959) 1 An.W.R. 98; A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 683; A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 152, Rel. on]: (1966) 2 An.L.T. 280: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 218. See also I.L.R. (1963) Andh. Pra. 754.

Where the statements of the witnesses of the plaintiff were recorded on commission and the defendant, despite notice, did not appear before the Commissioner in person, or through pleader and consequently, these witnesses were not cross-examined, the result would be that the evidence of these witnesses must be accepted unless there are some inherent improbabilities: A.I.R. 1955 Him. Pra. 57. The trial of a cause is aimed at arriving at the truth of the conflicting cases that are presented before the Court. Every witness entering the box does so as a witness of truth. Cross-examination is a powerful and valuable weapon for the purpose of testing the veracity of a witness and the accuracy and completeness of his story. The extent of its effectiveness no doubt depends upon the dexterity of the wielder of the weapon, but every cross-examiner should and can, if he is careful, indicate in cross-examination, whichever part of the evidence given in examination-in-chief is challenged, and an omission to do so would lead to the inference that the evidence is accepted subject of course to its being assailed as inherently improbable: 1953 Ker.L.T. 587: A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 152. Where the witnesses are not tested by cross-examination, their evidence may be accepted unless there are any inherent improbabilities: A.I.R. 1956 Him. Pra. 4. See also I.L.R. (1974) Him. Pra. 509; 1975 Chand.L.R. (Cr.) 157; 1977 B.L.J.R. 280; 1990 M.P.L.J. 228 (D.B.).

The rule of appreciation of evidence that the statement of a party on a fact in issue, if unchallenged in cross-examination, should normally be accepted by the Court, is applicable only where the statement is such that it can reasonably be acted upon and made basis of a finding by the Court. But where, in cases, a statement falls short of such probative value, it would not acquire any sanctity because no cross-examination is made to challenge its correctness: (1979) 2 Ren.L.R. 273 (Punj.).

Absence of cross-examination of prosecution witness of certain facts, held, leads to inference of admission of that fact: 1990 M.P.L.J. 228 (D.B.).

Where cross-examination is not directed against the positive material assertion affecting the opposite party, it would amount to the affected party accepting the truthfulness of that assertion unless there is some exceptional proof to the contrary: (1976) 12 Del.L.T. 311; 1983 Cr.L.J. 1694: 1983 F.A.J. 311 (Him. Pra.).

Where no question was put to Investigation Officer or prosecution witness concerned as to the safe and proper custody of residue of chatni which was administered to the deceased, the necessary inference is that it was kept in safe and proper custody in regular course of business as required under the rules and that it was not accessible to external agency so that oleander poison could be introduced into it while it was in custody of the witness concerned or the Police: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 321: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 38.

Where no question was put to the Investigation Officer as to how a constable accompanied the deceased to dispensary and that there was previous station diary entry of F.I.R. to that effect, it would be hazardous to go to the length of holding that there was another F.I.R. which has been suppressed. It might be that the Police constable accompanied the deceased on account of personal acquaintance. In the absence of clarification, no adverse inference can be drawn: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 321: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 38.

Railway Authorities, in a case for damages, failing to cross-examine the plaintiff's witness, held, the Railway Authorities must be deemed to have accepted the plaintiff's case in its entirety: A.I.R. 1983 Cal. 337.

In a case filed against the accused for offence punishable under the provisions of the Food Adulteration Act, on a private complaint by the Food Inspector, held, no conviction could be based on the statement of the Food Inspector which was recorded before framing of the charge when he could not be cross-examined due to his accidental death, specially when panch witness did not support the statement of Food Inspector: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1270 (Madh. Pra.).

8. Failure of party to put his essential and material case in cross-examination.—When a party declines to avail himself of the opportunity to put his essential and material case in cross-examination, it must follow that he believes that the testimony given could not be disputed at all. This is the rule of essential justice: I.L.R. (1969) 19 Raj. 273: A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 219.

Where evidence of witness, not cross-examined in respect of material assertion, is allowed to go unchallenged with regard to any particular point, it may safely be accepted as true: (1987) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 71 (Del.).

It is a well established rule of evidence that a party should put to each of his opponent's witnesses so much of his case as concerned that particular witness and that if no such questions are put, the Court will presume that the witness's account has been accepted: (1968) 2 An.L.T. 124.

Impeaching credit of witness—Omission by opponent to put material and essential case in cross-examination—Veracity of opponent's version of the case ought to be taken into account—Omission to do so vitiates appreciation of evidence: 1968 Ker.L.J. 123.

9. Suggestion in cross-examination—Evidentiary value of.—Suggestion in cross-examination, which is denied by the witness, is no evidence at all: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 213; A.I.R. 1963 Assam 151 (D.B.). As to the use which can be made of a statement made under S. 164, Cr.P.Code, see A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 45: (1946) 1 M.L.J. 211 (P.C.).

Suggestion in cross-examination can only be indicative of case put forward or stand taken by party on whose behalf cross-examination is being conducted—But to no extent whatsoever can it be a substitute for evidence if it is repudiated by witness to whom it is made: 1969 All.Cr.R. 240: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 369.

The suggestions made in cross-examination form part of the evidence on record. Those suggestions can be taken into consideration while determining whether the reply given was believable or not: 1979 All.Cr.R. 185: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 89 (D.B.).

10. Tendering of witness for cross-examination.—The practice of tendering a witness for cross-examination certainly should not be employed in the case of an important witness: (1941) 43 Bom.L.R. 946: A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 37: I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 115; I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 384: A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 71: (1942) 44 Bom.L.R. 27 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 286: 56 Cr.L.J. 86. (1) The practice of tendering witnesses leads to considerable confusion and is to be deprecated. (2) A material witness should not be merely tendered but should be sworn and asked to give evidence by the prosecution. Tendering if at all should be confined to witnesses of secondary importance. (3) Even in a case, where the prosecution has already got sufficient evidence on a particular point and does not want to waste time by examining a witness although material, who was examined in the lower Court on the same point, but at the same time does not want to deprive the defence of the right of cross-examination, it should ask the witness at least whether his evidence in the lower Court was true, and if he gave a general answer as to the truth of his evidence in the lower Court, he could be cross-examined on that: 1958 Cr.L.J. 931: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 422.

Tendering witness for cross-examination tantamounts to giving up witness: I.L.R. (1963) 2 Punj. 328: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 350: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 120.

S. 138 envisages that a witness would first be examined-in-chief and then subjected to cross-examination and for seeking any clarification, the witness may be re-examined by the prosecution. There is no meaning in tendering a witness for cross-examination only. Tendering of a witness for cross-examination, as a matter of fact, amounts to giving up of the witness by the prosecution as it does not choose to examine him in chief. There is no procedure whereby the prosecution is permitted to tender a witness for cross-examination only, without there being any examination-in-chief in relation to which, such a witness can be cross-examined. The practice of tendering a witness for cross-examination has been consistently discouraged and even condemned by various High Courts. Thus, where eye-witnesses to the occurrences whose evidence was material for unfolding prosecution story, were tendered only for cross-examination, held, their non-examination seriously affected the credibility of the prosecution case and detracted materially from its reliability. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1586, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1601.

Tendering of witness for cross-examination—Practice deprecated: 1967 Cr.L.J. 73: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 16.

11. Effect of not giving opportunity to cross-examine.—Failure to give opportunity to cross-examine witness — His evidence must be excluded from consideration: (1965) 1 Mys.L.J. 442: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 154; (1993) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 349 (Him. Pra.).

Effect of not giving opportunity to cross-examine—Date fixed for cross-examination of witness—Defendant praying for summoning of documents for cross-examination—Court allowing prayer subject to payment of heavy adjournment costs which defendant did not agree to pay—Case adjourned for cross-examination of that witness—On adjourned date defendant not allowed to cross-examine witness with reference to those documents which had been received in the meanwhile—Order abridging defendant's right to cross-examine plaintiff's principal witness held illegal and prejudiced case of defendant: I.L.R. (1960) 2 Punj. 506: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 624: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 500.

Every party has to be given a fair deal as far as right of cross-examination is concerned. Where rent controlling authority did not give an opportunity to the appellant-tenant to cross-examine one witness, held, though witness was an old lady, instead of depriving the tenant of the right of cross-examination, the rent controlling authority could afford an opportunity to tenant by adjourning the case on payment of cost and expenses, which was sufficient for bringing the lady by a car or in higher class compartment of a train: A.I.R. 1994 Madh. Pra. 115.

Member of Force overstaying leave—Departmental enquiry under R. 27, Central Reserve Police Rules, 1955—Allegation of overstay not denied—Burden of showing that overstay was for reason beyond control, lies on delinquent member—Member not producing evidence to discharge burden but complaining that he was not given opportunity to cross-examine officer who had made report against him behind his back—Prejudice not shown to have been caused by non-cross-examination—Enquiry cannot be said to be vitiated for non-cross-examination: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 140: 1965 Raj.L.W. 26.

Where the plaintiff had referred her right to lead evidence in rebuttal on an issue, the burden for which lay on the defendant for which the latter had to prove her right to possession of a schedule property but as the plaintiff had testified to the situation of the property, its probable rent and area, etc., held, the Court rightly disallowed the defendant to cross-examine the plaintiff on those points as he would have ample opportunity to do so when the plaintiff adduces evidence in rebuttal: (1988) 1 Karn.L.J. 588.

Omission to cross-examine—Accused declining to cross-examine witness—Having forgone his right to cross-examine he cannot subsequently make grievance about it: 1965 Raj.L.W. 26: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 44: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 140.

Evidence and proof — Accused undefended — Prosecution amply establishing guilt — Accused cannot be acquitted merely on ground that prosecution witnesses were not cross-examined: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 1105.

Evidence of the prosecution witnesses who were not cross-examined, held, cannot be made basis of conviction: (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 109.

Though the law provides (S. 246 (4), Cr.P.Code) for some time to intervene between the date on which the charge is framed and the date on which the accused is required to state as to whether he wishes to cross-examine any or all the witnesses examined by the prosecutrix before the framing of the charge, the failure to give such an opportunity to the accused is not an illegality which will vitiate the trial itself. However, having regard to prejudice that may be caused to the accused, it would be proper, in such cases to remit the case to the Court of Magistrate to proceed with the trial from the stage of S. 246 of the Cr.P.Code. [(1966) 2 Mys.L.J. 762, Rel. on]: 1992 Cr.L.J. 24 (Karn.) (D.B.).

Where out of three accused, two were represented by one Counsel and third by another Counsel and opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witness was given to one Counsel and not to the other, held, statements of witnesses were not admissible in evidence; conviction set aside and case was remanded for fresh trial: (1993) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 50 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

12. Power of Court in matter of controlling cross-examination.—The Court has an undoubted control and a discretion in the matter of controlling the cross-examination of a party by Counsel of the opposite party. It is quite true that neither the Evidence Act nor the Code of Criminal Procedure, contains anything which would justify a Court of law in imposing a particular time limit. But if the Court has a discretion and has control over the proceedings, surely the Court must be presumed to have the power, apart from the Evidence Act or the Code of Criminal Procedure: A.I.R. 1955 Bom. 318: (1955) 57 Bom. L.R. 282: I.L.R. (1955) Bom. 675.

Cross-examination is one of the most important processes for the elucidation of the facts of a case and all reasonable latitude should be allowed but the Judge has always a discretion as to how far it may go or how long it may continue. A fair and reasonable exercise of his discretion by the Judge will not generally be questioned by an appellate Court: 1945 All.L.J. 34: A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 38 (P.C.).

Duty of Judge—Intervention and interruption in examination of witness—Extent of right: (1957) 2 All E.R. 155.

13. Unfinished testimony—Admissibility of.—Unfinished testimony, when admissible: 144 I.C. 331: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 561.

Evidence given in examination-in-chief—Admissibility without cross-examination: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1310: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 677. See also 1982 Chand.Cr.C. 16 (P.&H.).

Where a case under provisions of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 was instituted on complaint of a Food Inspector but the accused could not cross-examine Food Inspector as he was dead, held, accused could not be convicted on the evidence of Food Inspector who had not been cross-examined and when panch-witnesses had not supported his case: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1270 (Madh. Pra.).

It is apparent from a bare reading of S. 138 that the right of cross-examination is there, but it is there only when the adverse party desires to exercise it. But when the adverse party does not desire to cross-examine the witness, it cannot be said that the right of cross-examination has been denied to it or that the statement is not complete for want of cross-examination. Where an opportunity to cross-examine a witness was granted and the cross-examination did take place to some extent but could not be completed and was deferred for a later stage on the request of the adverse party, held, the prosecution or the trial Court cannot be saddled with responsibility for the cross-examination remaining incomplete and, therefore, such a statement could be used in evidence: 1984 Raj.L.W. 56.

Where the accused and the deceased in the murder case were closely related and the eye-witnesses examined-in-chief supported the prosecution version but could not be cross-examined because the defence Counsel was—as found by the Court—absent on design and the cross-examination could be effected rather late when the eye-witnesses turned hostile in their cross-examination, held, the Sessions Court rightly convicted the accused on the basis of their evidence as given in the examination-in-chief; the Court was justified in proceeding against them for perjury; such a course should be followed in similar situations to curb such manipulations: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1738 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where the plaintiff failed to subject himself to cross-examination in spite of the order of the Court after the remand, held, it would not be safe to rely on the examination-in-chief recorded which was not subjected to cross-examination before the remand was made. Therefore, the refusal of the plaintiff to submit to cross-examination had made the evidence in examination-in-chief non est: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1141: (1989) 3 S.C.C. 56.

Where in a divorce case, a witness, who was husband's uncle, was produced by the wife as her witness and his cross-examination could not be completed in order to enable him to bring reconciliation but his attempts were not successful and he could not be produced in the Court on subsequent dates, held, as the husband did not apply for summoning the witness by the process of the Court and for compelling his attendance for further cross-examination as he knew that the same will worsen his case, taking into account of evidence of said witness could not be objected to on the ground of his incomplete cross-examination: 1984 Hindu L.R. 12: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 145 (All.).

Where a person, though his name was mentioned in the first information report, was not charge-sheeted but on the basis of evidence of two witnesses (whose cross-examination had been deferred), the trial Court summoned him under S. 319, Cr.P.Code, and his contention was that as the cross-examination of the said two witnesses stood deferred, these two statements could not be termed as the evidence within the meaning of S. 319 (1), held, the applicant became an "adverse party" only after he was summoned. Thus, his right of cross-examination would flow only after the witnesses are "reheard" since the proceedings have to commence "afresh" as against him; it, therefore, was of no consequence whether the statements of the two witnesses relied upon by the trial Judge for summoning the applicant were recorded after examination-in-chief or after cross-examination or re-examination. In any case the said statement was "evidence" which could have been used by the trial Judge. [1986 All.L.J. 1347, Disting.]: 1990 Cr.L.J. 460: 1989 All.L.J. 72.

Where the Court under S. 319(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure has to form its opinion whether grounds exist for proceeding against a person not then accused, held, even the statement of witnesses not yet cross-examined is sufficient; the Court's opinion formed under this section is akin to the opinion formed under S. 200 or S. 202: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 8: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 871.

14. Court's power to put questions.—Power of Judge to put questions to witnesses both when prosecution examined them and as well as when defence cross-examined them. See (1951) 1 M.L.J. 207: (1951) 64 Mad.L.W. 303: A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 772(1); A.I.R 1924 Oudh 371.

The Counsel calling a witness must be allowed to examine the witness in the way in which he wants and the cross-examining Counsel must be allowed to do so as he prefers. No doubt, it is true that the Court can put any question to the witness at any stage of the examination, but this power should not be carried to the extent of the Court itself examining the witness: (1957) 23 Cut.L.T. 499. See also I.L.R. (1977) 1 Cut. 111 (D.B.); (1970) 11 Guj.L.R. 846 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1937 All. 171.

For a criminal Court in order to become an effective instrument in dispensing justice, the Presiding Judge must cease to be a spectator and must become a participant in the trial by evincing intelligent active interest by putting questions to witnesses in order to ascertain the truth. It must, of course, not assume the role of a prosecutor in putting questions. The functions of the Counsel, particularly those of the public prosecutor, are not to be usurped by the Judge, by descending into the arena. Any question put by the Judge must be so as not to frighten, coerce, confuse or intimidate the witnesses. [(1957) 2 All E.R. 155, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1036: 1981 Cr.L.J. 609; (1965) 6 Guj.L.R. 593 (D.B.).

15. Re-examination.—After the cross-examination of the witness on behalf of the accused, the re-examination would ordinarily be directed to the explanation of the matter referred to in the cross-examination: 3 Pat.L.T. 32: A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 116. See also 44 I.C. 343: 9 L.B.R. 109. Where the cross-examination of a witness begins on one day and is completed only the next day, the party calling the witness is entitled to re-examine the witness on the whole field covered by the witness and not merely on the matters arising in the cross-examination on the second day. The law does not contemplate the placing of any such restriction on the right of re-examination conferred by S. 138 and it is not open to the Court to take it away. If the matter elicited in re-examination gives rise to any suspicion that it has been the result of tutoring with regard to any matter covered on the last day of cross-examination, it would be open to the Judge to draw the attention of the jury to the fact that the lapse of time may have given an opportunity for preparation; but this would not be a ground for refusing to let questions in re-examination being put: 22 Pat.L.T. 327: A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 362.

139. Cross-examination of person called to produce a document.—A person summoned to produce a document does not become a witness by the mere fact that he produces it, and cannot be cross-examined unless and until he is called as a witness.

Re-examination of witness—Principle. See 1971 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 311. See also 1971 Cr.L.J. 1335 (Del.); (1971) 2 M.L.J. 114.

A witness was cross-examined and re-examined. In re-examination fresh matter was introduced. The Counsel asked for cross-examination of the witness again. The Court granted only three minutes. Held, the object of re-examination was to clear ambiguities in cross-examination and that if new and important matter was allowed to be introduced in re-examination, the other party has a right to cross-examine the witness as regards the matter introduced. Therefore, the time of three minutes, given for cross-examination, was insufficient: 38 Cr.L.J. 416(2): A.I.R. 1937 All. 171.

Court can permit party calling a witness to put question in the nature of cross-examination at the stage of re-examination—Adverse party must be given further opportunity to cross-examine witness in such case: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 773.

S. 138 provides that the re-examination shall be directed to the explanation of matters referred to in cross-examination and if new matter is by permission of the Court, noticed in further cross-examination, the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter. But even if fresh matter is allowed to be elicited in re-examination without any objection, the Court must be deemed to have permitted the said question: A.I.R. 1973 Del. 180 (D.B.). See also (1990) 69 Cut.L.T. 411.

16. Miscellaneous.—From the fact that there was no record made in the depositions of the witnesses that there was no cross-examination, it can be said that, in fact, there was no cross-examination, and not that the request of the party to cross-examine was disallowed: (1957) 13 F.J.R. 237: (S) A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 882: 1958 S.C.R. 499: I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 274.

Right of party to cross-examine hostile witnesses. See 1937 All.L.J. 1214: A.I.R. 1937 All. 754.

The Court is not bound to wait for any length of time and, thus, waste public time if the pleaders do not turn up in Court at the right moment to cross-examine the opposite party's witnesses. This cannot be made a ground of attack against the orders passed: 1954 Nag.L.J. 303: A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 252.

Recalling of witness by prosecution for cross-examination after one month of his discharge, held, is not proper: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 165 (All.).

Defendant's Counsel failing to take part in framing issues—Defendant cannot be said to have abandoned issues merely on that ground—Right to cross-examine cannot be denied on ground of such failure: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 89: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 368.

Where the trial Court, after taking note of certain questions asked in cross-examination which were relevant neither to the facts in issue nor under any other section of the Evidence Act, concluded that allegations put forth in the form of questions amounted to acts of cruelty and passed a decree of divorce though husband never pleaded said acts of cruelty, held, the trial Court ought not to have allowed said questions in cross-examination. In any case, if the trial Court had not exercised its power at the time when the questions were asked the same could not be made the basis for grant of relief to the husband: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 240: 1982 Hindu L.R. 226.

Conviction cannot be based on the testimony of witnesses whose examination-in-chief is materially contradicted, by their cross-examination: (1984) 2 Crimes 85 (Ori.).

See I.L.R. 12 Bom. 63.

S. 139 has nothing to do with the proper custody mentioned in S. 90. That section merely provides a machinery for the production of the documents summoned. It no way bears on the interpretation to be placed on S. 90. Under S. 90 the Court ought to act on the evidence adduced in deciding whether the documents have been produced from proper custody or not: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 441: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 53.

Witness, who is—Accused producing document: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 638: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 178.

140. Witnesses to character.—Witnesses to character may be cross-examined and re-examined.

141. Leading questions.—Any question suggesting the answer which the person putting it wishes or expects to receive, is called a leading question.

142. When they must not be asked.—Leading questions must not, if objected to by the adverse party, be asked in an examination-in-chief, or in a re-examination, except with the permission of the Court.

The Court shall permit leading questions as to matters which are introductory or undisputed, or which have, in its opinion, been already sufficiently proved.

A person to whom a summon is issued under S. 94 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (S. 91 of the Cr.P.Code, 1974) for production of a document, does not thereby become a witness. Thus, where in reply to such summon, the witness stated that she did not know anything about the document sought to be proved, held, under no provision of the Code, the Court could record her statement on oath, on her inability to produce the document, or "put her a few questions for satisfying itself regarding the whereabouts of the document": A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 403: 1977 Cr.L.J. 245: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 169: (1977) 2 S.C.R. 160.

Where evidence of two employees cited as prosecution witnesses against the company was sought to be shut out as violative of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution of India on the ground that it would amount to self-incrimination on the part of the company, held, a body corporate, since it cannot take or make oath or affirmation, a necessity for witnesses other than children nor can it be deemed a dumb witness under S. 119 because of its incapacity to see or hear or perceive by sense nor can a person summoned to produce documents can become a witness under S. 139, is not contemplated as a person under Art. 20(3) of the Constitution; the company employees cannot be equated with the company; there is no bar against their examination as prosecution witnesses: 1991 Cr.L.J. 828 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Section 141—Notes.

A leading question is one which indicates to the witness the real or supposed fact which the party examining him desires or expects him to confirm by the answer: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1892.

Leading questions in chief and re-examinations—Ban not absolute—Though objected to, Court may allow such questions under O. 18, R. 11 of the C.P.Code—Discretion largely rests with the trial Court and depend on the circumstances as demeanour of witnesses, the tenor of the preceding questions, etc: (1966) 12 Fac.L.R. 80: (1966) 2 L.L.J. 282 (Cal.).

Domestic enquiry — Leading questions asked to delinquent — Propriety: 1968 Lab. I.C. 212: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 236; 1983 Lab.I.C. 624: (1983) 1 Cal.L.J. 8: (1983) 2 L.L.J. 122.

There is no law which governs the order in which two contesting parties are entitled to cross-examine a witness of the opposite party; S. 141 deals with leading questions, S. 143 with questions lawful in cross-examination, S. 147 with the circumstances wherein a witness shall be compelled to answer questions and S. 148 empowers the Court to decide as to when a question may be asked and the witness be compelled to answer it: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 1007.

Section 142—Notes.

A leading question cannot be allowed in the examination-in-chief: 1958 M.P.L.J. 833: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 84.

A leading question to the prosecution witness by the prosecution cannot be allowed nor can the reply be used: I.L.R. 1 Pat. 630: 4 Pat.L.T. 76: A.I.R. 1 923 Pat. 582. On this section, see also 12 M.I.A. 380.

143. When they may be asked.—Leading questions may be asked in cross-examination.

Principles governing grant of permission to cross-examine one's witness—Circumstances under which leading questions may be allowed: 1969 Cr.L.J. 118: A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 12.

It is well settled that a party cannot normally be allowed to cross-examine its own witness and declare him hostile unless the Court is satisfied that the statement of the witness exhibits an element of hostility or he has resiled from a material statement made by him before an earlier authority or the Court was satisfied that he is not speaking the truth. But there must be some material before the Court to base its satisfaction upon. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 170, Foll.]: (1980) 18 Del.L.T. (S.N.) 12.

The prosecutor must not be allowed to ask leading questions to the witness unless the witness has been declared, with the Court's permission, hostile whereafter he is cross-examined. After the witness has been led after the preliminaries to the material portion of his examination-in-chief, it is generally the prosecutor's duty to ask the witness to state the facts and leave the witness to tell the unvarnished tale of his own account. The prosecutor should not be allowed to frame his questions in such a manner that the witness by replying in simple yes or no gives the evidence which the prosecutor wishes to elicit from the witness: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1892.

A reading of the section indicates that there is no legal hurdle in putting leading question during examination-in-chief without permission of the Court, if the opposite side does not object to it. Need to obtain permission of the Court to put leading question would arise only in the contingency where the opposite side takes objection. Even if the opposite side objects, Court has a wide discretion in allowing leading question to be put. Second para to S. 142 shows that Court has no discretion to disallow a leading question if it relates to undisputed matters or introductory matters or matters already proved. Discretion to allow or disallow a leading question can be exercised by the Court only when such leading question relates to matters other than those enumerated above. [A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 582, Dissent. from]: (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. 212: (1992) 1 Ker.L.T. 878 (D.B.). See also 1987 Cr.L.R. 91: 1987 Rec.Cr.C. 65 (Raj.).

The law is not that leading question by itself is illegal or improper when it is put by the party who calls the witness. But if the question itself contained the entire answer, Court would treat such answer with the worth it deserves. This is the disadvantage of a leading question when put in chief-examination: (1992) 1 Ker.L.J. 212: (1992) 1 Ker.L.T. 878 (D.B.).

Merely because a witness in an unguarded moment speaks the truth which may not suit the prosecution or which may be favourable to the accused, the prosecution cannot be allowed to cross-examine the witness. Before allowing such a request, the Court may look into the statements made by the witness before the Investigating Officer or previous authorities to find out whether or not the witness was making an inconsistent statement on a most material point; but the Court must, however, distinguish between a statement made by the witness by way of an unfriendly act and one which lets out the truth without any hostile intention. Though it will largely depend on the facts and circumstances of each case, but this much is broadly clear that the contingency of cross-examining the witness by the party calling him is an extra-ordinary phenomenon and permission should be given only in special cases: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 170.

Section 143—Notes.

S. 143 lays down that leading questions may be asked in cross-examination. The reason why leading questions are allowed to be put to an adverse witness in cross-examination is that the purpose of a cross-examination being to test the accuracy, credibility and general value of the evidence given, and to sift the facts already stated by the witness, it sometimes becomes necessary for a party to put leading questions in order to elicit facts in support of his case, even though the facts so elicited may be entirely unconnected with facts testified to in an examination-in-chief. Order of the officer holding an enquiry

144. Evidence as to matters in writing.—Any witness may be asked, whilst under examination, whether any contract, grant or other disposition of property, as to which he is giving evidence, was not contained in a document, and if he says that it was, or if he is about to make any statement as to the contents of any document, which, in the opinion of the Court, ought to be produced, the adverse party may object to such evidence being given until such document is produced, or until facts have been proved which entitle the party who called the witness to give secondary evidence of it.

Explanation.—A witness may give oral evidence of statements made by other persons about the contents of documents if such statements are in themselves relevant facts.

C deposes that he heard A say to D—"B wrote a letter accusing me of theft, and I will be revenged on him". This statement is relevant, as showing A's motive for the assault, and evidence may be given of it, though no other evidence is given about the letter.

that "no leading questions shall be allowed" betrays an ignorance of the principles on which a cross-examination should be allowed to be conducted. It is open to the officer conducting the enquiry to disallow a particular question when that question is composite, irrelevant or confusing. But a general order restricting the right of the petitioner to put any leading question at all stands on a completely different footing, and cannot be justified, regard being had to the basic meaning to be attached to the words "cross-examined": 1954 All.L.J. 316: A.I.R. 1954 All. 438.

The Court may, in its discretion under S. 143, permit the prosecution to cross-examine a witness even though he had been originally called by them with regard to the matters elicited by the defence: (1907-08) 12 Cal.W.N. 676: I.L.R. 42 Cal. 957. Leading questions such as can properly be put in cross-examination of a hostile witness cannot be put by the Public Prosecutor in examination-in-chief: 2 Pat.L.T. 757: A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 46.

If a Judge disallows a question, the pleader should have the question and order disallowing it recorded, if such a refusal is illegal: 36 I.C. 468: 9 Bur.L.T. 113. On this section, see I.L.R. 37 Cal. 467: (1909-10) 14 Cal.W.N. 1114.

Where a claim for bonus is being investigated by the Industrial Tribunal and the workmen upon whom the onus lies to establish their claim do not give any evidence in support of their claim, the mere non-production of the balance-sheet by the company even though called upon to do so, would not justify the raising of presumption under S. 114, Illus. (g), Evidence Act. Even if the company has stated that there was no financial inability to pay the claim that does not necessarily mean that it had an available surplus or that the available surplus amounted to whatever was claimed: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 500.

Where a delivery warrant is issued for division of properties by metes and bounds after a preliminary decree was passed in a suit for partition and possession, endorsement on a delivery warrant made by the revenue authorities cannot be conclusive evidence of the fact that division was effected and possession was given. No doubt, such an endorsement on a warrant, may give rise to a presumption that what is stated therein is true, but it is only a rebuttable presumption: A.I.R. 1957 Mys. 71: I.L.R. (1957) Mys. 14.

[1]145. Cross-examination as to previous statements in writing.—A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, and relevant to matters in question, without such writing being shown to him, or being proved; but, if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him.

1. Scope and applicability.—As to relative scope of this section and S. 155, see Notes under the latter section scope and for application of the section, see A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 431; I.L.R. 19 All. 390; Rat. 610 and 924; 11 B.H.C.R. 120: I.L.R. 20 Cal. 642; I.L.R. 31 Cal. 142; I.L.R. 33 Cal. 1023; (1923-24) 28 Cal.W.N. 587: I.L.R. 51 Cal. 849; A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 277: 74 Cal.L.J. 547.

S. 155, Evidence Act, lays down that the credit of a witness may be impeached inter alia by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted, but it does not lay down the manner in which the former statement is to be proved. The mode of proof of such a statement in writing when it is ought to be tendered in evidence for contradicting a witness is provided in S. 145 of the Act. S. 155 is controlled by S. 145, and is not independent of it. It would follow that so far as the Madras High Court is concerned, it does not appear that there was any other procedure.

The High Courts are unanimous on the point that if it is intended to contradict a witness by the writing, his attention must, before the writing could be proved, be called to those parts which are to be used for purpose of contradicting him. The proper procedure would, therefore, be to ask a witness first whether he made such and such statement before the Police Officer. If the witness answers in the affirmative, the previous statement in writing need not be proved and the cross-examiner may, if he so chooses, leave it to the party who called the witness to have the discrepancy, if any, explained in course of re-examination if, on the other hand, the witness denies having made the previous statement attributed to him or states he does not remember having made any such statement, and it is desired to contradict him, by the record of the previous statement, the cross-examiner must read out to the witness the relevant portion or portions of the record which are alleged to be contradictory to his statement in Court or give him an opportunity to reconcile the same if he can. The best way of putting a statement is to put it in the actual words in which it stands recorded within quotation marks: (1958) 2 An.W.R. 627: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 942.

The question whether there has been a compliance with S. 145, Evidence Act, or not is purely a question of fact. The question is not one of form but of substance. If there has been substantial compliance that is sufficient in law: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 571: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 797: (1958) 2 An.W.R. 365.

A pure and simple reading of S. 145 makes it perfectly clear that the rule laid down in it is only applicable when a witness is sought to be contradicted by his previous statement. Where, however, there is no statement in existence which could be contradicted by previous statement, this rule does not apply and it is not necessary before it could be admissible in evidence to draw the attention of the witness to it: 1957 B.L.J.R. 542: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 294.

S. 145 is in two parts, both of them dealing with cross-examination. The first part deals with cross-examination other than by way of contradiction and the second by way of contradiction only. It is not impossible to invoke the second part without putting questions under the first part: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1012: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1231.

A witness cannot be contradicted by first supposing that a certain thing must have taken place in a manner not deposed to by the witness and then to find that was not consistent with the statement made by that witness: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 253: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1821.

S. 145 seems to be a self-complete section and the formalities prescribed in S. 163 for calling and inspecting a document from the possession of the other side are not attracted to S. 145: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 138 (D.B.).

The object of S. 145 is to give witness chance of explaining or reconciling his statements: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 514. See also 1966 Cr.L.J. 343 (Pat.); (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 90 (D.B.).

S. 145, Evidence Act permits cross-examination as regards any previous statements made by witness relevant to the matter in the criminal trial. The section lays down no limitation as to the proceeding or occasion on which statement was made. Where the Magistrate disallowed putting to the witness in cross-examination certain previous statement made by him on the ground that the statements had not been recorded in connection with the case before him, held, that the Magistrate ought to have allowed cross-examination: 1961 Nag.L.J. (Notes) 3.

For the purpose of contradicting witness by cross-examination, a question as to any part of statements made previously thereof may also be used in re-examination of such witness, but for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in the cross-examination. When the Court disallows any question on the basis that the accused or the prosecution cannot be allowed to cross-examine on account of the limitation contained in proviso of section, the Court must record a speaking order while disallowing the question: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1335 (Del.).

It has been held in A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405 that provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act are not applicable to the parties and they are applicable to the witnesses only. As such it is not necessary to recall the plaintiff to confront him with his admission contained in his previous statement: (1990) 1 Raj.L.W. 179.

It is clear from a plain perusal of the provision embodied in S. 145 that once a person comes to occupy the position of a witness and it is found that he made two contradictory statements either in different proceedings or in two different stages of a proceeding, the provision comes into play. It is not the requirement of the provision that the witness's previous statement reduced into writing must always be made by him in his capacity as a witness or on oath. Therefore, to read such limitations or qualifications would be doing violence to its language and cannot, therefore, be imposed as pre-condition for its applicability: 1987 M.P.L.J. 475.

When it is sought to contradict a witness with reference to any statement of his not reduced to writing, the use of statements made before but brought out otherwise in evidence is legally permissible. But in all cases where the contradiction is sought to be made out with reference to a statement reduced into writing, the appropriate procedure that should be followed is one, contained in S. 145, Evidence Act. Any other procedure is not countenanced by the Evidence Act, more so as this rule of confronting a witness with a portion of the proved statement recorded by the Police Officer finds special mention in the proviso to sub-S. (1) of S. 162, Cr.P.Code: 1961 An.L.T. 914: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 523.

A petition of complaint filed before a Magistrate by a witness some days after the occurrence can be used not only to corroborate him under S. 157 but also to contradict him under S. 145 or to impeach his credit under S. 155: (1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 763: A I.R. 1941 Cal. 533. Generally, an accused must be convicted upon evidence recorded by a Judge in the course of the trial by him and previous statements made by a witness out of a Court, though repeated in Court, have only a limited purpose and effect and when they are not repeated but denied in Court, this purpose and effect may be more limited still: A.I.R. 1944 Sind 38.

If controlled by S. 42, Cr.P.Code—Section is controlled by S. 162, Cr.P.Code: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 380: (1959) 1 An.W.R. 419: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 76 (D.B.).

In view of the provisions of S. 162, Cr.P.Code and S. 145 of the Evidence Act it is absolutely clear that the Court should faithfully record the contradictions brought out in the evidence of the witnesses and there is no question of recording the gist of the statement which will create more confusion than serving the purpose for which clear provisions have been made in the law. [1959 Cr.L.J. 1231:A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1012, Foll.]: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1871.

A previous statement made in writing under S. 313 of the Cr.P.Code can be used for contradiction as provided under S. 145 of the Evidence Act: 1987 M.P.L.J. 475.

There is no law which governs the order in which two contesting parties are entitled to cross-examine a witness of the opposite party: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 1007.

Charge for offence of murder—Investigation Court, if can obtain specimen handwriting or signature of accused. See 1983 Cr.L.J. 1482: 1983 Kash.L.J. 166.

Previous statement in writing bore thumb-impression—Whether cannot be proved by confronting: (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 75.

It is only when a witness denied his prior contradictory statement that it is required to be proved by its recorder; the earlier statement need not be proved unless the witness denies it and he has to be confronted with the contradictory portions of his earlier statement: (1972) 1 An.W.R. 33.

Contradictions and inconsistencies not with regard to the main occurrence, held, are of no consequence: 1982 M.P.W.N. 2. See also 1979 Jab.L.J. (Note) 7; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 269.

Where contradictions have been elicited, failure to exhibit the contradictions does not mean that the contradictions have not been proved: (1974) 2 Karn.L.J. (Jr.) 42 (S.N.) 141.

Statements made during cross-examination—Use of. See 1984 Cr.L.J. 1215: (1984) 57 Cut.L.T. 505.

Where a witness in the compensation case under S. 110-A of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 had fully supported the claimant's version but later on in the vehicle driver's trial in the criminal Court he resiled and deposed that the accident was caused by the rash and negligent driving of his scooter by the deceased whereafter he was recalled for further cross-examination in the compensation case where he resiled from his original testimony without having been confronted with his statement in the criminal Court, held, his testimony in the criminal Court could not be used to contradict his statement in the compensation case: (1986-1) 89 Punj.L.R. 92.

Where the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal relying upon the petitioner's earlier statement in a criminal case rejected petitioner's claim for recovery of compensation though said statement was never put to the witness in cross-examination for controverting, held, it was impermissible for the Tribunal to use the earlier statement of the criminal case, against the petitioner without confronting him under S. 145, Evidence Act. This requirement is not only of law but of principles of natural justice and equity also that one must be allowed to explain under what circumstances he gave earlier statement and whether he at all gave it. It is more so, when victim is being deprived of his compensation on the basis of it: 1986 Raj.L.W. 689.

Disciplinary proceedings against Government servant—Use of previous statement—Procedure: A.I.R. 1960 Ori. 68.

Previous statement made by investigating officer during departmental proceedings—Accused has right to obtain copy of relevant previous statement—S. 162(1) does not prohibit such use: 1969 Cur.L.J. 686 (Punj.).

An illiterate person is not immune from the processes of law with regard to contradiction by a previous statement, because S. 145 makes not the slightest difference whether the witness is literate or illiterate: (1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 775: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 268.

Hostile witness—Previous statements can be used to contradict him by complying with formalities laid down in the section: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1023: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 11. See also (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 47; (1977) 79 Bom.L.R. 132 (D.B.); (1985) 1 Crimes 31 (Del.) [Evidence of a so-called hostile witness is not completely effected.]

Where the witnesses, who were treated as hostile by the prosecution were confronted with their earlier statements to the Police and their evidence was rejected as it was contradicted by their earlier statements, held, such use of the statements is permissible under S. 155 of the Evidence Act and the proviso to S. 162(1) of the Cr.P.Code read with S. 145, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 400.

When a witness is treated as hostile, particular portion of the previous statement must be read over and explained to the witness and the witness asked whether he had stated so in the previous statement recorded by the Police Officer. Marking of the whole statement is not contemplated under S. 145 of the Evidence Act.

Material elicited as contradiction by use of S. 145 of the Evidence Act is not substantive evidence and cannot be acted upon to base a conviction: (1982) 1 Karn.L.J. 433: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1553 (D.B.).

Even in a criminal case when a witness is cross-examined and contradicted, with the Court's leave, by the party calling him, his evidence, as a matter of law, cannot be treated as having washed off the record altogether; it is for the Court of fact to consider, in each case, whether the witness by reason of the contradiction stands thoroughly discredited or can he still be believed in respect of a part of his testimony. If the Court finds that the credit of the witness has not been completely shaken, it may, with due caution and care, and after considering his evidence as a whole, and in the light of other evidence on record, accept and act upon that part of his testimony which the Court finds to be creditworthy. But where the whole testimony of the witness is impugned and the witness in the process stands squarely and totally discredited, the Court should, as matter of prudence, discard his evidence in toto. [A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 401 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 501; A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 137; A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289; A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 415; A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 65; A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 130; A.I.R. 1955 N.U.C. (Punj.) 5715; A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 30; A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 31; A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 248; 1951 Ker.L.T. 471; A.I.R. 1953 J.&K. 41, Approved]: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294: 1976 Cr.L.J. 295: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 727: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 11.

2. Previous statement.—Previous statements can be used only for the purpose of cross-examining a witness. They cannot be admitted as evidence against an accused: 12 Cr.L.J. 214: 10 I.C. 119.

The statement of the prosecution witnesses recorded by the predecessor Assistant Sessions Judge are "former statements" of the witnesses who were subsequently examined after the de novo trial, though in the same proceeding. These statements can be used for contradiction under S. 145 of the Evidence Act: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 934: (1972) 2 Cut.W.R. 1542: 1974 Cr.L.J. 567.

Even if the evidence on commission is not read as evidence in the suit as such an evidence constitutes previous statement of the witness, it would, therefore, be available for the purposes of S. 145: A.I.R. 1972 Ori. 213: (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 699. See also 1983 M.P.W.N. 59 [Whether date of stamps purchased for execution of a deed is a previous statement of the purchaser.]

3. Reduced into writing.—The expression "writing" appearing in S. 145 refers to the tangible object that appeals to the sense of sight and that which is susceptible of being reproduced by printing, lithography, photography, etc. It is not wide enough to include a statement appearing on a tape which can be reproduced through the mechanism of a tape-recorder. The record of a conversation appearing on a tape-recorder cannot be regarded as a statement in writing or reduced into writing. The record which appears on a tape-recorder cannot fall within the ambit of the definition of "writing" as given in S. 3 (65), General Clauses Act, 1897: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 173: (1956) 58 Punj.L.R. 441.

Tape-recorded statements—Cannot be taken as reliable without examination of person concerned: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 642: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 298.

A tape-recorded conversation, comparable as it is to a photograph, is admissible under S. 8 provided it is relevant and the voice has been identified and the accuracy of conversation has been proved by eliminating the possibility of erasure of the recorded tape. But where in a divorce proceeding on the ground of the wife's mental disorder, the tape-recorded conversation produced by the husband contained the wife's admission about her ailment when there was not even a remote reference to the recorded conversation in the petition and there was no explanation by the husband even in his statement of the circumstances and the manner in which the conversation was recorded apart from the husband's testimony that the recorded female voice was that of the wife nor was her voice compared by recording it in the Court nor the husband could tell the durations of different intervening intervals between recordings of the conversation, held, the tape could not be used as evidence either to prove her admission or for shaking her veracity in her cross-examination. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 147, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 128: (1985) 1 Hindu L.R. 378: 1985 Marriage L.J. 42.

Where the eviction order passed by the Rent Controller and upheld in appeal by the Tribunal was based on photographs without their negatives having been produced and proved, held, the photographs were inadmissible and, therefore, they could be discarded in second appeal and the other remaining evidence could be appreciated afresh: (1992) 48 Del.L.T. 65.

Photographs of scene of occurrence taken by Investigating Agency—All photographs sent to expert and his opinion obtained—Some of the photographs not supplied to accused—Defence is likely to suffer at the time of cross-examination: 1983 Cr.L.J. 864: (1983) 25 Del.L.T. 254.

In order that previous statement reduced to writing may be used for the purposes of cross-examination under S. 145, it is not necessary that it must have been reduced to writing by a person having jurisdiction to do so: I.L.R. 24 Pat. 623: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 82. The section contemplates a statement which is either written by the witness himself or which was reduced into writing by someone else: A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 148.

4. "Statement"—Meaning of.—See A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 356, cited under S. 157.

The term "statement" is not defined anywhere in the Evidence Act. It has a wider connotation. The section itself contemplates a statement which is either written by the witness himself or which was reduced into writing by some one else. It would not, therefore, be proper to construe the expression "statement" in a narrower way. That would defeat the very purpose of S. 145. It is, therefore, clear that even the statements which are not fully recorded or statements which are recorded in the form of memorandum are statements falling within the ambit of S. 145 of the Evidence Act: (1970) 1 An.W.R. 90: A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 148.

A "statement" not only includes what is expressly stated therein but what are necessarily implied therefrom. It must be deemed to contain by implication even omissions provided they can by construction be deemed to be part of the statement in writing itself: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1012: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1231.

5. Contradiction by omission.—All omissions found in the statements made to the Police are not contradictions and, hence, it is not open to the Court to make use of such omissions to show that the witness had said in the Court something which he did not say before the Police: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 571: (1958) 2 An.W.R. 365: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 797.

Contradiction—What amounts to—Every omission in statement under S. 162, Cr.P. Code is not contradiction: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 752: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 317: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 33.

To find a contradiction by omission, the Court should ascertain whether the two statements cannot stand together and whether the statement made by the witness in the witness-box should have been made by him while reporting the matter soon after the incident. If the two statements cannot stand together and the statement in the Court is such that the witness should necessarily have made at the time of his earlier statement, held, only then can the omission be considered to be a contradiction. Before using a prior statement of a witness to contradict him, his attention should be drawn to its relevant portion and he should be given an opportunity of explaining any apparent discrepancy; this is all the more so in the case of a contradiction by omission: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1933.

It is only a contradiction with the statement under S. 161, Cr.P.Code which can be legally proved and utilised by the accused and not an omission. Therefore, when the so called improvement made by the witnesses in their testimony in Court came within the purview of "omission" and were not contradictions, held, his testimony could not be discarded on that ground: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1736 (All.) (D.B.).

Merely because the prosecution had raised no objection and allowed the questions and answers relating to contradiction by omission to come on record, held, the matter is thereby not concluded; it is open to the prosecution to contend and the High Court to go behind it and accept in appeal that the answers were factually or legally not tenable: 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 25 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where a witness was sought to be contradicted with reference to first information report and also case diary, it was necessary that omissions sought to be elicited in the statement of the witness with reference to said two documents were separately put to the witness and putting questions about omission with reference to two documents at the same place could lead to confusion: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1017 (Madh. Pra.).

Omissions in statements of prosecution witnesses to Police cannot be regarded as contradictions but serious and glaring omissions can be relied upon as relevant circumstances: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1876 (Gau.).

Some omissions in the evidence of the witness, which even did not amount to contradiction, held, cannot be given too much weight: 1990 Cr.L.J. 839: 1989 All.L.J. 454 (D.B.).

Where the Magistrate used omissions and contradictions without giving opportunity to explain them, held, appreciation of evidence was faulty: (1985) 2 W.L.N. 451: 1985 Raj.L.W. 502.

Though a witness was asked question regarding his previous statements made in other cases, and he expressed ignorance about these, but he was never confronted with those statements, he cannot be condemned as unworthy of credit. When as a matter of fact most of the cross-examination of the witness was based on an attempt to prove omissions made by the witness in his earlier deposition before the Police, the trial Court should not have allowed the earlier statements of the witness before the Police to be used for that purpose: 1976 Kash.L.J. 253: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1310 (D.B.).

Where High Court outrightly excluded a material omission which did not amount to contradiction, from duly proved previous statement's of the witness from consideration, held, neither proof nor use of such omission was barred by S. 145. The High Court was in error in ignoring such omission: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 308: 1974 Cr.L.J. 369: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 704.

6. Previous statement must be put to witness.—Where a previous statement of a witness is sought to be used for contradicting him, the statement should be put to him and the witness questioned as to draw out from him whether there was any truth in the statement: I.L.R. (1952) Nag. 700: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 154; A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 7.

A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made in writing or reduced to writing without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, it is necessary under S. 145 to draw his attention before the writing can be proved to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. If the records of the previous trial are before the Magistrate, there is nothing to prevent the parties to the proceeding from making the use of the original records. As a matter of fact in such cases, only the original records should be used; and they can be dispensed with only when it is proved that secondary evidence is allowable. It is not necessary to require the party to produce certified copies of the statement before Court. When the records are there, it is the duty of the Magistrate while regulating the procedure of his own Court, to refer to the record of the previous statement himself, and see whether there is any contradiction between the statements then made and the evidence now given before him. Where the trial Court does not give the accused the benefit of the contradictions sought to be brought on record with the help of statements of the witnesses in a previous trial, the record of which was before the same Magistrate, it vitiates the procedure that is followed at the trial and the defect is of such a character as to enable the High Court to hold that it has resulted in miscarriage of justice: 1957 All.W.R. (Supp.) 52; (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 339: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 186.

To cross-examine a witness on a previous deposition with a view to discrediting him, the attention of the witness must be drawn to those discrepancies so that he may have the chance of explaining them. In such a case it is not proper for the Judge to stop the examination and have the whole deposition filed with a view to discrepancies being pointed out at the time of argument: A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 38; 1928 Mad.W.N. 789. The passage are to be specifically referred to: 12 R.D. 312: A.I.R.

1928 All. 511. There is no duty cast upon Counsel who wishes to cross-examine a witness by putting to him a previous statement, first to prove that statement, S. 145 has to be read with S. 162, Cr.P.Code, and quite clearly indicates that the attention of a witness is to be called to the previous statement before the writing can be proved. If the witness admits the previous statement, or explains any discrepancy or contradiction, it obviously makes it unnecessary for the statements thereafter to be proved. On the other hand, if the statement still requires to be proved that can be done by calling the person before whom it was made: I.L.R. (1939) Lah. 509: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 268. See also A.I.R. 1958 All. 445; A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 1.

There can be no hard and fast rule as regards the compliance with the requirements of S. 145. All that is required is that the witness must be treated fairly and be afforded a reasonable opportunity of explaining the contradictions after his attention has been drawn to them in a fair and reasonable manner. The matter is one of substance and not of mere form. Thus, where the witness is questioned in the cross-examination under the first part of the section about every material passage in his previous statement, point by point, there is a substantial compliance with what S. 145 requires, even though at the stage of acting under the second part, the attention of the witness is not drawn to the passages which are to be relied upon for contradiction: A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 214: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1131; A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 277.

Deposition not read over to witness as required by S. 360, Cr.P.Code: I.L.R. 6 Pat. 478: A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 315. Replication filed by a party under O. 6, R. 5, C.P.Code: (1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 652: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 529. Attention of complainant to be drawn to statement used in cross-examination to contradict: 31 I.C. 354: (1915) 17 Bom.L.R. 59.

In a case where some passage here and there differed from the later version of the witness, the procedure, of putting every passage which differed from her testimony in the Court of Sessions with a view to affording her an opportunity of explaining why she had made a contrary statement, would have been necessary. But where the witness admitted that her statement, which was read to her fully, was truly recorded in the committal Court and that she only denied that it was the statement, because she said that she was made to depose that way by the Police, it would have been useless to point out the discrepancies between the two statements because her explanation would have been the same. In these circumstances, the requirements of S. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act were fully complied with and the earlier statement could be read as evidence in the Sessions trial.

It would be impossible to think that Police could exert pressure to make successive statements to the Police, then to the Magistrate under S. 164 and then to the committal Court. It may be the other way: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1305.

According to S. 145, if it is intended to contradict a witness, he must be cross-examined as to the previous statement in writing and his attention must be drawn to those parts of the previous statements by which it is intended to contradict him in order to enable him to explain the inconsistency between the statement in Court and the previous statement. Even where this course is followed, the previous statement, unless relevant under some section of Chap. II of the Evidence Act is not substantive evidence and is admissible only for the purpose of impeaching the credit of the witness: A.I.R. 1950 Raj. 10. See also I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 946: A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 321.

The statement of a witness abstracted in a judgment can be used only in one of two ways, either under S. 145 to contradict the witness, or as an admission under S. 21. For the former purpose, it is incumbent upon the party examining the witness, before proving the writing to call his attention to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. This is an essential step in the procedure, the omission of which is likely to cause grave injustice: I.L.R. 53 Mad. 952: 60 M.L.J. 13. See also 170 I.C. 315: (1937) 39 Punj.L.R. 200: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 480.

Where a previous statement of a witness is sought to be used for contradicting him, all that is required under S. 145 is that the witness's attention must be called to the particular portion of the previous statement which is sought to be relied upon: 1962 Jab.L.J. 796: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 155.

Where the whole of the previous statement made by the witness is read out to him and he is cross-examined in respect of it but he gives evasive replies, S. 145 is fully complied with although the witness is not specifically asked about particular portions of that statement: (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 471.

The admitted previous statement of a witness can at best be used to contradict him in the cross-examination of such a witness when he gives evidence in the trial Court in the manner provided in S. 145. The attention of the witness should be called to those parts of the previous statement which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. When the witness is contradicted in the aforesaid manner, then that part of the statement which have been put to the witness will be considered alongwith the evidence to assess the worth of the witness in determining his veracity. The whole of the previous statement, however, cannot be treated as substantive evidence: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1910: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1429.

Even where a witness is confronted by his previous statement and given an opportunity to explain, that part of the statement that is put to him does not constitute substantive evidence: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2256.

Once a party accepts his earlier statement, made in an earlier proceeding, it becomes a substantive piece of evidence of the facts admitted therein in view of S. 17 and S. 21; what weightage is to be attached to such a statement is a different matter. Before using such a statement, it is not required to be put to its maker to provide him an opportunity to explain it when he appears as a witness or by calling him as a witness: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1008 (Him. Pra.).

Where a witness has made in Court a statement inconsistent or conflicting with his previous statement under S. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and it is intended to contradict him with such statement, the relevant portion of his previous statement should be read out to him and he should be asked if he had previously made that particular statement. If the witness admits having made such statement, no further proof of that statement is necessary, but if he denies, or says he does not recollect having made it, that portion of his previous statement should, subject to its proof at a subsequent stage, be marked and exhibited and the witness confronted with it; the witness must also be called upon and afforded an opportunity to explain the contradiction or reconcile the discrepancy pointed out to him.

Under S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure read with S. 145 of the Evidence Act, it is only that portion of the statement which is used for contradicting the prosecution witness that can be proved or admitted into evidence and not the entire previous statement. The practice of exhibiting the entire statement is illegal.

Each statement of fact occurring in the previous statement of a witness, which is found to be inconsistent with the statement made by him in Court should be put separately and point by point to the witness and he be confronted with his previous statement on those points so as to afford him an opportunity to explain contradictions. The practice of putting a long statement to the witness containing several facts, or mere reading out the whole statement, may confuse the witness thus, defeating the very purpose of the wholesome provision regarding confrontation contained in S. 145: (1972) 74 Punj.L.R. 387; 1971 Cr.L.J. 1422.

Unless the particular matter or point in the previous statement sought to be contradicted is placed before the witness for explanation, the previous statement cannot be used in evidence. In other words, the drawing of the attention of the witness to his previous statement sought to be contradicted and giving of all opportunities to him for explanation are compulsory. Where there was nothing on the record to show that the previous statement of the witness was placed before him and that the witness was given the chance for explanation, and further his previous statement was not marked and exhibited, held, his previous statement before Police could not be used: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1876 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where the Sessions Judge did not bring to the notice of the witnesses relevant portions of the case diary to contrâdict their evidence but only the beginning and end of the portions with some dotted lines in between were put in inverted commas to which the attention of the witnesses was drawn, held, though it is a practice of some Judges for reducing the burden of writing, it needs to be deprecated: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1059: (1989) 1 Ker.L.N. 462 (D.B.). But where practically the entire case diary statement was read over and the witness denied each and every such statement but the trial Court did not extract the entire statement in the deposition but only its portions in the beginning and at the end, connecting the two portions with dots but at the same time it noted that the statement has been read over and marked, held, the procedure adopted amounted to substantial compliance with the requirements of S. 145: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1477: (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 21 (D.B.).

It is really a matter of substance and not of form that the conditions of S. 145 must be complied with. The whole purpose of the second part of S. 145 is that before the credit of a witness is set aside and his testimony is overthrown because of repugnancy of his evidence, every circumstances intended to be used as a contradiction must be put to him in order that his attention may be drawn separately to every part of his previous statement which is intended to be used for the purpose of contradiction. This is required in fairness to the witness so that a reasonable opportunity of explaining the contradictions may be afforded to him in a reasonable manner. But there cannot be a hard and fast rule about this matter and the Court must see whether there has been a substantial compliance. It cannot be said that a contradiction brought on record is inadmissible just because there has occurred a slight deviation from the usual procedure, that is, marking the statements as "A to A "or "B to B". If it can be gathered from the answers given by the witness in the particular context of the portions sought to be used for the purpose of contradiction that those portion were in the mind of the witness and he tried to explain them, it cannot be said that there is want of compliance with S. 145: 1964 M.P.L.J. 797: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 455.

When the prosecution cross-examines his witness and asks whether he made certain statements before Police during investigation or before a Magistrate under S. 164, Cr.P. Code and the witness denies it, it is the duty of the prosecution to confront him with those statement or get them marked as exhibits so that the witness might be afforded an opportunity either to explain the contradiction or deny them: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1155: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 248. See also 1983 M.P.W.N. 172.

Inconsistency between complainant's evidence and complaint petition on a point—Complainant's attention not drawn to such inconsistency—Effect—Complainant's evidence on such point corroborated by prosecution and even defence witnesses—Concurrent finding of fact of both lower Courts on such point in favour of complainant—In revision, defence cannot take advantage of such inconsistency: 1969 Cr.L.J. 432: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 59.

Where in a case of adultery, the judicial Magistrate in passing impugned order of discharge in favour of accused relied upon the fact that in his earlier case the petitioner did not state that the opposite party committed adultery with his wife, held, Magistrate was not justified in relying upon the same without taking recourse to S. 145. Under the said section before any witness was to be discredited with reference to a contradictory statement made by him earlier, it was incumbent on the part of the accused to draw his attention to the previous statement by which he was to be contradicted to enable him to give an explanation: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 325.

In respect of documents used for purpose of contradiction.—Where documents are desired to be used for the purpose of contradicting a witness under S. 145, they should be filed immediately after the examination of the witness and his attention must be drawn to them before they could be proved. It is not permissible to prove them at a hearing subsequent to the examination of the witness: 1944 R.D. 349.

A witness cannot be disbelieved without his attention being drawn to the documents inconsistent with his deposition even though the documents were produced after his examination. In such a case he should be recalled for further cross-examination: A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 95.

A document which is used to contradict a witness must be put to the witness. Simply because the witness does not go into the witness-box, the Court is not entitled to break the law and admit such document: 150 I.C. 841: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 55(2). See also 1982 M.P.W.N. 162.

Where certified copy of the deposition in the criminal Court was filed after the evidence in a civil suit was closed and argument concluded and judgment was reserved and though the order sheet recorded that the witness was confronted with the same, it was not clear that said document was proved in accordance with law as the original records did not appear to have been produced or that the witness was recalled and put on oath before confrontation which was made on the same day the document was filed and there was no record of the witness's reaction on confrontation, held, said document could not be admitted as substantive evidence and relied upon. [A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 7; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 214, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1305, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 494: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 17 (D.B.).

Before a previous statement of a witness in writing can be used to contradict his evidence, his attention must be specifically drawn to the statement sought to be used under S. 145.

That is, however, necessary only if the document containing the statement becomes relevant solely under the section and is otherwise irrelevant and inadmissible. If the document is otherwise relevant and admissible as an admission under S. 21 of the Act, it is not necessary to observe the provisions of S. 145 before using it: 165 I.C. 805: 17 Pat.L.T. 621: A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 588. See also 1939 M.L.R. (Cr.) 76.

Use of document against witness—Opportunity should be given to him to explain to clear up the particular point of ambiguity or dispute: A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 11.

There is no conflict between Ss. 91 and 145 of the Evidence Act and S. 49 of the Registration Act; S. 145 of the Evidence Act is meant for a totally different purpose; its first part permits putting of relevant oral questions in cross-examination without showing the writing to the witness or proving it; but if it is intended to contradict him with any of its part, it may be done so provided it is not inadmissible for want of registration; if it is so admissible, it may be proved; the bar of S. 92 would not be attracted in such a case: A.I.R. 1974 P.&H. 350 (D.B.).

If a document purporting to grant a perpetual lease of property contains a narration of facts and has been registered, it could be used only under S. 145 of the Evidence Act for contradicting the statement of a witness; but if it is unregistered and cannot create any legal right, it is inadmissible to establish any such right in view of S. 49 of the Registration Act: (1986) 2 Kam.L.J. 390 (D.B.).

Where the objection to be taken is not that document is in itself inadmissible but that the mode of proof put forward is irregular or insufficient, it is essential that the objection should be taken at the trial before the document is marked as an exhibit and admitted to the record. A party cannot lie by until the case comes before a Court of Appeal and then complain for the first time of the mode of proof. A strictly formal proof might not have been forthcoming had it been insisted on at the trial: A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 83: 1943 All.L.J. 292.

Where the Counsel for the plaintiff allowed a document to be exhibited in the trial Court with the endorsement, "formal proof dispensed with", held, it amounts to dispensing with not the formal proof of its executant's signature or thumb-impression but also of its contents; the long and extensive practice in the trial Courts bears out the position that on such endorsements, the parties take it for granted that the party relying upon the document is absolved of adducing formal proof of the document; such an endorsement is not half-hearted; it comprehends the entire document, such an untramelled endorsement is taken as having been made with full realisation of its legal consequences; the document becomes admissible as a whole. [A.I.R. 1957 All. 1 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1949; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 608, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 All. 376 (D.B.).

Suit on handnote—Denial of debt but admission of signature on blank paper—Admission of debt contained in affidavit of defendant filed in prior case—Use of—Conditions. See 17 Pat.L.T. 621: 165 I.C. 805: A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 588. Non-compliance with provisions of the section, effect: 152 I.C. 425: A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 273. See also 11 O.W.N. 568: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 229; 152 I.C. 873: A.I.R. 1934 All. 956.

A letter written by a witness is no evidence of the facts therein stated. The only legitimate use to which it could be put would be to use it in cross-examination for the purpose of discrediting the witness if what the witness had written was inconsistent with the evidence given by that witness: 1945 O.W.N. 287: A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 174 .

Where in an eviction case on the ground of bona fide requirement, the tenant pleaded that one G had negotiated and executed an agreement for sale of the demised property on behalf of the landlord with the tenant in his own handwriting and G denied the writing when confronted in cross-examination but the tenant's request for sending agreement to a handwriting expert was declined by the trial Court on the ground that the agreement was being used only for the limited purpose of impeaching the credibility of the witness by confronting him with his previous inconsistent statement, held, the agreement was not limited to such purpose alone; it was a substantive evidence against the landlord for proving not only that it was in G's writing but also that he was acting as the landlord's authorised agent; case remanded: A.I.R. 1977 Karn. 113: (1977) 1 Karn.L.J. 87.

Where the rent receipt was not put to its author in his cross-examination to contradict the witness because the party cross-examining him was not aware of its existence and the receipt was filed later in examination of another witness who was not the tenant named in the receipt, held, the receipt was inadmissible to contradict the testimony of its author; it was the duty of the cross-examining party to recall the witness for cross-examining him in respect of the receipt under O. 18, R. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure. [A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 95; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 738; A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 156, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 All. 219 (D.B.).

Writer of letter marked as exhibit giving evidence in Court—Endorsement on back of letter containing a statement contradictory to that given in Court—Attention of such witness not drawn to such endorsement—Endorsement cannot be used in evidence: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 153.

7. Writing containing statement need not come from proper custody.—There is nothing in the Evidence Act to show that a document, which is meant to contradict a witness or impeach his credit, must come from proper or legitimate custody. So a question to the prosecution witness in cross-examination with reference to the contents of a letter alleged to have been written by him to another asking the latter to depose to a certain effect cannot be disallowed on the ground that it had not been proved to have come from proper custody: 16 Nag.L.J. 198: 36 Cr.L.J. 1162. See also 174 I.C. 678: A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 18.

8. Witness not to be contradicted by statement of third party.—The two contradictory statements must have been made by one and the same person. Statement made by one person cannot be contradicted by the statement of another under S. 145: (1991) 1 Ker.L.T. (S.N.) 16 (Case No. 20): I.L.R. (1991) 2 Ker. 544; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1281; A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 537.

Maker of statement alone and no one else can be contradicted with his previous statement: 1966 Cr.L.J. 343 (Pat.).

The previous contradictory statement of witness can be used only to contradict and discredit its maker. It cannot be used to impeach or undermine the credit of other witnesses. Thus, where previous inconsistent statement of a witness was used by the trial Court against the credit of other witnesses, held, the trial Court was in error in doing so: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1421: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 836: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1162.

It is obvious from a perusal of S. 145 that it applies only to cases where the same person makes two contradictory statements either in different proceedings or in two different stages of a proceeding. If the maker of a statement is sought to be contradicted, his attention should be drawn to his previous statement under S. 145. Thus, where the statement made by a person or witness is contradicted not by his own statement but by the statement of another prosecution witness, the question of the application of S. 145 does not arise. To illustrate, we might give an instance—Suppose A, a prosecution witness, makes a particular statement regarding the part played by an accused but another witness B makes a statement which is inconsistent with the statement made by A, in such a case S. 145 is not at all attracted. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 117, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 839: (1982) 2 Bom.C.R. 316: (1982) 1 S.C.C. 700; 1982 All.W.C. 242: 1982 All.Cr.R. 156.

9. Contradiction by admission.—An admission is the best evidence that an opposite party can rely upon and though not conclusive is decisive of the matter unless successfully withdrawn or proved erroneous. Previous statements containing the admissions even if not confronted to the party are admissible against him in the suit: (1972) 2 Cut.W.R. 1842; 1983 All.L.J. 1382.

A duly proved admission, even if its maker appears as a witness or not or has been confronted with it or not, is admissible in evidence. The purpose of contradicting the witness under S. 145 is quite different from the purpose of proving the admission; an admission is substantive evidence of the fact admitted while a previous statement used to contradict the witness is not; the latter only throws doubt on the veracity of the witness; but the weight to be attached to an admission as evidence is an altogether a different thing: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 161.

S. 145 is based on the principle that the previous statement does not constitute substantive evidence; the law enunciated by certain High Courts previously that an admission cannot be used against a party unless it is put to him and an opportunity is afforded to the party to explain it, is no longer the law in view of the decision in A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405. The purpose of contradicting a witness under S. 145 is very much different from proving an admission; an admission is substantive evidence of the fact admitted while the previous statement used to contradict the witness merely throws doubt on his veracity; thus, S. 145 is not attracted to admissions; it is open to the Court to reject their exculpatory parts and admit their inculpatory parts: (1995) 1 An.L.T. 511; A.I.R. 1977 Karn. 113: (1977) 1 Karn.L.J. 87.

It is not the requirement of law that before prior admission of a party is received it should have been put to him or his attention should have been drawn to it as in the case of prior admissions of witnesses. But while considering the probative value to be attached to such admissions, it is necessary that the same be brought to the notice of the maker, if he is a party to the proceedings, and his views taken note of for what it is worth: 1983 Hindu L.R. 11 (Karn.).

Previous statement by the plaintiff making an admission on the relevant question in issue may be proved and accepted as substantive evidence without the previous statement being put to him.

As regards witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiff, under S. 145, of the Evidence Act, they can be contradicted by their previous statements. It is clear that the previous statements of witnesses who are not parties can be only used for the purpose of contradiction and not as substantive evidence: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 351: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 589.

There is a cardinal distinction between a party whose prior admission is to be proved as a substantive evidence and a witness who is sought to be discredited by confronting him with his prior statement which is not a substantive evidence. In the former case, the admission being evidence proprio vigore need not be put to the party; in the latter case, the witness cannot be disbelieved unless he has been confronted with his prior statement: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 117: (1974) 1 S.C.C. 78: (1973) 2 S.C.W.R. 637.

Previous admissions of a party can be taken into account against him even if he was not confronted with the same when he appeared in the witness-box in the subsequent proceedings. [A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 65 (F.B.) held to have been disapproved in A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405]: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 177 (D.B.).

The object of S. 145 is to give the witness a chance of explaining the discrepancy or inconsistency and to clear up the broad point of ambiguity or dispute; but this procedure does not apply to admissions in view of Ss. 17 and 21. The purpose of contradicting the witness under S. 145 is quite different from the purpose of proving the admission. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 215 (D.B.).

Admissions are substantive evidence by themselves, though they are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted. The admissions duly proved are admissible evidence irrespective of whether the party making them appeared in the witness-box or not and whether such party when appearing as witness was confronted with a statement made contrary to its previous admissions. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 215 (D.B.).

The rule of evidence that "admission is not conclusive proof" is to be considered in regard to two features: (1) what weight is to be attached to the admission for which purpose it has to be found out whether the admission is clear, unambiguous and relevant piece of evidence; and (2) even if the admission is so proved and is intended to be used against the party making the admission that party if under cross-examination as a witness to tender its explanation and to clear up the point of ambiguity or dispute; this being a general salutary and intelligible rule, a mere proof of the admission after that party has concluded his evidence, will be of no avail and cannot be utilised against it: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1712: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 49: (1977) 2 S.C.R. 671.

The decision in A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 65 (F.B.) does not give due weight to the difference between the language of Ss. 17 and 32 on the one hand and of S. 145 on the other. S. 145 specifically requires that a previous statement made by a witness in writing or reduced into writing, could be used in cross-examination if it is intended to contradict him by drawing his attention to those portions of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. There is no similar provision with regard to statements which are admissible under Ss. 17 to 21 and 32. This view finds support from A.I.R. 1957 All. 1 (F.B.) in which it was observed that when admissions made by parties were to be proved in a case, it was not obligatory on the party who produced those documents to draw in cross-examination the attention of the opponent to the said admissions before he could be permitted to use them for the purpose of contradicting the opponent provided that the admissions were clear and unambiguous. It was also held that the party producing such document containing such admissions could use them as substantive evidence in the case without drawing in cross-examination the attention of the opponent to those admissions: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 280 (D.B.).

If admission is proved and if it is thereafter to be used against the party who has made it, the question comes within the provisions of S. 145: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1712: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 49: (1977) 2 S.C.R. 671.

Where an admission is not put to the party making it and the party making it is not examined on it under S. 144, the admission is not legal evidence and cannot be used against the party making it: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 695; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 750; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 753.

Where the object of trying to prove certain documentary admissions is to utilise those admissions to prove a party's case and not to contradict the persons making the admissions, S. 145 could have no application. The admission in question could be proved according to the provisions of S. 67 by the production of other witnesses: 1941 O.A. (Supp.) 420: 1941 All.L.J. (Supp.) 89.

Admission in plaint in previous suit—Party appearing as defendant in subsequent suit but not examined as witness—S. 145 cannot be invoked but previous statement can be proved as admission against such party under S. 21: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 422: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 45.

Statement of a witness made in previous case—Use of it in subsequent case to contradict him or impeach his character—Before so using it, the party should be allowed to draw the witness's attention to his previous statements: 1970 Cr.L.J. 350: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 95: 1970 B.L.J.R. 926 (D.B.).

Without complying with the procedure laid down in S. 145, an admission contained in a previous statement cannot be used as a legal evidence against a party: (1945) 47 Punj.L.R. 391: A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 65 (F.B.). See also A.I.R. 1955 All. 361; A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 206.

Statements made in a previous litigation cannot be treated as substantive evidence in the subsequent case; they can only be made use of under S. 145 to contradict the maker of the previous statements if he deposes as a witness in the subsequent proceedings: (1991-2) 100 Punj.L.R. 178.

Admission in prior proceedings—Mutation petition—Admission by party adverse to the position taken by him in the suit is admissible against him—He need not be confronted with it while in the witness-box—Difference between purpose of proof of admission and earlier contradictory statement: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 483.

Where in a partition suit, the defendant's admission contained in an earlier agreement for partition that the vehicle was a joint family property was not put to any of the defendants when they deposed at the trial, held, the admission would go in as substantive evidence and could be relied upon by the Court. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 117, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1986 Cal. 390: (1985-86) 90 Cal.W.N. 1018 (D.B.).

Contradiction by reference to previous admission—Document containing previous admission cannot be used against party unless opportunity to explain is given: (1964-65) 69 Cal.W.N. 210: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 328.

The object of S. 145 is to afford an opportunity to the witness to explain his previous statement when it appears to be contradictory to his deposition made in the witness-box. Where the witness, having more than one opportunity to explain his statement in a previous suit, does not avail himself of it, his deposition in the previous suit is admissible to prove an admission made by him in the previous suit: 1962 Jab.L.J. 796: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 155.

Admission is substantive evidence even though party is not confronted with the statement—Weight to be attached to it is different matter: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 405.

The rule as to confrontation does not and should not apply to admission in so far as they are relevant facts in themselves. As admissions, they carry an inherent evidentiary value of their own. If a party is proved or admits to have made an admission, it is his duty to explain it and not for the other party to call him to explain the same. Thus, where in an election dispute on the ground of disqualification as to age of the candidate, his case at the trial was that the entries in school records in respect of his age were made by the school authorities at the instance of his father but that they were made incorrectly, because his father was illiterate, no question could arise of contradicting him so far as the factum or the origin of those entries was concerned. It was, therefore, not necessary to confront him with the documents before using them in evidence. Besides, where the candidate himself had referred to some of the documents in his examination-in-chief it could not be said that his attention was not drawn to them. In such a case no prejudice could have been caused to him. In the circumstances, S. 145 was not attracted: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 26: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 126.

Where in a civil case, a document containing an admission has already been admitted by the opponent in his examination-in-chief, it can be used to contradict the testimony subsequently given by him in the witness-box without drawing his attention to the admission. It is for the maker to come forward and explain it away in his examination-in-chief. Where the admission in a previous statement by a witness falls within the purview of S. 21, it does not require further proof when the statement is admitted by the witness. It is substantive evidence and it is not obligatory to draw the attention of the witness to the admission during his cross-examination: 1962 Jab.L.J. 796: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra 155.

If an admission of a party is contained in a document then under S. 145, such an admission is not admissible unless it has been put to the party for whom he appears as a witness. English authorities seem to go further and would apply this rule even to oral statements and even though the law in India may not go so far as to apply this rule of confronting to the extent that it has gone in England there is no doubt that the weight of authorities seems to be that a witness or a party who appears in a witness-box should be given an opportunity to explain any previous statement which he has made and which is contrary to his statement made in the Court and where this is not done, such previous oral admission, even though not hit by S. 145, would be of little evidentiary value: (1950) 52 Punj.L.R. 287: A.I.R. 1950 East Punj. 291. See also A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 293.

Document admitted "subject to all just exceptions" within O. 12, R. 2—Admission limited for purpose of doing away for formal proof of document—Requirements of Evidence Act not done away with: 1963 All.L.J. 680: A.I.R. 1964 All. 345.

Document containing admission—Use of by one party against other who is examined as witness—Procedure: (1959) 2 An.W.R. 7.

Though an admission made by legal adviser can be proved against a party if he does not appear in Court as a witness, for complying with the provisions of S. 145 of the Evidence Act, nevertheless, when he appears as a witness and examines himself, he should be given an opportunity of explaining such an admission before it can be used against him. Rules of natural justice also require that a party should not be prejudiced by any admission made by his legal adviser unless he is given an opportunity to explain the same, especially when he had come to the witness-box and examined himself: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 901.

10. Use of statements in police diary.—It is open to the prosecution and the defence to utilise the case diary for purpose of contradiction under S. 145 of the Evidence Act. If they failed to do their part of the duty and the Sessions Judge himself do not draw the attention of the witnesses to the case diary during trial, there can be no further use of it and the Sessions Judge could not use the case diary for coming to the conclusion as to whether certain statements were previously made by the witnesses: 28 Cut.L.T. 523: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 67: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 550.

It is not possible to give a general or categorical answer to the question whether an omission of a detail in the police diary statement can be used for contradicting that detail which the witness supplied in Court. The answer will depend on facts and circumstances of each case whether a particular omission ought to be taken as amounting to contradiction. Before the contradictory statement can be used as evidence against the prosecution and also to discredit the witness, the attention of that witness has to be called to that particular part and his explanation sought. It, therefore, follows that calling attention to the whole of that statement and showing that the contradictory portion does not exist is not enough. What is necessary to put to the witness is what he actually stated to the Police with regard to the particular detail of the incident and what he stated in Court. And when these two statements are either not reconciled by the explanation offered by the witness or are irreconcilable then contradiction may be said to exist. The omission must refer to a detail which if it really existed could not have been missed by the witness as being an essential link in the chain of events: 1959 M.P.C. 517: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 391.

It is open to Counsel for the accused to bring out by questions in cross-examination discrepancies between the evidence of the witnesses as given in Court and the statements as made to the Police with a view to throwing doubt on the credibility of their testimony: (1943) 45 Punj.L.R. 155. It is only what is written in the Police diaries that can be used under this section but not what the Sub-Inspector of Police stated that a witness did or did not say: 108 I.C. 162: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 507. Procedure to be adopted where statements in Police diaries are sought to be used under this section: 1933 Mad.W.N. 919; 14 Pat.L.T. 543: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 589. In the case of statements before Inspector of Excise: 1933 Mad.W.N. 1270.

So far as S. 172(3) of the Cr.P.Code is concerned the embargo on the right of the accused or his representative in calling for the case diary or seeing any part of it is only a partial one and not absolute because if a part of the diary has been used by the Police Officer, to refresh his memory or the Court uses it for the purpose of contradicting such Police Officer, the provisions of Ss. 161 and 145 of the Evidence Act, will be applicable: [A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865; A.I.R. 1982 S.C.149, Expl.]: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1077 (Raj.).

11. Use of first information report.—The first information report can be proved to impeach the credit of the witness by cross-examination under this section: 107 I.C. 761; (1972) 74 Bom.L.R. 117: 1972 Mah.L.J. 389 [Use of first information report in trial.]

F.I.R. is not substantive evidence: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 751: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 641. It is an information of a cognizable offence given under S. 154 of the Criminal Procedure Code and if there is any statement made therein it can only be used for the purposes of contradicting and discrediting a witness under S. 145 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 491: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1204: (1972) 3 S.C.C. 590. But where the witness was not confronted with his alleged inconsistent statements contained in the first information report or in the case diary, no reliance could be placed on such statements: (1994) 6 S.C.C. 29: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1585. See also A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1389.

A first information report, though its importance as conveying the earliest information regarding the occurrence cannot be doubted, is not substantive evidence; it can, only be used as a previous statement either for corroborating its maker under S. 157 or for contradicting him under S. 145; it cannot be used to corroborate or contradict other witnesses: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283: 1972 Cr.L.J. 233; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 757: 1975 Cr.L.J. 634: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 851; 1973 Cr.L.J. 1686 (Ori.) (F.B.).

Where the first information report given by the accused himself to a Police Officer amounts to a confession, its proof is prohibited by S. 25 of the Evidence Act except to the extent it is permitted by S. 27 of the Evidence Act; the first information report recorded under S. 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not a substantive piece of evidence; it may, however, be used to corroborate the informant under S. 157 of the Evidence Act or to contradict him under S. 145 of the Evidence Act if the informant is examined as a witness at the trial. But the first information report having been lodged by the accused himself it is admissible against him as evidence of his conduct under S. 8 of the Evidence Act and its non-confessional portion would also be relevant under S. 21 of the Evidence Act but its confessional portion cannot be used at all against the accused because of the ban under S. 25 of the Evidence Act: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 695 (S.C.).

12. Use of statement made during investigation.—From a reading of S. 145, Evidence Act and S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, it is clear that the statement made by a witness in the course of investigation may, if duly proved be used to contradict that witness and if it is intended to contradict the witness under the second part of S. 145, of the Indian Evidence Act, he should be confronted with the concerned portions of the writings. What matters in the matter of compliance with these provisions is the substance and not the form. If it is intended to contradict a witness by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purposes of contradicting him. In the instant case, neither in form nor in substance have the provisions of S. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act been complied with. The Investigating Officer did not even offer formal evidence that the statements within inverted commas put to him and to the witness were taken from the recorded statements under S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code. The statements themselves were not marked. This is a serious defect committed by the prosecution and the Sessions Judge. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 214; A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 441; A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1012, Foll.]: 1970 M.L.J. (Cr.) 661: 1971 Ker.L.T. 326 (D.B.).

It is settled law that statements made to Police are not substantive evidence and they can be used for the purpose of contradiction only as provided for by S. 145 of the Evidence Act: I.L.R. (1966) Guj. 500: (1966) 7 Guj.L.R. 662; 1968 All.Cr.R. 8; 33 Cut.L.T. 971; (1987) 1 All Cr.L.R. 113: (1988) 1 Rec. Cr.R. 1 (P.&H.). Where any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used in the re-examination of the witness for the limited purpose of explaining any matter referred to in his cross-examination: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 873. Departure from such statement may discredit witness: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 31: 1965 Cr.L.J. 315: 30 Cut.L.T. 517.

Statements made to Police under S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can be used, whether by the accused or prosecution, to contradict their makers in the manner set out in S. 145; they cannot be used for corroborating a witness in the Court; confronting a witness with his previous contradictory statement aims at showing his unreliability and the need to ignore his evidence: (1992) 1 An.W.R. 16.

Ss. 145, 146 and 155(3) are complementary to each other; read together, a cross-examiner cannot be restricted from putting questions except to the extent indicated in Ss. 148 to 152. Where trial Court permitted the defence Counsel to use the statement recorded by the Police in connection with another case for cross-examining a prosecution witness, held, he was perfectly right in doing so as S. 162 of Cr.P.Code was never intended to curb the right of the accused to contradict a witness with his previous statement: 1994 Cr.L.J. 464 (Ker.).

It is no doubt a legitimate right of the accused persons to defend themselves by proving, if they can, that the prosecution witnesses had made different statements on previous occasions. If the prosecution is in possession of these statements and does not make them available to the accused this precious right is taken away from the accused and they are handicapped in their defence. It is immaterial for their purpose whether this unfortunate result accrues on account of any dishonest motive, or sheer negligence on the part of the prosecution. But such grievance can be made by the defence only if the statements in questionnaire is in possession of the prosecution. Where they are in possession of a third party it is for the accused to summon them from that person and if the statements are not secured no blame can be attached to the prosecution: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 176.

Before the prosecution can take advantage of contradicting the witness under S. 145, it is the duty of the prosecution to get the statements of those witnesses made under S. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure proved by the officer who has recorded those statements during the course of investigation. Thus, where the prosecution failed to prove the statements in the required manner, held, those statements could not be looked into by the Court: A.I.R. 1978 J.&K. 53: 1977 Kash.L.J. 94 (D.B.).

A prosecution witness is a witness examined by the prosecution. It is immaterial whether the complainant examines witnesses on his behalf in prosecuting the complaint or a prosecution is launched by the State through the investigating agency, the witnesses so examined in support of the prosecution case remain prosecution witnesses and as such, if they have made any previous statements to the investigating officers in regard to the very incident in question, those statements can be used to contradict the witnesses if such an occasion arises. Investigation under Chapter other than Chap. 14, Cr.P.Code—Statement received by Police—Prohibition under S. 162 does not apply—Statement can be used to contradict maker—Statement for being used to contradict maker need not necessarily be recorded during investigation under Chap. XIV: 1985 Cr.L.J. 159 (Sikkim).

The notes on the site plan prepared by the Investigating Officer regarding distances from which the witnesses claimed to have witnessed the incident are statements recorded by Police Officer in the course of investigation and are hit by S. 162 of the Cr.P.Code. These notes can be used only for the purpose of contradicting the prosecution witnesses concerned in accordance with the provisions of S. 145 and for no other purpose: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1421: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 836: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1162.

Statement contained in the panchnama cannot be used in evidence except for the purpose of contradicting the witness; his attention, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for contradicting him. Thus, where a witness is contradicted by his previous statement and is given an opportunity to explain, that part of the statement that is put to him does not constitute substantive evidence: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2256: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1547.

In the case of statements made to a Headman in the course of an enquiry in a criminal case: 144 I.C. 369: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 119.

The witnesses in their statements before the Police attributed a clear intention to the accused to commit murder, but before the Court they stated that the accused was insane and, therefore, he committed the murder. Held, that in the circumstances it was necessarily implied in the previous statements of the witnesses before the Police that the accused was not insane at the time he committed the murder. In this view the previous statements of the witnesses before the Police could be used to contradict their version in the Court: (1964) 7 S.C.R. 361: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563. See also 1979 Cur.L.J. 12; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 199; 1978 Jab.L.J. (Note) 70.

Where a witness was examined at the accused's instance but he was examined-in-chief by the public prosecutor under the Court's direction and he did not support the prosecution case that the wife set ablaze and found naked and dead in the well was thrown therein by the accused but the Court refused to declare him hostile and did not permit him to be cross-examined, held, feeling that its witness is not telling the whole truth or is suppressing some parts thereof, the prosecution can request the Court to declare him hostile and permit it to ask questions which might be put in cross-examination; it may as well seek permission under S. 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict the statement of the witness under S. 162 of the Cr.P.Code. Moreover, if the Court finds from the witness's demeanour, temper, attitude, bearing or tenor or tendency or from his inconsistent statements or otherwise that it is expedient to extract the truth and to do justice, the Court should grant the permission under S. 154 of the Evidence Act: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2195 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where a prosecution witness deposes in Court that the accused gave a blow on the victim but he had failed to make such statement before the Police, it is a material omission amounting to a contradiction though every omission is not a contradiction. Similarly, if a witness does not name the accused before the Police to have taken part in the assault but implicates them in Court, it amounts to a contradiction: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1190: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 167.

Final report by Police finding no case against accused—Trial on basis of subsequent private complaint—S. 162 still applies—Accused can get copies of statements made to Police by prosecution witnesses for contradicting them: 30 Cut.L.T. 500: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 191: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 21.

A filed a suit for damages against B for cutting away her (plaintiff's) garden and for carrying away a she-buffalo and a calf. A had also filed a complaint before the Police and during the course of investigation certain statements were recorded under S. 162, Cr.P. Code. In appeal against the decree of the trial Courts as confirmed by the lower appellate Court, it was contended that the Courts below were wrong in not allowing B to use the S. 162 statements for purposes of cross-examining A's witnesses and also in rejecting the application for calling the Inspector who recorded the statements to prove them. Held, the statements recorded by a Police Officer under S. 162, Cr.P.Code, could be used in a civil proceeding under S. 145 of the Evidence Act. The witnesses can be confronted with the statements; and if need be, the officers who took down the statements may be summoned to prove those statements: (1963) 2 An.W.R. 485: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 504: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 198.

Where the plaintiff in a civil suit for declaring him an Indian citizen was confronted with his previous statement recorded by the Police under S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure but which contained his signatures thereon contrary to the provision of that section, held, the previous statement was not rendered involuntary or inadmissible; its only legal effect was that the Court would keep in mind the rule of caution; all Police Officers cannot be taken as unreliable: 1995 Cr.L.J. 568 (Bom.).

Where the trial Court did not allow cross-examination of a prosecution witness on a very material point with regard to his earlier statement to the Police, held, untested evidence of such witness could not be relied upon for the purpose of corroboration of evidence of eye-witness: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 560: 1975 U.J. (S.C.) 940: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 442: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 339.

Compliant against Sub-Inspector of Police and Head Constable—Report made by them at Police station—Admissibility at trial: 1958 All.L.J. 152: 1958 All.Cr.R. 204.

Right of accused to get copies of statements of witnesses made during investigation.—S. 145, Evidence Act seems to be a self-complete section and the formalities prescribed in S. 163, Evidence Act, for calling for and inspecting a document from the possession of the other side are not attracted to S. 145. In trials arising within the Presidency Town of Calcutta the accused cannot get copies of statements of witnesses recorded in Police diaries as a matter of course, but in suitable cases the Magistrate can order the granting of such copies under the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act, read with S. 165 of the same Act without making the accused go through the formalities of S. 163 of that Act: (1954-55) 59 Cal.W.N. 729: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 138. S. 145 does not help the accused to obtain copies of the statements of witnesses made during investigation of an offence though it enables him to make use of the statements if he happens to be in possession of them: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1751: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 700; A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 185.

Cr.P.Code, 1898, Ss. 173(4), 94 and 252 to 259—Scope—Warrant case instituted on complaint by Customs Officer—Customs authorities making investigation before lodging complaint — Statements of witnesses recorded during investigation—Right of accused to get copies of such statements and of documents proposed to be relied on by prosecution at or before commencement of inquiry or trial—Conditions for exercise of discretion of Court under S. 94: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1395: A.I.R. 1966 Bom. 253.

Where the copies of the statements of witnesses made before Police in course of further investigation were not supplied to the accused person on the ground that prosecution has chosen not to rely on these statements, held, statements of witnesses recorded in course of enquiry under S. 173(8) would continue to be statements recorded under S. 161, Cr.P.Code and thus, the accused was entitled to get copies of those statements: (1988) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 1 (Punj.).

13. Use of statement contained in inquest report.—Statements contained in the inquest reports cannot be used to discredit the evidence of the inquest officer unless they are put to him under S. 145: (1935) 48 Mad.L.W. 615: (1938) 2 M.L.J. 618.

An inquest report is required to be legally proved for it does not prove itself: (1906) 3 Cr.L.J. 41 (Bom.) (F.B.).

It is questionable how far an inquest report is admissible except under S. 145 of the Evidence Act: 1955 S.C.R. 1083: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 216.

The inquest report, though a document of limited scope and nature, can nevertheless be utilised under S. 145: 1989 All.L.J. 1086 (D.B.), for impeaching credit during cross-examination: I.L.R. (1974) Him. Pra. 509 (D.B.).

14. Use of statement made to commission of enquiry.—The statement made by any person before the Commission of Enquiry under S. 6 of the Commissions of Enquiry Act, 1952 is wholly inadmissible in evidence in any future proceedings, civil or criminal; it cannot also be used for the purposes of cross-examination to contradict the witness or to impeach his credit: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1883: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1.

The law is well settled that because of the restrictions embodied in S. 6 of the Commissions of Enquiry Act, a statement made before the Commission by a witness cannot be used in a criminal trial in his cross-examination either to contradict the witness or to impeach his credit; even the copies of the statements made by the witnesses before the Commission cannot be furnished to nor summoned by the criminal Court; they have no evidentiary value in the criminal trial. [A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1883, Foll.]: (1992) 48 Del.L.T. 309. See also 1978 Cr.L.J. 1157 (Bom.); 1968 M.P.L.J. 629

15. Use of statement made before committing Magistrate.—Statement of witness before committing Magistrate—Use as substantive evidence—Procedure. See A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 443.

Statements made in committal Court—Use of in Sessions Court—Non-compliance with S. 145, Evidence Act — Effect: 1959 Cr.L.J. 415: A.I.R. 1959 All. 238.

Witness in Sessions Court confronted with his statement in committal Court—Witness admitting that record was true but that the statement was false having been made under the Police pressure—There is sufficient compliance with S. 145—It would have been pointless to draw his attention to each sentence and ask for his explanation: (1970) 2 S.C.C. 61: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1144: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1305.

Evidence of witness in committing Court, when treated as evidence in the case: 1970 Cr.L.J. 931 (Ori.).

Corroboration of evidence admitted under the section—Witness resiling from statement in committal Court—Such statement can be admitted under S. 288, Cr.P.Code subject to provision under S. 145 of the Evidence Act—Court under duty to act with caution: 32 Cut.L.T. 1011: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 24.

Prosecution witnesses turning hostile in Sessions Court—Their evidence in committal Court not put to them and their attention not drawn to it—Evidence in committal Court is not admissible: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 698: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 523 (Mys.).

Evidence recorded before committing Magistrate—Admissibility of in Sessions trial—It cannot be used as substantive evidence unless witness is confronted with it: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 454.

S. 145 does not militate in any way against previous statements being used by way of corroboration of statements put in under S. 288, Cr.P.Code, which are substantive evidence in the case before the Court of Session: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 1066: 58 Cr.L.J. 66. Use of previous statements — Procedure. See A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 74.

Section, if controlled by S. 288, Cr. P. Code—Deposition in committal Court—Admissibility at trial—Conditions—Compliance with S. 145, Evidence Act—Necessity for. See I.L.R. 25 Punj. 356: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 182.

Trial before Sessions Court—Previous depositions of witnesses recorded by committal Magistrate tendered under S. 288, Cr.P.Code—Witnesses not confronted with previous depositions as to contradictions regarding their evidence at trial—Previous depositions cannot affect evidence of witness given in trial Court: 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 169 (Gau.).

If statements of the witnesses are read in extenso to them and they admit that they have made those statements in the committal Court, the requirements of S. 288, Cr.P.Code, would be fully complied with. [1952 S.C.R. 812; (1971) 1 S.C.R. 56, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 628: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 84: 1980 Cr.L.J. 439: (1980) 2 S.C.R. 491.

Transfer of earlier statement of witness in committing Court to record of Sessions trial—Reasons for such transfer should be stated: 1967 Cr.L.J. 975: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1027.

Where previous statement of a witness made in the committal Court was not transferred to the Sessions record under S. 288, Cr.P.Code, held, it could not be used as a substantive evidence: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1421: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 836: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1162.

S. 288, Criminal Procedure Code, which provides for transfer of evidence recorded in the committing Court under certain circumstances, is subject, inter alia, to the provisions of S. 145. Thus, where in a murder case, after drawing the attention of the witnesses to their contradictory statements recorded by the Police with regard to their having seen the assault which they denied, the entire respective statements recorded by the committing Magistrate in Hindi were read out to the witnesses who did not deny to have made the same but only explained that they had deposed in that manner under threat and pressure from the Police and deposition of witnesses was transferred to the record of Sessions Court under S. 288, Cr.P.Code, after complying with provisions of S. 145 of the evidence Act, held, said evidence of witnesses recorded in the committing Court was substantive evidence and was clearly admissible. [I.L.R. (1976) 1 Del. 359, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1304: 1977 Cr.L.J. 814: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 233: (1977) 3 S.C.R. 143.

16. Use of confessional or other statements recorded by Magistrate/Court.—A clearly proved free and voluntary confession, judicial or extra-judicial, or written or oral, is among the most effectual proof in law and deserves the highest credit. In case of a written confession, generally, there is no difficulty to hold that it was made by the accused. Free and willing mind of the accused and voluntariness of his confession are the corner stones of an extra-judicial confession. Thus, where the extra-judicial confession was made to an independent witness who is not expected to falsely implicate the accused by fabricating the story and the accused's confession, not a planted document, is also contained in the accused's letter addressed by him to Lord Shiva, appear to have been made voluntarily, the accused can be safely convicted on the extra-judicial confessions: 1987 W.L.N. (U.C.) 315: 1987 Rec.Cr.C. 224; (1973) 3 Cr.L.T. 71 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Statements taken under S. 164, Cr.P.Code and not covered by S. 238 are inadmissible against the accused. But they can be used for the purpose of contradicting the statements subsequently made in Court by the persons making the former statements: 27 I.C. 197: 17 O.C. 363.

Statement of witness under S. 164, Cr.P. Code—Can be used for purpose of corroboration or contradiction of the witness: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 289.

Statement of confession of witness—Statement recorded by Police and by Magistrate—Statement inadmissible except for corroboration to contradiction: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 321: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 38.

Statement of confession—Use of to contradict or corroborate evidence given as approver: A.I.R. 1957 Assam 168: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1231.

Statements under S. 164, Cr.P.Code cannot be substituted as evidence of witness—They can be used only either to impeach, credit or corroborate. See 1957 Cr.L.J. 117 (All.). Where an approver goes back upon his confession, it can be used to contradict him when he is treated as a hostile witness, but it is not substantive evidence and cannot be used to contradict a co-accused's confession: 1939 Nag.L.J. 442: A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 295: I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 506. Writing need not be produced in absence of intention to contradict: A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 145: I.L.R. 47 Mad. 800: 48 M.L.J. 89.

Approver's statement recorded under S. 161(3), Cr.P.Code—His confession was also recorded—He was examined as a witness after grant of pardon—Failure to supply copies of statement recorded by investigating officer and confession recorded by Magistrate to accused—Accused, held, prejudiced having been deprived of valuable materials for cross-examination: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2313: I.L.R. (1982) 2 Ker. 752.

It cannot be said that as the former statement of witness was recorded by the order of the Court which had no jurisdiction it cannot be used even for the purpose of contradiction or corroboration or shaking his credit. The statement of a person does not cease to be his statement merely because it was written in aforementioned circumstances. Such a statement can be used for the purpose of Ss. 145, 155 and 157 of the Act: A.I.R. 1987 P.&H. 126.

Failure to supply copies of statement of approver recorded by Investigating Officer and confession recorded by Magistrate to accused for purpose of cross-examination—Effect. See I.L.R. (1982) 2 Ker. 752: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2313.

Notes of evidence recorded by one Presiding Officer of Small Cause Court—Presiding Officer transferred—Witness again examined by succeeding Presiding Officer—Statement of witnesses recorded by earlier Presiding Officer—Falls under S. 145—Such statement can be used in cross-examination for contradicting the witness: (1970) 1 An.W.R. 90.

17. Use of statement of victim.—Where maker of a statement chanced to survive, held, such a statement is clearly not admissible as dying declaration; it could only be admitted as a previous statement for corroboration under S. 157 or for contradiction under S. 145 with respect to his evidence in Court: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1881 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.); 1978 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 255: 1978 Jab.L.J. 741 (D.B.). See also (1984) 2 Crimes 521 (All.).

Statement made by victim of attempt to murder under S. 307, I.P.Code—Use of to cross-examine and contradict victim in trial. See 1971 Cr.L.J. 1225.

Contradicted dying declaration—Value of. See (1978) 1 M.P.W.N. 96.

Statement made by the prosecutrix to the Doctor who examined her not put to the prosecutrix during cross-examination cannot be used to contradict her: (1994) 5 S.C.C. 728: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1573.

Minor contradictions in the statement of prosecutrix—Effect. See 1982 M.P.W.N. 397

Where the prosecutrix was allowed to be further cross-examined by way of additional evidence during the pendency of the appeal and she admitted having made certain statements in another case against the accused but nothing was placed on the record to show that those statements were admitted by her to be true, held, those statements could not be read as evidence in the case under appeal; the defence could take no advantage therefrom; besides, it is moot point when they could be deemed to be previous statements contemplated under S. 145: (1982) 1 Bom.C.R. 894.

18. Miscellaneous.—Where in a proceeding under S. 488, Cr.P.Code the husband while denying the maintainability of the application in his written statement admits that he had pronounced divorce orally on certain date, if the date so given is in conflict with the legally unproved documentary evidence filed by the husband, it is not open to the Magistrate to choose or reject the allegations made in the written statement of the husband without putting his conflicting assertions to him as required by S. 145 of the Evidence Act. Dubious statements have to be put to the persons making them before they can be used against them: 1968 All.L.J. 454.

The provisions of Rr. 6 and 7 of O. 33 C.P.Code, may not strictly apply to the prayer of the defendant for examining the plaintiff at the stage when the applicant wants to cross-examine the plaintiff but in face of the provisions of O. 33, Rr. 6 and 7, the subordinate Court should have reasonably afforded an opportunity to the defendant for cross-examining the plaintiff and bringing out correct state of affairs: 1983 All.W.C. 703: 1983 All.L.J. 1043: 1983 All.L.R. 505.

Where the earlier statement was recorded twelve years ago by the Chairman of the Committee which had 2 other members, and the Chairman was abroad in a country with which India had no reciprocal arrangements for summoning him and which, besides causing delay, would also involve expense of ten thousand rupees, held, it is unnecessary to summon him; the earlier statement could be proved by any member of the Committee or any other person acquainted with the Chairman's writing and signatures: (1972) 1 An.W.R. 33.

146. Questions lawful in cross-examination.—When a witness is cross-examined, he may, in addition to the questions hereinbefore referred to, be asked any questions which tend—

(1) to test his veracity,

(2) to discover who he is and what is his position in life, or

(3) to shake his credit, by injuring his character, although the answer to such questions might tend directly or indirectly to criminate him, or might expose or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture.

Where trap witnesses were cross-examined in a scrappy and jumpy manner and their evidence was without contradictions and inner variations between their respective statements were confined to omissions of trivial details, held, their testimony could not be dubbed as unreliable: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1511.

Only such a Doctor can testify to the nature of injuries who has either examined the injured himself or who had all the data in original furnished by a person who had examined the injured or had operated upon him and prepared the operational note for the testifying Doctor to independently form his own opinion; the evidence of a Doctor based on some facts conveyed in letter to him cannot be taken as legally tendered: 1987 Cr.L.R. 422 (Raj.).

Section 146—Notes.

The relevant sections allowing imputations to be made to witnesses in cross-examination and controlling the exercise of that right are Ss. 146 to 153. It is quite clear that questions may be asked for which there are only reasonable grounds for thinking that imputation contained in them are well founded and that is by no means necessary before the question is asked that the person asking it should be in a position to establish the truth of the imputation beyond all doubt. It is difficult to believe that anything which will be permissible to be put under the Evidence Act can be punishable under the I.P. Code: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 545: A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 278.

Ss. 146 to 151 are to be read together; so read they spell out a duty for the Court, viz., the exercise of its sense of proportion: (1982) 1 Bom.C.R. 519.

Ss. 145, 146 and 155(3) are complementary to each other; read together, a cross-examiner cannot be restricted from putting questions except to the extent indicated in Ss. 148 to 152. Where trial Court permitted the defence Counsel to use the statement recorded by the Police in connection with another case for cross-examining a prosecution witness, held, he was perfectly right in doing so as S. 162 of the Cr.P.Code was never intended to curb the right of the accused to contradict a witness with his previous statement: 1994 Cr.L.J. 464 (Ker.).

S. 146 deals with questions lawful in cross-examination; Cl. (1) thereof provides for a witness being cross-examined by questions tending to test his veracity. S. 153 generally deals with exclusion of evidence to contradict answers to questions testing his veracity; but Exception 2 provides that if the witness denies the facts suggested to impeach his impartiality, he may be contradicted. S. 155 deals with impeaching the credit of a witness by various ways set out in Cls. (1) to (4) thereof; and one of the ways set out in Cl. (3) is by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted. It cannot, therefore, be entirely correct that S. 146 must be read with S. 153: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1162: 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 604: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 399.

Purpose of cross-examination is to test the veracity of witnesses—Certain facts favouring accused came out in a natural manner during cross-examination of prosecution witness—Benefit will certainly go to accused: 1983 All.W.C. 625: 1983 All.Cr.R. 304.

Cross-examination—Asking of composite and ensuring questions—Not permissible—Answer by witness to one of the two questions loaded in one—Inference regarding truth of another question cannot be drawn: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 751.

Credibility of witness—Factors to be considered—Low status of witness—How far material: (1959) 2 An.W.R. 375.

A previous statement made and tape-recorded can be used not only to corroborate the evidence given by the witness in Court but also to contradict the evidence given before the Court as well as to test the veracity of the witness and also to impeach his impartiality. Apart from being used for corroboration, the evidence is admissible in respect of other three last mentioned matters under S. 146 (1), S. 153, Exception 2 and S. 155: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1162: 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 604: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 399.

An accused has no unlimited right to cross-examine the complainant regardless of the matters in issue; the Court has the power to forbid questions which are asked to annoy the witness or are unduly and unnecessarily offensive; of course, if the question is offensive or even indecent or scandalous or embarrassing but all the same relevant to and having reasonable bearing the matters in issue, it can legitimately be asked. But the permission to cross-examine cannot be allowed to degenerate into a licence for shaking the deponent's character indiscriminately; S. 146(3) is not a gate to unbridled cross-examination: (1982) 1 Bom.C.R. 519.

Law is no respecter of men though it is a living instrument to achieve individual and social good and morality. Status however high, therefore, cannot be used or held as a shield to cover the core of the cause or reality of a truth. In the high temples of justice all the basic bones must be felt bare and attempt to reach them should not in any manner be stifled. S. 146(3) permits a cross-examiner to put questions which will not only shake the credit of a witness, but which will also expose his ethical and moral behaviour which may ultimately weigh with the Court while evaluating or appreciating evidence. By its very nature questions on mala fides as opposed to bona fides, immorality as opposed to good morality, dishonesty as against honesty, falsehood as against truthfulness, can all conceivably be put, provided there is necessity and foundation for the same. S. 155 expressly permits by indicating the mode and manner to bring in evidence upon the credit of a witness so as to impeach such testimony: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1297: 1974 Mah.L.J. 416.

The assault on the character of a witness permitted by S. 146(3) must be directed only for the purpose of shaking the credit of the witness and not for any other purpose. In other words, if the cross-examination was intended to shake the credit of a witness, it must naturally be to impugn the credibility of that witness in relation to the matter which is involved and relevant under one or the other provisions of the Evidence Act. It is not permissible to have recourse to S. 146(3) to ask all sorts of questions which are not necessary to shake the credibility of that witness: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1637: 1979 Mah.L.J. 11 (D.B.).

Questions lawful in cross-examination on behalf of the accused touching the character and conduct of the witness and without any material to substantiate the same—Such questions without any basis unfair to the witness—Questions touching the character and conduct of a witness should be asked and should be allowed by the Court only when there is some material to substantiate the same: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 473.

The credit of a witness can be shaken only if it can be shown that he is not a man of veracity, and not that he is of bad moral character, viz., a black-marketeer: A.I.R. 1959 All. 149. On S. 146. See I.L.R. 3 Mad. 271; 9 Cr.L.J. 370; (1913-14) 18 Cal.W.N. 185. Putting scandalous questions in cross-examination: 2 Weir 819.

Magistrate should confine questions as to character asked in cross-examination to questions which are relevant to the case, and disallow questions which are unnecessary, provocative or merely harassing: 41 Cr.L.J. 790: A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 113.

Defamatory questions put by lawyer to a witness in cross-examination on clients instructions—No reasonable basis available for putting them—Such communication is not professional—Its disclosure is not protected under S. 126—Imputation conveyed by those questions held per se defamatory—Hence, client is liable under S. 500, Penal Code: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 34: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 606: 1970 Cr.L.J. 260.

147. When witness to be compelled to answer.—If any such question relates to a matter relevant to the suit or proceeding, the provisions of section 132 shall apply thereto.

Where the accused denies that he ever made certain verbal statement which amounted to confession to the Police and the written statement alleged to have been signed by him and prosecution was allowed to cross-examine the accused as to his previous conviction, held, that since, the allegations of the accused involved an attack on the character of the prosecution Police witness, in that it was alleged that the alleged written confession was concocted by the Police, the Court was entitled to know the character of the accused who made the imputation and his cross-examination as to his character was properly admitted: (1955) 3 All E.R. 29.

Where the prosecution alleged that the lady complainant accompanied by a male was proceeding in a car and was robbed of her ornaments and currency notes at 9-30 p.m. and in her examination-in-chief she had given out their movements right from the evening till the time of occurrence and also disclosed the purpose for moving towards the particular spot, and in her cross-examination the defence sought to ask questions about her intimate relations with the other occupant of the car, held, it was the Court's duty to consider whether the question was relevant from point of view of the defence; it could not be said that the questions which may raise doubt about the veracity of the witness were completely irrelevant; unless there was a clear indication that it was a reckless and scandalous attempt intended to insult or annoy, the topic raised by the question could not have been ruled out; her involvement with her companion, also a witness could not be termed as out of the purview of S. 146. The Court should have taken into account, after taking the defence Counsel into confidence, the line of defence and then decide whether such questions should or should not be allowed and whether they really fell within the exceptions carved out by the statute. [A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 73; A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 94; A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 316; I.L.R. 47 All. 799, Rel. on]: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1297: 1974 Mah.L.J. 416.

A question put to a female witness whether she was made pregnant by one X, in a case relating to title to property would be relevant if the point was whether by reason of unchastity she could not inherit her husband's property. But if the object was to impeach her credit, Ss. 146 and 148 to 162 must be considered: 65 I.C. 692.

Where defendants resisted a possession suit filed by the plaintiff-auction purchaser of the disputed property who purchased it in a private sale, on the ground that the plaintiff was only a nominee of the mortgagee and, thus, private sale held in his favour was invalid but the defendants were refused cross-examination of the plaintiff regarding the question whether he was only a nominee of the mortgagee, held, order of the lower Court in disallowing questions in cross-examination regarding the plea taken by defendant was illegal: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 371.

Where the opposite party failed to produce evidence in the Court in order to test the veracity of the evidence given by the witnesses, held, the testimony of the witnesses was acceptable. [A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 156; A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 129, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1978 J.&K. 50: 1978 Kash.L.J. 132 (D.B.).

Section 147—Notes.

The words "relevant to the suit or proceeding" mean relevant to a matter in issue: I.L.R. 3 Mad. 271 (F.B.).

S. 147 empowers a Court to compel a witness to reply to a relevant question. If he refuses to answer a question, immediate action should be taken against him in the interest of a fair trial: 1953 Cr.L.J. 990: A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 21.

There is no law which governs the order in which two contesting parties are entitled to cross-examine a witness of the opposite party; S. 141 deals with leading questions, S. 143 with questions lawful in cross-examination, S. 147 with the circumstances wherein a witness shall be compelled to answer questions and S. 148 empowers the Court to decide as to when a question may be asked and the witness be compelled to answer it: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 1007.

148. Court to decide when question shall be asked and when witness compelled to answer.—If any such question relates to a matter not relevant to the suit or proceeding, except in so far as it affects the credit of the witness by injuring his character, the Court shall decide whether or not the witness shall be compelled to answer it, and may, if it thinks fit, warn the witness that he is not obliged to answer it. In exercising its discretion, the Court shall have regard to the following considerations:—

(1) such questions are proper if they are of such a nature that the truth of the imputation conveyed by them would serious affect the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies;

(2) such questions are improper if the imputation which they convey relates to matters so remote in time, or of such a character, that the truth of the imputation would not affect, or would affect in a slight degree, the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies;

(3) such questions are improper if there is a great disproportion between the importance of the imputation made against the witness's character and the importance of his evidence;

(4) the Court may, if it sees fit, draw, from the witness's refusal to answer, the inference that the answer if given would be unfavourable.

Ss. 146 to 151 are to be read together; so read they spell out a duty for the Court, viz., the exercise of its sense of proportion: (1982) 1 Bom.C.R. 519.

Ss. 146 to148 together with S. 132 embrace the whole range of questions which can properly be addressed to a witness: I.L.R. 3 Mad. 271 (F.B.).

There is no law which governs the order in which two contesting parties are entitled to cross-examine a witness of the opposite party; S. 141 deals with leading questions, S. 143 with questions lawful in cross-examination, S. 147 with the circumstances wherein a witness shall be compelled to answer questions and S. 148 empowers the Court to decide as to when a question may be asked and the witness be compelled to answer it: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 1007.

The Court has the power either of prohibiting questions under S. 148 and if the questions are allowed, of drawing or not drawing an inference from a witness's refusal to answer. The exclusions provided in sub-Ss. (2) and (3) in S. 148 and Ss. 151 and 152 indicate with more distinctness, than is to be found in the English law, the principles on which the Court should proceed in protecting witnesses from reckless and unjustifiable interrogations: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 741: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1239.

Law is no respecter of men though it is a living instrument to achieve individual and social good and morality. Status however high, therefore, cannot be used or held as a shield to cover the core of the cause or reality of a truth. In the high temples of justice all the basic bones must be felt bare and attempt to reach them should not in any manner be stifled. S. 146(3) permits a cross-examiner to put questions which will not only shake the credit of a witness, but which will also expose his ethical and moral behaviour which may ultimately weigh with the Court while evaluation or appreciating evidence. By its very nature questions on mala fides as opposed to bona fides, immorality as opposed to good morality, dishonesty as against honesty, falsehood as against truthfulness, can all conceivably be put, provided there is necessity and foundation for the same. S. 155 expressly permits by indication the mode and manner to bring in evidence upon the credit of a witness so as to impeach such testimony: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1297: 1974 Mah.L.J. 416.

Once an irrelevant question is put in cross-examination, the matter is within the Court's discretion; it has to decide whether the witness has to be compelled to answer it

149. Question not to be asked without reasonable grounds.—No such question as is referred to in section 148 ought to be asked, unless the person asking it has reasonable grounds for thinking that the imputation which it conveys is well-founded.

Illustrations

(a) A barrister is instructed by an attorney or vakil that an important witness is a dakait. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dakait.

(b) A pleader is informed by a person in Court that an important witness is a dakait. The informant, on being questioned by the pleader, gives satisfactory reasons for his statement. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dakait.

(c) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, is asked at random whether he is a dakait. There are here no reasonable grounds for the question.

(d) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, being questioned as to his mode of life and means of living, gives unsatisfactory answers. This may be a reasonable ground for asking him if he is a dakait.

150. Procedure of Court in case of question being asked without reasonable grounds.—If the Court is of opinion that any such question was asked without reasonable grounds, it may, if it was asked by any barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney, report the circumstances of the case to the High Court or other authority to which such barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney is subject in the exercise of his profession.

or whether a warning should ensue that he is not obliged to answer the same. The decision of the Court must reach either of these two results. While exercising the discretion, the matters to be taken into account are enumerated in Cls. (1) to (4) of S. 148; one of them is that such questions are proper if the same are of such a nature that the truth of the imputation conveyed by them would seriously affect the Court's opinion as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies. Indecent and scandalous question should not be disallowed merely on the ground of relevancy from the prosecution's point of view. When the Act speaks of relevancy of a fact, it may have bearing both on prosecution and defence versions: it is, therefore, the Court's primary duty before rejecting such a question to be satisfied whether it is relevant or not from the point of view of the defence: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1297: 1974 Mah.L.J. 416.

Accused charged for offences under Ss. 323, 504, 506, 541 and 148 on basis of Police report—Offences under Ss. 323, 504, 506 and 541 compounded—Magistrate has to discharge accused for offence under S. 148 as also under S. 251-A: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1038 (Bom.).

Defamatory questions put by lawyer to a witness in cross-examination on client's instructions—No reasonable basis available for putting them—Imputation conveyed by those questions is per se defamatory—Hence, client is liable under S. 500, Penal Code: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 34: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 606: 1970 Cr.L.J. 260; A.I.R. 1925 All. 641 (F.B.).

Certain standard of decency and decorum should be maintained while putting questions in cross-examination. Thus, question to a young daughter after cruel death of her mother that her mother had illicit connection, held, was improper: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 684 (D.B.).

151. Indecent and scandalous questions.—The Court may forbid any questions or inquiries which it regards as indecent or scandalous, although such questions or inquiries may have some bearing on the questions before the Court unless they relate to facts in issue, or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed.

152. Questions intended to insult or annoy.—The Court shall forbid any question which appears to it to be intended to insult or annoy, or which, though proper in itself, appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form.

153. Exclusion of evidence to contradict answers to questions testing veracity.—When a witness has been asked and has answered any question which is relevant to the inquiry only in so far as it tends to shake his credit by injuring his character, no evidence shall be given to contradict him; but, if he answers falsely, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence.

Exception 1.—If a witness is asked whether he has been previously convicted of any crime and denies it, evidence may be given of his previous conviction.

Exception 2.—If a witness is asked any question tending to impeach his impartiality, and answers it by denying the facts suggested, he may be contradicted.

Under S.151 of the Act, the Court had discretion to forbid any question which it regards as indecent and scandalous although such question may have some bearing on the question before the Court. But such a discretion cannot be exercised if such questions relate to facts in issue or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed: (1970) 83 Mad.L.W. 42; A.I.R. 1919 Pat. 515; A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 73: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 21 (D.B.).

A Counsel is, no doubt, privileged to test the veracity of a witness, but such a privilege is not unfettered. A Counsel should not act to the dictates, or wishes of his client in putting defamatory questions to a witness who has a misfortune to be in the witness-box, and, at least, the client should instruct his Counsel to put defamatory question to a witness, only when he has materials to substantiate such imputations, otherwise, he takes the risk of being run down for defamation: 1969 Kash.L.J. 27.

Section 153—Notes.

See 11 B.H.C.R. 169; 9 Cr.L.J. 226; A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 741.

S. 146 deals with questions lawful in cross-examination; Cl. (1) thereof provides for a witness being cross-examined by questions tending to test his veracity. S. 153 generally deals with exclusion of evidence to contradict answers to questions testing his veracity; but exception 2 provides that if the witness denies the facts suggested to impeach his impartiality, he may be contradicted. S. 155 deals with impeaching the credit of a witness by various ways set out in Cls. (1) to (4) thereof; and one of the ways set out in Cl. (3) is by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted. It cannot, therefore, be entirely correct that S. 146 must be read with S. 153: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1162: 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 604: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 399.

The purpose of including S. 153 in the Evidence Act is to impose some restriction so as to enable the Court to confine to specific and material issues: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 163: (1992) 2 Ker.L.T. 126 (D.B.); without such rule collateral questions would unnecessarily crop up in the course of a trial and the specific questions to be determined might be lost sight of and the trial itself would be lengthened inordinately: A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 54.

The evidence is admissible, not as contradicting A on a fact which affects his credit, but as contradicting the alleged fact that B was seen on the day in question in Lahore.

In each of these cases the witness might, if his denial was false, be charged with giving false evidence.

S. 153 is based on the observation of Pollock C.B. in Attorney General v. Hichock [1847 (1) Ex. 91] that "a witness may be contradicted as to anything he denies having said provided it be connected with the issue as a matter capable of being distinctly given in evidence, or it must be so far connected with it as to be a matter which, if answered in a particular way, would contradict a part of the witness's testimony, and if it is neither the one nor the other of these, it is collateral to, though in some sense it may be considered as connected with, the subject to enquiry". The rule limiting the right to call evidence to contradict witnesses on collateral issues excludes all evidence of facts which are incapable of affording any reasonable presumption or inference as to the principal matter in dispute: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 163: (1992) 2 Ker.L.T. 126 (D.B.).

The bar of S. 153 is attracted not only in giving evidence after the witness has been asked and answered the questions; it extends to examining any such evidence even before the witnesses are examined; no evidence intend to or capable of shaking the credit and injuring the character of a witness, yet to be examined, is permissible. As per S. 5, evidence could be given only of facts in issue and those declared to be relevant and of no others; and the credit and character of a witness to be examined in future is certainly not a fact in issue or a fact declared to be relevant by any provision of the Evidence Act: 1991 Cr.L.J. 23: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 721: I.L.R. (1991) 1 Ker. 98 (D.B.).

A party may not in general impeach the credit of his opponent's witness by calling witnesses to contradict him on irrelevant matters; his answers thereon are conclusive. Thus, if a question in cross-examination affects only the credit of the witness and is irrelevant to the matters actually in issue, the witness cannot be contradicted by other evidence except in certain exceptional cases: A.I.R. 1952 All. 289 (D.B.).

The antecedents of a prosecution witness are relevant solely for shaking his credit and injuring his character; they are otherwise not relevant and constitute only a collateral or incidental matter on which independent evidence is tabooed under S. 153, if they are denied by the witness even when his answer makes him liable to prosecution for perjury; the object of the prohibition is not to save the Court's time from endless controversies on

154. Question by party to his own witness.—The Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party.

irrelevant matters; a witness coming to the Court to give evidence is not expected to be prepared to answer all questions concerning his past conduct; therefore, on such matters, relevant solely to shake his credit and injure his character, what he says is taken to be conclusive so far as that case is concerned: 1991 Cr.L.J. 23: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 721: I.L.R. (1991) 1 Ker. 98 (D.B.).

A previous statement made and tape-recorded can be used not only to corroborate the evidence given by the witness in Court but also to contradict the evidence given before the Court as well as to test the veracity of the witness and also to impeach his impartiality. Apart from being used for corroboration, the evidence is admissible in respect of other three last mentioned matters under S. 146(1), S. 153, Exception 2 and S. 155: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1162: 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 604: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 399.

When a witness was asked and he answered that at the relevant time he was at the scene of occurrence and saw the incident, evidence that he was not there and he was somewhere else and, hence, he had no occasion to see the incident is permissible and it cannot be denied under cover of S. 153: (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 516: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 421 (D.B.).

Questions touching the character and conduct of witness—Putting of. See (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 473, cited under S. 146, supra.

Where the witness who was questioned whether he was not an active criminal and whether he was not under Police surveillance denied the suggestions and the evidence given to contradict him had nothing to do with the previous conviction or with the impeachment of the impartiality but only tended to impeach his character, held, the evidence was not admissible at all under S. 153: 1959 Cr.L.J. 694: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 342. The principle of this section should be observed in examination on commission also: I.L.R. 47 Cal. 1040. Ss. 153 and 155 must be strictly construed and narrowly interpreted: I.L.R. 6 Rang. 142: A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 54.

Where the evidence of a prosecution witness was impeached on the ground of his antecedents, which he denied in cross-examination, of having been involved in various offences but his testimony stood the test of the Court's testimony and was also sufficiently corroborated, held, the Court could rely on his testimony; his antecedents were relevant only for cautioning the Court to scan his evidence more carefully: 1991 Cr.L.J. 23: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 721: I.L.R. (1991) 1 Ker. 98 (D.B.).

Where main attack against evidence of a child witness who happened to witness murder of his sister was that he falsely said that he was studying in third standard at certain School and Headmistress of said School was examined to say that no such student as child witness was then studying in that School, held, the evidence sought to be adduced through said Headmistress could not be permitted to come on record as it was intended to contradict child witness on an issue which was not relevant in the main enquiry: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 163: (1992) 2 Ker.L.T. 126 (D.B.).

1. Scope.—See I.L.R. 28 Cal. 594; I.L.R. 13 Cal. 53; 12 M.I.A. 380; A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 182; A.I.R. 1954 Andh. Pra. 39.

Right to treat one's own witness as hostile is a procedural right conferred by the Court recording the evidence and not a substantive statutory right: (1988) 1 Karn.L.J. 162.

S. 137 gives only the three stages in the examination of a witness, namely, examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination. This has no relevance to the question when a party calling a witness can be permitted to put to him questions under S. 154; that is governed by the provisions of S. 154 which confers a discretionary power on the Court to permit a person who calls a witness to put any question to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party, S. 154 does not in terms, or by necessary implication, confine the exercise of the power by the Court before the examination-in-chief is concluded or to any particular stage of the examination of the witness. The discretion is entirely left to the Court to exercise the power when the circumstances demand. The Court, therefore, can permit a person, who calls a witness to put questions to him which might be put in the cross-examination at any stage of the examination of the witness, provided it takes care to give an opportunity to the accused to cross-examine him on the answers elicited which do not find place in the examination-in-chief: (1963) 7 S.C.R. 361: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563. See also (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 209; 1982 Jab.L.J. 823.

Ordinarily, permission to cross-examine a witness is sought by the party calling him in the course of examination-in-chief itself. S. 154 itself does not specify the stage at which alone a party can seek such permission. A witness who has in his chief-examination deposed favourably or not unfavourably to the case of the party calling him may in the course of cross-examination, disclose a hostile animus against the party who had called him. In such circumstances, the Court is not only not disabled from granting permission to the party who had originally called the witness to cross-examine him but it would be improper exercise of discretion to refuse such permission if, in the opinion of the Court, circumstances justifying its grant do exist. The only point for consideration by the Court is whether, the party calling the witness should, in fairness, be permitted to cross-examine him: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 653 (Mys.).

S. 154 does not in terms or by implication confine exercise of the discretionary power under it before the examination-in-chief is concluded or to any particular stage of the examination. It is wide in scope and the discretion can be exercised when the circumstances so demand. Such discretion to permit cross-examination can be exercised at the stage of re-examination and in such a case the adverse party must be given further opportunity to cross-examine the witness. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563, Rel. on]: 1991 M.P.L.J. 985 (D.B); 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 129 (Cal.).

S. 154 shows that firstly it is in the discretion of the Court to permit a person who calls a witness, to put any question which may be put in cross-examination by the adverse party, and secondly that the party must obtain the Court's permission before doing so. At the same time, it is clear that such a permission must be sought, at any rate, before the deposition comes to an end. An application for such a permission would not be granted if it is sought after the whole examination of the witness was over and the Judge who recorded the evidence was also transferred. [A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 137, Rel. on]: (1969) 1 An.L.T. 32.

The discretion conferred on the Court under S. 154 to permit a party, who calls a witness, to put questions to him which might be put in the cross-examination by the adverse party, has to be exercised very carefully taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration. Merely because one part of the statement of the witness was not favourable to the party which called him, the Court should not readily conclude that he was suppressing the truth or that his testimony was adverse to the party which called him. Whether the witness had exhibited hostile animus has to be judged on the basis of the answers given by the witness. Thus, where the witness did not conceal any part of the truth nor did he try to injure the interests of the plaintiff by prevaricating or exhibiting, in any other manner, hostile attitude, and the motive suggested to the witness in the cross-examination by the plaintiff's counsel was that he was giving false evidence because the plaintiff, her husband and her sisters did not heed to his advice in the litigation, held, this suggestion deserved to be ignored in toto. He had absolutely no motive to depose against the interests of the plaintiff; whether the parties compromise or litigate was of no concern to him. Even assuming that he had earlier advised the parties to compromise and they failed to do so could not, by any stretch of reasoning be approximated to a motive strong enough to be a propelling force for the witness to utter falsehood. Therefore, his testimony was to be accepted in toto as true and believable: (1995) 3 An.L.T. 132 (D.B.).

S. 154 speaks of permitting a party to put to his own witness "questions which might be put in cross-examination"; it does not necessarily tantamount to cross-examining the witnesses. "Cross-examination", strictly speaking, means cross-examination by the adverse party as distinct from the party calling the witness. That is why S. 154 uses the phrase, "put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party". Therefore, neither the party calling him, nor the adverse party is, in law, precluded from relying on any part of the statement of such a witness: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 727: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 11.

Ss. 143 and 154 do not give power to the prosecution to put leading questions to their own witnesses even with the assent of the Judge. The meaning of S. 154 is that they may, with the permission of the Court, treat a witness as hostile and cross-examine him. The wording of S. 154 shows that the Legislature did not intend to distinguish the law in this country from the law which obtains in England: I.L.R. 57 Cal. 801: A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 139.

The principles underlying S. 154, Evidence Act are that where one's own witness unexpectedly makes statements adverse to his interest, it is common fairness that the Judge should permit such statements to be tested by cross-examination if the evidence is to be relied upon and if cross-examination be disallowed the evidence is of no value. The utility of cross-examination is supposed to be that it is a means whereby the Court can more readily get the truth out of the witness.

The ordinary rule that leading questions must not on material points be put by a party to his own witness, has its basis in the circumstance that as the party chooses what witness he will call, a witness is very often anxious to assist the party on whose behalf he is called. The rule is to guard against the bias of the witness in favour of the side in support of which his evidence is sought. The rule is not relaxed because the witness has already forfeited all the rights to credit but because his evidence will be more fully given and his credit more adequately tested by questions put in more pointed and searching way. Thus, to obtain permission to cross-examine, all that is necessary is that the witness's testimony should have been adverse to the party calling him and the value of the witness's testimony in such cases is to be judged in the light of the results of such cross-examination. Invoking the aid of S. 154 for declaring a witness hostile is not permissible: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 767; 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 123 (Mys.).

On this section, see also 1946 All.W.R. (H.C.) 322.

Result of cross-examining one's own witness: I.L.R. 53 Cal. 372: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 872.

In a case where a witness or more than one of them turns hostile, the Court will have to take judicial notice of the fact that the only beneficiary of such a situation is the accused and, consequently, an appropriate adverse inference will follow. Unless an attempt has been made to tamper with the evidence, a witness will not completely resile from his earlier statement, and such efforts can only be traced back to the beneficiary of such a corrupt practice: (1991) 2 Mah.L.J. 1318.

Prosecution dropping certain witness without declaring him as hostile—Defence applying for cross-examination of said witness—Prosecution cannot object to take into consideration evidence of said witness only because he was not examined by prosecution: 1979 Cr.L.R. 531 (Guj.) (D.B.).

Evidence of a witness who was not declared hostile by the prosecution would have to be taken as a part of the prosecution version. [A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 839; A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 772, Rel. on]: 1990 M.P.L.J. 770: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2507 (D.B.).

Merely because some witnesses have turned hostile to prosecution itself would not be sufficient to discard the evidence of other witnesses—Evidence of such other witnesses examined has to be considered independently and accepted or rejected on its merits: I.L.R. (1986) Karn. 4151 (D.B.).

2. Permission of Court.—It is not necessary to make a formal declaration that a witness is hostile before permission is granted under S. 154. The discretion of the Court in granting permission is a judicial discretion and is required to be exercised in a judicious way. In ordinary circumstances or in a majority of cases it may be taken that when a party calls a witness, he represents to the Court that the witness called by him, is worthy of credit and is likely to speak the truth in respect of facts touching matters under enquiry by Court. But occasions may, not infrequently arise, where a party may be obliged to examine a witness, with whom he may have no private relations and of whose general character and credibility he may not be full aware or informed and in such cases, it will not only be absurd to assume that he represents to the Court that the witness is worthy of credit but also, in the highest degree, unfair and unjust. Permission under S. 154 could hardly be refused when any witness makes an unexpected statement adverse to the case of the prosecution. It means that an attempt on the part of the witness to depart from what is tentatively believed to be true is open to the suspicion that he may be departing from the truth, making it necessary to test his veracity by cross-examination by the party to whose detriment his unexpected departure may operate. It is wrong law to assume that such witnesses must be regarded as witnesses called by the Court and liable to be cross-examined as of right by the party citing them. A witness should be regarded as adverse and liable to cross-examination by the party calling him only when, in the opinion of the Court, he bears hostile animus to the party calling him and further that a hostile witness in the real sense is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth. Where no case has been made out for a general permission to cross-examine witness under S. 154 of the Evidence Act, it may become necessary on particular topics or in relation to material circumstances to relieve the party against the prohibition of putting leading questions to the witness, so that the Court may have a clear picture of the witness's reaction to those questions as an aid to discovering the truth. For this purpose it is open to the Court to act either under S. 154 to a limited extent or under S. 142 which allows leading questions to be put in examination-in-chief, even if objected to with the permission of the Court: 1969 Cr.L.J. 118: A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 12.

The circumstances in which a witness may be cross-examined by the party calling him are not laid down in S. 154, which leaves the matter entirely to the discretion of the Court. The mischief begins when the grant of permission itself is considered to be equivalent to an adjudication or to an expression of opinion by the Court adverse to the veracity of the witness instead of being treated merely as a permission to test veracity of a witness, a permission which can hardly be refused when any witness makes an unexpected statement adverse to the case of the prosecution: 14 Pat.L.T. 580: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 488; 38 Cr.L.J. 271: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 34. See also 14 Pat.L.T. 494: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 517; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563.

Ordinarily, if it is made to appear to the Court that a witness has resiled from the statement made by him during investigation, it should permit the cross-examination of such a witness under S. 154, Evidence Act. Also under S. 162, Cr.P.Code as amended in 1955, it is open to the prosecution to confront a witness with his statement made during investigation with the permission of the Court: 1960 Cr.L.J. 520: A.I.R. 1960 Raj. 101. See also 1974 B.B.C.J. 227.

The Court has discretion to permit examination of a witness under S. 154 when it is satisfied from the manner in which the witness gives evidence that he is not desirous of telling the truth and that it is necessary to give such permission to elicit the truth. Inconsistent or contradictory statements of the witness are not the only ground for permitting examination under S. 154. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 170; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 397: (1982-83) 87 Cal.W.N. 102: (1982) 2 Cal.H.N. 166.

The mere fact that the witness has given certain answers not wholly favourable or even adverse to the case of the party who has called him is never considered sufficient ground for permitting the party to cross-examine him. Such permission is granted only when the witness is said to be hostile to the party calling him. The Court, on a consideration of all factors relevant to the question, must form its own opinion that the witness really bears a hostile animus to the party calling him, the law has, advisedly left the matter entirely at the discretion of the trial Judge who has the benefit of watching the witness in the box and hearing him giving evidence. Such discretion like any other discretion vested in a Court, has to be exercised judicially: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 653 (Mys.).

Before declaring a witness hostile, it is usual for a Judge to look into the statement made before the Investigating Officer to see whether the witness was actually resiling from the position taken during investigation. The party must lay a foundation for cross-examining its own witness: (1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 671: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1579: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 776.

A witness can become hostile only when he makes a statement contrary to the case taken by the party who has summoned him. It is then open to the party examining him to pray to the Court to declare him hostile and seek the permission of the Court under S. 154 for cross-examining him. The party may then through cross-examination elicit from him the proof of his case: A.I.R. 1980 All. 395: (1980) 6 All.L.R. 445.

S. 154 does not require a particular form of application to seek Court's permission to cross-examine one's own witness. A written application is, therefore, not necessary. Permission can be formally asked for. However, a mere declaration of one's intention to ask for Court's permission does not tantamount to asking such permission: (1969) 1 An.L.T. 32.

Before a party calling a witness can cross-examine him it is not necessary that the witness should first of all be declared hostile. In this respect S. 154 gives an unqualified discretion to the Judge quite apart from any question of the hostility or otherwise of the witness. It is, however, necessary before the procedure of S. 154 can be adopted either for permission of the Court to be obtained or for it to be given by the Court without its being sought. Such permission should be signified, if not in words, by some other action of the Court indicating its permission during the cross-examination of the witness by the party calling him: I.L.R. 56 Mad. 7; A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 389. See also I.L.R. 58 Cal. 1404: (1930-31) 35 Cal.W.N. 731: A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 401; 1971 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 27; I.L.R. (1974) 1 Del. 129 (D.B.).

Grant of leave to cross-examine one's own witness at any stage is left completely in the trial Court's discretion, the exercise whereof is not fettered by, or dependent upon, the hostility or adverseness of the witness; the prosecution may seek permission to cross-examine its own witness if it finds after the cross-examination is over or if the last sentence contains a statement inconsistent with or in improvement of or destructive of the prosecution case, and the Court is competent to grant the permission; such permission cannot be used to indicate that the Court has made up his mind or is biased towards one party or the other: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 29: (1989) 2 An.L.T. 694.

The discretion conferred by S. 154 on the Court is unqualified and untrammelled, and is apart from any question of "hostility". It is to be liberally exercised whenever the Court from the witness's demeanour, temper, attitude, bearing or the tenor and tendency of his answers, or from a perusal of his previous inconsistent statement, or otherwise, thinks that the grant of such permission is expedient to extract the truth and to do justice. The grant of such permission does not amount to an adjudication by the Court as to the veracity of the witness. Therefore, in the order granting such permission, it is preferable to avoid the use of such expressions, such as "declared hostile", "declared unfavourable", the significance of which is still not free from the historical cobwebs which, in their wake bring a misleading legacy of confusion, and conflict that had so long vexed the English Courts: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294: 1976 Cr.L.J. 295: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 727: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 11.

The purpose of cross-examination of a witness is not only to discredit but also to elicit admissions of facts which would help to build the case of the cross-examiner: 1977 Raj.L.W. 107.

S. 154 confers a judicial discretion on the Court to permit cross-examination and does not contain any conditions or principles which may govern the exercise of such discretion. It is however, well settled that the discretion must be judiciously and properly exercised in the interests of justice. A party will not normally be allowed to cross-examine its own witness and declare the same hostile, unless the Court is satisfied that the statement of the witness exhibits an element of hostility or that he has resiled from a material statement which he made before an earlier authority or where the Court is satisfied that the witness is not speaking the truth and it may be necessary to cross-examine him to get out the truth. Broadly, the contingency of cross-examining the witness by the party calling him is an extraordinary phenomenon and permission should be given only in special cases. Further, the Court, before permitting the party calling the witness to cross-examine him, must scan and weigh the circumstances properly and should not exercise its discretion in a casual or routine manner. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 202, Rel. on; (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 510, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 170: 1977 Cr.L.J. 173: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 233: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 439.

Before permitting the prosecution to cross-examine the prosecution witness the Judge will have to examine the statement made by the witness before the Investigation Officer to find out whether the witness is really hostile to the party calling him. He may have to consider the manner in which the witness answers the questions, his demeanour while answering questions to examine whether he is attempting to tamper the case of the prosecution. The discretion of granting permission is a judicial discretion and is required to be exercised in a judicious way. Therefore, the witness could be regarded as hostile only if the Court is of the opinion that the witness is hostile to the party calling him and that he is not desirous of telling the truth. Thus, where the Sessions Judge after examining the demeanour of witnesses concluded that they could not be said to have turned hostile, held, the discretion exercised by the Sessions Judge could not be interfered with: (1993) 2 An.L.T. (Cr.) 214: (1993) 2 Karn.L.J. 227; (1976) 2 S.C.W.R. 450: (1976) 2 Karn.L.J. (Jr.) 65 (S.N.) 107.

As to the evidence of hostility and principle governing discretion of Court, see 30

If a party calling a witness wants to challenge his veracity or to get certain admissions detracting from the value of his evidence given beforehand, the proper procedure is to resort to S. 154, which gives discretion to the Court to permit the party calling the witness to put questions to that witness by way of cross-examination. There is no provision in the Evidence Act, or in the Criminal Procedure Code which justifies a Magistrate recording the evidence of a witness to make at the end of his deposition a note to the effect that he is "declared hostile". Such a note had absolutely no significance in law. The opposite party is entitled to rely on the evidence of such witness: 1945 Pat.W.N. 241: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 109. See also 46 Cr.L.J. 692.

When the Court allows a party to cross-examine his own witness, the reason should be stated, because by offering a witness, a party is held to recommend him as worthy of prudence, and so in general, it is not open to him to test the witness's credit or impeach his truthfulness: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 904: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 724 (D.B.).

Appreciation of evidence — Witness — Witness called by party giving answers adverse to his case—Appreciation of evidence—Duty of Court—Witness if can be treated as hostile: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 403: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 74.

Where the prosecution's prayer to declare a prosecution witness hostile and to permit to cross-examine her as she made statements which were destructive of the prosecution's case and thoroughly inconsistent with her earlier statements before the Police, was refused without any reason, held, order refusing permission was to be quashed: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 1 (Ori.).

Where a prosecution witness had stated that it was he who had filled up the bank account opening form which was not only contrary but destructive of the prosecution version that it was filled up by the accused, held, the trial Court could not have declined to declare him a hostile witness at the public prosecutor's request on the ground that the witness had not stated anything contrary to any earlier statement; the prosecution in the circumstances was entitled to treat the witness as hostile and cross-examine him: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 569.

Letter produced for first time in course of cross-examination of defendant's witness—Letter taking defendant by surprise—Court is right in allowing defendant to cross-examine witness—Cross-examination should be permitted only in regard to genuineness and contents of letter: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 189.

Plaintiff's witness during first cross-examination saying nothing regarding a certain document—In further cross-examination, witness admitting the document—Document against interest of plaintiff—Plaintiff's advocate wanting to cross-examine witness on this point by declaring him hostile—Court disallowing—Court, held, exercised discretion wrongly: I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 635.

3. Hostile witness.—Though no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to when a witness can be called an adverse or a hostile witness, it can, however, be broadly stated that the Court can allow a party to cross-examine his witness firstly, when his temper, attitude, demeanour, etc., in the witness-box show a deliberately hostile feeling towards the party calling him or secondly, when concealing his true sentiments he does not exhibit any hostile feelings but makes statements contrary to what he was called or expected to prove. Hostility may appear either during the examination-in-chief or the cross-examination and even in re-examination: (1969) 1 An.L.T. 32.

A witness is not necessarily hostile because in an absent-minded moment he admits the truth. Before a prosecution witness can be declared hostile, there must be good ground for believing that the statement he made in favour of the defence is due to enmity to the prosecution: 44 I.C. 33: 3 Pat.L.J. 419. See also I.L.R. 61 Cal. 399: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 659: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 636; (1976) 2 S.C.W.R. 450: (1976) 2 Karn.L.J. (Jr.) 65 (S.N.) 107.

A witness cannot be treated as hostile merely because his evidence is favourable to the other side, and the fact that the witness had become hostile has to be established by eliciting information such as could give an indication of hostility.

It is not possible for the Court to say without giving reason that he will not believe a witness after permission for treating the witness as hostile has been refused by the Court unless the civil Judge himself comes to the conclusion that he has turned hostile: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 157.

A witness is not necessarily hostile if he is speaking the truth as he knows and sees it, even if his testimony happens to go against the party calling him: 89 Cal.L.J. 127: A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 160.

Witness for party speaking truth against party calling him is not necessarily hostile witness—Court has discretion to permit party calling him to put questions to witness which might be put in cross-examination: A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 48.

A witness who is unfavourable is not necessarily hostile; a hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth: I.L.R. 49 Cal. 93: A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 267; (1929-30) 34 Cal.W.N. 526: A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 276.

The mere fact, that a witness does not adhere to or subsequently makes a statement different from his previous statement does not of itself justify the employment of the power given by S. 154: I.L.R. 11 Rang. 4: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 57. See also 166 I.C. 726: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 34; A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 150. See however A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 384.

That the answer of the witness is in direct conflict with other evidence is no ground to treat him as hostile and allow cross-examination: I.L.R. 59 Mad. 904: A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 516: 71 M.L.J. 231.

It is not a healthy practice for public prosecutors to tell the Court that he had information that a particular witness had turned hostile. The inference of the hostility of a witness could be drawn only from the answers given by him and to some extent from the demeanour. [1937 Mad.W.N. 557 (F.B.), Rel. on]: 1955 An.W.R. 920: A.I.R. 1956 Andhra 26.

While it is true that prosecution may not call all witnesses it is important that the witness whose evidence is essential to the "unfolding of the narrative" should be called. To say that certain witness has been won over is not conclusive of the allegation and in such a case witness can be produced for cross-examination by the accused for eliciting correct facts: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1586: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1173; 1987 Cr.L.J. 1533 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Witness must be put in witness-box and foundation must be laid for theory that he has turned hostile: 1979 Mah.L.J. 494.

In a large number of corruption cases, panchas turn hostile and ultimately because of that, the cause of justice suffer. It is regrettable that public prosecutors do not declare a particular panch or a witness hostile to the prosecution at the proper stage in course of the trial before the Special Judge. Eradication of corruption is a must and if that object is to be achieved, it is high time that not only the panchas who are selected should be respectable panchas but if panchas deliberately turn hostile to the prosecution, the public prosecutors in the State must be on special caution to see, that at the relevant time, and at the proper stage, the panchas are declared hostile to the prosecution in a situation where the panchas turn hostile to the prosecution. It is equally the sacred duty of the public prosecutors to move the Court for necessary action against the panch who has been declared hostile to the prosecution.

It is the absolute discretion of a public prosecutor to drop a witness from examining him either on the ground of the witness being hostile to the prosecution or on the ground that if examined he would duplicate and burden the record, but if the prosecution witness having entered the box tries to trifle with the prosecution case by deliberately adopting the attitude in cross-examination which would destroy the very core of the prosecution case, it is the duty of the public prosecutor to declare such a witness as a witness hostile to the prosecution: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 464 (D.B.); (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 287.

No doubt even if any witness appears to be hostile, it is still the duty of the prosecution to produce the witness before Court whatever may be the worth of his evidence. But for non-production of such witness the whole of the prosecution case cannot be rejected: 1991 Cal.Cr.L.R. 61.

Before seeking permission to declare a witness hostile, the prosecution must demonstrate either by referring to his statement recorded under S. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or otherwise that he was not telling the truth and only then the Court can permit the prosecution to declare a witness hostile: 1991 Cal.Cr.L.R. 121: (1991) 1 Cal.H.N. 331.

Hostility between witness and accused has to be so grave that false implication may be the result. But, mere hostility cannot be sufficient to show that a person would make false allegation against his own brother: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 348 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Offence under S. 5-A, Prevention of Corruption Act—Illegal investigation does not render statements recorded therein by Police Officer illegal—Offence in Ahmedabad city—Investigation made by Dy.S.P.—Fresh investigation by Superintendent of Police—Statements recorded earlier by Dy.S.P. fall under Ss. 161 and 162, Cr.P.Code—Witness resiling from such statements can be cross-examined: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1505: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1323.

Where a witness was examined at the accused's instance but he was examined-in-chief by the public prosecutor under the Court's direction and he did not support the prosecution case that the wife set ablaze and found naked and dead in the well was thrown therein by the accused but the Court refused to declare him hostile and did not permit him to be cross-examined, held, feeling that its witness is not telling the whole truth or is suppressing some parts thereof, the prosecution can request the Court to declare him hostile and permit it to ask questions which might be but in cross-examination; it may as well seek permission under S. 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict the statement of the witness under S. 162 of the Cr.P.Code. Moreover, if the Court finds from the witness's demeanour, temper, attitude, bearing or tenor or tendency or from his inconsistent statements or otherwise that it is expedient to extract the truth and to do justice, the Court should grant the permission under S. 154 of the Evidence Act: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2195 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where in the absence of direct evidence, the prosecution relied upon circumstantial evidence to establish that the wife, having recently come to her in-laws' house after having stayed in her parental house for almost a year and a half, was set ablaze at the first floor and was found dead and naked in a nearby well and the circumstances negatived the defence of suicide and though it was stated during the inquest and mentioned in the spot panchnama that a petticoat had been found near the well and one of the prosecution witnesses turned hostile and admitted in cross-examination that the petticoat was not near the well and he had told the Police that rich or poor lady would not jump into the well in naked condition, held, simply because a witness is declared hostile and permitted to be cross-examined does not mean that his evidence is banished from consideration; the Court is free to accept such portion of his testimony as inspires confidence; the Court may conclude that non-finding of the petticoat near the well showed that even if she reached the well on her own, she was totally naked, one of the circumstances against the plea of suicide: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2195 (Bom.) (D.B.).

4. Value of evidence of witnesses cross-examined under section 154.—Where a witness turns hostile and is cross-examined by the party calling him, the evidence of such a witness need not be rejected in toto. It is a question for the Judge to decide whether inspite of the witness having been descredited on one point his testimony may be considered on another: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 137: I.L.R. 56 Mad. 7: 64 M.L.J. 208; 1993 Cr.L.J. 3634 (Bom.) (D.B.); 1990 Cr.L.J. 821 (Ori.); (1976) 2 S.C.W.R. 450: (1976) 2 Kam.L.J. (Jr.) 65 (S.N.) 107.

The fact that the witness is dealt with under S. 154, Evidence Act, even when under that section he is cross-examined to credit, in no way warrants a conclusion that the Court is bound in law to place no reliance on his evidence or that the party who called and cross-examined him can take no advantage from any part of his evidence. The evidence of such a witness is not to be rejected either in whole or in part. It is not also to be rejected so far as it is in favour of the party calling the witness, nor is it to be rejected so far as it is in favour of the opposite party. The whole of the evidence so far as it affects both parties favourably or unfavourably must go to the Court for what it is worth: 28 Cut.L.T. 523: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 67; 1973 B.L.J.R. 347: 1973 B.B.C.J. 227; 1983 Cr.L.J. 1706 (Ori.) (D.B.); 1991 Cr.L.J. 1878 (All.) (D.B.).

Hostile witness is not necessarily a false witness: 1993 Cr.L.J. 120 (Madh. Pra.).

If a witness is turned hostile, it does not mean that his entire statement is to be discarded. The rule of prudence is that his statement has to be considered with due care and caution. In other words explicit reliance cannot be placed upon him but if he is duly corroborated by other evidence, his statement can certainly be availed of in favour of the prosecution or in favour of the accused as the case may be: 1976 Cr.L.J. 162 (Him. Pra.); 1981 All.L.J. 871.

The fact that the witness was declared hostile by the Court at the request of the prosecuting Counsel and he was allowed to cross-examine the witness furnishes no justification for rejecting en block the evidence of the witness. His evidence has to be read and considered as a whole with a view to find out whether any weight should be attached to the same: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1719: A.I.R. 1953 J.&K. 41 (D.B.).

It is settled law that the testimony of witness is not completely effaced merely because he was declared hostile. Such part of testimony of a hostile witness, as inspires confidence can be accepted by the Court. Partly hostile witness can corroborate: 1993

The grant of such permission does not mean that the witness is a "hostile" or "unfavourable" or "adverse witness" and therefore, a liar. It should be remembered that the only object of cross-examination of a witness or putting in examination-in-chief with the permission of the Court questions of the kind allowed only in cross-examination, is not to discredit the witness but also to bring out evidence which would advance the case of the cross-examiner or the person calling the witness, as the case may be. It is by now well settled that merely because a witness has been dealt with under S. 154 of the Evidence Act, 1872, his evidence does not become unreliable or unacceptable. The Court will have to assess his evidence as any other witness's evidence. Thereupon, the Court may accept it in whole or in part. Acceptance of his evidence or portion or portions thereof would mean that the Court considers that the witness has deposed truthfully on those matters on which his evidence is relied on, but rejection of evidence or portion or portions thereof would not indicate that he swore falsely concerning the matters on which his evidence is rejected as unreliable or undependable, and this is so even if it be that his credit has been successfully impeached and shaken and his veracity doubted. [A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 401; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294, Rel. on]: 1978 Ker.L.T. 546 (D.B.).

A party is allowed to cross-examine his own witness because the witness displays hostility and not necessarily because he displays untruthfulness. The fact that the witness is being cross-examined does not imply an admission that all the witnesses' statements are falsehoods. On the other hand, the main purpose of cross-examination is to obtain admission. Consequently, the prosecution is entitled to rely on a part of the witness's evidence even though he has turned hostile: I.L.R. 9 Pat. 474: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 247; 1972 Cr.L.J. 978.

When a public prosecutor declares a prosecution witness to be hostile and cross-examines him after taking the Court's permission it merely amounts to a declaration by him that the witness is adverse or unfriendly to the prosecution and not that the witness is untruthful. The true rule is that either party may rely upon the evidence of such a witness, and the Court can come to its own conclusion after a consideration of the whole of his evidence: 1958 B.L.J.R. 454: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 66; (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 121; (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 6: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 123.

The evidence of a prosecution witness cannot be rejected wholesale, merely on the ground that the prosecution had dubbed him "hostile" and had cross-examined him: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1848.

Evidence of hostile witnesses is not wiped-off merely because they have turned hostile and it can be used for the purpose of corroboration to the extent they corroborate the prosecution version: 1995 Cr.L.J. 819 (Raj.); 1993 Mah.L.J. 1416.

In a criminal prosecution, even if a witness is cross-examined and contradicted by his previous statement with the leave of the Court by the party calling him, his evidence still remains admissible in the trial and a conviction can be based upon that evidence, if corroborated by other reliable evidence. [1975 Cr.L.J. 1009 (S.C.); 1976 Cr.L.J. 295 (S.C.); 1976 Cr.L.J. 203 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1976 Raj.L.W. 410: 1977 Cr.L.J. 68 (D.B.); 1977 Cr.L.J. 1349 (Gau.) (D.B.); 1985 Cr.L.J. 1767: 59 Cut.L.T. 381.

What is required to be considered is whether the credit of the witness has been completely shaken. The fact that such cross-examination was permitted does not imply that the witness who was cross-examined is, for all purposes an untrustworthy witness, and no part of his statement can be regarded as representing the truth. The question before the Court in such a case would be to decide which part of his testimony is false, and which part of his evidence is true, provided there is the required degree of conviction in the mind of Court that a particular part of the testimony of a witness, whether it forms a part of the examination-in-chief or cross-examination, is true. There is nothing which can prevent the Court in acting upon such evidence in support of its conclusion. [1976 Cr.L.J. 203 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1977 Cr.L.J. 59: 1976 Raj.L.W. 345 (D.B.); 1977 Cr.L.J. 513 (Pat.) (D.B.); 1979 Cut.L.R. (Cr.) 36 (D.B.); (1978) 1 M.P.W.N. 25; 1976 Cr.L.J. 1409 (D.B.); 1980 Raj.L.W. 510; 1981 All.Cr.R. 442: 1982 All.L.J. 66 (D.B.).

Because a person is produced as a witness on the side of the plaintiff he should not be regarded as a witness of truth if he is interested in the defendant and as such is clearly hostile to the plaintiff. The value of his evidence is to be judged on its merits and the plaintiff cannot be pinned down to the case put by him in his cross-examination: I.L.R. (1954) 4 Raj. 822: 1954 Raj.L.W. 563: A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 65.

Permission to cross-examine witness by itself is not enough to discredit the witness: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1527: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 415.

A hostile prosecution witness who is permitted to be cross-examined by the prosecution, does not necessarily loose his or her credibility because of that fact. The entire evidence of the hostile witness has to be considered on its merits and the Court would be perfectly entitled to accept as much of that evidence as it might find acceptable: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1352 (Cal.).

It is now settled that the evidence of a witness who is cross-examined by the party calling him is still, evidence and can be relied on by either party the credibility of the facts deposed being a matter for the jury. There is no legal objection to permission to treat a witness as hostile being granted freely, although, it is preferable to avoid the use of the words "declared hostile" which by association have come to carry by implication a misleading significance: I.L.R. 19 Pat. 369: A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 289: 22 Pat.L.T. 98.

Grant of permission under S. 154, does not amount to an adjudication by the Court as to the credibility of the witness. When a party is permitted to put questions to the witness in the nature of cross-examination, the evidence of the witness cannot, as a matter of law, be treated as washed off the record altogether. Either party may rely upon the evidence of such a witness and the whole of the evidence so far as it affects both parties favourably or unfavourably must be considered for what it is worth. It is for the Court to consider, in each case, whether the witness stands thoroughly discredited or can still be believed in regard to a part of his testimony. Neither the party calling the witness nor the adverse party is precluded from relying on any part of the statement of such a witness. Therefore, in the order granting such permission, it is preferable to avoid the use of expression as "declared hostile" which may appear to carry the implication that the witness is already discredited: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 251.

Even in the case of witness who has been permitted to be cross-examined under S. 154 of the Evidence Act, the Court can depend upon that part of the testimony given by the witness which appears to be truthful evidence there being no principle on the basis of which it can be said, that a witness who is permitted to be cross-examined must be dismissed as person giving false evidence on every matter about which he speaks: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1155: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 248; 1971 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 368.

Even if a witness is hostile, his entire evidence is not to be discarded. It is for the Court to go through the entire evidence and see what part of his evidence is acceptable: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 794. If a part thereof finds support from corroborative and circumstantial evidence, it would be acceptable: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 667.

Mere fact that a witness is dealt with under S. 154, of the Evidence Act and was cross-examined, does not necessarily warrant that such an evidence is wholly unreliable. The Court has to consider the facts in each case and see whether as a result of the witness being treated hostile, he stands thoroughly discredited or can still be believed in regard to a part of his testimony and if the Court is satisfied that the credit of the witness has not been completely shaken it can with due care and caution accept that part of the testimony of the witness which is found to be creditworthy and the Court can act upon the same: (1985) 1 An.W.R. 124 (D.B.).

If in the statement of a hostile witness proof is available of certain facts which the party calling him intends to establish, there is nothing to prevent such portion of his evidence as support the case of the side putting him in the witness-box from being considered on their merits and being used as evidence against the party whom he has resolved dishonestly to favour: A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 97: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1212.

Where hostile evidence is the problem, the appropriate course for a Court would be to bring its judicial discretion to bear on the whole statement and to decide which part of the statement impresses it as true and which not: I.L.R. (1952) Patiala 494: A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 97: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1212.

When a witness becomes hostile, it would in certain cases be unsafe to accept any portion of testimony which he has rendered in examination-in-chief. To pick and choose between the statement which such a witness makes in examination-in-chief would sometimes be an unsound proceeding. But it would be quite wrong to hold that a Court is entirely debarred from bringing its judicial discretion to bear on materials which cross-examination elicits and of deciding whether the truth lies there: (1939-40) 44 Cal.W.N. 999: A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 536.

The evidence of a hostile witness is not necessarily to be rejected either in whole or in part. It is also not to be rejected so far as it is in favour of the party which called in the witness nor is to be rejected so far as it is in favour of the opposite party: 30 Cut.L.T. 517: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 31.

It is not correct to say that when a witness is cross-examined by the party calling him, his evidence cannot be believed in part and disbelieved in part but must be excluded from consideration altogether. The correct rule is that either side may rely upon his evidence and that the whole of the evidence so far as it affects both parties favourably or unfavourably must be considered for what it is worth. Held, on examination of the evidence given by the witness declared as hostile, that his evidence should be discarded not on the ground of alleged hostility but on the ground of its thorough unreliability: 1959 Cr.L.J. 212: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 19; (1959) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 101.

Even in a criminal prosecution when a witness is cross-examined and contradicted with the leave of the Court, by the party calling him, his evidence cannot, as a matter of law, be treated as washed off the record altogether. It is for the Judge of fact to consider in each case whether as a result of such cross-examination and contradiction, the witness stands thoroughly discredited or can still be believed in regard to a part of his testimony. If the Judge finds that in the process, the credit of the witness has not been completely shaken, he may, after reading and considering the evidence of the witness, as a whole with due caution and care, accept, in the light of the other evidence on the record, that part of his testimony which finds to be creditworthy and act upon it. If in a given case, the whole of the testimony of the witness is impugned, and in the process, the witness stands squarely and totally discredited, the Judge should, as a matter of prudence, discard his evidence in toto: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 11.

Where the hostile witness does not refute the prosecution story but is silent with regard to a material part of it, held, the Court can rely on his testimony, to the extent, it is consistent with the prosecution's case: (1984) 1 Crimes 629 (All.).

In dealing with the evidence of a hostile witness, the Court has to be cautious; it must read his evidence as a whole, weigh it carefully and decide which part of it is true and worthy of credence and which is not; the Court should take into account whether or not there are contradictions in it on material points and, if they are, whether or not they have been satisfactorily explained away by the witness and whether or not any part of his or her evidence is true and carries conviction to a prudent mind. If on such assessment the Court finds any part of such evidence is true and trust-worthy, the Court may act upon it. And the testimony of a hostile witness has to be tested, weighed and considered in the same manner as the evidence of any other witness. Thus, where the prosecutrix, cross-examined with the Court's permission, disclosed all the facts within her knowledge without least hesitation and gave convincing explanation for her contradictory statement made in her examination-in-chief, held, her evidence could not be brushed aside in toto merely because the trial Court had allowed her to be cross-examined as a hostile witness. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 202, Foll.]: 1977 Raj.L.W. 146.

A hostile witness may not be rejected outright but the Court has at least to be aware that prima facie a witness who makes different statements at different times has no regard for truth. The Court should, therefore, be slow to act on the testimony of such a witness and, normally, it should look for corroboration to his evidence. Thus, where the High Court utilised a serious contradiction in the evidence of the hostile witness for corroborating the evidence of other witnesses, held, approach of High Court was wrong. [1971 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 124, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 980: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 31: 1976 Cr.L.J. 708.

The fact that the Court gave permission to the prosecutor to cross-examine his own witness, thus characterising him as, what is described as a hostile witness, does not completely efface his evidence. The evidence remains admissible in the trial and there is no legal bar to base a conviction upon his testimony if corroborated by other reliable evidence. Thus, where evidence of a witness who was declared hostile by the prosecution was amply corroborated by other evidence to inspire confidence in his testimony, held, conviction could be based on his testimony: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 202: 1976 Cr.L.J. 203: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 389: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 78: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 921. But see A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1400: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1009: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 562; 1975 Mah.L.J. 779; A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139: 27 Cr.L.J. 266: I.L.R. 53 Cal. 372; A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 463.

The mere fact that the statement of a witness with regard to the occurrence is favourable to the accused is no ground to reject his evidence, especially when his evidence has also disclosed that he was not wholly in favour of the accused: 1974 Cr.L.J. 724 (D.B.).

Witness declared hostile by prosecution and cross-examined—Statement in cross-examination cannot be taken as substantive evidence—At best it may be utilised for discrediting the testimony of the witness: 1962 Raj.L.W. 55: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 1091.

It is well settled that declaring a witness hostile has not effect of washing away his entire evidence and acceptable portions can be acted upon. Thus, where both witnesses, who were declared hostile by the prosecution, stated that it was dark at the time of incident and they could not identify any of the assailants and F.I.R. lodged by them did not give out name of any of the accused, held, this omission in the information about the names of any of the accused would support the version of these two witnesses that due to darkness they could not identify any of the assailants: 1990 M.P.L.J. 770: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2507 (D.B.). See also 1978 All.Cr.R. 11: 1978 Cr.L.J. 196.

Where a witness who was declared hostile by the prosecution deposed about the place of occurrence of incident and the presence of prosecution witnesses at the time of occurrence, held, his evidence to that extent could be relied upon. [1978 Cr.L.J. 196; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 202, Rel. on]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3351 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where a witness had turned hostile and had thereby become totally unreliable, held, it was wrong on the part of the Court to pick out any stray sentence spoken by him to make the same basis of any conclusion. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 294, Rel. on]: 1992 M.P.L.J. 267 (D.B.).

Evidence of a hostile witness can be accepted in support of motive for the attack: 1991 Cr.L.J. 1859 (Ker.).

Evidentiary value of statement before the Police of a witness who has turned hostile, is practically "nil" and his testimony cannot be utilised for any purpose whatever by the prosecution: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1491 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Hostile witness—Previous statements can be used to contradict him by complying with formalities of S. 145: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1023: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 11.

Hostile witness—Contradicted with his earlier statement—No formal order transferring earlier statement made—Accused questioned with reference to the statement of hostile witness before committing Magistrate and invited to say what he wanted in defence—Court was right in using the earlier statement as substantive evidence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 975: A.I.R. 1967 Him. Pra. 1027.

5. Cross-examination upon statement made under sections 162 and 164 of Criminal Procedure Code.—Statement recorded under S. 164, Cr.P.Code—Not a substantive piece of evidence—It can be used only to corroborate or contradict its maker: 1967 Cr.L.J. 62: A.I.R. 1967 Him. Pra. 10. See also A.I.R. 1960 Raj. 101 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 248; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1323.

Minor omissions—Does not entitle use of S. 162 as amended—S. 162 cannot be used unless witness is declared hostile: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 198: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 30. See also 1974 Cr.L.J. 1346 (Del.).

6. Witness tendered but not examined.—Where a witness has been tendered but not examined by the prosecution, the prosecution cannot cross-examine that witness; S. 154 does not authorise such cross-examination: I.L.R. 7 Pat. 55: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 203.

Hostile witness—Witness only tendered before but not examined—Still Court can declare him hostile and allow party to cross-examine him—Power to Court to declare witness hostile is not limited by section to cases where there is any previous statement of the witness and from which he is alleged to have departed: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1527: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 415.

Where the prosecution discards a witness examined by it before the committing Magistrate on the ground that he is not likely to prove himself to be a witness of truth, and tenders him in the Sessions Court for cross-examination by the defence without bringing on record his evidence before the committing Magistrate, the witness is really examined-in-chief by the defence and not cross-examined. But in order that a witness may be dealt with in that way, it is clearly necessary that the leave of the Court contemplated by S. 154, Evidence Act, should be asked for and obtained. Otherwise the evidence of that witness, at least so much of it as is elicited from him by the cross-examination by the prosecution itself, is not properly and legally obtained and to that extent the defence is certainly prejudiced: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1427: A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 621.

The practice of tendering witnesses for cross-examination at the Sessions trial without examination-in-chief on the ground that they had been declared as hostile by the prosecution in the committal proceedings is inconsistent with the provisions of S. 138. Inference of hostility is a matter for the Court to decide and can only be drawn from the answers given by the witness. Where neither the answers of the witnesses given before the committal Court have been transferred under S. 288, Cr.P.Code nor does the prosecution examine them with the permission of the Court under S. 154 there would be nothing before the Sessions Court from which it could draw an inference as to the hostility of the witnesses. As in the circumstances the testimony given by those witnesses before the Magistrate would be inadmissible for the purpose of deciding whether the witnesses were resiling from the truth or not hostility could not be presumed merely on the word of the prosecution. Another result that follows from such a course, would be that the examination by the defence, of such a tendered witness, is really examination-in-chief, and if the prosecution wanted to show that he was not telling the truth, they should cross-examine him with the permission of the Sessions Court under S. 154. If they do not do that their credibility will have to be judged within the four corners of the evidence given by them before the Sessions Court. Any other view would lead to the anomalous position, that the prosecution would be entitled to get the benefit of the presumed hostility before the committing Court in the Sessions Court also, without giving the later Court material on which to decide, whether the witnesses are really hostile or not: 1959 Cr.L.J. 237: A.I.R. 1959 Tripura 11.

A prosecution witness who was declared hostile and permitted to be cross-examined by the prosecution in the committing Court, cannot be treated at once as a hostile witness and cross-examined by the prosecution in the Sessions Court without being examined-in-chief: (1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 763: A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 533.

A party can cross-examine even a witness tendered by it: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1527: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 415.

Where in a murder case the public prosecutor examined a prosecution witness in the trial Court in spite of his being treated as hostile in the committing Court, the fact that no question was addressed to the witness in the trial Court even as a preliminary to seeking to treat him as hostile and he was not confronted with any contradictions between his testimony in the committal Court and in the trial Court would indicate that the witness was not put forward by the prosecution in the trial Court as an unfavourable witness and, therefore, he cannot be treated as a hostile witness especially when the statement of the witness before the committing Court had not been transferred to the record under S. 288: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1349 (Gau.) (D.B.).

7. Interference by appellate Court with discretion exercised by trial Court under section 154.—The discretion given under S. 154 is a discretion vested in the trial Court and where this discretion was exercised after perusal of the statement given under S. 161, Cr.P.Code to the Police, the appellate Court cannot lightly interfere with such discretion exercised by the trial Court and that too without perusing the statement given by the witness under S. 161, Cr.P.Code. Even if the appellate Court holds that permission to cross-examine the witness should have been given by the trial Court, the proper thing for the appellate Court to do would be to send back the case to the trial Court to take the evidence of the said witness further after granting the prosecution permission to cross-examine the witness. Without doing so, the appellate Court cannot straightway proceed to reject the entire evidence of the said witness, as if he was a hostile witness and had been won over by the defence: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 213: A.I.R. 1964 Tripura 45.

Exercise of discretion by trial Courts—Discretion not judicially exercised—Appellate Court will interfere in appeal: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 653 (Mys.).

Right to treat one's own witness hostile not a substantive statutory right. It is a procedural right conferred on Court recording evidence which may in its discretion come to the conclusion that a witness is hostile or not having regard to circumstances and demeanour of witnesses. Discretion once exercised may not be interfered with by superior Court either exercising appellate or other extraordinary jurisdiction: (1988) 1 Karn.L.J. 162.

8. Illustrative cases.—Where in a suit for a declaration by four plaintiffs that the

155. Impeaching credit of witness.—The credit of a witness may be impeached in the following ways by the adverse party, or, with the consent of the Court, by the party who calls him:—

(1) by the evidence of persons who testify that they, from their knowledge of the witness, believe him to be unworthy of credit;

(2) by proof that the witness has been bribed, or has [1][accepted] the offer of a bribe, or has received any other corrupt inducement to give his evidence;

(3) by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted;

(4) when a man is prosecuted for rape or an attempt to ravish, it may be shown that the prosecutrix was of generally immoral character.

plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 were, respectively, the heads of 3 Schools and they could not be disturbed by the defendant No. 1, the Baptist Union, a witness produced on behalf of the plaintiff Nos. 1, 3 and 4 deposed in his examination-in-chief that the Schools were owned by the defendant No. 1 which was clearly against the pleading and relief, held, the plaintiff No. 2 was not alone entitled either to seek amendment of the plaint or to cross-examine the witness under S. 154 which was not attracted under the circumstances; he could only take steps to seek transposition of the dissenting plaintiffs as defendants: (1993-2) 41 B.L.J.R. 1103.

Where evidence of eye-witness was of doubtful nature as to participation of all the accused and hostile witness did not speak anything about the occurrence and there was no other direct evidence, held, the evidence of hostile witness could not be of any use: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1193: 1993 Cr.L.J. 187.

Two complaints one by A and the other by M in respect of same incident—Divergent versions—Complaints investigated simultaneously—Statement of A recorded as first information in one case and statement of M as first information in the other—B questioned during investigation—Prosecution against B and M—Held, no portion of B's statement could be used to contradict statement of M in his complaint, either under S. 157 or S. 145—B not being examined as a witness in the case, his previous statement could not be used either to contradict his evidence or corroborate it even if it is to be held that it is a statement coming under S. 154, Cr.P.Code: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1479: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1281.

Amalgamation of complaints—Second complaint before same Magistrate pertaining to same facts and offences, during pendency of first complaint—Magistrate acts within jurisdiction in amalgamating both complaint cases and directing that evidence of both complainants should be recorded during trial—But Magistrate acts improperly in ordering that complainants should have right to cross-examine and contradict witnesses examined by other complainant, though he has discretion to put any question to any witness: 1964 All.L.J. 335: A.I.R. 1965 All. 131.

Section 155—Synopsis.

Law is no respecter of men though it is a living instrument to achieve individual and social good and morality. Status however high, therefore, cannot be used or held as a shield to cover the core of the cause or reality

Explanation.—A witness declaring another witness to be unworthy of credit may not, upon his examination-in-chief, give reasons for his belief, but he may be asked his reasons in cross-examination, and the answers which he gives cannot be contradicted, though, if they are false, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence.

of a truth. In the high temples of justice all the basic bones must be felt bare and attempt to reach them should not in any manner be stifled. S. 146(3) permits a cross-examiner to put questions which will not only shake the credit of a witness, but which will also expose his ethical and moral behaviour which may ultimately weigh with the Court while evaluating or appreciating evidence. By its very nature questions on mala fides as opposed to bona fides, immorality as opposed to good morality, dishonesty as against honesty, falsehood as against truthfulness, can all conceivably be put, provided there is necessity and foundation for the same. S. 155 expressly permits by indication the mode and manner to bring in evidence upon the credit of a witness so as to impeach such testimony: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1297: 1974 Mah.L.J. 416.

2. Section 145 viz-a-viz section 155.—S. 145 in express terms applies to previous statements in writing or reduced to writing only and does not apply to statements not in writing or not reduced to writing. English law places statements in writing and oral statements at par when such statements are used for the purpose of contradicting a witness in cross-examination. The position of the law as laid down by the Indian Evidence Act is different from the position in English law on this point and the principles of English law cannot be followed when they are inconsistent with the express text of the law as contained in the Indian Evidence Act. By virtue of S. 155 proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of the evidence given by a witness can be given and it is not required by S. 155 that the attention of the witness must be drawn to such previous statement in course of his examination. It is obvious, therefore, that S. 145 does not control the provision of S. 155 which is much wider and the evidence of a witness, A cannot be regarded as inadmissible for the reason that the attention of witness B was not drawn to the statement attributed to him by the witness A: A.I.R. 1956 Raj. 196: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1432.

S. 145 appears to be included in S. 155. S. 145 enables a witness to be cross-examined and contradicted with reference to previous statements made by him. This is one method of impeaching the credit of a witness. S. 155 deals generally with the impeaching of the credit of a witness and enumerates different methods of contradicting a witness. One of the methods mentioned in S. 155 of impeaching the credit of a witness is by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted and in this sense the whole of the ground covered by S. 145 is included in S. 155: (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 269: A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 215: I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 397.

3. Clause (1).—Ss. 145, 148 and 155 indicate that the credit of a witness can be said to have been shaken only if it can be shown that he is not a man of veracity, and not that he is of bad moral character. A black-marketeer is not necessarily untruthful nor a non-black-marketeer necessarily a man of veracity. There is, therefore, no reason for rejecting the evidence of a witness on the ground alone that he is a black-marketeer: 1959 Cr.L.J. 268: A.I.R. 1959 All. 149.

If a witness goes into the box and makes a statement that he believes that another witness is unworthy of credit there would be two safeguards: (1) the statement would be on oath and (2) it could be tested by cross-examination. To draw an inference against the credibility of a witness without anybody going into the witness-box in the manner contemplated by S. 155(1) of the Evidence Act would not be legitimate. It would be a proposition which in some conceivable cases might be dangerous to accused persons themselves. Opinion evidence is, as a general rule, not admissible and S. 155(1) is exception to that rule: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 405: 1970 Mah.L.J. 634: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438.

Witness not believed in judgment in previous case does not necessarily impeach his credit. See 162 I.C. 300: A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 106.

Where the prosecution alleged that the lady complainant accompanied by a male was proceeding in a car and was robbed of her ornaments and currency notes at 9.30 p.m. and in her examination-in-chief she had given out their movements right from the evening till the time of occurrence and also disclosed the purpose for moving towards the particular spot, and in her cross-examination the defence sought to ask questions about her intimate relations with the other occupant of the car, held, it was the Court's duty to consider whether the question was relevant from point of view of the defence; it could not be said that the questions which may raise doubt about the veracity of the witness were completely irrelevant; unless there was a clear indication that it was a reckless and scandalous attempt intended to insult or annoy, the topic raised by the question could not have been ruled out; her involvement with her companion also a witness could not be termed as out of the purview of S. 146. The Court should have taken into account, after taking the defence Counsel into confidence, the line of defence and then decide whether such questions should or should not be allowed and whether they really fell within the exceptions carved out by the statute. [A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 73; A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 94; A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 316; I.L.R. 47 All. 799 and Wigmore on Evidence 3rd Ed, p. 922, Rel. on]: 1974 Mah.L.J. 416: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1297.

4. Clause (2).—Testimony of trap witnesses and persons of shady character—Conviction can be based on such testimony—Testimony should not be rejected as tainted without scrutiny: 1967 Cr.L.J. 744: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 26.

5. Clause (3).—The language of S. 155(3) is prima facie wide enough to permit such questions as asking the Investigating Officers if certain witnesses made certain statements. But where the evidence has been reduced into writing, it is undesirable to permit the putting of such questions. In such a case the written record made by the Police Officer is the only proper and right thing to prove to discredit the witnesses. If the Police diary is used the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act, and S. 162, Cr.P.Code will have to be borne in mind. A copy of the statement made before the Police cannot be used as against the witness till he has been confronted with it: 26 All.L.J. 139: A.I.R. 1928 All. 280.

S. 155 only lays down that the credit of a witness may be impeached inter alia by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted; but it does not lay down the manner in which the former statement is to be proved. The mode of proof of such a statement in writing, when it is sought to be tendered in evidence for contradicting a witness, is provided in S. 145. In other words, S. 155 is controlled by S. 145 and is not independent of it: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 491.

S. 155(3) does not render nugatory the clear and explicit provisions of S. 145 and in fact takes for granted the existence and binding effect of those provisions: (1930) 32 Punj.L.R. 259: A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 38. See also 147 I.C. 591: A.I.R. 1934 All. 226; A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 289.

The previous statement of a witness, put in under S. 155(3) for the purpose of contradicting him, cannot be used as substantive evidence: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 206: A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 342. But see infra. S. 145 must be taken as it is uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law or the English law upon which it may be founded. It makes no mention of oral statement. It, therefore, cannot control S. 155. Hence, questions with reference to statement made by one witness to another are legally admissible, though the Court could refuse to rely on them on the ground that they had not been put to the witness concerned for explanation: A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 13: I.L.R. (1939) Nag. 109.

The proposition that the expression "which is liable to be contradicted" in S. 155(3) should mean "which is relevant to the issue" is too broad. [I.L.R. 17 Cal. 344; A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 54, Expl. and Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1162: 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 604: (1971) 7 S.C.R. 399.

Statements of prosecution witnesses previously recorded—Use for impeachment, right to accused: 1969 Cr.L.J. 990: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 176.

Former statement—Use of for impeaching credit of its maker: 1968 Cr.L.J. 201: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 20.

Witness's attention should be drawn to his previous statement before using it: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 95.

In absence of any inherent vice, no presumption adverse to a witness should be drawn on any matter unless it is put to him and he is given an opportunity to explain it: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38.

What is meant by there being no estoppel against a statute is that a person is not estopped by a previous statement as to the existence of a statutory provisions from contending that the converse is the statutory provision. The only rule to which estoppels are subject is that they cannot override the law of the land. The question of clash between the law of the land and an estoppel arises only when the statement on which the estoppel is founded is about the state of the law of the land, i.e., is a statement of law. A mixed statement of fact and law cannot be said to be contrary to the law because in a certain state of facts it may be correct according to the law of the land. If a judgment debtor states that his house is liable to be attached and sold, it is not necessarily against S. 60(1)(c) because if he is not an agriculturist and does not occupy it as such it is not exempt from attachment and sale: I.L.R. (1963) 2 All. 976: 1963 All.L.J. 832.

S. 162, Cr.P.Code, allows the credit of a witness to be impeached by a statement which he is alleged to have made to the Police in the course of an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code though no person is bound to state the truth to the Police in the course of the above investigation: 41 I.C. 668: 18 Cr.L.J. 844. See also 14 Pat.L.T. 543: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 589.

When a witness is confronted with a statement made to the Police during investigation under S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, such contradiction even by the prosecution becoming possible after the amendment of that section, there may be more than one possibility. The first possibility is that the witness may deny that he made the previous statement; the second possibility is that he admits that he made them; and the third possibility is that he may not only admit the previous statement but he may also state that what he stated before the Police was the truth. In the case of the first two possibilities, all that emerges by reason of the contradiction of the witness would be that his credit is shaken and impeached since he is demonstrated to be a person who stated something before the Police and stated something else before the Court. That being so, it would be impossible for the prosecution to make any further use of that part of the evidence given by the prosecution witness who is cross-examined. That is the clear position emerging from the provision of S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which incorporates a very clear embargo upon the use of any statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation for any purpose save the purpose expressly permitted. The purpose for which its use is permitted is what is explained in the proviso to sub-S. (1) of S. 162 which states that when such statement or record has been reduced to writing and is duly proved it may be used by the accused and by the prosecution with permission to contradict the witness in the manner provided by S. 145 of the Evidence Act. There is of course provision for similar use in re-examination: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1155: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 248.

Where the witnesses, who were treated as hostile by the prosecution were confronted with their earlier statements to the Police and their evidence was rejected as it was contradicted by their earlier statements, held, such use of the statements is permissible under S. 155 of the Evidence Act and the proviso to S. 162(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure read with S. 145, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 400.

Statements of witnesses made to the Police should not be used to corroborate them except in very special circumstances. The evidence of a witness hostile to the Crown may be impeached by reference to the Police diary: 45 I.C. 272: 5 P.L.J. 568.

Ss. 145, 146 and 155(3) are complementary to each other; read together, a cross-examiner cannot be restricted from putting questions except to the extent indicated in Ss. 148 to 152. Where trial Court permitted the defence Counsel to use the statement recorded by the Police in connection with another case for cross-examining a prosecution witness, held, he was perfectly right in doing so as S. 162 of Cr.P.Code was never intended to curb the right of the accused to contradict a witness with his previous statement: 1994 Cr.L.J. 464 (Ker.).

The statement to the Police is not evidence like a statement made on oath before a competent authority: 41 I.C. 668: 18 Cr.L.J. 844. A confession by an accomplice to an Excise Officer is inadmissible as a piece of substantive evidence as against the other accused, even if the later had been tried along with the maker and, a fortiori, it is inadmissible as a piece of substantive evidence in a separate proceeding against the other accused. But where the maker is examined as a witness on behalf of the other accused, it is admissible for the purpose of impeaching his credit in respect of the later statement made by him in his evidence in Court under the provisions of S. 145: I.L.R. 61 Cal. 967: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 1005: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 616.

Two independent reports to Police—Second report not in course of investigation—Admissibility in evidence: A.I.R. 1957 All. 755: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1200.

First information report admissible in defence to impeach informant's veracity: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 17: 44 Cal.L.J. 253; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 833: 165 I.C. 146.

First information report—Use of to impeach credit of informant: 1957 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 178.

Statements under S. 164, Cr.P.Code cannot be substituted as evidence of witness—They can be used only either to impeach credit or corroborate: 1957 Cr.L.J. 117 (All.).

Where, in the Sessions Court, witnesses retracted the statements made before the committing Magistrate, held, under S. 155, the statements made to the Police and to the committing Magistrate were relevant to contradict their evidence before the Sessions Court given in place of their retracted statements: I.L.R. 46 Bom. 97: (1921) 23 Bom.L.R. 820: A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 108.

It cannot be said that as the former statement of witness was recorded by the order of the Court which had no jurisdiction, it cannot be used even for the purpose of contradiction or corroboration or shaking his credit. The statement of a person does not cease to be his statement merely because it was written in aforementioned circumstances. Such a statement can be used for the purpose of Ss. 145, 155 and 157 of the Act: A.I.R. 1987 P.&H. 126.

The statement made by any person before the Commission of Enquiry under S. 6 of the Commissions of Enquiry Act, 1952 is wholly inadmissible in evidence in any future proceedings, civil or criminal; it cannot also be used for the purposes of cross-examination to contradict the witness or to impeach his credit: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1883: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1.

A defendant who is endeavouring to shake the credit of a witness by proof of former inconsistent statements, can depose that while he was engaged in conversation with the witness, a tape-recorder was in operation or can produce the said tape-recorder in support of the assertion that a certain statement was made in his presence: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 173: (1956) 58 Punj.L.R. 441: I.L.R. (1956) Punj. 1351.

Tape-recordings—Not inadmissible merely on ground of possibility of their being tampered with: (1964) 4 S.C.R. 733: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 72.

Where the alleged former statement is allegedly recorded on a tape-recorder, it falls within S. 155(3), Evidence Act. Even in respect of statements sought to be brought within S. 155(3), the witness's attention must, before the alleged former statement could be proved, be called to such parts of the statement as are sought to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. If at any time, the Court feels the necessity for a transcription or translation of any part of the tape-recording considered relevant and admissible, it will be open to the Court to get such transcription or translation done: (1976) 1 Karn.L.J. (Jr.) 45 (S.N.) 21.

156. Questions tending to corroborate evidence of relevant fact, admissible.—When a witness whom it is intended to corroborate gives evidence of any relevant fact, he may be questioned as to any other circumstances which he observed at or near to the time or place at which such relevant fact occurred, if the Court is of opinion that such circumstances, if proved, would corroborate the testimony of the witness as to the relevant fact which he testifies.

Illustration

A, an accomplice, gives an account of a robbery in which he took part. He describes various incidents unconnected with the robbery which occurred on his way to and from the place where it was committed.

Independent evidence of these facts may be given in order to corroborate his evidence as to the robbery itself.

A previous statement made and tape-recorded can be used not only to corroborate the evidence given by the witness in Court but also to contradict the evidence given before the Court as well as to test the veracity of the witness and also to impeach his impartiality. Apart from being used for corroboration, the evidence is admissible in respect of other three last mentioned matters under S. 146(1), S. 153, Exception 2 and S. 155: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1162: 1970 U.J. (S.C.) 604: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 399.

Identification in jail—Value of, as evidence.—Evidence of identification in the jail cannot be treated as substantive evidence in the trial as it is not on oath, and is made in extra-judicial proceedings: 19 All.L.J. 947: A.I.R. 1921 All. 215. When a person, who makes such an identification, states in Court that he can identify no one, the evidence of identification is not admissible: A.I.R. 1921 All. 215.

6. Clause (4).—In prosecution for rape, general immoral character of prosecutrix may be shown. S. 155(4) refers to such evidence as that her general reputation was that of a prostitute or that she had the general reputation of going about and committing immoral acts with a number of men: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 523 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 320 (D.B.).

Where in a rape case wherein the body of the victim was found floating in a well after 18 hours, the doctor, in his chief-examination, had stated that laceration on vagina was due to intercourse, held, the veracity of that statement is not in any way affected by the admission in his cross-examination that on account of laceration only on the labia mizora, it cannot be said that there was intercourse as the deceased was a grown-up married lady and there could not have been laceration on the vagina in the absence of violent intercourse: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2236 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Section 156—Notes.

One untruthful witness cannot corroborate another untruthful witness: 1953 Cr.L.J. 990: A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 21. Corroboration by circumstances. See A.I.R. 1957 Ori. 78: 1957 Cr.L.J. 469.

Corroboration in order to be of any value, must be on material particulars and the facts relied on for corroboration must be established by reliable and independent evidence. These facts must be such as to lend assurance to the crucial issue which is in question: 1961 M.P.L.J. 1361: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 127. See also 1978 Jab.L.J. (Note) 77.

Independent evidence might be admissible under S. 156 to corroborate the evidence of an accomplice about certain incidents unconnected with a robbery in which he took part. But this will not be "material particulars" under S. 114, Illus. (b): I.L.R. 35 Mad. 247: 13 Cr.L.J. 305 (S.B.).

157. Former statements of witness may be proved to corroborate later testimony as to same fact.—In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, may be proved.

disputed land and in proof, producing rent receipts. Though receipts were not properly proved they were admissible to corroborate her statement that they were regularly brought home to her by her husband who said that they were rent receipts: 1960 All.W.R. (H.C.) 607: A.I.R. 1961 All. 38.

Witness not supporting prosecution case at the trial—His earlier statement to the Police constable in favour of prosecution cannot be used for corroboration: 1970 M.P.L.J. 976.

Even where the evidence of the complainant in a corruption case is quite credible, no conviction can be based on such evidence unless it is corroborated by independent material: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2878 (Bom.).

The investigating agency in order to be fair to the public servant concerned should get a part of that solution chemically examined with a view to obtain unimpeachable evidence before the Court as regards the contents of the solution which was used for the purpose of the experiment. After all, an investigating agency is expected to be as fair to the alleged culprit as to the prosecution when the trial commences before the Court.

It is necessary for the investigating agency to preserve the solution used for the experiment as regards detection of Phenolphthalein powder on the person of the accused or on his clothes or on anything that he has touched. Court further lays down that in case of failure or omission of the investigating agency to preserve such solution, it is open to the Court to raise an inference adverse to the prosecution at the trial, depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case, and to determine upon the impact of that inference on the other evidence before it: (1979) 20 Guj.L.R. 535.

Evidence as to official acts done by an official witness need not be corroborated as corroboration is only a rule of prudence and not law: I.L.R. (1987) Karn. 3538.

Straight forward and trust worthy evidence of relations of deceased needs no corroboration for sustaining conviction. Such evidence cannot be discarded on the sole ground of interested witness in the prosecution case: I.L.R. (1992) 3 Ker. 142 (D.B.); 1982 M.P.W.N. 92 [Corroboration by highly interested witnesses living far away from place of incident is no corroboration at all]; 1971 S.C.D. 374 [Independent corroboration for any evidence may be sought for if the testimony is that of an interested witness.]

1. Scope and applicability.—See (1910) 12 Bom.L.R. 663; I.L.R. 25 Mad. 183 (210); 7 All.L.J. 468: I.L.R. 53 Bom. 699 (P.C.); I.L.R. 34 Cal. 129; 2 Cal.W.N. 704; (1902) 4 Bom.L.R. 434; I.L.R. (1953) Cut. 531: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 23.

The principle of the section is that consistency is a ground for belief in a witness's veracity: 13 Cr.L.J. 305 (S.B.). The section is an exception to the rule that a person cannot corroborate himself: (1968) 1 S.C.W.R. 23.

There are only two things which are essential for S. 157 to apply. The first is that a witness should have given testimony with respect to some fact. The second is that he should have made a statement earlier with respect to the same fact at or about the time when the fact took place or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact. If the witness to be corroborated also says in his testimony that he had made the former statement to someone that would add to the weight of the evidence of the person who gives evidence in corroboration, just as, if the witness to be corroborated says in this evidence that he had made no former statement to anybody, that may make the statement of any witness appearing as a corroborating witness as to the former statement of little value. But in order to make the former statement admissible under S. 157 it is not necessary that the witness to be corroborated must also besides making the former statement at or about the time the fact took place, say in Court in his testimony that he had made the former statement: (1962) 3 S.C.R. 590: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 424; 1973 Cr.L.J. 481; 1991 Cr.L.J. 3350 (Del.) (D.B.). However, the aforesaid proposition would not apply when the witness had not at all given a statement in Court which is sought to be corroborated. [(1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 473 (S.C.), Expl.]: 1985 Cr.L.J. 569.

S. 162(1), Cr.P.Code by enacting that no statement made to the Police Officer or any record thereof shall be used "for any purpose at any enquiry or trial" repeals by implication S. 157 so far as it concerns statements made to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation: 14 Pat.L.T. 543: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 589.

The general provisions of the Evidence Act contained in S. 157 are controlled by the special provisions of S. 162, Cr.P.Code which is a special enactment as against the wider and more general enactment in the Evidence Act. It is, therefore, of first importance to determine whether an information is really first information and therefore, can be used under S. 157, Evidence Act, or it is hit by the provisions of S. 162, Cr.P.Code. If it is hit by S. 162, Cr.P.Code, it cannot be used except for the limited purpose mentioned therein: 1958 Cr.L.J. 986: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 368; 50 I.C. 834: 10 Mad.L.W. 239.

A statement admissible under S. 157 can be proved by a person to whom it was made. Evidence of a person who hears a statement being made is as direct proof of the same as the evidence of a person who sees a deed is proof of the deed being done: 58 I.C. 344: 21 Cr.L.J. 760.

S. 157 provides an exception to the general rule excluding hearsay evidence and in order to bring a statement within the exception, the duty is cast on the prosecution to establish by clear and unequivocal evidence the proximity of the time between the taking place of the fact and the making of the statement: 110 I.C. 676: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 647; 1984 Cr.L.R. 650: 1984 W.L.N. (U.C.) 401 (Raj.); 1984 Cr.L.R. 651: 1984 W.L.N. (U.C.) 400 (Raj.).

Hearsay evidence—Admissibility under the section: 1968 Cr.L.J. 54: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 11.

S. 157 cannot be invoked to let in statements made by somebody else as evidence for the purpose of corroboration of a witness examined in the case: 110 I.C. 521: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 893. But see I.L.R. 53 Bom. 699: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 1006 (P.C.).

Where a person has been examined as witness, a statement said to have been made by him to another is not admissible when no question is put to the witness as to whether the particular statement had been made to such other person: A.I.R. 1934 Sind 100.

Two circumstances, which are alternative, are conditions precedent to the proof of earlier statements under S. 157. The first is that the statement must have been made at or about the time when a fact took place. Where the fact is the authority to adopt said to have been given by the husband in 1901 and the statements were made on 18th December, 1928, 27 years after the event, they cannot be said to have been made at or about the time when the fact took place. Further, where the statements were made in an enquiry by the Court of Wards for purposes of according consent to the adoption, the statement is not made before the authority legally competent to enquire into the fact of giving of authority. S. 157, therefore, cannot make the statements provable: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1549.

The facts stated in the affidavits of persons who are alive cannot be proved without examining their deponents in the Court and giving an opportunity to the other side to cross-examine them: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 639 (P.&H.).

Where statement of first informant to prosecution witness and in the F.I.R. was sought to be used as corroborative evidence under S. 157 against the accused, held, as first informant was dead, she could not be examined as a witness in the trial and, therefore, S. 157 was inapplicable to the facts of the case: 1991 Cr.L.J. 3350 (Pat.) (D.B.).

In case complainant dies before trial starts, no question of corroboration of his testimony under S. 157 arises: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 129 (Cal.).

Witness not supporting prosecution case at the trial—His earlier statement to the Police constable in favour of prosecution cannot be used for corroboration: 1970 M.P.L.J. 976.

Where a lady teacher had narrated the incident of the Head Master's attempt to outrage her modesty to her three colleagues on the very next day, held, even though it was not res gestae and, hence, inadmissible under S. 6, but when corroborated by the three witnesses was clearly admissible under S. 157: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1268.

2. "Statement".—The word "statement" has been used in a number of sections of the Act, viz., Ss. 17 to 21, 32, 39, 145 in its primary meaning of "something" that is stated and that meaning should be given to it under S. 157 also unless there is something that cuts down that meaning for the purpose of that section. Words are generally used in the same sense throughout in a statute unless there is something repugnant in the context. On a consideration, or primary meaning of the word "statement" and the various sections of the Act, the conclusion is clear that a "statement" under S. 157 means only "something that is stated" and the element of communication to another person is not necessary before "something that is stated" becomes a statement under that section. Hence, the notes of attendance prepared by a prosecution witness recording the conversation that took place between him and other prosecution witnesses in connection with the defalcation made by the accused would be statement within the meaning of S. 157 and would be admissible to corroborate his evidence under S. 157: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 356.

Prior whole statement of a witness cannot be admitted—Even admissible parts cannot be admitted before witness is examined: 22 Sind L.R. 309: A.I.R. 1927 Sind 209. See also 1933 Mad.W.N. 1148.

It cannot be said that because a statement happens to be "subsequent" one, following a similar statement made by one accused, it becomes ipso facto inadmissible. If the time lag between the first and the subsequent statement is much, and if after taking into account the facts and the circumstances of the case, the Court is of the opinion that subsequent statement is likely to have been wrongly ascribed to the concerned accused, the Court may reject the subsequent statement either as inadmissible or as unacceptable. But simply because a statement happens to be a "subsequent" statement it does not become inadmissible. In this sense a joint statement made by the accused is not per se inadmissible: (1975) 16 Guj.L.R. 782.

3. Former statement.—The words "former statement" in S. 157 mean a previous statement of the witness, who is to be corroborated, made on another occasion, (i.e.), an occasion other than that at which the subsequent statement requiring corroboration is made: 39 Cr.L.J. 395: A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 125. See also A.I.R. 1944 Sind 38.

The previous statement of a witness is admissible under S. 157. In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, and former statement made by such witness, relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, may be proved under S. 157: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 751.

A witness's earlier statement about the time and place of the incident is quite relevant as also a very important piece of evidence; it is admissible as res gestae under S. 6 as also under S. 157: (1986) 2 Kam.L.J. 417 (D.B.).

In order to be admissible, it is not necessary that the witness sought to be corroborated must also say in the Court in his testimony that he had made the statement. Thus, where the victim's brother to whom the victim had narrated the incident after the occurrence gave evidence in the Court, held, it could be treated as sufficient corroboration: 1972 W.L.N. 309 (Raj.).

Former statement—Corroboration—Fact that witness made a statement to corroborating witness need not be mentioned in his evidence: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 980: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 20.

Former statements of a witness—Can be used only to corroborate or contradict statements made by him in Court—Statement of witness in Court not believed—His former statements cannot be used as independent evidence in support of other evidence: (1964) 1 S.C.R. 688: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 900.

4. "At or about the time".—The evidence of witnesses who heard the occurrence several hours after the occurrence, is not relevant. To be evidence of corroborative value it must be at or about the time of the occurrence—Which means that the evidence should be by persons who had heard the occurrence before there was sufficient time for concoction. That is the criterion: (1949-50) 54 Cal.W.N. 221: A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 327. See also (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 711 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 146.

Philosophy of S. 157 is that when mind of the witness is so connected with events as to make it probable, any statement made by him then would be true and accurate. The words "at or about the time" must mean that the statement must be made at once or at least shortly after the event. The statement loses its value if the interval between the event and the statement is such as to afford opportunity for reflection. But it must be borne in mind that a statement referred to in S. 157 cannot become substantive evidence unless the statement falls within the purview of one of the provisions in the second Chapter of the Evidence Act. Otherwise, the statement has only the limited utility of corroborating the witness concerned. Where four witnesses deposed that they rushed to the scene on hearing the sound of explosion and heard the sole eye-witness saying that the appellant and others threw bomb at her brother, held, said statement though not admissible under S. 6 could be admitted under S. 157 and further such statement, if reliable, would corroborate the testimony of its maker: 1992 Cr.L.J. 575: (1991) 1 Ker.L.J. 746 (D.B.).

Where the question is whether delay in making a statement fulfils the "at or about" condition of S. 157 there can be no hard and fast rule. The main test is whether the statement was made as early as can reasonably be expected in the circumstances of the case and before there was opportunity for tutoring or concoction. Held, applying the test to the facts of the case, the statement alleged to have been made was made as early as could reasonably be expected in the circumstances of the case and before there was opportunity for tutoring or concoction: (1970) 72 Bom. L.R. 405: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438.

The expression "at or about the time" means that the statement must be made at once or at least shortly after when a reasonable opportunity for making it presents itself. What is a "reasonable time" is a question of fact in each case: A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 358; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 54.

In order to prove a statement what is required to be proved under S. 157 of the Evidence Act, is that it was made "at or about the time" when the fact took place and it must have been made before an authority legally competent to investigate into the fact. There cannot be a hard and fast rule in regard to delay caused in making a statement so as to stand the test in the expression at or about condition laid down in S. 157. The main test is whether the statement was made as early as could reasonably be expected in the circumstances of the case and before there was any opportunity for tutoring or concoction.

Where the Honorary Magistrate took the statement of the injured person immediately after he regained consciousness in the hospital which fact showed that the statement was recorded soon after the incidence happened and at the available opportunity when the witness could make a statement, held, as there was no opportunity to tutor him nor was there any opportunity for anyone to concoct anything, the said statement therefore, was provable under S. 157: (1976) 17 Guj.L.R. 574 (D.B.).

If a Judge of fact is convinced that the interval, howsoever slight, between a declaration and the fact, is one that probablised fabrication, the declaration ceases to be part of res gestae. On the contrary, the interval, not short, but is such as permits deduction of an inference that declarant was still under excitement of the fact, the declaration would be part of res gestae. Thus, where in a case of sexual offence against a young child, the prosecutrix-victim had narrated the gist of the incident soon after the occurrence to her mother and another villager, on being asked by them about it and at a time when she was still under the impulse of sexual assault on her, held, it could not be inferred that prosecutrix had been tutored or that she was devising something to her own advantage between the time of outrageous assault on her and the time when she made her statement to her mother and to the said villager. She was weeping and wearing blood-stained clothes, she came to home straight from the place of incident and had not met anyone else on way and therefore, it could not be said that she would not have made the statement to her mother if she were not questioned: 1989 M.P.L.J. 243.

Receiver's report to the District Judge that he was wrongfully confined and obstructed in the discharge of his duties about 24 hours after the occurrence did not come under the provisions of S. 157, as it was not made at or about the time of occurrence but 24 hours after, and as it was not made to a person who had power to investigate the fact, and that therefore, the prosecution could not have used it to corroborate the witnesses, but that it was open to the defence to have used S. 155 to impeach the credit of the receiver: I.L.R. 53 Cal. 879: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 732. See also (1910) 6 Mad.L.T. 17 (F.B.) [Statement made three days after the occurrence is not admissible]; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1549 [Statement made 27 years after the event]; A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 629 [After ten days of occurrence.]

5. "Investigate".—The word "investigate" used in S. 157 is not to be understood in the narrow sense in which the word is used in the Cr.P.Code. It must carry its ordinary dictionary meaning in the sense of ascertainment of facts, sifting of materials, search for relevant data: 33 Cut.L.T. 1193: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 980: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 20; I.L.R. 35 Mad. 397 (F.B.).

The word "investigate" used in S. 157 must be taken as a word of wide import and the restricted meaning given to the word "investigation" in S. 4 (1) of Cr.P.Code, cannot be attached to it. The word "investigation" merely means in this section of a fact-finding process and is not confined to one conducted by the Police for the collection of evidence: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 71 (Cal.).

6. Statement before authority competent to investigate.—The words "legally competent" mean having power under some law, statutory or otherwise: 50 I.C. 834: 10 Mad. L.W. 239. See also I.L.R. 35 Mad. 397 (F.B.); I.L.R. 35 Mad. 247 (S.B.).

The expression in S. 157, Evidence Act is competent to investigate "the fact" and not "the case". The former statement made to any person investigating fact is not enough. The investigation must be by a person legally competent. He must have power to investigate under some law, statutory or otherwise. There being no provision of law or rules under which the sarpanch was legally competent to hold the test identification parade, his report of the identification parade cannot be relied upon under S. 157 as a former statement to corroborate the testimony of the informant: 33 Cut.L.T. 1193: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 980: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 20.

A statement made by the informant to a person not legally competent to investigate the fact within S. 157 being a former statement can be used for contradiction under S. 145 and for impeaching his credit under S. 155 as the restrictions imposed in S. 157 do not find place in S. 145 or 155: 33 Cut.L.T. 1193: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 980: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 20.

S. 157 draws a sharp distinction between statements made to persons competent to investigate facts and statements made to other persons. A report of an offence, not made at or about the time of the occurrence, to a person who is not legally competent to investigate the offence, cannot be used to corroborate the witness under the section: (1949-50) 54 Cal.W.N. 8: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 629.

Statement of the witnesses recorded under S. 164 of the Cr.P.Code can be relied on for corroborating their subsequent evidence before the committal Court. [(1971) 1 S.C.R. 56, Rel. on; 1976 Cr.L.J. 1969 (Mad.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 628: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 84: 1980 Cr.L.J. 439: (1980) 2 S.C.R. 491.

As long as an authority legally competent to deal with the matter investigates, the requirement of S. 157 appears to be satisfied.

The proceedings conducted by the Magistrate for purpose of identification would certainly be proceedings by an authority legally competent to investigate and any statement made by a witness to such authority can be used to corroborate his testimony in Court.

Statements made by a witness to a Magistrate at a test identification parade may be treated as plain previous statements made to such Magistrate functioning in discharge of duties imposed upon him under S. 159 of the Code of Criminal Procedure rather than as having been made under S. 164 of the Code. When a witness, makes a statement before a Magistrate holding a test identification parade, the statement thus made whether treated as having been made under S. 159 or under S. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, will be available for corroboration under S. 157 as well as for contradiction under S. 145 of the Evidence Act: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 71 (Cal.).

Any Magistrate is competent to hold a test identification and can prove the statements made before him under S. 157 even though he is not empowered to deal with the matter under enquiry: (1927-28) 32 Cal.W.N. 616: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 500.

Statements by witnesses recorded by a Police Superintendent during investigation are not admissible in evidence nor oral evidence based on such statements: I.L.R. 45 Mad. 766: A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 20: 43 M.L.J. 222.

A statement made to the Deputy Superintendent of Police in which the informant gave an account of what occurred is admissible in evidence as the Deputy Superintendent of Police is an officer legally competent to investigate the facts of murder and dacoity, within the meaning of S. 157: 45 M.L.J. 279: A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 694.

An officer of the C.I.D. who investigates a matter under the order of his superior is not an officer "legally competent" within the meaning of S. 157 as he does not derive his power from the Police Act or the Cr.P.Code: I.L.R. 35 Mad. 397: 13 Cr.L.J. 352 (F.B.).

The "local area" of an officer of C.I.D. is the Presidency of Madras and he is, therefore, competent to investigate an offence under the Cr.P.Code. An Inspector of the C.I.D. is not one of the officers legally entitled to investigate an offence under Ss. 157 to 167 of the Cr.P. Code, and so his evidence is not admissible under S. 157: I.L.R. 35 Mad. 247 22 M.L.J. 490 (S.B.). But see I.L.R. 54 Cal. 237 A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 17.

A statement about a fact made on previous occasion before a Collector, who had no authority to investigate the fact cannot be used as a corroboration of the statement by the witness in a subsequent proceeding when that fact is in issue: A.I.R. 1960 All. 339.

A kanungo deputed to make inquiry under S. 148 of the Cr.P.Code may give his deposition and his report is admissible to corroborate his sworn testimony: 12 I.C. 88: 12 Cr.L.J. 480 (Cal.).

A headman cannot examine witness on oath in the course of an inquiry in a criminal case. The statement made to headman can only be used in the manner provided for in Ss. 145 and 157, Evidence Act: 34 Cr.L.J. 781: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 119.

7. Evidence regarding identification.— (See also Notes under S. 9). The Court has to appreciate the evidence on the basis of the facts, circumstances, peculiarities and probabilities of a particular case. The absence of test identification parade is not invariably fatal; there may be other sources and circumstances to provide assurance to the Court in acting on the identification made in Court: 1990 Ker.L.N. 23 (D.B.).

Witnesses might have accidentally seen the photograph of the accused in newspapers. In the absence of evidence of captions or descriptions in newspapers, this will not cause rejection of identification of accused by witnesses: 1990 Ker.L.N. 23 (D.B.). See also 1979 Cr.L.R. 614: 1979 W.L.N. 501 (Raj.).

The identification of the accused in Court, without anything else, should not be taken into consideration in order to convict him. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1382, Foll.]: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 342.

8. Statement recorded by Court having no jurisdiction.—It cannot be said that as the former statement of witness was recorded by the order of the Court which had no jurisdiction, it cannot be used even for the purpose of contradiction or corroboration or shaking his credit. The statement of a person does not cease to be his statement merely because it was written in aforementioned circumstances. Such a statement can be used for the purpose of Ss. 145, 155 and 157 of the Act: A.I.R. 1987 P.&H. 126.

9. Police investigation.—Any part of a statement of a witness before the Investigating Officer can be brought in record only by way of contradiction as per S. 162 of the Code. What came to the knowledge of the Investigating Officer while recording the statement of a witness cannot be allowed to be brought on record. A question is first required to be put to the witness about the contradiction, if any, between the evidence of the witness and his statement recorded by the Investigating Officer and if the witness denies then that contradiction has to be proved by the evidence of Police Officer who has to look into the statement of the witness and give reply in that regard. Where what came to the knowledge of the Investigating Officer during the investigation of another case was brought on record in the evidence of the said Officer by Court, held, such general statement could not and should not have been permitted: 1988 Cr.L.J. 981: 1988 Cr.L.R. 252 (Guj.) (D.B.).

If the statements of the witnesses are recorded after an unusually long time when they could have been recorded or when there was sufficient opportunity of those statements to be recorded earlier, then the explanation as to why those statements could not be recorded earlier has to come from the prosecution. In all criminal matters, the early recording of a statement, especially when it relates to the commission of a cognizable offence, is regarded as a rule. If this rule is not followed, the exception has to be explained by the prosecution. No burden is cast upon the defence to ask prosecution witnesses as to why they have not disclosed their information to the concerned persons at the earliest opportunity. When witnesses insist that they had disclosed the information to certain person, it is the bounden duty of the prosecution to examine those persons to whom such information is alleged to have been disclosed because in that case corroboration as contemplated by S. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act would be available. But the value of the early disclosure of knowledge about the commission of a cognizable offence by witnesses who have seen the commission of such offence cannot be overemphasised. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1467; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 135, Rel. on]: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 92 (D.B.). See also (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 1028.

Previous statements contained in a pre-trap or post-trap mahazar in a corruption case do not come within the ambit of "statement made to the Police Officer" as contemplated in S. 162, Cr.P.Code attracting the prohibition against signature. They are only previous statements which could be legitimately used for corroboration under S. 157 of the Evidence Act. The purpose of such statement is to record things which occur in the presence of the witnesses and which are seen and heard by them and is never intended to convey or impart knowledge to the Police Officer. The secondary purpose of the recording is to serve as aid memoir to the witnesses when they enter the box as a contemporary record of what they saw and heard. The purpose is not to aid the Investigating Officer in detecting the offence and offender in order to place him for trial. Such mahazars cannot take the place of substantive evidence, but they merely corroborate the substantive evidence given before Court as a previous statement under S. 157 of the Evidence Act: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1144 (Ker.).

Dying declaration recorded by Police Officer during investigation in presence of Doctor—Held, it cannot be excluded from consideration: 1984 W.L.N. (U.C.) 574: 1985 Raj.L.W. 97.

Two independent reports to Police—Second report not in course of investigation—Admissibility in evidence: A.I.R. 1957 All. 755: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1200.

Panchanama.—Under S. 63(1) of the Bombay City Police Act although the documents containing statements of witnesses made before the Police in the course of investigation cannot be tendered in evidence on behalf of the prosecution, yet the oral statements of witnesses recorded in the panchanama in the presence of the Police at an identification parade in the course of investigation are admissible in evidence to corroborate the statements of those witnesses at the trial, under S. 157: (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 992: A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 189.

Oral evidence of what the witness had said on the occasion of an identification parade held by the Bombay Police in the course of investigation and recorded in a panchanama written on the occasions in the presence of a competent Police Officer is admissible for purpose of corroboration under S. 157: I.L.R. 54 Bom. 528: (1930) 32 Bom.L.R. 327: A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 158. On this, see also 180 I.C. 239: A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 4.

Panchanamas—They are not substantive evidence of facts stated therein—They can be used only for corroborating or contradicting the panch witness or for refreshing his memory. See A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 32.

A panchanama is not evidence of the statements contained therein and it should be proved and exhibited as relevant evidence of those statements: 12 Cr.L.J. 489: 5 Sind L.R. 31. See also 1939 Mad.W.N. 465: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 766.

Panchanama in a corruption case — Admissibility of — When it is hit by S. 162: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 5: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 145.

Statement made in panchanama is not evidence to be read in Court unless it is put to witness who had made it: 1968 Jab.L.J. 737: 1968 M.P.L.J. 745.

Panchanama made during course of investigation—It is hit by S. 162 and not admissible under S. 157, Evidence Act—Even if regarded as note made by panch to refresh memory it cannot be produced in evidence by party calling witness: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 142 (Guj.).

Panchanama—If and when amount to statement falling under S. 162: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 253: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 188.

Though a panchanama is a piece of corroborative evidence, the facts which are stated in it cannot be relied upon when they are not stated in the deposition of panchas before the Court, because they do not corroborate any fact deposed to in Court: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 208 (Goa).

Admissibility of pre-trap and post-trap panchanama in anti-corruption cases—Statements of panchas in panchanama do not fall under S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code—They fall under S. 157 of the Evidence Act unless intended as communication to Police Officer—Mere fact that panchanama is scribbled by Police Officer or signed by the panchas will not make any difference: 1974 Mah.L.J. 789: (1974) 76 Bom.L.R. 627 (F.B.).

Statement made in expectation of death.—Statements made by the persons in expectation of death, who are not only alive but they deposed in the Court, are not admissible under S. 32; but their statements are admissible under S. 157 as former statements made by them in order to corroborate their testimony in Court: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 126: 1982 All.L.J. 1524; 1993 Cr.L.J. 1881 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.); 1985 Cr.L.R. 628 (Guj.); 1975 Mah.L.J. 36.

Where statement of a grievously injured person was recorded as dying declaration after a surgical operation without obtaining the doctor's endorsement regarding conscious mental state of the patient and names of the assailants were also neither asked, nor mentioned in the statement recorded by the Magistrate but after his recovery, he in his oral testimony disclosed names of assailants, held, his testimony could not be discarded on ground of contradiction with his earlier statement: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1544: (1993) 3 S.C.C. 95: 1993 S.C.C. (Cr.) 612: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1857.

Medical/Post-mortem report.—It is not correct to say that in the face of the medical evidence, the mention of injuries in the inquest report cannot prevail. It is true that if the Investigating Officer has given any opinion of his as to how those injuries could be caused or any other technical opinion as could be given only by a medical report, it would not be safe to accept it. But if he has stated a fact which he saw with his own eyes it cannot be said that it should not be read in corroboration of the evidence of the eye-witnesses: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 331: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1187.

Post-mortem report—Before it can be used to corroborate there must be evidence in the deposition of a witness which can be corroborated: (1967) 2 Cr.L.J. 1633: A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 288.

10. First information report.—The first information report, does not constitute substantive evidence though its importance as conveying the earliest information regarding the occurrence cannot be doubted. It can, however, only be used as a previous statement for the purpose of either corroborating its maker under S. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act or for contradicting him under S. 145 of that Act. It cannot be used for the purpose of corroborating or contradicting other witnesses: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 283: 1972 Cr.L.J. 233; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 757: 1975 Cr.L.J. 634: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 851; 1977 Cr.L.J. 1293 (Gau.) (D.B.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 534 (Ori.). See also 31 Mad.L.W. 51: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 632 (2).

First information report by accused—Its use at trial: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 159.

First information report—Use of, to corroborate the testimony of informant: 1957 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 178.

First information report is admissible: I.L.R. 54 Cal. 237: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 17. See also (1936) 38 Punj.L.R. 203: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 833.

Where the first information report given by the accused himself to a Police Officer amounts to a confession, its proof is prohibited by S. 25 except to the extent it is permitted by S. 27; the first information report recorded under S. 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not a substantive piece of evidence; it may, however, be used to corroborate the informant under S. 157 or to contradict him under S. 145 if the informant is examined as a witness at the trial. But the first information report having been lodged by the accused himself, it is admissible against him as evidence of his conduct under S. 8 and its non-confessional portion would also be relevant under S. 21 but its confessional portion cannot be used at all against the accused because of the ban under S. 25: (1994) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 695 (S.C.).

Rape case—F.I.R. by girl—Evidentiary value—Although F.I.R. is not a substantive piece of evidence yet it is a very valuable piece of evidence for corroboration—It is not necessary that Police report to be used as corroborative evidence should have been made at or about time when the incident took place: 1953 Raj.L.W. 255.

F.I.R.—Use of—Oral complaint reduced to writing by officer in charge of Police Station—Report signed by complainant and counter-signed by Police Officer—Handwriting of Police Officer not proved—Document not admissible in evidence for corroboration—Complaint entered in prescribed book under S. 154—Entry not complaint—Report made to Magistrate as prescribed under S. 157—Not relevant under S. 35, Evidence Act: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 107: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 214.

Where a statement made to a Police Officer is not the first information under S. 154, Cr.P.Code, the Magistrate must take from the Police Officer a statement that the particular statement was made to him: 61 I.C. 650: 22 Cr.L.J. 410 (Cal.). See also I.L.R. 5 Lah. 324: A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 609.

In the absence of substantive evidence, first information report cannot be used as corroborative evidence: I.L.R. 6 Rang. 481: A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 295. A letter written by a Police Officer to his superior expressing that a certain person would make a certain statement for a certain sum of money is not under S. 157 receivable in evidence for any purpose: I.L.R. 6 Rang. 142: A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 54: 54 M.L.J. 545 (P.C.).

Where the first information report was lodged within 35 minutes of the occurrence at the Police Station at a distance of two miles from the place of occurrence and in the said report the names of the accused as the culprits as well as the names of the eye-witnesses were mentioned, held, it lent considerable corroboration to the testimony of prosecution witness regarding the participation of the accused in the occurrence in question: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2695.

Where at the time when maker of first information report was examined in Court the report was not tendered by the prosecution in accordance with the provisions of the Evidence Act and the accused were denied opportunity of cross-examination on the F.I.R., held, the first information report was inadmissible under S. 157: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 622: 1972 Cr.L.J. 451.

11. Statement of victim of sexual offence.—In a case of rape, evidence of witness based on earlier statements made by the victim to them regarding the offence furnishes corroborative evidence. The weight to be attached to that evidence is another matter, depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case one of them being whether the corroborative evidence is given by an independent person: 1956 An.W.R. 572. See also 1971 Mys.L.J. (S.N.) 369; A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 760; A.I.R. 1967 Raj. 159; A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 613 (D.B.).

A statement of a raped girl in answer to a person who saw her weeping is admissible: I.L.R. 5 Lah. 324: A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 609. The statement made by a ravished woman after the commission of the offence of rape can be used to corroborate her under S. 157, even if it is not admissible under any other provision of the Act. But a statement admitted under the section is not substantive evidence and cannot be made the basis of a finding as to the existence of the facts mentioned in the statement: A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 151.

In a case of rape independent confirmation of every material circumstance is not required and the corroboration of the evidence of the prosecutrix need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime but it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. Where the vaginal swab taken from the vagina of the prosecutrix immediately she was rescued from the custody of the accused was found to contain supermatozoa, it is corroborative of the evidence of the prosecutrix that the accused had committed rape on her, even though it was not established that the supermatozoa was that of the accused: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 751: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 641.

Statements of victim of rape can be given as evidence of consistency of the conduct of the victim, but not as corroboration: (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 59.

In a rape case the statement made by prosecutrix to her husband immediately after the incident is admissible under S. 157 and has a corroborative value: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 911: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1285: (1983) 4 S.C.C. 10: (1983) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 302.

Girl victim of unnatural offence—Statement by girl to mother 16 hours after occurrence upon persistent questioning—Admissibility: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 250.

Where prosecutrix disclosed to her maternal aunt soon after the occurrence that she had been raped by the accused and the evidence of the maternal aunt to that effect did not suffer from any infirmity, held, such a former statement made by the prosecutrix soon after the event before her aunt was admissible under S. 157 for the purpose of corroboration of her subsequent evidence in the Court regarding same fact: 1977 Raj.L.W. 146: 1977 Cr.L.R. 392.

Where the prosecutrix deposed that on going home she narrated the incident of accused having committed rape on her to her mother and the evidence of her mother and father fully corroborated victims version, held, said evidence being relevant under S. 157 could serve as corroborative evidence in support of the evidence of the victim girl: 1991 Cr.L.J. 835 (Ori.).

Where the victim girl in her evidence had neither said anything about the incident nor about the accused but said that she had seen the accused and had not implicated the accused in her evidence, her previous statement to the effect that she was raped shortly after the crime can, of course, be relied on as corroborative evidence under S. 157 of the said testimony, but in the absence of any such substantive piece of evidence, the allegation cannot be proved by the evidence and no conviction can be based thereon: A.I.R 1991 Cal. 42: (1989-90) 94 Cal.W.N. 836.

12. Previous statement of accomplice.—In a charge under S. 161, I.P. Code, of having received a bribe the bribe-giver is in the position of an accomplice and as a matter of expediency his evidence must be corroborated in material particulars implicating the accused. It is highly doubtful if an accomplice can corroborate himself, assuming that he can, statements made by the bribe-giver to third parties are inadmissible in evidence if made long after the event. The statements to be admissible must have been made at or "about the same time" which means within a reasonably short time after the event, when a reasonable opportunity for making it presented itself; whether the statements were so made is a question of fact in each case: I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 821: (1945) 1 M.L.J. 197: A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 358.

Where there were circumstances completing the links in the chain of circumstantial evidence against the accused, held, it constituted substantial and sufficient corroboration of the approver's statement in material particulars: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1320: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 234.

13. Statement affecting conduct.—Husband charged with murder of his wife—Wife missing for some days—Photograph published in newspaper of dead body recovered by Police—Body identified later as that of missing wife—Statement soon after publication by husband showing reaction of disturbed mind—Admissible under S. 8, Expl. 2 and S. 21—S. 157 not attracted: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 354: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 504.

Statement of complainant immediately after occurrence—Is admissible as evidence of conduct and as corroboration: 29 Cut.L.T. 540: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 310: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 58.

14. Recital in documents/deeds.—Ordinarily, before the corroborative evidence is admissible, the evidence sought to be corroborated must be given. Where, in support of the plaintiff's case, a witness for the plaintiff produces a letter written to him by another witness but before the production of such letter the witness does not make any statement whatsoever, which is sought to be corroborated by the letter, the letter cannot be admissible in evidence under S. 157: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 861.

Where the writer of a letter appears as a witness in Court, the contents of that letter would amount to a previous statement of a witness and can also be used for the purpose of corroborating his testimony in Court under S. 157. But it cannot be used as substantive evidence and for that purpose one must scrutinise the nature of the evidence given in Court by the writer himself: I.L.R. (1953) Cut. 531: 19 Cut.L.T. 402: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 23.

Contents of letters written by wife to her parents from time to time giving graphic details of incidents about strained marital relations with the husband would be admissible as corroborative piece of evidence: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 131: 1984 Hindu L.R. 74: (1983) 2 D.M.C. 77 (Del.).

Reference by witness to deed to which he was not party not permissible: (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 968: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 635.

Document showing ownership of land adjacent to disputed land is admissible to corroborate the testimony of ownership: 44 Cal.L.J. 582: 99 I.C. 907: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 230 (D.B.). See also 1940 Mad.W.N. 80.

In a suit regarding ownership of a property, a document to which none of the parties to the suit were parties was held to be admissible as one of the executants of the documents had been examined as a witness and the recital in the document had been relied upon as corroborative of the evidence given by the party to the document, who was examined as a witness. On a contention that the recital in the document is not admissible under S. 157 by way of corroborative evidence, held, that if a statement that a particular property was in possession of a particular person in a particular period is relevant evidence of a fact that had taken place, the recital that the person owned it also is a statement of fact that had taken place, at the time when it was made. Possession is a legal conception as also ownership. If a particular statement about a particular individual that he was in possession of a property is relevant evidence of a fact that had taken place, then the fact that he owned it is also a similar recital of a fact that had taken place. The statement in the document in question was therefore relevant as corroborative evidence being a statement made by the witness on a previous occasion: A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 345: (1947) 1 M.L.J. 60.

The word "right" in S. 13 includes a private land; thus, where the dispute pertains to adverse possession and the adjoining land owners orally testify and produce sale deeds, held, the deeds have a corroborative value; being admissible under S. 157, the question of their relevancy is not material at that stage: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 52.

Admissibility of document and proof of document—Distinction between. See (1985) 1 W.L.N. 381.

Recital as to boundaries.—A recital regarding boundaries in a document executed between strangers to the suit relating to lands adjoining the suit lands in which the suit land is referred as a boundary is not admissible under S. 13 but may be admissible if the executant is called and deposes to the boundary, to corroborate him under S. 157, or if he is dead under S. 32: 145 I.C. 944(2): A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 639; A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 450: (1940) 51 Mad.L.W. 509; A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 154 (D.B.), overruling A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226; A.I.R. 1950 Pepsu 7; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 230 (D.B.).

15. Previous statements on question of date of birth/age.—A recital of the date of birth of a minor in a guardianship application can be used as a corroborative evidence under S. 157, in support of the oral testimony of the applicant in a subsequent suit, if the application was made before a competent authority and long before the subsequent dispute arose: 199 I.C. 19: A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 438.

Proof of age—Verified application made by guardian—Such application containing ward's date of birth—Application can be used for refreshing memory—It cannot be of use in proving age of ward: A.I.R. 1964 All. 53.

Recital as to date of birth of the mortgagor contained in an application by his brother is admissible: 1929 All.L.J. 615: A.I.R. 1929 All. 550.

But a statement by a father in vaccination register made 3 years after birth of child cannot be relied upon to prove paternity of the child: 1929 Mad.W.N. 696: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 194.

16. Illustrative cases.—Where a party files a petition on the date of hearing asking for adjournment on the ground that his pleader cannot attend Court that day on account of hartal, the fact of filing the petition

158. What matters may be proved in connection with proved statement relevant under section 32 or 33.—Whenever any statement, relevant under section 32 or 33, is proved, all matters may be proved, either in order to contradict or to corroborate it, or in order to impeach or confirm the credit of the person by whom it was made, which might have been proved if that person had been called as a witness and had denied upon cross-examination the truth of the matter suggested.

as well as its contents can be proved and are admissible, though not perhaps sufficient to charge the pleader with professional misconduct: I.L.R. 49 Cal. 732: (1921-22) 26 Cal.W.N. 589 (F.B.).

Anybody who has seen a place may be examined as to what he saw under the general provisions of law: 12 I.C. 88: 12 Cr.L.J. 480 (Cal.).

Admission of guilt by Government servant—Such admission can be used to corroborate independent evidence led to prove charges against him: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 381.

Report of the local Commissioner, who appeared in witness-box and proved his report, held, is admissible in evidence under S. 157. [A.I.R. 1970 Del. 205, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 133 (P.&H.).

In proceedings under S. 107, Cr.P. Code panchas or reports made by the prosecution witnesses on various dates against the accused, in the absence of the latter, are not substantive evidence of the matters mentioned in them. But under S. 157, such reports can be used in order to corroborate what the witnesses testify to in Court when they are examined in Court: 21 Pat.L.T. 652: A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 252.

In a dacoity case, P.W. 1 had stated in his testimony that he had identified the dacoits, and P.Ws. 19 and 23 had said in their evidence that P.W.1 had mentioned before them the names of the dacoits whom P.W. 1 claimed to have identified among the raiders. Held, that even if P.W. 1 had not stated in his evidence that he had named the dacoits, to P.Ws. 19 and 23 after the occurrence, the testimony of P.W. 1 could be said to have been corroborated by the testimony of P.Ws. 19 and 23: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 454.

Evidence of witness cannot be corroborated by the statement made by him in his complaint when he admits he has no personal knowledge of the facts: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 76: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 117.

Two complaints one by A and the other by M in respect of same incident—Divergent versions—Complaints investigated simultaneously—Statement of A recorded as first information in one case and statement of M as first information in the other—B questioned during investigation—Prosecution against B and M—Held, no portion of B's statement could be used to contradict statement of M in his complaint, either under S. 157 or S. 145—B not being examined as a witness in the case, his previous statement could not be used either to contradict his evidence or corroborate it even if it is to be held that it is a statement coming under S. 154, Cr.P.Code: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1479: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1281.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (IV of 1887), S. 6—Question whether evidence of person who executes warrant under S. 6 requires corroboration—Question depends on facts and circumstances of each case and no legal distinction can be made merely because person who executes the warrant happens to be the person who makes complaint under proviso to S. 6: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1633.

Statement of witness under S. 164, Cr.P.Code—Can be used for purpose of corroborations or contradiction of the witness: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 289.

Before corroborative evidence is admitted, evidence sought to be corroborated must be given: 1968 Cr.L.J. 690 (Manipur).

Entries in diary in solicitor's office—How far admissible: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 112.

Section 158—Notes.

Statements made before the Sub-Registrar by the deceased attestors to a will are admissible under S. 32(7) taken with S. 158 but not under S. 33. Under S. 158, even prior statement of deceased persons can be admitted both for contradiction and corroboration: 1933 Mad.W.N. 1148. See I.L.R. 5 Pat. 777: A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 61. As to scope of section, see A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 122.

The Legislature under S. 32(1) in its wisdom had made dying declarations admissible out of necessity; authors of dying

159. Refreshing memory.—A witness may, while under examination, refresh his memory by referring to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards that the Court considers it likely that the transaction was at that time fresh in his memory.

The witness may also refer to any such writing made by any other person, and read by the witness within the time aforesaid, if when he read it he knew it to be correct.

When witness may use copy of document to refresh memory.—Whenever a witness may refresh his memory by reference to any document, he may, with the permission of the Court, refer to a copy of such document:

Provided the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient reason for the non-production of the original.

An expert may refresh his memory by reference to professional treatises.

declarations may not survive to give evidence in the Court; being of persons usually close to death, great solemnity is attached to their dying declarations. The authors of dying declarations are thus a class apart; and the classification is reasonable. S. 158, besides, provides an assurance that dying declarations are tested by other relevant evidence so that they may not lead to injustice. S. 32(1) is, therefore, not violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution: 1985 All.W.C. 399.

Murder—Deceased stating name of assailants—Deceased's statement 5 years back stating that his vision was poor and blurred—Held, his previous statement was admissible in evidence: 1964 All.L.J. 1134.

Contradiction of earlier statement—Statement made by widow in her gift deed—Argument that statement is relevant to contradict her earlier statement—Held, on facts, that statement made in gift deed did not directly contradict her earlier statement and that it carried little value as compared to her earlier statement: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 153: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134.

Section 159—Notes.

Before a witness is allowed to refresh his memory from any writing made by him, the requirements of S. 159 should be complied with. It must be shown that the writing was made by the deponent at the time of the transaction or so soon after that the Court considers it likely that the transaction was at that time fresh in his memory: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 103: (1947-48) 52 Cal.W.N. 922.

For purposes of S. 159, it is not requisite that the writing used to refresh memory of a witness should have been admitted in evidence: (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 992: A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 189.

Accordingly, a document not produced in Court within the proper time and in consequence rejected as evidence under the provisions of O. 13, R. 2, C.P.Code may nevertheless be referred to by the party producing it or his witnesses to refresh his memory of the document if otherwise within the purview of S. 159. The weight of the evidence, the objection to the document upon the ground that it not having been produced at the proper time, renders its authenticity the subject of suspicion and all other grounds upon which a document can be successfully impeached still remain open but refusal to permit a man to refresh his memory by proper relevant contemporaneous document might lead to a grave injustice: 55 I.A. 107: I.L.R. 7 Pat. 305; A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 80: 54 M.L.J. 325 (P.C.).

Witness may refresh his memory by referring to any writing made by himself at the time of transaction concerning which he is questioned: 1979 M.L.J. (Cr.) 546.

Under S. 159, the copy of the original can be used for refreshing a memory before the witness gives evidence when the non-production of the original is accounted to the satisfaction of the Court. Such secondary evidence must be authenticated by foundational evidence that the alleged copy is infact a true copy of the original. The notes jotted down at the time of inspection of documents is not the true copy of the originals which cannot be tendered as secondary evidence in any form either by marking or reproducing its contents by way of refreshing memory under S. 159. No doubt he could give the oral account of the contents of the document as secondary evidence provided what he had seen in the original document, is established by authenticated foundational evidence: (1992) 3 Kam.L.J. 399.

Where the writing brings to the mind of the witness neither any recollection of the facts mentioned in it nor any recollection of the writing itself but nevertheless enables him to swear to a particular fact from the conviction of his mind on seeing a writing, which he knows to be genuine, the witness may refresh his memory by referring to the writing: I.L.R. 49 Cal. 573: (1921-22) 26 Cal.W.N. 680.

When a witness wants to refresh his memory under S. 159, he is to do so by referring in Court to the document which he had read at or near the time of the transaction and it is the fact that he had known it to be correct when he read it that is the justification of his doing so. It is quite immaterial that a document to which the witness refers in Court was not printed by the witness himself or in his presence. It is essential only that he should have read it at or soon after the transaction, to which it relates: 120 I.C. 798: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 371.

The word "writing" used in S. 159 includes also printed matter: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 371.

Hearsay evidence given after refreshing memory—Admissibility. See 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 127 (Gau.).

A witness can be allowed to refresh his memory by reference to any memorandum or other writing prepared by the witness, if there is a lapse of memory on a point asked of the witnesses. On this section, see also I.L.R. 8 Cal. 732; (1914-15) 19 Cal.W.N. 890; 11 Bom.H.C. 123: I.L.R. 11 Bom. 657; I.L.R. 32 Mad. 384 .

Memoranda kept by a witness can be used in evidence not by itself but as corroborating a witness or refreshing his memory: 120 I.C. 224: A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 24(1).

Where a witness has to depose to a large number of transactions and those transactions are referred to or mentioned either in the account books or in other documents, there is nothing wrong in allowing the witness to refer to the account books and the documents while answering the questions put to him in his examination. He cannot be expected to remember every transaction in all its details and S. 160 specifically permits a witness to testify the facts mentioned in the documents referred to in S. 159 although he has no recollection of the facts themselves if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document. Therefore, where an approver, was allowed to refresh his memory while giving evidence, by referring extensively to the account books and documents produced in the case, the procedure adopted was held to be neither in violation of law nor an abuse of the powers of Court under S. 159: (1964) 3 S.C.R. 297: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1850.

Ss. 159 and 160—Prosecution under S. 409, Penal Code—Accounts audited by auditor—Prosecution desiring to file loose sheets of accounts to be used by auditor at time of his examination in Court—Held, documents would be admissible under S. 63(3) or S. 159 or S. 160, Evidence Act: I.L.R. (1965) Cut. 426: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1042: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 189.

Under S. 159 a witness may refresh his memory by looking into a document and give evidence. The document can acquire some evidentiary value under S. 160 subject to the conditions mentioned therein. Where a witness merely refreshed his memory by looking into a certified copy and also spoke to the various details of dates, etc., by looking into it, such a procedure is not hit by S. 159: A.I R. 1960 Tripura 26.

Statement under S. 162, Cr.P.Code—Permission to prosecution Counsel to read out, to refresh witnesses' memory, illegal: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 198 (All.).

Defence witness using a private note book for refreshing memory—Prosecution complaining that witness practically reading out his deposition verbatim from the book—Whether the witness used it for refreshing his memory or for deposing. Verbatim could be tested by verification of the same by prosecution — Can insist on the production of that document for use in cross-examination: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 148: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1039: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 115.

There is a common practice in the Punjab of referring to statements in the first information reports, medico-legal reports and so forth as if they were evidence. This is not justified by law. The proper course is for the witnesses to refer to the document which he has prepared at the time under S. 159 and state in Court everything which the prosecution or Counsel for defence or the trying Magistrate or Judge considers material: (1937) 39 Punj.L.R. 290: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 475.

First information report.—S. 159, Evidence Act, lays down that a witness can refresh his memory by reference to any document or its copy with the permission of the Court. This provision is subject to one condition and it is this that the document should have been made by the witness. Thus, where the S.O. was the maker of the first information report, held, with the permission of the Court he could refresh his memory by seeing it: 1980 All.Cr.R. 48.

Post-mortem report.—Ss. 159 to 161 permit a limited use being made of the post-mortem notes of Medical Officer, namely, that they may be used by the witness who made them for refreshing his memory or by a party for the purpose of contradicting the witness. It is extremely undesirable that such notice of post-mortem examination be put in evidence through the Medical Officer en block as it is prejudicial to both parties: A.I.R. 1930 Sind 225.

Post-mortem examination report is not by itself legal evidence. It is only a record summarising the salient features observed by a medical man in the course of autopsy, giving his opinion as to the cause of death. By itself it proves nothing, as it is not a substantive piece of evidence. It can only be used by the medical man who conducted the post-mortem examination as an aid to his memory while giving evidence. Ss. 159 to 161 of the Evidence Act only permit limited use of the post-mortem report. The substantive evidence, is the oral testimony given by the medical man before the Court on oath. In giving evidence the medical man may refresh his memory by referring to the report which he has made of the post-mortem examination. [A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 336, Rel. on]: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1656 (Raj.) (D.B.). See also 1994 All.Cr.C. 94 (D.B.).

The post-mortem report is, normally, used by the Doctor who had conducted the post-mortem examination to refresh his memory; but in the absence of any evidence to show that the report was being tendered in evidence under any relevant provision of Chap. II of the Act, held, the report cannot be treated as substantive evidence: (1982-83) 87 Cal.W.N. 565 (D.B.).

Panchanamas.—No doubt an entry in any public record stating a relevant fact and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or by any other person in performance of the duty specially enjoyed by the law is itself a relevant fact. But where panchanamas contain a confession which cannot be given in evidence because of S. 26, the proper way of dealing with a panchanama containing such an entry is to place it into the hands of a witness and to allow him to use it to refresh his memory. If he finds in it any thing of which evidence can lawfully be given, he may give such evidence in the ordinary way; but the document itself should be excluded: 144 I.C. 772: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 220. There is no provision in the Evidence Act by which panchanamas prepared by the Police for the recovery of articles on information given by the accused can be used as substantive evidence. If they are prepared at the time, they can be used by the witnesses for the purpose of refreshing their memories in the witness-box under S. 159 but in themselves they are not evidence: 1939 Mad.W.N. 465: A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 766. Panchanamas—They cannot be used as substantive evidence of facts stated therein—They can be used only to corroborate or contradict or to refresh the memory of panch witness. See A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 32: 6 Sau.L.R. 517: 56 Cr.L.J. 274.

List of stolen things given by informant—Admissibility.—A list of the stolen things given to supplement the first information report is admissible and can be referred to under S. 159 and proved under S. 159. The fact that a copy of such a list had been given to the Police would not affect the admissibility of the informant's list: 1933 Cr.C. 1503: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 987.

Police investigation—Admissions made by accused in presence of Magistrate—Use of memorandum.—Where during the investigation of a criminal case, a Magistrate is associated with the Investigating Officer, and in the presence of such Magistrate, the accused points out places alleged to be connected with the crime and makes admissions which do not lead to the discovery of any fact and the Magistrate does not record the admissions in accordance with the provisions of

S. 164 of the Cr.P.Code but makes a memorandum of the conduct and admissions of the accused, the written memorandum of the Magistrate is not admissible though the Magistrate under the provisions of S. 159 can refresh his memory when under examination by referring to the memorandum: I.L.R. 14 Lah. 290: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 716 (F.B.).

Notes of speech.—S. 159 does not render the notes of a speech inadmissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 867. See also I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 113: A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 542: (1943) 1 M.L.J. 343 [Proof of shorthand notes of speech at a meeting taken by a Police Officer.]

Where a witness refreshing his memory refers to notes taken by another of a speech made at a meeting, held, it is necessary under S. 159 that such notes should have been read by him immediately after the meeting and not merely read out to him. If the witness had read the notes himself, there would be naturally greater guarantee of their correctness: (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 167.

Under S. 159, the witness refreshes his memory by looking at the document and gives his evidence in the ordinary way; the document is not itself an evidence nor is it tendered. Under S. 160 the memory of the witness is not refreshed. Here the document itself is tendered in evidence and the witness testifies to the facts mentioned therein if he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves and if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document. It is only subject to the conditions mentioned in S. 160 that a document itself acquires some evidentiary value.

When the witness does not give a resume of a speech said to have been delivered at a meeting nor does he state that he is unable to state by memory what was said at the meeting or that the notes of speech taken down by him contains a correct record of what was said at the meeting but admits that the notes contain his impression of the speech delivered, the notes of the speech does not become primary evidence of the speech said to have been delivered at the meeting and cannot be used as such: 1963 M.P.L.J. 498: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 137.

Speeches made by certain Maharaj during election campaign—Notes taken down by members of Police force and reported to their officers—Election petition on grounds of corrupt practice—Speeches as evidence of corrupt practice, sought to be proved by producing these members as witnesses—Reports held complied with conditions of S. 160: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 851.

In this case it is clear that the reports were written by the witnesses themselves at the time of the speeches or soon afterwards when the speeches were fresh in their memory. It seems that it is not necessary that a witness should specifically state that he has no specific recollection of the facts and that he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document, before the document can be used under S. 160 of the Evidence Act. It is enough if it appears from his evidence that these conditions are established. In this particular case the witnesses were giving their testimony in Court after a lapse of nearly nine months and one would have to have super-human memory to specifically recollect the details of the speeches, especially when the witness may have attended and reported many similar meetings as a part of his duty during the election campaign. It may be implied in this case that the witnesses had no specific recollection of the facts. The second requirement would be satisfied if the Court comes to the conclusion that the witness was in a position to correctly record the facts in the document. Are then the requirements of S. 160 satisfied in this case? On the evidence it is quite clear that both the conditions required by S. 160 have been complied with. While the speech was delivered on 18th February, 1967 he was giving his evidence on 7th November, 1967. It is implicit that he had no specific recollection of the speeches, and the second condition is also satisfied because he made notes and then made out the report from his notes. It is clear that in this particular passage (Exhibit K) an appeal was being made to the electors to cast their votes for the first respondent because the first respondent is a Brahmin and also because of the promise, which had been put forward in this passage, that there should be at least one Brahmin Minister in the Ministry. So far as the petitioner is concerned, the petitioner is a Patidar and it is in the context of this background that an appeal is made in the name of caste of the first respondent and the people are asked to vote for the first respondent because he was a Testimony to facts stated in document mentioned in section 159.—A witness may also testify to facts mentioned in any such document as is mentioned in section 159, although he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves, if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document.

Brahmin. It is also clear that the first and third passage (Exhibit P) read together constitute an attempt to induce the electors to believe that they would become objects of divine displeasure if they voted for the Congress and thereby allowed cow slaughter to be continued. Under the circumstances, judging by the manner in which the first respondent was touring with Shambu Maharaj, the manner in which tour programme was arranged and judging from the fact that this tour was specially arranged to bring success to the first respondent, that the first respondent did consent to the commission of the breaches of the proviso of S. 123(2) and S. 123(3) of Representation of the People Act by Shambu Maharaj: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 851.

In an election petition, full shorthand transcripts made by those who heard the speeches could be treated as corroborative evidence which could be used by a witness to refresh his memory as laid down in S. 159 and further their contents could be brought on record by direct oral evidence in the manner prescribed by S. 160 of the Act: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1788. See also A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 66, cited under S. 160, infra.

Horoscope—Admissibility.—A horoscope is admissible in evidence in proof of age and though it may not be relied on as a probative document in itself, it can be used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness under S. 159: 12 Mys.L.J. 133: 39 Mys.H.C.R. 406.

A horoscope can be used to help in proving the date of birth stated in it only under S. 159 or S. 160 and that of course only if the person who wrote it or a person who read it soon after it was written, is examined as a witness; no part of S. 32 can make any statement of a date in such a document, a relevant fact: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 218: 1986 M.P.L.J. 25: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 213: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 241. See also A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 118; (1989) 2 Ori.L.R. 562.

Where no attempt is made by a witness to state orally before the Court, what the accused in the case was alleged to have said, nor does he state before the Court, that although he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves, he was sure that the facts were correctly reported by him in his report, the evidence of such witness is inadmissible in evidence: (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 872: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 629.

Use of writing for refreshing memory: A.I.R. 1969 Tripura 26.

It is not necessary that a witness should specifically state that he has no specific recollection of the facts and that he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document, before the document can be used under S. 160. It is enough if it appears from his evidence that these conditions are established.

In an election petition, the petitioner, alleged that the speeches made by certain Maharaj during election campaign in support of successful candidate amounted to corrupt practice within Ss. 123(2) and 123(3) of Representation of the People Act. He sought to prove the said speeches by producing members of Police force as witness, who had under instructions of Government taken down notes of the speeches and reported them to their officers. The reports of these members of the Police force were found by High Court as correctly recorded and as fairly representing the speeches of the said Maharaj. While the speeches were delivered in February, the witnesses gave evidence in November. Relying on evidence of these witnesses, High Court set aside the election of the successful candidate. On appeal by him under S. 16-A of Representation of the People Act, held, that though these reports had not been used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of any witness under S. 159 of the Evidence Act, these had been used under S. 160, thereof, it might be implied that the witnesses had no specific recollection of the facts. The witnesses being in position to correctly record the facts in the document, both the conditions required by S. 100, Evidence Act had been complied with, though the report was strictly speaking not substantive evidence as such; and the document could only be used as a part of the oral evidence sanctified by the oath. Where witnesses deposed having taken down the notes in shorthand of the speeches as and when delivered and the transcription whereof were supplied to the party which had cross-examined the witnesses on the basis thereof, held, the party could not contend that the notes must have been recorded in the language understood by it; this extreme contention cannot be appreciated; notes of a speech recorded in Bengali or Oriya do not become inadmissible merely because the other party is ignorant of that script or language. 162. Production of documents.—A witness summoned to produce a document shall, if it is in his possession or power, bring it to the Court, notwithstanding any objection which there may be to its production or to its admissibility. The validity of any such objection shall be decided on by the Court.

The Court, if it sees fit, may inspect the document, unless it refers to matters of State, or take other evidence to enable it to determine on its admissibility.

Translation of documents.—If for such a purpose it is necessary to cause any document to be translated, the Court may, if it thinks fit, direct the translator to keep the contents secret, unless the document is to be given in evidence; and if the interpreter disobeys such direction, he shall be held to have committed an offence under section 166 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).

Section 162—Notes.

(See also Notes under S. 123, supra). See (1939) 41 Bom.L.R. 391: A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 237, cited under Ss. 123 and 124.

S. 123 relates of the competency of the witness to depose to the matters referred therein, on the other hand, S. 162 regulates the examination of such witnesses who are required to produce such documents. But even here S. 162 carries out an exception in favour of the documents which refer to matters of State, which are no other than relating to affairs of State as mentioned in S. 123: 1986 Rev.L.R. 193 (P.&H.). See also A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865, cited under S. 123, Note 1, supra.

S. 162 enables Court to inspect document or take other evidence to determine its admissibility: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1584: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 400.

It is clear from S. 162 that notwithstanding any objection, a witness who is summoned to produce a document is bound to produce it in the Court. He cannot raise any objection when directed to produce a document in the Court. However, the section gives him a right to raise objections which there may be to its production or to its admissibility, and such objection, if any, must be decided by a Court at the time when he is directed to produce such a document in a Court. The objection can be raised by a witness as to its production or to its admissibility. The word "admissibility" used in S. 162 necessarily means the relevancy of the document. Unless a document is relevant for the purpose of inquiry, it cannot be said to be admissible in a criminal trial. The word "admissibility" used in S. 162 involves all sorts of objections as to production, as to relevancy and as to admissibility, or even claiming any privilege in respect of the said document. The word "admissibility" will have to be construed to mean all objections that the person who is asked to produce the document has raised in the matter. Having regard to the language used in S. 162, it is not possible to hold that the word "admissibility" is restricted to a privileged document by the State. It is significant that the objections to the production or admissibility of evidence specified in S. 162 relate to all claims of privilege provided by the relevant sections of Chap. IX of Part III of the Evidence Act. S. 123 is only one of such privileges so that the jurisdiction given to the Court to decide the validity of the objection covers not only the objections raised under S. 123 but all other objections as well: (1983) 2 Bom.C.R. 45.

S. 162 refers to official as well as private documents, and provides in the second paragraph that when a document, in respect of which an objection to production or admissibility is raised to inspect the document; with regard to other documents in respect of which privilege is claimed, the Court if it thinks fit, may inspect the document in Court and it is not for him to decide whether the document should or should not be produced. It is for the Court to decide it. Once the Court holds that the document is one with regard to which privilege can be claimed, in other words, that it is a communication made to a public officer in official confidence or that it is an unpublished official record relating to affairs of State which it would not be in the public interest to disclose, the question whether privilege should be claimed for it or not is entirely within the discretion of the officer in charge of the document. The Court, for the purpose of deciding whether the claim to privilege is well founded or not, is not entitled to look at the document. It must decide the question of the validity of the objection without looking at the document: (1944) 46 Bom.L.R. 802: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 122.

S. 162 has divided privileged documents into two categories. The Court can inspect documents for the purpose of deciding the question of privilege only if those documents do not refer to matters of State. In other words an exception is made in respect of document that refer to matters of State. The provision of O. 19, R. 2, C.P.Code, being general and the provisions of S. 162, Evidence Act, being restricted so far as they relate to documents relating to affairs of State, the special provisions of S. 162 relating to documents of State must be enforced in preference to the general provisions embodied in the Code of Civil Procedure. It is, therefore, not open to the Court to peruse the documents for which privilege is claimed in order to determine whether the documents constitute official records relating to affairs of State: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 209. See also I.L.R. (1945) Lah. 219: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 434; (1950) 52 Punj.L.R. 153 (F.B.). On this point, see also Notes under S. 123.

It cannot be said that it is a personal right of a person to produce or not to produce a document when called upon to produce it by a witness summons by the Court. Documents which are called for in a Court notwithstanding the provision of an Act, are meant for administration of justice by a Court and a party to whom a witness summons had been issued to produce a document cannot claim a personal right under Art. 21 not to produce it because it is a valuable document: (1983) 2 Bom.C.R. 45.

A person summoned to produce a document must bring it to the Court; it is only then that he may object to its production or admissibility under S. 162; such an objection comprehends all claims of privilege under Chap. IX of Part III of the Act and not merely under S. 123: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 114.

The privilege claimable in respect of official and confidential documents is a narrow one and is based on the principle that the information contained in official documents cannot be disclosed where the disclosure would not be in public interest. The circumstance that the documents are confidential or official is by itself no reason for their non-production and the Court is always entitled to summon them and to examine how far the privilege claimed is reasonable and is justified: 11 Mys.L.J. 171. See I.L.R. 3 Cal. 742; (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 431: 15 I.C. 77; 45 I.C. 898, see also I.L.R. (1940) Nag. 280: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 358; I.L.R. (1944) 1 Cal. 410: (1942-43) 47 Cal.W.N. 928: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 539.

Court directing production of document subject to objections that might be taken—No interference in revision: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 356: A.I.R. 1963 J.&K. 20.

Per Majority (Gajendragadkar, J., Sinha, C.J. and Wanchoo, J., Subba Rao, J. not expressing any opinion).—Where a privilege is claimed at the stage of inspection and the Court is required to adjudicate upon its validity, the relevant provisions of the Evidence Act under which the privilege is claimed as well as the provisions of S. 162 which deal with the manner in which the said privilege has to be considered are equally applicable; and if the Court is precluded from inspecting the privileged document under the second clause of S. 162, the said prohibition would apply as much to a privilege claimed by the State through its witness at the trial as a privilege similarly claimed by it at the stage of inspection. The provisions of O. 11, R. 19(2), C.P. Code, must therefore, be read subject to S. 162 of the Evidence Act: (1961) 2 S.C.R. 371: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493.

When a document is directed to be produced and the head of the department claims privilege under S. 123, the Court will have to decide the validity of the objection raised by the Head of the Department. In deciding whether the document can or cannot be directed to be produced or whether the privilege claimed by the Head of the Department is justified, the Court may have to investigate into the matter. But the jurisdiction of the Court at that stage is limited to the determination of the question whether the documents refer to matters of State. The proper procedure, therefore, will be for the Court to determine from other circumstances without looking into the document and before directing the production of the document if it relates to matters of State or not. No evidence will be permissible with regard to the contents of such document and the certificate of the Head of the Department to the effect that he is withholding the permission after consideration of the document will be conclusive: I.L.R. (1961) 13 Assam 472: A.I.R. 1960 Assam 210.

It is now well settled that the Court is not bound by the Minister's or the Head of the Department's affidavit; it retains the power to balance the injury to the State or the public service against the risk of injustice before reaching its decision. The final decision as to the objection raised under S. 123 would always be with the Court by reason of S. 162: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149.

The well settled practice is that the objection to the production of summoned documents is raised by an affidavit affirmed by the Head of the Department though the Court may also require a Minister to affirm an affidavit in the course of enquiry to determine whether the document should be withheld from disclosure. If the Court is satisfied that the document should be protected in public interest from production, the matter ends there. But if it would yet satisfy itself, the Court may inspect the document. But in case no affidavit is filed or a defective affidavit is filed, the Court may call for an affidavit or a better affidavit if the Court thinks that the affidavit is not clear in regard to the objection: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 428.

Where documents summoned relate to the security of the State, national defence, foreign relations, cabinet decisions and high national policies and privilege is sought, the Court would treat the executive's opinion as conclusive; the decision be best left to be made by the executive, for the Court is not the proper place to adjudicate upon such matters. However, on other confidential documents such as confidential reports, etc., about the Government servants, the Court may decide whether privilege should be allowed or not: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 243: I.L.R. (1976) 2 Del. 667.

Having regard to the extra-ordinary jurisdiction conferred on the High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution, no general blanket protection can be given to the State and that it is for the High Court to ultimately decide, notwithstanding the objection raised by an officer or a Minister claiming privilege, the nature and the class of the documents and the decision of the Court shall prevail. Thus, where the High Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under Art. 226, called for certain official records for scrutiny and perusal by it and the Government claimed privilege, though there was nothing to suggest that the impugned files, if disclosed, would injure or affect the public interest, held, having regard to the extra-ordinary jurisdiction given to the High Court under Art. 226, the State could not claim privilege from disclosing impugned documents: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 196: (1970) 2 An.W.R. 323 (D.B.).

O. 11, R. 19(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure must be read as subject to S. 162; thus, where a witness summoned to produce certain documents claims privilege by submitting an affidavit, the Court must determine upon the material before it whether the documents were in fact of the class which related to the affairs of the State in the light of A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 493; A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 196: 1975 M.P.L.J. 801 (D.B.).

Production of documents—Documents constituting affairs of State—Privileged document—Conciliator's report—Report of a conciliator regarding his findings on an industrial dispute, is not a privileged document or confidential document—Parties to the proceedings being vitally interested in the report, a copy of the report cannot be denied to the parties: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 731: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 174.

When privilege is claimed in respect of a document on the ground of public interest, held, the Court is entitled, indeed bound, to insist upon its production and inspection with a view to determine whether it relates to the affairs of the State and whether the disclosure of its contents would be prejudicial to public interest; while so doing, the Court would give due weight to the opinion of the executive on the point, which is, however, not conclusive—But it would strike a balance between the requirements of public interest which demands on the one hand that evidence should be held back and that, on the other, it should have all relevant material before it to do justice to the case; it is only when the former outweighs the latter that the Court would grant privilege: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 243: I.L.R. (1976) 2 Del. 667.

Copy of document in respect of which privilege is claimed by defendant filed by plaintiff—Court cannot, while deciding claim of privilege, by calling upon defendant to admit or deny the same, have its contents proved indirectly: A.I.R. 1967 Punj. 387.

Production of documents—Objection—Transcript of public speeches—Fact that record was made by Police Officer, does not render it privileged: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 378.

Privileged documents—Production of—Clerk summoned to produce certain documents—Claim of privileged made by Sales Tax Officer—Held, looking to the provisions of S. 25(1) of the Act, Sales Tax Officer was justified in claiming privilege to production of concerned documents: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 222.

Document produced at the time of deposition by plaintiff's witness never called for from him—Cannot be allowed to be put into evidence: (1969-70) 74 Cal.W.N. 694.

Previous statement of witness for complainant recorded under S. 162—If can be used. See (1977) 2 Karn.L.J. 261: I.L.R. (1977) 2 Karn. 1403: 1978 M.L.J. (Cr.) 171: 1978 Cr.L.J. 295.

Where privilege was claimed against production of a file concerning the grant of a mining lease on the ground that it contained letters written by the Departmental Head to his subordinate officers and vice versa and between that Department and other Departments, held, they were unpublished official records and secrets of the State entitled to privilege: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 196: 1975 M.P.L.J. 801.

The Blue Book contains the rules and instructions for the Prime Minister's protection when on tour or travel; even if a paragraph or two thereof have been disclosed, it cannot be said that it is a published document; publication of some innocent part of the book would not render the entire book to be a published document; case remanded. [A.I.R. 1974 All. 324, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 865: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 428.

Where a witness is asked to produce a document which is objected to, the Court may inspect, and, if unable to read, get it translated; thus, in case of short hand notes, they may be got transcribed but cannot be rendered inadmissible as "not commonly intelligible characters"; it is a matter of common knowledge that commercial documents recorded in mahajani are admitted in civil Courts as basis of the claims: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 66: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 425.

Police during the investigation seized account books of a certain person and made copies of it in their diary. In a later civil suit that person denied that he kept accounts and, hence, the other party called for the copies of the account books made by the Police to be produced in evidence. Police refused to produce the copies claiming the privilege of State document. Held, where account books were not State documents, copies of them could not assume this important shape simply because they were written in the course of a Police investigation. Neither the Police nor any other person can evade the normal rules of disclosure by the simple expedient of entering matter for which no privilege can be claimed into an otherwise privileged document: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 358. Power of Court—Permission to witness to refresh memory from document—Claim to privilege under S. 123—Decision before allowing witness to refresh memory—Duty of Court—Procedure: 30 Pat.L.T. 327.

First information complaining of theft of certain cloth—Additional list submitted while investigation was in progress—First information report not disclosing it was incomplete—Held, statements in additional lists were hit by S. 162, Cr.P.Code and were admissible only for the limited purpose provided for there: 1957 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 178.

163. Giving, as evidence, of document called for and produced on notice.—When a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document is produced and inspected by the party calling for its production, he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so.

Section 163—Notes.

Under S. 163 the party is bound to give the opponents documents as evidence in the case if three conditions are fulfilled. The first condition is that the documents should be required by that party to be produced in evidence. The second condition is that it should be inspected by the party. The third condition is that the party producing the documents should require the party calling for it to put it in evidence. Where only the first of these conditions has been satisfied but the other two have not been satisfied, the document cannot be treated as evidence of the party: (1958) 60 Bom.L.R. 203: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 29: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 528.

S. 163 does not render proof of the document necessary nor normal incidence of burden of proof: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 607.

Under S. 163, an inspection of document by the adversary entitles the party producing them to tender them as evidence of both parties. Such documents must be admitted in toto: (1941) 43 Punj.L.R. 128: A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 228.

It is clear from the provisions of S. 163 that the party inspecting the documents is bound to give it as evidence only if the party producing the same require it to do so: 1957 Raj.L.W. 214: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 159.

Under S. 163 it is duty of the plaintiff to require the defendant who has taken inspection to tender the account books as evidence of both parties. Such account books need no further proof and are admissible in toto: 106 I.C. 305 (2): A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 119.

S. 163 does not speak of admissibility or relevancy of a document nor does it speak of proof; applicability of S. 163 does not dispense with the necessity of proof of the document in question by the party on whom lies the burden of proof and as such the party calling for production and having inspection of the document is not debarred from exercising his right of cross-examination on the document. [A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 119, held per in curiam]: A.I.R. 1990 Madh. Pra. 135.

Notice contemplated by S. 163 may be given by a party privately to the other party concerned and, if the other party does not produce the documents, an order of the Court for the production of the documents for inspection may also be made. The mere fact that the agency which has ordered the production of the documents is the Court is immaterial: 1953 All.L.J. 306: A.I.R. 1953 All. 689.

O. 12, R. 8, C.P.Code, refers to a notice to produce documents at the time of the hearing so that if they are not produced, the party calling for them may give secondary evidence of the same. Another kind of notice to produce documents is the one mentioned in O. 11. It is a notice to produce documents before the hearing of the case so that they may be inspected by the party calling for them. S. 163, Evidence Act, mentions inspection of the documents of which notice has been given by a party to produce. Clearly, notice to produce documents mentioned in S. 163, Evidence Act, refers to a notice to produce documents as mentioned in O. 11, C.P. Code: 1953 All.L.J. 306: A.I.R. 1953 All. 689.

Per Sen, J.—Under S. 165, Evidence Act, the Judge may call for the record of the statement of witnesses made to the Police Officer during investigation; but he is not bound to do so and if the accused wants to be certain of using the statement of the witnesses as recorded by the Police Officer in the Presidency Town of Calcutta the accused must call for them under S. 163, Evidence Act. To such a course there is one possible objection, namely, that if the accused calls for the document under S. 163, he must take the consequence stated in S. 163, Evidence Act, i.e., if the party producing the document require the accused to do so, he would be bound to give the document in evidence. This clause of S. 163 should, however, be understood as subject to the remaining provisions of the Evidence Act, and can be used as evidence. In respect of the record of the previous statement of a witness such portion of it only would be relevant as is actually used for the purpose of contradicting under S. 145,

164. Using, as evidence, of document production of which was refused on notice.—When a party refuses to produce a document which he has had notice to produce, he cannot afterwards use the document as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court.

Evidence Act or corroboration under S. 157 of that Act: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 138: (1954-55) 59 Cal.W.N. 729.

S. 163 is applicable to criminal trials as well as to civil action. If during cross-examination of a witness, the Counsel for the accused calls for the statement of that witness recorded by the Police in Calcutta during investigation and inspects it for the purpose of contradicting the witness, the Government Counsel is entitled to require the Counsel for the accused to give the whole of the statements as evidence excluding only such portions as are not relevant to the case, although that would bring on the record those parts of the statement which are corroborative of the witness's evidence at the trial in addition to those brought on the record by Counsel for the accused as being contradictory of that evidence. But where there is no formal notice or requisition from the accused calling for the Police diary and the Government Counsel produces it stating that he will not rely on the strict technicality thereby giving the impression although the impression is unintended, that he will not require Counsel for the accused to put in the document as a whole, the accused cannot be compelled to give as evidence the entire statement in question: I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 429: A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 167. See also A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 370.

Criminal proceedings—Production of document at instance of any party—Document cannot bind party bringing it on record unless proved in accordance with provision of law: 1964 Raj.L.W. 606: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 6: A.I.R. 1965 Raj.90.

Production of documents by defendant—Inspection by plaintiff—Court cannot admit without proof: 18 Mad.L.W. 165: A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 607.

By virtue of S. 4 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, the superintendence of the Delhi Special Police Establishment vests in the Central Government. Hence, it is a department of the Union of India, and under its control. Where, therefore, in a suit by the plaintiff against the Union of India, on an application made by the plaintiff, the Court issues notice in consequence of which documents are produced by the Superintendent of the Special Police Establishment then the documents being in possession of the Superintendent must be said to be under the control of the defendant. Thus, the documents having been produced in compliance with the call of the plaintiff as ordered by the Court and the documents when inspected by the plaintiff are bound to be given as evidence when required to do so by the defendant. Even if the documents are assumed to have been produced by a witness, namely, the Superintendent and not by the defendant they are the plaintiff's documents as they are filed in Court at his instance and the defendant can admit such of them as he likes and thereupon ask the Court to treat them as evidence in the case: 1953 All.L.J. 306: A.I.R. 1953 All. 689.

Section 164—Note.

The rule enacted in S. 164 says "you must produce a document or never". But the Court has got power to grant permission to produce it subsequently. Further, when a discrepancy in the original and the carbon copies is brought to the notice of a Tribunal, it would be perfectly justified in giving permission to produce the document which the party had refused to produce on notice. The reason is that the introduction of and alteration by inserting new or foreign matter itself calls for an immediate enquiry. Curiosity is at once aroused and the intellect demands an answer: (1980) 18 Del.L.T. 67.

165. Judge's power to put questions or order production.—The Judge may, in order to discover or to obtain proper proof of relevant facts, ask any question he pleases, in any form, at any time, of any witness, or of the parties about any fact relevant or irrelevant; and may order the production of any document or thing; and neither the parties nor their agents shall be entitled to make any objection to any such question or order, nor, without the leave of the Court, to cross-examine any witness upon any answer given in reply to any such question:

Provided that the judgment must be based upon facts declared by this Act to be relevant, and duly proved:

Provided also that this section shall not authorize any Judge to compel any witness to answer any question, or to produce any document which such witness would be entitled to refuse to answer or produce under sections 121 to 131, both inclusive, if the question were asked or the document were called for by the adverse party; nor shall the Judge ask any question which it would be improper for any other person to ask under section 148 or 149; nor shall he dispense with primary evidence of any document, except in the cases hereinbefore excepted.

1. Scope, object and applicability.—See (1954-55) 59 Cal.W.N. 729, noted under S. 163, supra. A Judge's right to put questions to witnesses is expressly recognised by S. 165, Evidence Act. He is expected, and indeed it is his duty, to explore all avenues open to him in order to discover the truth and, to that end, question witnesses on points which the lawyers for the parties having either overlooked or left obscure or wilfully avoided. If, therefore, the Judge finds that the examination of a witness is not being conducted in such a way as to unfold the truth, it is not only his right but his duty to intervene with his own questions, particularly at a jury trial. But while theoretically the powers of the Judge are limitless and unfettered, certain principles have come to be recognised which he must follow as to the manner in which he exercises the power. He must not take side; but he must not also "descend into the arena" and forsake the judicial claim for the zeal of a combatant. If he does so and questions witnesses in the spirit of beating them down or encouraging them to give an answer, his action may have an intimidating or inflatory effect upon them and their evidence may not be the evidence they would have given, if not so intimidated or encouraged. Although the law allows the Judge to put any question at any time, the time generally considered proper for an extended examination is when lawyers for the parties have finished their questions or at least when the lawyers, examining the witnesses at the time, are passing on to a new subject. The Judge may always intervene, in the course of examination by Counsel to put a question in a clearer form or to have an obscure answer clarified or to prevent a witness being unfairly misled but if he does more and stops Counsel again and again to put a long series of his own questions, he makes an effective examination or cross-examination impossible and diverts the trial from its natural course. There is no limit to the questions which the Judge may put and if he considers that he has not yet got to the bottom of the matter or that the witness has not yet made his full meaning clear, there is no reason why he should not go on with the examination, whatever the number of the questions required to achieve the purpose of eliciting the truth. If the prosecution omits to bring out a material fact or the cross-examining Counsel brings a witness to a state in which he cannot make his meaning clear then defence does not acquire a vested right in such omission or confusion. It is precisely for use on such occasion that the Judge's powers under S. 165 of the Evidence Act are intended. No re-trial can be ordered merely on the ground of over-interrogation by the Judge, unless actual or substantial prejudice is proved: (1952-53) 57 Cal.W.N. 962: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 305.

A Judge is not a mere umpire as a combat between the parties whose duty is to enforce the rules of the game and declare at the end of the conduct who has won and who has lost. He is expected and it is, indeed his duty to explore all avenues open to him in order to discover the truth and, to that end, question witness on points which appear to be overlooked by the parties or left obscured. If he finds the evidence confusing, it is his duty to intervene with his own questions particularly in a case where a party who initiates the proceedings likely to be socially and or economically handicapped due to indigence or otherwise. This is the principle which has been enacted in S. 165 of the Evidence Act: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 307.

As per S. 165 of the Evidence Act, a Judge is entitled to ask any question in any form, at any time, to any witness about any fact relevant or irrelevant. If the Judge thinks that, the case has not been thoroughly explored, he is entitled to put as many questions as he likes. But he must not in doing so descend in the arena. Thus, caution is necessary to see that the Judge does not give an impression of assuming the role of a prosecutor: (1993) 1 Ker.L.J. 556: (1993) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 478.

For a criminal Court in order to become an effective instrument in dispensing justice, the Presiding Judge must cease to be a spectator and must become a participant in the trial by evincing intelligent active interest by putting questions to witnesses in order to ascertain the truth. It must, of course, not assume the role of a prosecutor in putting questions. The functions of the Counsel, particularly those of the public prosecutor, are not to be usurped by the Judge, by descending into the arena. Any questions put by the Judge must be so as not to frighten, coerce, confuse or intimidate the witnesses. [(1957) 2 All E.R. 155, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1036: 1981 Cr.L.J. 609.

The position of law is well settled that a party is to choose his own witness. It is always open to the Court to examine a particular witness as a Court witness if it so chooses: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 888.

Power of Judge to question a witness is not an absolute power. The power is designed to further ends of justice. The Judge, therefore, in exercise of the power under S. 165 of the Evidence Act, in view of the wide power to examine a witness at any stage must be circumspect in his exercise of the power: 1991 M.P.L.J. 345.

Whenever all the facts necessary for a proper determination of the points in issue have not been elicited, inadvertently or otherwise, by the public prosecutor or the defence Counsel, it behoves the Judge to exercise his power under S. 165 of the Evidence Act and get elucidated what is left obscure or unintelligible: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1242: (1975) 2 An.W.R. 255 (D.B.).

Power of Judge to send for additional witness, to summon material witness and to examine persons present. See I.L.R. 6 Lah. 279.

Powers of Court to compel production of documents by prosecution to enable accused to conduct his defence. See (1975) 77 Bom. L.R. 214.

S. 165 of the Evidence Act as well as O. 16, R. 14, C.P.Code have to be borne in mind to see that if anything is required as evidence for coming to a proper and correct way of appreciation of evidence and the failure on the part of both sides to produce that evidence, will not in any way obstruct the Court from exercising its jurisdiction under S. 165 of the Evidence Act and also calling the parties to depose regarding the aspects that are behind the curtain by virtue of exercising the power vested with the Court under O. 16, R. 14, C.P.Code. Thus, where attestor of a promissory note or its scribe was not examined by the plaintiff, held, it did not stand in the way of the Court to shut its eyes and to examine only what was available and produced by either side by way of evidence: (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. 512.

If the provisions of O. 18, R. 17, C.P.Code were read only with the provisions of S. 165 of the Evidence Act, the power to recall and re-examine a witness is exclusively that of the Court trying the suit. The parties to the suit cannot take any objection to the question asked nor can they be permitted to cross-examine any witness without the leave of the Court: A.I.R. 1978 All. 515.

S. 311, Cr.P.Code confers a wide discretion on the Court to act as the exigencies of justice require. The power of the Court under S. 165 of the Evidence Act is complementary to its power under this section (S. 311, Cr.P. Code). These two sections between them confer jurisdiction on the Court to act in aid of justice: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 1325 (D.B.).

The power of the Court to examine a witness for the just decision of the case as conferred by S. 311, Cr.P.Code and S. 165, Evidence Act is paramount and can be exercised at any stage of the proceeding including after the accused had closed his defence, but only so long as the Court retains seizin of the matter. [1968 Cr.L.J. 231 (S.C.), Foll.; (1951) 52 Cr.L.J. 673 (Mad.) and (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 15 (Bom.), impliedly overruled by 1968 Cr.L.J. 231 (S.C.); 1975 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 119; 1977 Chand. L.R. (Cr.) 60 (P.&H.), not followed in view of 1968 Cr.L.J. 231 (S.C.)]: (1982) 84 Punj.L.R. 210: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2211.

It is true that the ban imposed by S. 162, Cr.P.Code against the use of a statement of a witness recorded by the Police during investigation, appears sweeping and wide. But the language of S. 162, Cr.P.Code, though wide, is not explicit or specific enough to extend the prohibition to the use of the wide and special powers of the Court to question a witness, expressly and explicitly given by S. 165 of the Indian Evidence Act in order to secure the ends of justice. A narrow and restrictive construction put upon the prohibition in S. 162, Cr.P.Code, so as to confine the ambit of it to the use of statements by witnesses by parties only to a proceeding before the Court, would reconcile or harmonize the two provisions and also serve the ends of justice. Thus, where trial Court considered evidence of a witness important enough to examine him under S. 540, Cr.P.Code (S. 311 of new Code) yet it disabled itself from testing its worth by putting an alleged contradiction to the witness on a matter of some importance in the case, held, the trial Court could and should have made use of previous statement of the witness to contradict him even if it was made to the Police during the investigation: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 463: 1974 Cr.L.J. 453: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 186.

In a sense it seems to be true that the provisions of S. 165 of the Evidence Act are wider than the provisions of S. 94 of the Cr.P.Code, 1898 because though the provisions of S. 94 are plenary they are confined to enquiry, trial or other proceedings under the Code. There is no such limitation in S. 165 of the Evidence Act, which can apply to all proceedings, civil or criminal. S. 165 deals with two situations. In Chap. X of the Evidence Act which deals with the examination of witnesses, S. 165 vests in the Judge unlimited powers in order "to discover" or "to obtain proper proof of relevant facts". Though the power is unlimited, it is meant only for two purposes and no other, namely, either to discover relevant facts or to obtain proper proof of relevant facts. These being the purposes of the powers, they are unlimited. Two different things are permitted to be done. One is to ask any witness or a party in any form, at any time any question covering relevant matters. The unlimited right of the Court to put any question at any time in any form can be exercised so far as the witness is concerned only when the witness is put in the witness-box. If the party is before the Court, he can be questioned by the Court. There is another provision in the section by which the Court may order production of any document or a thing. Such a direction to produce can be given either to a witness or to a party. If material evidence or witness is being suppressed, the Court has undoubtedly power in civil as well as criminal matters to call witnesses and direct production of documents. A provision like S. 165 of the Evidence Act is rarely used before trial. Where a Court comes across a case where the evidence in possession of a party is relevant for the purpose of the case, but there is danger of that evidence being tampered with or destroyed, it is possible to say that the Court might be induced to exercise its power under S. 165. In similar circumstances, the Court might exercise its powers under S. 165 so far as production is concerned. But direction for production is one thing and permitting the other side to look into the record and make copies thereof and exercise the right of making copies of such documents is quite another, which is clearly not envisaged by the provisions of S. 165.

Therefore, where a party is making an offer by giving an undertaking to the Court, reference to S. 165 cannot be and need not be made. If an order is to be made for production with a view to permit the other side to inspect and make copies, it is not permissible under S. 165. It would be a misuse of the provisions of S. 165. At the pre-trial stage the provisions of S. 165 of the Evidence Act can be used at best in the circumstances in which the provisions of S. 94 of the Cr.P.Code 1898, can be used.

A distinction has always been made between production of documents from possession of one party and granting inspection thereof to another party. Production must be ordered wherever there is a fear of destruction or tampering. Inspection can be allowed only where there is a right to inspect and receive such copies. If the right arises at a particular point of time, either inspection or taking of copies could not be ordered earlier than that point of time: (1976) 78 Bom.L.R. 500 (D.B.). See also (1971) 3 S.C.C. 303.

S. 165 would have no application in a situation where the evidence was concluded, prosecution had closed its case and the judgment had commenced and where it appears to the Court at that point of time that the prosecution had failed on a material aspect; at that point the prosecution cannot be permitted to cover up an obvious lacuna: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3175 (Bom.).

Power to examine a witness—No limitation on power of Court: 1968 Cr.L.J. 231: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 178.

Irregular evidence not relevant and not duly proved cannot form basis of judgment: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 107: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 214.

Evidence—Court cannot compel party to examine any particular witness: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1008.

In criminal cases, the moment witness commences giving evidence which is inadmissible he should be stopped by the Court: 7 W.R. (Cr.) 25.

Mere sending for document does not make evidence in the case: 11 B.H.C.R. 166. Even though a document is not produced at the first hearing of a case, the Court can call for the document under S. 165: 25 O.C. 286: A.I.R. 1963 Oudh 59.

Decision based on weight of authority and not on individual judgment of Judge—Conduct contrary to oath of office taken by Judge: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 1022: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 291.

Judicial precedents — Binding nature of decisions of co-ordinate and superior authority — Reference to section is irrelevant: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 372.

Precedents—Judgment of High Court—Not binding on Judges of same High Court or of other High Courts: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 541: A.I.R. 1964 Guj. 223.

2. Limits on power under section 165.—Under S. 165, the Court cannot order the production by a party of any document or thing, no matter how irrelevant, into Court unless the object is to obtain indicative evidence which may lead to discovery of relevant evidence of any fact in any matter then before the Court: I.L.R. 57 Mad. 635: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 199(2): 66 M.L.J. 498.

There is no doubt that under the provisions of S. 165 of the Evidence Act, the Court is invested with a wide discretion to put any question to any witnesses, in any form with a view to discover or obtain proof of any fact relevant or irrelevant. Because of the wide scope of this power, a Court should be circumspect in its exercise—always bearing in mind that it is designed to further the ends of justice it should not be sued in an inquisitorial manner. It is also not part of the duty of the Court to act as Counsel for one or the other of the parties as the primary duty of a Court is to weigh evidence for both parties and come to a decision in the case on such evidence. It ought not to lay itself open to a suspicion, by exercising this power in such a manner as will create an apprehension in the mind of one or the other party, that it is biased: 1969 M.L.J. (Cr.) 499: 18 Law Rep. 218 (Mys.).

Witnesses are not to be examined on behalf of the Court to assist the prosecution in filling in the blanks. They are to be examined in the interests of justice. It is the duty of the Judge under the continental system of law to discover the truth by his own efforts in conjunction with those of the public prosecutor. In France there is the "interregatoire" of the accused by the Judge who also takes an active part in examining witnesses. In England and also in our country the examination of all witnesses is primarily by the Counsel for the parties. The Judge may put supplementary questions to discover truth.

If the Judge under Anglo-Saxon system of law followed in this country is of the opinion that the case has not been properly dealt with, he can put to witnesses as many questions as he likes, relying on the provisions of S. 165 of the Evidence Act, in order to discover truth, but, by and large he should leave it to the parties to examine their witnesses. As far as possible, witnesses called by the Court to testify should be called before the case for the defence has been closed but not after the case of the defence is closed. There is no hard and fast rule but it is necessary that the accused on trial should not have the feeling that through the agency of the Court, the prosecution plugs in the loop holes. The Presiding Judge has to be careful so as not to identify himself with any party: 1969 Cr.L.J. 739: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 68; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 178; A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 305 (D.B.); I.L.R. (1970) 2 Del. 854 (D.B.); (1971) 3 S.C.C. 303; (1976) 78 Bom.L.R. 500.

The Court while exercising powers under S. 165 of the Act should not cause prejudice to the defence or to the prosecution. But the right of a party to correct any error or to adduce relevant evidence which through any inadvertence was missed at an earlier stage cannot be pre-empted on basis of said reason: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 292 (Ker.).

Limits to the power of Court to put questions to witnesses. See (1951) 1 M.L.J. 207: A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 772.

The provisions of the section cannot be used in contravention of S. 162, Cr.P.Code: I.L.R. 4 Rang. 371: A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 74; 27 Cr.L.J. 277: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 147.

Judge not to cross-examine the points which pleaders will examine upon: I.L.R. 6 Cal. 279. Whether Judge can put irrelevant questions. See I.L.R. 10 Bom. 185.

3. Cross-examination of Court's witness.—Under S. 165 the parties have no right to cross-examine any witness except with the permission of the Court. No doubt, the discretion will have to be exercised judicially and ordinarily the Judge would give the requisite permission if the answers given are adverse to the party who seeks the said permission: I.L.R. (1957) Andh. Pra. 742: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 9: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 31.

Of course a party as of right is not entitled to cross-examine the witness when the Court examines him under S. 165 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872. But if the answers given by the witness in such examination are adverse to a party then it is desirable that such party should be given a chance to cross-examine that witness: (1983) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 289: (1983) 10 Cr.L.T. 31: (1983) 1 Chand. L.R. 192.

4. Illustrative cases.—Where in an election petition the defeated candidate sought inspection of electoral rolls and counter-foils on certain vague allegations just to fish out the material for challenging the election which was allowed by the High Court, held, the Representation of People Act was a special Act and provisions of the Evidence Act would only apply where they are not excluded. The High Court was totally wrong in allowing such inspection as there was strict prohibition for opening these documents unless a cast iron case was made out for the same. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1249; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2117, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 396: (1984) 2 S.C.C. 36: 1984 U.J. (S.C.) 225.

As the charge of corrupt practice in an election petition is quasi criminal in character, it has to be proved beyond reasonable doubt; thus, where important aspects of the case were not satisfactorily brought out by the evidence on record despite voluminous evidence, the Election Tribunal ought to have exercised its powers under S. 165 as well as O. 16, R. 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure by putting questions to the witnesses to elicit the truth therefrom. Case remanded: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1045: (1975) 1 S.C.C. 535.

Where in a Motor Accident claim case, required material for coming to the conclusion regarding the liability for the accident were not placed before the Tribunal by either side, held, this does not mean that the Tribunal was bereft of powers for getting at the truth of the claim as well as regarding the person at fault who drove the vehicle. The Tribunal was obliged to find out from the evidence available or to get at the evidence as provided under S. 165 or give further opportunity for either side to produce necessary evidence, before it could come to conclusion regarding liability: A.I.R. 1989 Mad. 34.

Where petitioner-wife challenged an ex parte decree on the ground that summons were not served and that the signature found in postal acknowledgment were not put by her and opinion of hand-writing expert was available in the records though not exhibited as evidence, held, it was the duty of the trial Court to have exercised its jurisdiction under S. 165 and got itself enlightened so as to decide the question relating to the aspect of setting aside the ex parte decree that had been pronounced by it: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. 638: 1982 Hindu L.R. 638: (1983) 1 M.L.J. 73.

Infringement of copyright — Power of Court to summon infringing copies: 1963 All.L.J. 930: A.I.R. 1965 All. 206.

Investigation in misfeasance proceedings—Power of Court to summon party against its will to give evidence: A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 75.

Modes of giving evidence—Two alternative modes allowed by Act—Before second mode is adopted first has to be fulfilled—Depositions in prior judicial proceedings—Admission in present suit—Before admission condition mentioned in S. 33 have to be fulfilled—Consent of parties is not enough: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 418: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 48.

166. Power of jury or assessors to put questions.—In cases tried by jury or with assessors, the jury or assessors may put any questions to the witnesses, through or by leave of the Judge, which the Judge himself might put and which he considers proper.

CHAPTER XI

OF IMPROPER ADMISSION AND REJECTION OF EVIDENCE

167. No new trial for improper admission or rejection of evidence.—The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision.

THE SCHEDULE.—[Enactments repealed.] Repealed by the Repealing Act, 1938 (1 of 1938), Section 2 and Schedule.

Section 167—Synopsis.

1. Scope and applicability.
2. Duty of appellate Court.
3. Improper admission or rejection of evidence in trial by jury.
4. Misdirection to jury.
5. Illustrative cases.

1. Scope and applicability.—See A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 354; A.I.R. 1953 Bilaspur 17; A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 305. S. 167 applies to all judicial proceedings in or before any Court including jury trials: 73 I.A. 77: I.L.R. (1946) Lah. 119: A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 82.

According to S. 167 reversal of the decision and the new trial can be ordered only if it appears to the Revisional Court, where the objection to the admissibility is raised, that independently of such evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision or the conviction: 1976 All.W.C. 128.

When a Court of fact acts on material, partly relevant and partly irrelevant, it is impossible to say to what extent the mind of the Court was effected by the irrelevant material used by it in arriving at its findings, and such a finding is vitiated because of the use of inadmissible material. That being so, the case should be remanded for a rehearing without the inadmissible material: I.L.R. (1960) Mys. 382: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 160. Thus, where lower appellate Court based its finding regarding adverse possession, though partly, on inadmissible evidence, held, said finding was vitiated. [A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 160, Foll.; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 305; A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 226; A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 271, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Karn. 179: (1975) 1 Karn.L.J. 105: I.L.R. (1975) Karn. 25.

The reception of even inadmissible evidence is less injurious than the rejection of admissible evidence because in the former case in arriving at a decision, the evidence wrongly admitted as well be excluded from consideration whereas in the latter case the evidence wrongly excluded can only be brought on record, by having recourse to further proceeding necessitating thereby the prolongation of the trial and possible harassment to the persons concerned: I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 171: A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 80.

S. 167 applies to second appeals on the civil side or cases tried by a jury on the criminal side; and not to first appeals where the facts are a matter for decision of the appellate Court: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 605. Under S. 167, improper admission is no ground for a new trial if there is other evidence sufficient to support the conviction: 59 I.C. 560: 22 Cr.L.J. 128. See also A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 118; 25 Cr.L.J. 1275: A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 245; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 1: (1926-27) 31 Cal.W.N. 32; A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 211: 7 Pat.L.T. 673. See also (1933) 35 Bom.L.R. 174: A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 153; 152 I.C. 829: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 617(2).

The acceptance of inadmissible evidence is not a ground to set aside a judgment or grant a new trial, if there is other evidence upon which the finding could be arrived at. And the High Court can in second appeal see whether there is such other evidence justifying the decisions, and if there is such evidence, it cannot order a new trial: 150 I.C. 841: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 55(2). See also A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 169: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 672.

Failure to consider certain evidence on record—If ground for interference with finding of fact in second appeal. See (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 890.

The mere fact that some evidence which may not be strictly admissible has been admitted, is no ground for setting aside the decision of an inferior Court. S. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act provides for such contingencies. It is true that in appraising evidence different Judges may, at times, entertain different opinions, but even on an appeal the superior Court is bound to respect the findings of the trial Court on questions of fact, and, hence, the mere admission of inadmissible evidence on an insignificant fact, is not sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the trial Court was in error in taking the view that it did: I.L.R. (1953) Cut. 682: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 67. See also (1978-79) 83 Cal.W.N. 248: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 129 (D.B.) [Admission of certain alleged statements of deceased does not amount to failure of procedural justice but to improper admission of evidence, if at all.]

Where evidence admitted has been found to be irrelevant, that would not by itself justify a reversal of the lower Court's order according to S. 167: 1949 R.D. 409(1).

The proper time to object to the admissibility of the evidence is when the evidence is tendered. A party cannot be allowed to lie by until the case comes up in appeal. An objection as to the production of secondary evidence instead of the original, cannot, therefore, be allowed to be taken for the first time at the appellate stage: I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 335: (1957) 59 Punj.L.R. 650: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 116.

In order that an erroneous rejection of any evidence may furnish a ground for ordering a new trial or reversing the conviction, the accused has to show that the rejection of the evidence was likely to affect the decision of the case: 49 Cr.L.J. 558: A.I.R. 1948 Sind 122.

Court's decision given without considering certain recitals in a document—Decision is not vitiated where it would not have been different even if those recitals had been considered by the Court: (1963) 5 Ori.J.D. 314: 30 Cut.L.T. 245: (1964) 2 L.L.J. 535.

The fact that a document was admitted without any objection from a party, does not entitle the Court to admit in evidence what is in law inadmissible: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 59.

Where there has been an improper admission of evidence, a Judge would be acting correctly under S. 167 if he comes to the conclusion that the rest of the evidence is sufficient to justify the conviction: 39 Cr.L.J. 427: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 325.

If there was evidence that there were twelve charges against the person and in eleven the evidence was properly conducted and in one charge it had been improperly conducted and admitted, then the appellate Court would not have been justified in reversing the finding, if it had come to the conclusion that apart from that charge there had been other charges which were enough to justify the finding. It is not every case in which merely because something extraneous has been taken into consideration that the High Court could immediately upset that finding. It is only when the High Court feels doubt that if one fact was not there, whether the opinion or decision of a certain authority would have been the same that the High Court interferes. But where it is patently clear that there could have been no other decisions, then in that event, the extraneous circumstances alone would not vitiate the order: A.I.R. 1962 All. 166.

Assuming that the statement of the accused was improperly held back by the Judge from the jury that would not by itself be an omission of sufficient importance to entitle the High Court, in a reference made to it to hold that the unanimous verdict of the jury had been improperly bad. For S. 167, constitutes a bar to a fresh trial, unless it could be established that there would have been material difference in the result if the evidence allegedly improperly rejected had been allowed to be produced: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 483: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 372.

2. Duty of appellate Court.—Duty of appellate Court where evidence has been improperly admitted in the lower Court. See 15 W.R. (P.C.) 8; 6 B.L.R. 495: 14 M.I.A. 86; 6 M.I.A. 232; 8 M.I.A. 199; I.L.R. 7 Cal. 293; I.L.R. 8 Cal. 739.

Additional evidence in appellate Court, where relevant evidence was improperly shut out in lower Court: I.L.R. 4 All. 306.

Verdict of jury—Interference—Misdirection owing to admission of inadmissible evidence—Powers and duty of appellate Court. See A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 104.

3. Improper admission or rejection of evidence in trial by jury.—S. 167, Evidence Act, provides that if there is sufficient evidence left to maintain a conviction after eliminating the inadmissible evidence, the Court might still convict. However, in jury trials, where inadmissible evidence which may have had considerable effect on the mind of the jury has been introduced, it may be necessary and often is necessary to set aside the verdict and order a re-trial; because no one can say how the jury would have decided a case if the inadmissible evidence had been excluded: A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 481: I.L.R. (1953) 1 Cal. 302.

Jury trial—Admission of inadmissible evidence—Verdict of jury—Interference in appeal. See I.L.R. (1946) Kar. 69.

Under S. 167, misreception of evidence is not a ground for interference with the verdict of a jury, if it cannot reasonably be said to have influenced the jury in coming to their verdict: A.I.R. 1950 Assam 75: 51 Cr.L.J. 641.

As regards the rejected evidence, the question under S. 167 is not so much whether the evidence rejected would not have been accepted against the other testimony on the record as whether that evidence "ought not to have varied the decision": A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 484: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 285.

4. Misdirection to jury.—A misdirection to the jury is strictly not a case of improper admission or rejection of evidence within the meaning of S. 167: 42 I.C. 161: 18 Cr.L.J. 929 (F.B.).

5. Illustrative cases.—A document was proved in the trial Court by a person who had obtained it from the writer and admitted in evidence, without the writer being examined and no objection was raised to such admission. Held, the non-examination of the writer would not make it inadmissible and the objection in revision had no weight: 59 Cal.L.J. 467: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 834.

Where the High Court after excluding the evidence improperly admitted, found that the remaining evidence was not of such a character that a conviction might reasonably be based upon it, the conviction and sentence were set aside: I.L.R. 1 Cal. 207; I.L.R. 2 Bom. 61; 9 P.H.C.R. 358.

A Magistrate cannot import his personal opinion about the personal character, in the decision of the case before him nor can he refuse to believe evidence in the accused's favour on that account: 20 Cr.L.J. 283: 50 I.C. 171.

Where the evidence excluded by the appellate Court is not a piece of evidence but the main evidence in support of party's case, and there is no evidence apart from the rejected evidence, the Court is justified in ordering a fresh hearing of the appeal: 1956 B.L.J.R. 197: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 293.

Order of acquittal by appellate Court—Revision—Interference by High Court when no substantial grounds to vary decision: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1190: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 167.

Where in maintaining the conviction of the accused, the High Court relied upon confession of accused which was inadmissible in evidence, held, said finding could not be interfered with by the Supreme Court as even after excluding the confessional statement from consideration, the other material on record proved the guilt of the accused. [1972 Cr.L.J. 204, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2077: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1317.

Where a finding by the Commissioner as well as the Board of Revenue about the relationship of father and son was based on a lease deed as well as other documentary and oral evidence, held, the High Court will not interfere in its writ jurisdiction in case it finds that the lease deed is inadmissible if there is other evidence to sustain the finding; the High Court cannot re-appraise the evidence even if it had a different view: A.I.R. 1972 All. 406.

Where reasons have been given for ignoring some variation and contradiction in evidence, held, no interference is called for in second appeal: 1983 M.P.W.N. 212.

Where evidence though admissible for collateral purposes was held to be inadmissible by lower Court, held, in view of S. 167 of the Act said finding could not be interfered with as it was based on the other evidence on record: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 43: 1971 B.L.J.R. 474.

Admissibility of evidence—Oral evidence of parties on either side evenly balanced—Lot of documentary evidence taken into consideration before recording finding—One of those documents not duly proved—Yet finding not vitiated: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 12: 1969 All.L.J. 129.

Land acquisition proceedings—Compensation awarded by Land Acquisition Officer substantially enhanced by High Court relying on inadmissible evidence—Evidence of claimant rejected by High Court—No appeal by Government against enhancement of compensation—If inadmissible evidence were not relied, the compensation allowed by Land Acquisition Officer would have remained—Claimant cannot, therefore, complain against High Court that it has taken into consideration inadmissible evidence: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 255.

Where statements of two of the witnesses for the prosecution had been wrongly admitted under S. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure but in view of the content of the statements themselves, it seemed that the improper admission of the statements of these two witnesses before the committing Court could not possibly have affected the verdict of the jury and the other evidence of the eyewitnesses, if believed, would have sustained the charge, held, that the objection as to improper admission of the evidence was of no avail: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1170: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 482.

Member of Force overstaying leave—Departmental enquiry under R. 27, Central Reserve Police Rules, 1955—Allegation of overstay not denied—Burden of showing that overstay was for reasons beyond control, lies on delinquent member—Member not producing evidence to discharge burden but complaining that he was not given opportunity to cross-examine officer who had made report against him behind his back—Prejudice not shown to have been caused by non-cross-examination—Enquiry cannot be said to be vitiated for non-cross-examination: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 140.

Commissioner's report under O. 26, Rr. 9 and 10, C.P.Code—Disregard of—Lower appellate Court disregarding report holding other evidence on record sufficient for disposal of case—Disregard of report constitutes no "error or defect in procedure nor affects the merits of the case" within meaning of S. 100(1)(c), C.P.Code to justify interference in second appeal when there is proper exercise of discretion: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 1043: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 199.

Finding as to absence of reasonable and probable cause—Finding is one of fact—Finding based on trivial error of record committed by lower appellate Court with regard to evidence of one witness—Rest of material on record sufficient to justify finding even if evidence of that witness is discarded—Finding is not vitiated and is finding in second appeal: (1963) 29 Cut.L.T. 357.

Where the lower Court in upholding the jurisdiction of the municipality to levy cart tax in the case invoked and applied the presumption under S. 99(4) of the Madras District Municipalities Act, held, that there was force in the contention that the judgment of the lower Court was vitiated because the presumption which on the language of S. 99(4) of the Municipalities Act was confined to carriages and had no application to a cart, had been invoked in the case. But in the second appeal the Court would not interfere with the judgment on the question of cart tax as the presumption was not the only basis on which the municipality sought to levy the cart tax but there was also evidence of fact and circumstances to justify that jurisdiction: (1961) 1 M.L.J. 385: 1961 M.L.J. (Cr.) 306.

Principle and agent—Member taking loan from Co-operative Credit Society—Society holding out cashier as person competent to receive payment—Entries by cashier in pass book issued to member by Society showing full payment—Entries in pass book held proper evidence in support of plea of discharge—Society held bound by acts of cashier: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 407: A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 105.

Statement of confession—Use of, to contradict or corroborate evidence given as approver—Refusal to allow—Prejudice—Other evidence corroborating testimony—Effect. See A.I.R. 1957 Assam 168.

Where it was clear from the record that the prosecution, though it had cited certain person as a witness, was not very keen to examine him and when that person objected to give evidence, the prosecution dropped him, held, it is not a case in which evidence can be said to have been rejected within S. 167 of the Evidence Act. In such a case the prosecution does not in fact tender the person as a witness: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 484.

Where the defendant's witnesses were not specifically cross-examined on their deposition in respect of the public character of the temple claimed by the plaintiff to be a private temple but the only suggestion made to them was in regard to their prior enmity towards the plaintiff, held, their entire evidence could not be taken to be interested: (1994) 1 M.L.J. 550.

APPENDIX 1

THE BANKERS' BOOKS EVIDENCE ACT, 1891*
(18 OF 1891)

[1*st October*, 1891]

An Act to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to Bankers' Books.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to Bankers' Books; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. Title and extent.—(1) This Act may be called THE BANKERS' BOOKS EVIDENCE ACT, 1891.

1 It extends to the [2][whole of India except [3][the State of Jammu and Kashmir].] [3][* * * *]

[4][* * * *].

2. Definitions.—In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,—

[5][(1) "company" means any company as defined in section 3 of the Companies Act, 1956 and includes a foreign company within the meaning of section 591 of that Act;

(1-A) "corporation" means any body corporate established by any law for the time being in force in India and includes the Reserve Bank of India, the State Bank of India and any subsidiary bank as defined in the State Bank of India (Subsidiary Banks) Act, 1959];

(2) "bank" and "banker" mean—

[6][(a) any company or corporation carrying on the business of banking],

(b) any partnership or individual to whose books the provisions of this Act shall have been extended as hereinafter provided,

[7][(c) any post office savings bank or money order office];

(3) "bankers' books" include ledgers, day-books, cash-books, account-books, and all other books used in the ordinary business of a bank;

[8][(4) "legal proceeding" means,—

(i) any proceeding or inquiry in which evidence is or may be given;

(ii) an arbitration; and

(iii) any investigation or inquiry under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, or under any other law for the time being in force for the collection of evidence, conducted by a police officer or by any other person (not being a magistrate) authorised in this behalf by a magistrate or by any law for the time being in force;]

(5) "the Court" means the person or persons before whom a legal proceeding is held or taken;

---

* For Statement of Objects and Reasons, see Gazette of India, 1891, Pt. IV, p. 24.

1. Act enforced in Sikkim vide Notification No. S.O. 659(E), dated 30-8-1984 (w.e.f. 1-9-1984).

2. Substituted by A.O. 1950.

3. Substituted for 'except Part B States' by Act III of 1951.

4. The word 'and' and sub-S. (3) repealed by Act X of 1914, Sch. II.

5. Substituted for clause (1) by Act 56 of 1962 (w.e.f. 14-12-1962).

6. Substituted, ibid, for sub-clause (a).

7. Added by Act 1 of 1893.

8. Substituted by Act 1 of 1984, S. 2 (w.e.f. 15-2-1984).

(6) "Judge" means a Judge of a High Court;

(7) "trial" means any hearing before the Court at which evidence is taken; and

(8) "certified copy" means a copy of any entry in the books of a bank together with a certificate written at the foot of such copy that it is a true copy of such entry, that such entry is contained in one of the ordinary books of the bank and was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that such book is still in the custody of the bank [1][and where the copy was obtained by a mechanical or other process which in itself ensured the accuracy of the copy, a further certificate to that effect, but where the book from which such copy was prepared has been destroyed in the usual course of the bank's business after the date on which the copy had been so prepared, a further certificate to that effect, each such certificate being dated and subscribed by the principal accountant or manager of the bank with his name and official title.]

3. Power to extend provisions of Act.—The [2][State] Government may, from time to time, by notification[3] in the Official Gazette, extend the provisions of this Act to the books of any partnership or individual carrying on business of bankers within the territories under its administration, and keeping a set of not less than three ordinary account-books, namely, a cash-book, a day-book or journal, and a ledger, and may in like manner rescind any such notification.

4. Mode of proof of entries in bankers' books.—Subject to the provisions of this Act, a certificate copy of any entry in a bankers' book shall in all legal proceedings be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry, and shall be admitted as evidence of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded in every case where, and to the same extent as, the original entry itself is now by law admissible, but not further or otherwise.

5. Case in which officer of bank not compellable to produce books.—No officer of a bank shall in any legal proceeding to which the bank is not a party be compellable to produce any banker's book the contents of which can be proved under this Act, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded, unless by order of the Court or a Judge made for special cause.

6. Inspection of books by order of Court or Judge.—(1) On the application of any party to a legal proceeding, the Court or a Judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book for any of the purposes of such proceeding, or may order the bank to prepare and produce, within a time to be specified in the order, certified copies of all such entries, accompanied by a further certificate that no other entries are to be found in the books of the bank relevant to the matters in issue in such proceeding, and such further certificate shall be dated and subscribed in manner hereinbefore directed in reference to certified copies.

(2) An order under this or the preceding section may be made either with or without summoning the bank and shall be served on the bank three clear days (exclusive of bank holidays) before the same is to be obeyed, unless the Court or Judge shall otherwise direct.

1. Substituted for "such certificate being dated and subscribed by the principal accountant or manager of the bank with his name and official title", by Act 1 of 1984, S. 2 (w.e.f. 15-2-1984).

2. Substituted by A.O. 1950.

3. For notifications, see Bombay Government Gazette, 1902, Pt. 1., p. 1289 and as to Madras, see Mad. R. and O., Vol. I (List).

(3) The bank may at any time before the time limited for obedience to any such order as aforesaid either offer to produce their books at the trial or give notice of their intention to show cause against such order, and thereupon the same shall not be enforced without further order.

7. Costs.—(1) The costs of any application to the Court or a Judge under or for the purposes of this Act and the costs of anything done or to be done under an order of the Court or a Judge made under or for the purposes of this Act shall be in the discretion of the Court or Judge, who may further order such costs or any part thereof to be paid to any party by the bank if they have been incurred in consequence of any fault or improper delay on the part of the bank.

(2) Any order made under this section for the payment of costs to or by a bank may be enforced as if the bank were a party to the proceeding.

(3) Any order under this section awarding costs may, on application to any Court of Civil Judicature designated in the order, be executed by such Court as if the order were a decree for money passed by itself:

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall be construed to derogate from any power which the Court or Judge making the order may possess for the enforcement of its or his directions with respect to the payment of costs.

[1][8. Order of Court to be construed to be order made by specified officer.—In the application of sections 5, 6 and 7 to any investigation or inquiry referred to in sub-clause (iii) of clause (4) of section 2, the order of a Court or a Judge referred to in the said sections shall be construed as referring to an order made by an officer of a rank not lower than the rank of a Superintendent of Police as may be specified in this behalf by the appropriate Government.

Explanation.—In this section, "appropriate Government" means the Government by which the police officer or any other person conducting the investigation or inquiry is employed.]

1. Inserted by Act 1 of 1984, S. 2 (w.e.f. 15-2-1984).

THE COMMERCIAL DOCUMENTS EVIDENCE ACT, 1939*

(30 OF 1939)

[26*th September*, 1939]

An Act to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to certain commercial documents.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Law of Evidence with respect to certain commercial documents; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. Short title and extent.—(1) This Act may be called THE COMMERCIAL DOCUMENTS EVIDENCE ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to [1][the whole of India except [2][the territories, which immediately before the 1st November, 1956, were comprised in Part B States.]]

State Amendments—[Gujarat].—In section 1, in sub-section (2), the following proviso shall be added, namely:—"Provided that on and from the commencement of the Commercial Documents Evidence (Gujarat Extension and Amendment) Act, 1962, this Act shall extend to and be in force in, the Saurashtra area of the State of Gujarat".—Gujarat Act (32 of 1962) (1st November, 1962).

[Maharashtra].—In section 1, in sub-section (2), after the word "States" at the end, the words "other than the Hyderabad area of the State of Maharashtra", shall be added—The Commercial Documents Evidence (Maharashtra Extension) Act (20 of 1960) (9th October, 1960).

2. Statements of relevant facts in scheduled documents to be themselves relevant facts.—Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, statements of facts in issue or of relevant facts made in any document included in the Schedule as to matters usually stated in such document shall be themselves relevant facts within the meaning of that Act.

3. Presumption as to genuineness of documents.—For the purposes of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and notwithstanding anything contained therein, a Court—

(a) shall presume, within the meaning of that Act, in relation to documents included in Part I of the Schedule, and

(b) may presume, within the meaning of that Act, in relation to documents included in Part II of the Schedule,— that any document purporting to be a document included in Part I or Part II of the Schedule, as the case may be, and to have been duly made by or under the appropriate authority, was so made and that the statements contained therein are accurate.

4. Definition.—In the Schedule the expression "recognised Chamber of Commerce" means a Chamber of Commerce recognised by the Government of its country as being competent to issue certificates of origin, and includes any other association similarly recognised.
